THE SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
Stack
Case
Shelf
San Anselmo.

Wm Speer

PRESBYTERIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF CALIFORNIA
ORGANIZED 1900
NO.

DONATED BY REV. WM. SPEER D.D.

Property of Graduate Theological Union
Return to San Francisco Theological Seminary

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For Great Britain and Ireland .. | 6s. 7d. | per annum |
| For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. .. .. .. | 8s. 10d. | „ „ |
| For United States and Canada .. | 2¼ dols. | „ „ |
| Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY .. .. | 2½ dols. | „ „ |

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 4 Copies monthly .. .. .. .. | 2s. | per annum. |
| 8 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 4s. | „ „ |
| 12 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 6s. | „ „ |
| 24 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 12s. | „ „ |

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

WE hope next week to give a portrait and sketch of Mrs. TONJOROFF, Medical Missionary at Philippopolis.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if those who have not yet remitted will kindly do so at once.

We very heartily reciprocate the congratulations and kind wishes, expressed and unexpressed, of our many friends, and not less their kindly criticisms, exhortations, and admonitions. We fervently desire and pray for them, as for ourselves, that this may be the best year we have ever lived; in which we shall all be more entirely yielded and presented a living sacrifice to God; transformed by the renewing of our mind, that we may prove what is his holy, acceptable, and perfect will; be filled with his Spirit, and fitted for his service. We believe that every day becomes more pregnant with significance, and we desire more than ever the prayer and counsel of those who have understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do.

There seems to be some comfort to some minds, in view of the present distress, in saying that it is not exceptional for the time of year. This will hardly fill the empty, or clothe the naked, or recover the dying. And it tends to make us self-satisfied. The statement is true, no doubt; but, notwithstanding it, facts are cropping up every day which make the heart sad to breaking.

In a circular now being sent throughout the land, the British Committee for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice sets forth what has been done in recent years, and speaks of the present as a critical time in the history of the movement. They urge upon Christian people the importance of immediately memorialising the Government and petitioning the House of Commons, in order that efforts in Parliament may be supported by agitation outside. We trust many will respond to the call. Forms of memorial and other information may be obtained from the office of the committee, 1, King-street, Westminster, S.W.

PRESBYTERIAN HIST. SOC. OF CALIFORNIA

It might be inferred from Dr. James Johnston's remarks in his book, "Reality versus Romance in South Central Africa," that very little is being done by the various missions in Africa, so far as the natives are concerned. In a brief interview last week, Bishop Taylor informed us that he and his mission workers at Loanda are in contact with forty different tribes, that there are at the present over 500 natives professing Christianity, and that numbers of children have never been heathen, having been trained in the knowledge of Jesus from their early days. Many of them promise fair to become useful evangelists among their fellow-countrymen.

Professor Huxley is a man who cannot be bought off. Those Christian apologists who thought that by surrendering a few Biblical positions they would appease him, break the force of his attacks, and save what they regarded as vital and essential, must be undeceived by his deliverances in the fourth volume of his collected Essays. As for the oft-expressed view that the Bible was not meant to teach anything but ethics and religion, and that its utterances on other matters are only obiter dicta, he says:—

> But how does the apologist know what the Biblical writers intended to teach? And, even if their authority is restricted to matters of faith and morals, who is prepared to deny that the story of the fabrication of Eve, that of the lapse from innocence effected by a talking snake, that of the Deluge, and the demonological legends, have exercised and still exercise a profound influence on Christian theology and Christian ethics?

All this, and much more, would lead a reader to suppose that the Professor threw the Bible over altogether; but that might prove to be a mistake. For when he talks in a similar way of faith in God, and you think he must be an Atheist, he quickly repudiates the inference. The fact is, he, like many others, is keen in criticism, but does not relish its plain conclusions. But we have something else to do than try to please every carping critic. We have to preach the Gospel, which we know to be "the power of God unto salvation."

A correspondent of The Christian World, who is said to have "exceptional qualification" for treating the subject of "What is Unitarianism?" sums up a long general account of it in these words:—

> Accordingly we should say that, with due allowance for individual exceptions and differences here and there, Unitarianism seems to be characterised, in general, by a cultivation of the critical at the expense of the devotional spirit, by an emphasis on intellectual rather than evangelical interests, and by an undue proportion of negative to positive teaching. In so thinking we do not forget that this lack of balance may be found in other quarters also. But it seems to us more commonly the case, that Unitarians are more disposed to philosophise than to pray, that they fail to lay due emphasis on human sinfulness and Divine judgment, that they dwell too much on what they cannot believe, and too little on the truths that are worthy of all acceptation. With a lively sense of the service they have done to Christian truth in aiding the reformation of an unbiblical theology, and with a hearty admiration of their service to the cause of Christian ethics, we feel that it is still their weakness to be too much "a church of critics," to the neglect of some things indispensable to the Church of Christ.

This is quite a sufficient reason for not being a Unitarian.

It is said, on the authority of one who was a Unitarian, that "most Unitarians regard the incarnation as the central truth of Christianity." This looks like an approach to the position of believers in an historical Christianity, but our satisfaction is all dashed when we learn that "the incarnation was not a single event, realised in Christ only, but a process, the entering of God into humanity, most manifest in Christ, but not solely in Him." One finds it hard to believe that there has been an incarnation of God in "the ungodly and sinners," in "the unholy and profane" of the world; indeed, there is no authority for it in Scripture and no evidence of it in fact. If they were of God, they would know Him and his Son; but they do not know them, and do not hear them, and do not serve them. Would it not be better to say that Unitarians believe in the man Jesus Christ, and that He was no more than a man? That is their old position, and it seems to us, spite of a lot of fine phrases, to be the position still.

An esteemed correspondent writes from a northern city:—

> At the holiday season, when everyone is running after amusement, some Christian people lose their heads (or shall we say their hearts?) and allow their children to go to theatres, circuses, or carnivals. Many of these people, I believe, would not allow their children to go to ordinary music-hall performances, considering them low and pernicious; but when a music-hall performance is organised on a large scale and called a carnival, they seem to throw away their scruples and follow the crowd. How can such parents expect to lead their children in the narrow way, when they are content to do as others do, and patronise worldly and sinful amusements?

This is a very proper question. Frivolous amusement and doubtful entertainment should be as hateful as definite and open sin to living Christians; and they would be so if regard for the honour of God were the inspiration of life and action.

In the "Story of Two Noble Lives" some extracts are given from the letters of Lord and Lady Canning, concerning the spirit of revenge felt against all Indians by some of the English, especially Anglo-Indians, at the time of the Mutiny, which deserve an imperishable place in our national records. Lady Canning wrote—

> There is a spirit of revenge abroad which is dreadful. I always say "Let us be severe and punish, but not unjustly, and above all, let us be as unlike these monsters as possible, and not copy them." But the things people say they would like to do, would be quite as bad as the acts of the Nana.

The Viceroy himself wrote to Lord Granville:—

> As long as I have any breath in my body I will pursue no other policy than that I have been following; not only for the reason of expediency and policy, but because it is immutably just. I will not govern in anger. Justice, and that as stern, as inflexible, as law and might can make it, I will deal out. But I will never allow an angry and indiscriminating act or word to proceed from the Government of India as long as I am responsible for it. I don't care two straws for the abuse of the papers, British or Indian.

With these views the Queen was in sympathy. It is men like Canning and Havelock and Campbell, all of whom leaned to the side of clemency, who, by a spirit of justice rather than by force of arms, have kept India in our hands. And to that spirit we must ever appeal.

The Chronicle of the L.M.S. for January contains, in its "News from India," a column from Rev. Wm. Hinkley, of Anantapur, making some of the most "serious allegations" against our British soldiers which we have ever seen. In Mr. Hinkley's own district he affirms that "within the last six weeks there have been, to his knowledge, three cases of robbery, violence, and murder, even by British soldiers, and all have escaped punishment." He gives the details of each case; the third only shall we quote:—

A large number of men of the 21st Hussars and British Infantry, and this time officers also, were returning from Wellington, in the south, to rejoin their headquarters, in the north, and halted en route in the district, at the Guntacol station. While staying there in the Restcamp thirteen of the men had permission to play a friendly cricket match with a team of the Railway Institute. After the match five of these thirteen wandered some distance in the fields, and, seeing two native women, tried to capture them. The two women took refuge in a gatekeeper's hut on the line, and the gatekeeper, in defence of the women, tried to keep off the soldiers with a stick, when one of them drew a revolver and shot the man in the right side, so that he died within twenty-four hours. As soon as the news reached the camp, and before the man died, a surprise parade was called, and all the soldiers marched in Indian file before the wounded man, as he said he could identify him. But this he was unable to do, the murderer and his assistants having, no doubt, shaved themselves quite clean. All search for the pistol or revolver in the camp and adjoining fields proved vain, as also the further inquiries after the soldiers reached their destination.

It is terrible to think of crimes being committed by men who are supposed to represent law and order, but it is still more terrible to think of the crimes going unpunished.

---

The whole of the Indian nation might well rise up against our rule. Such tragedies as Mr. Hinkley recounts may be only amusing escapades to the ruffians who perpetrate them, but those in office ought to take a much more serious view. These and such like things, combined with the scant attention paid to Indian affairs in the House of Commons, will give point and weight to the demand of natives for more power in the management of their own affairs. Mr. Naoroji has been laying special emphasis, in his address to the Indian National Congress at Lahore, on the practical disregard by the Indian Government of the orders of Parliament. If the Government slights Parliament, who can wonder if something of lawlessness infects all ranks of Anglo-Indians?

---

A pamphlet entitled "Christian Education by Congregationalists on the Pacific Coast," and dated September, 1893, gives an interesting and stirring account of the efforts being made by Christian men and women to carry Christian education to these new States. The introductory paper by Dr. McLean, of Pacific Theological Seminary, Oaklands, California, is instinct with the spirit of prophecy; he says:—

The tendency in all new communities where the material problems are yet unsettled, and where material opportunities are great, is for even those born and bred under the best influences of our land to become materialised, gross, immoral, and even brutal. The multitude of things antagonistic to true Christian civilisation, which are being brought in upon us as a flood, require a high, strong, and instant lifting up of spiritual standards against them.

These workers in young and rising communities have a high sense of the worth and dignity of "foundation work." They feel that they are building for the future. They have an eye also on the regions beyond. Dr. McLean continues:—

If any further consideration were necessary to stir us up to our present duty and opportunity, it would be found in the present and future relation of this coast to the great peoples and civilisations to the west of us. These Pacific States are to be, no long time hence, in closest touch with the already awakened millions of Japan, and with those still more numerous myriads yet to be awakened in China and its contiguous lands. The greatest missionary opportunity and responsibility of the age beckons to us from across the sunset sea. We do not want any faded fringe of emasculate Christianity here, but Christianity in its densest, vitalest, and most magnetically aggressive form.

Thus in the farthest West are our brethren not only trying to win their own countrymen to the Saviour, but also girding themselves for work among the heathen. Colleges and schools with such aims cannot but prosper.

---

Is this statement, made by a responsible writer in The Echo, correct?

It was Christmas night in an East End parish, the streets were anything but crowded, and the public-houses were slack—matter for congratulation to an East End vicar—suddenly the scene changed, and half a-dozen big boys came walking along the pavement over the road, and into the gutter, smoke-drunk.

The inference he draws from this is, that the smoking habits of men, of gentlemen everywhere, are beginning to produce an effect "on the masses." The writer refers, in the plainest and most condemnatory terms to the smoking habits of ministers of all denominations. We concur in all that he says. We deplore the physical injury caused by the habit; the moral degradation, the selfishness, the scandalous waste in some instances. But we still doubt whether those boys were drunk with tobacco smoke alone.

---

"BLESS ME, O MY FATHER."

Hast Thou a blessing for me, my Father?
A blessing reserved for me?
I come in my need, where thy children gather,
And silently cry to Thee.

I have heard them telling a wondrous story,
And hungry and thirsty at heart,
I, too, in this fulness of marvellous glory,
My Father, would have my part.

Even for me, hast Thou yet a blessing?
Some hidden treasure in store,
That waiteth just now for my heart's possessing,
And never shall leave it more?

Ever the yearning grows deeper, stronger,
And seemeth my soul to fill:
Father, oh, how shall I bear it longer?
When wilt Thou hush it, and still?

Satisfied, satisfied once and for ever,
Lord, I would be to-day;
And therefore I come unto Thee, the Giver;
Send me not empty away;

For, not the rich, but the needy rather,
Thou biddest to come to Thee;
Oh, give me the blessing I lack, my Father!
The blessing reserved for me.

I, even I, in my want and weakness,
My heart to thy throne may lift;
In trustful obedience, in faith and meekness,
To take thine unspeakable gift.

The wonderful gift of thy Holy Spirit:
The gift of Thyself indeed;
'Tis for those who have nought of desert or merit,
But only thy promise to plead.

'Tis for those who repent and who come believing,
For those who are called by Thee;
And by Thee made willing, thy grace receiving,
Thy children obedient to be.

And therefore I come where thy children gather,
And lift up my heart to Thee;
And take just now at thy hand, my Father,
Thy blessing reserved for me.

Plymouth. Edith G. Cherry.

[Hearts-Ease.—A packet of Poems by same author. Morgan & Scott. 6d.]

---

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—The usual gatherings of seamen were held here on Christmas and Boxing Day. The men were regally entertained with good fare, and at the same time had the Gospel message lovingly presented to them. Some good testimonies were given as to fruitful work among sailors in different parts of the world.

REV. F. B. MEYER will recommence his Bible talks to young men at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Saturday week, 13th inst. He has arranged to take during the ensuing quarter the topics of the lessons of the Sunday School Union afternoon series. It will greatly help the usefulness of the meeting if our readers will make known to Sunday-school teachers that all young men are heartily invited to this meeting every Saturday afternoon, from three to four o'clock precisely.

Every Church its Missionary.

In his rich and abounding grace God is visiting his people, and by consecration meetings, missionary meetings, and prayer meetings is reaching the hearts of many young disciples, and wakening them up to the condition of the perishing heathen. Young men and young women are offering themselves as missionaries; some, doubtless, are not approved; of others there would be no difficulty as to their every qualification. Who will send them? Or, rather, how are they to be sent? With respect to societies and their Providential warrant to take up the latter class, a good many years back a report was sent in by the Prudential Committee of the A.B.C.F.M. stating that "in their unanimous judgment, whenever men were raised up by the Lord, it was right to send them forth, believing that He who gave the men would give the means."

Now with respect to other channels, not a few have gone and are going forth at their own charges, happy favoured believers!

It is to be feared that the mission cause is losing much by centralisation, and by not sufficiently regarding ties which are more effective than the mere loose connection which binds men to a sitting committee of a society or board of managers. The proper missionary society is the church, and we have the model of church action in Acts xiii. 1—4, and xv. 40. No candidate for missionary work should ignore the relationship in which he stands to the church or company of believers with which he is associated; he is bound to have their suffrage, and to consult pastor or elders who represent it. This, of course, supposes the existence of a spiritual community, alive to its responsibilities for mutual fellowship, and the spread of the Gospel. The society steps in where these duties are unfulfilled.

It would be a grievous fault, where there is a desire in a church to fulfil them, for one to act in an irresponsible manner, and fail to seek their counsels, their sympathy, and their prayers. If he has these, and possesses their entire confidence, he could go forth as their messenger to the heathen, linked to them by ties of brotherly affection; his letters and reports would acquire tenfold interest by his being personally known, and by his being identified with them, whilst their letters to him would be a great encouragement in his often solitary position. The tie would be felt to be a real one, and richest blessings would be won, both by church and missionary, in answer to their mutual prayers.

If it were thought well that he should be likewise associated with some missionary society for the benefit of its wider experience, well and good, only not to destroy a Divine link which God Himself has formed.

This mode of action would draw forth more abundant means for missionary purposes than any other, and would greatly relieve the pressure resting on many societies at the present time. Some member of the flock should be appointed as a kind of missionary deacon, to keep up a regular correspondence with their envoy, and see to the fulfilment of their duties towards him. Let me reiterate this duty. No Church without its Missionary. No Missionary without his Church.

Algiers, January, 1894. Geo. Pearse.

---

DARTFORD.—The Dartford Young Men's Bible-class gave, on Christmas morning, their eighth Christmas breakfast at the Martyrs' Memorial Hall to 354 of the poorest children in the town. Gifts of clothing and illuminated Scripture texts were given the children on leaving.

Prophecy and Our Own Time.

THERE are many who ignore and condemn the study of prophetic truth on the ground that it is unpractical, and productive, from their standpoint, of evil rather than good. Mere speculation and human theorising on prophetic subjects are of course mischievous, and earnestly to be deprecated. But so long as inquiry and statement are confined to Scripture range, and the study is reverently and prayerfully entered on, the results are in the highest sense profitable and blessed. It is of "the sure word of prophecy," the Apostle Peter says, "Whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise."

Light that is much needed in days like our own gleams forth from the inspired page; only by welcoming and walking therein, can we escape the perils of which we are warned, or ensure the blessings we are exhorted to seek. Among the many advantages resulting from acquaintance with the prophetic Word the following may be summarised. The Scriptures are seen in their due and full proportion. Unfulfilled prophecy occupies a large space in the Inspired Word; it is so interspersed and intertwined with other revealed truths, that to neglect it is to have but a very imperfect and incomplete idea of the Divine mind and purpose. As a consequence, the thoughts and aims of many Christians are quite out of harmony with those of the Father whose will they are here to do. They are at work on other lines than those He has laid down; and seeking to effect what He has not designed to accomplish, "They err, not knowing the Scriptures."

Sympathy with the Lord Jesus in his present time of rejection is engendered by prophetic study. We often sing:—

> Our Lord is now rejected,
> And by the world disowned,
> By the many still neglected,
> And by the few enthroned.

But do we enter into what this means? Are we really going forth unto Him, "outside the camp bearing his reproach"? Or are not many glorying in the boasted progress of the age, wholly oblivious of the fact that the god of this world still usurps the throne of Christ, and that the spirit of the age is wholly antagonistic to his claims? Only in the light of prophecy can we see and realise how great is the contrast between things as they are and as they shall be when He shall come "whose right it is," and how truly our duty is to look upon this world as alien to us because hostile to Him.

Prophetic light will further serve to fix the mind on God and on Christ rather than, as is so sadly common, on man and human development. On all sides we see a growing worship of intellect, an exaltation of the flesh, and boastfulness of merely human achievements and designs. The result of acquaintance with what God has foreshown us in his Word is to expose the hollowness of all that is of the world, and to take the heart away from the creature to find its true centre and hope in the Creator alone. Another sphere of energy is seen than that which is occupied by men, other voices are heard than the Babel tongues of earth, man recedes from view, and God is beheld amid all that is passing, working out his own plans, and bringing to pass his own holy and blessed will.

Moreover, the natural and spiritual instincts of the renewed heart find their satisfaction only in the assurances given by the mouth of all God's "holy prophets since the world began." The course of things under earthly governments so seldom makes for righteousness, might so often triumphs over right, the injustice and inequality which prevail in social spheres, and the general sense of discord and anxiety which exists, all create a longing for righteous rule, which can only be obtained when the era long foretold shall dawn, and "there shall be one King in all the the earth, and his name one."

The groans and travail of the animal creation, as it smarts beneath the burden of the curse, create a yearning for the time when "the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God." So also the longings of the heart for perfect purity, entire freedom from all the trammels of self and sin, can only find their place of restful hope in the inspired predictions of that glorious time when "we shall be like Him," because "we shall see Him as He is."

Further, it is by acquaintance with truth concerning the coming of the Lord that we are led to estimate aright the value of present opportunities, alike for the cultivation of personal readiness for His approval, and for the faithful discharge of our responsibilities as His servants and stewards. If we know the time present to be short, and discern the signs of the times in their solemn import, we shall be unable to glide carelessly with the stream, or to be indifferent to the midnight cry which is arising on all sides; we shall be impelled to gird our loins, to trim our lamps, and to assume the attitude of "men that wait for their Lord."

On every ground it behoves those who are the Lord's to give heed to "the faithful word," which He has spoken, not only concerning the past, but also concerning "things to come." Not to do it, argues a want of obedient regard to the voice of that good Shepherd, who, foreseeing the coming of the wolf, has graciously forewarned the flock of his approach. There are, at the present, unmistakable "signs of the times," which call for earnest attention on the part of all who would be guided by the chart of the Word. Whether we contemplate the state of things among the Jews, the Gentiles, or the Church of God, we cannot fail to see a marked coincidence between present facts and Bible foreshadowings of the time of the Lord. Assuredly the Jewish fig-tree is "putting forth its leaves," on earth there is "distress of nations with perplexity," while in the professing Church there is growing apostasy from the faith, and "the love of many" is waxing cold.

It is sometimes said that believers have nothing to do with signs of the times; they are, it is alleged, to be taken to the Lord before the great tribulation begins, and are to be occupied only with Himself. That we are not warranted in looking for the fulfilment of signs, as necessarily to be seen before the Saviour comes for his own, may be, and many of us would say certainly is, a fact; but to be indifferent to the events which are transpiring around us as manifestly in harmony with Divine premonition, is surely to be blind where God would have us seeing. Spiritual foresight, wise regard to the special needs and responsibilities of our own times, is spoken of again and again as eminently desirable, and as specially praiseworthy. In the forefront of David's mighty men, singled out for honourable mention, we find the children of Issachar, "men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do." Isaiah, foretelling the character of these last days, said of the faithful, "Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of salvation." Daniel refers again and again, in the course of his delineations of the last days, to the Maskilim, as specially regarded of God, "the people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits; and they that understand among the people shall instruct many."

Our Lord Himself rebuked the teachers among the Jews of his own day for their failure to look at events in the light of their own prophets, saying to them, "Ye can discern the face of the sky, and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?" Our place, in days like these, is surely to follow the example of men, for example, like Micah, who because of the signs of the times could say, "Therefore I will look unto the Lord; I will wait for the God of my salvation, my God will hear me", or Habakkuk, whose resolve amid the darkening shadows of his day was, "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what He will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved." Very significant in times like the present is the direction given in Isa. xxxiv. 16, "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate; for my mouth it hath commanded, and his Spirit it hath gathered them." May the Lord anoint our eyes with eye-salve that we may see, and seeing believe, so as to take warning, and deliver our souls.

W. FULLER GOOCH.

A QUIET DAY.

A CONGREGATIONAL minister in one of the southern English counties recently invited all the ministers of the county to come and spend a day in prayer and conference; the invitation was widely accepted. The brethren assembled at eleven. To prevent the conversation from becoming desultory and aimless, two of them had been asked to speak for ten or fifteen minutes on Christian Fellowship and the Peace of Christ. The morning session closed at 1.30, and lunch was then served by a few ladies of the church. The afternoon meeting was from 2.30 till five o'clock, and two short addresses were assigned to that, one on the Influence of Fundamental Truths, and the other on Patience in Labour. The time passed swiftly in the gracious and refreshing communion of heart with heart, and of all with Christ.

At five there was tea, and between that and a public service in the church, where three brethren gave addresses of great power, there was a conference on the day, and on the advisability of observing a second day in a similar manner as soon as convenient. Some of the brethren said that they had never attended such meetings before, and the younger men were especially cheered and encouraged. A second day is to be similarly observed in March in another part of the county. Might not such meetings be held in every county in the kingdom? Who can tell whereunto they might grow. Simplicity, freedom, avoidance of publicity, and obedience to the Holy Spirit marked the proceedings of the first day.

G.

MR. ABRAHAM HORNSTEIN.—A few months ago we referred to the recantation of this former missionary to the Jews, in which he discarded his acceptance of Christianity, and announced his return to the Jewish fold. Having now seen the error of this step, he has once more embraced the Christian faith. We sympathise with Mr. Hornstein in the mental and spiritual distress through which he has passed, and sincerely hope that he will grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; but we most strongly deprecate his proposal to open a mission among Jews in the West End. His place should be that of a learner, certainly not a teacher. We would urge those who are interesting themselves in this young man to discourage so unwise a step, and to instruct him in the way of God more perfectly.

On the March.

A THOUGHT FOR THE NEW YEAR.

It was a supreme moment in the life of Moses when, honoured as he had been by stupendous manifestations of God's majesty and power, he yet craved for further revelation. Egypt was behind him, but its crushing bondage had well-nigh erased all individuality and manliness from the vast host of which he was leader, leaving them with only the craven spirit of serfs; and yet he had to conduct them on a long and perilous march, to fight and dispossess powerful nations. No wonder that he felt his need of strength and inspiration, and in the urgency of that need he cried out for fresh visions of Jehovah. "I beseech Thee show me thy glory!" It was a holy audacity, that did not displease God. He bent down very graciously to his servant's infirmity, deigning to explain to him the impossibility of that prayer being granted, but giving instead a wonderful largess from the Royal bounty, one that singled Moses out as the most highly favoured of the sons of men. "I will make all My goodness pass before thee." Hid in a cleft of that mountain which, next to Calvary, has been most associated with the Divine; carefully shielded from all physical scathing; literally covered, indeed, by a Father's hand, he saw the Lord pass by, and heard from his own lips the proclamation that He was "abundant in goodness."

As the ages rolled on, there was less clear material vision of the unseen. The dispensation was becoming more spiritual, and faith was being trained for its majestic development in the future. It was in this school that David was educated. He had no visions, but by the discipline of Providence, and the waiting upon God in which his soul delighted, his faith mounted on strong wing above all the lifelong trials that beset him, and so his history and his songs are more helpful to the militant Church to-day than perhaps any other part of Old Testament Scripture. And here again we are met by this thought of Divine "goodness." It occurs in that most beautiful of all the beautiful Psalms, a very Koh-i-noor amongst other resplendent jewels, whose six facets have been flashing light and comfort into the hearts of saints for three thousand years, and are shining with undimmed lustre to-day.

David has been using with wonderful effect the contrasts of his own life in illustration of spiritual truth, and, after the pastoral idyll so dear to trusting hearts, which tells of the Good Shepherd, and of the privileges and security of his sheep, he passes, by a rapid transition, to the conception of a warrior "hard bestead and hungry," but suddenly provisioned, and begirt with omnipotent succour in the very presence of his enemies. And the triumphant conclusion to which he comes is full of heartening inspiritment. 'Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life!" Ah, that was where the help had come from! David knew the value of a well-appointed commissariat in his warlike expeditions. This is the Divine one. Goodness and mercy following. Like the baggage waggons, in the rear, but always ready to be ordered to the front when needed.

Is not this a true word of cheer for this present season? We often think of life as a journey, never more readily than when the gates of a new year open before us, and just at this point how festal the way seems to many! Happy family meetings, gifts, endearments, music, make them pass over the solemn dividing line between the Old Year and the New, with hearts full of gladness and praise. But to earnest hearts, the din of battle is always near, and perhaps even already the feelings of the most joyous are taking a soberer hue. There are others, however, to whom the season has brought no brightness at all. Joy has not come to them in the morning, even of this New Year. They have crept across its threshold with weary feet and wearier hearts, for life has seemed very hard to them in the Old Year. So many treasures have been left behind, dear faces, bright hopes, happy troth, all buried with the dead year; and but for Christian faith, and some dear ones left, they would almost pray to die too.

To all this great host—to all amongst them at least who read these pages—we would give this watchword, "Goodness and mercy shall follow." In the conflict, in which the vigorous and buoyant-hearted and the stricken and depressed traveller will alike find himself involved; the stress of daily routine sometimes so irksome; the pursuit of a cherished plan for Christian service sometimes so beset with difficulty; the faithful attempt to be loyal to the Captain amidst keen temptation to a lowered standard of service, or to be self-sacrificing in the face of sudden allurements to a life of pleasure—stand bravely to your arms, and the reinforcements will come, even the "goodness" which Moses was permitted to see, and which made him strong for all the endurance of those forty desert years. My goodness will attend on you, and in whatever form it is needed, it will most surely come to your help. It is peculiarly characteristic of the Divine dealings that deliverance is so often kept out of sight until the moment of extremity. How else could our faith or fortitude have exercise? But it always comes then! Again the cleft of the rock and the Divine hiding, and the goodness passing before the straining vision.

And the "mercy" too! So often we are almost ashamed to appropriate the goodness. We know that many of our trials are self-wrought, and David's cry "Against Thee have I sinned," becomes a very real one from our lips; and looking only at ourselves and our demerit, we are brought very low. But it is our privilege to look up to Calvary, where once "the cross in darkness rested," and though we cannot see "the Victim's hidden face," we can sing humbly and thankfully—

> Begone, sad doubt and anxious fear,
> Mercy is all that's written there!

These are our attendants into the New Year. "Mercy"—Christ-purchased; "goodness"—God-given. Shall we hesitate now, or falter, whatever the difficulty? Only let us again be reminded of their position. They follow us, often unseen, often forgotten, but always at hand, and always "surely" ready for our aid. Just as the scientist knows that certain forces are in the elements with which he deals, and that the result of his experiment is sure, so surely we may calculate on the Divine reinforcements. But not unconditionally. There is a beautiful sequence here. A Blessed Captain and Leader is going before us in the New Year's pathway, and as we follow Him, goodness and mercy shall follow us. What an argument for careful, watchful walking!

"All the days." There may be some very dark ones, but we will not fear. We have had such days in the past, days in which the way has truly led through the valley of the shadow of death; so unspeakably dreary from the earthly side that horror would have overwhelmed us but for the Divine succours. And they have always come! sometimes bringing a word of promise, most vividly applied; sometimes such a definite consciousness of Christ's sympathy and upholding, that we have understood quite well the meaning of the "rod" and "staff," and it has been true to our deepest feelings to say—

> I had rather walk in the dark with God
> Than go alone in the light.

So, if again we are to be "pilgrims of the night" it shall not daunt us. We shall hear angelic voices singing,

> And through the dark, its echoes sweetly ringing,
> The music of the Gospel leads us home.

That glad home-coming lies before us. "I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever,"

> Morning's joy shall end the night of weeping,
> And life's long shadows break in cloudless love.

Percy Park, Tynemouth. M. C. F.

The Promise of the Father.

I perused with great interest an article entitled "The Spirit of God" in The Christian some time ago, over the signature of W. Collingwood. He says, "The purpose of the present paper is to direct attention to the fact that when He is spoken of in the Scripture, it asserts the supernatural." The point is well taken, and the paper accomplishes its object. Let me continue this important subject.

The Holy Spirit is in this dispensation a person to be obeyed by all believers. The Son of God, in his promise concerning the Spirit, distinctly showed to those who heard his words that He, the coming One, was to be a personal being. Within the compass of the eleven verses which contain what He said about the Spirit as recorded in John xiv.—xvi., He uses either a personal name or a personal pronoun no less than nineteen times. Jesus knew that on account of the invisibility of the Spirit, a tendency to forget or ignore his true personality would have its influence. He therefore presses the Spirit's personality on the reader with such emphasis and repetition.

Now, as according to Christ's statement, the Spirit "teaches all things" that the believer needs to learn (John xiv. 26), and also (xvi. 13) guides into all truth, suffering the person so guided to fall into no untruth; and seeing that the Son of God vacated the unique place of Divine authority which He had occupied as teacher for three years (xvi. 7), in favour of the Spirit, it is clear, that as the original disciples were under obligation to obey the visible Man, Jesus, so it is our place to obey the Holy Spirit now. He does for us, or rather will do for those who implicitly believe, vastly more as a teacher than the Incarnate Son did for those who followed Him. For, three years of teaching, both by word and by the object lessons of his life, did not avail to make his pupils the possessors of true Christian character; but true Christian character immediately resulted from their being filled with the Holy Ghost, as may be seen by Acts. ii. 42, 46, 47, in the case of the Jerusalem Jews. And it is in the highest degree probable that similar results showed themselves in the case of the Samaritans narrated in the eighth chapter, the Gentiles at Cæsarea recorded in the tenth chapter, and the twelve disciples at Ephesus who received the Holy Ghost as in ch. xix. It is quite certain that a true Christian character resulted in the case of Saul of Tarsus, who received the Holy Ghost as in ix. 17. Nothing less could be the result, when we remember how many, and great, and precious, are the benefits which Jesus promised should come to the believer as the immediate consequence of being filled with the Holy Ghost.

If even the teaching, and guiding, and invigorating of memory, and showing things to come, that are spoken of in John were lost sight of, yet we have the promise of "power" in Acts i. 8, and the distinct statement of Peter in x. 8, that when Gentiles received the Holy Ghost, their hearts were purified or cleansed. Purity and power became realities in the inner man of all those who, in that age, were made Christians, in connection with the teaching of Apostles, and of apostolic men. And certainly, he whose heart is pure, and who is endowed with "might by his Spirit in the inner man," will not make a failure in Christian living. So, as the indwelling Spirit is to do much more for us in the way of teaching and guiding than the Incarnate Son did while on earth for his disciples, it is plain that we should joyfully accept his teaching and obey Him. The first half of Romans viii. shows how Paul understood his Master, and how he and other contemporary believers lived.

Why are these plain facts about the Spirit's absolute supremacy over the believer's life so much avoided by evangelical teachers? The apostolical benediction is pronounced millions of times in these days, putting "the communion of the Holy Ghost" on the same high summit of divine pre-eminence with the "grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God." Is it preached and pressed with equal zeal, distinctness, and emphasis? Baptism is into the names of the three equally. Does not the use of that formula which is enjoined by Christ Himself, show that a Christian is one who knows God as having a threefold relation to him? And why is it that almost no one in any denomination teaches that the Spirit is as truly supreme and paramount in his sphere as the Father is in his sphere of providence or the Son in his peculiar work of priesthood?

The fact is, that the Church, as a whole, has lost the true and original conception of the Holy Ghost. So we find that at prayer meetings, in the pulpit, and in religious conventions of all kinds, thousands of prayers are uttered for the Spirit to come down, as if He had not certainly come down long ago; and that He may be poured out, as if He had not been poured out for all time and for all flesh. He has come as certainly, as definitely, and as finally, as the Son has come. We hear prayers and exhortations to pray for his "influences," as though his influences were not always around us. The antediluvian sinners had his influences. It is Himself that is promised, and in Luke xi. Christ told his disciples that Himself would be given to those who would ask for Him. It was Himself and not his influences, that Ezekiel and Joel prophesied should be bestowed in the latter days, which are those days in which we are living.

Theories of perfection, the higher Christian life, the rest of faith, entire sanctification, and the like, have been formulated and zealously promoted by earnest men and women with some success, but scarcely less of failure. The Lord Jesus settled that whole question Himself in what He said concerning the Holy Ghost on the Mount of Olives, and what He did at Pentecost, when He "shed forth this which ye now see and hear" (Acts ii. 33), even the promise of the Father.

Efforts are being made looking towards Church reunion or Christian unity. Some want the wholesale conversion of certain denominations to the theology or church theory of another. Some expect it as the result of mutual compromise. Union will never take place until professed Christians become real Christians, by heartily accepting the teaching of the Master they profess to love, concerning the Holy Ghost.

In line with these thoughts is the exegetical fact pointed out by Dr. Elder Cumming, as reported in your columns, that the words translated "walk" in Gal. v. 16 and 25 are not the same, that in v. 16 denoting individual walk, that in v. 25 indicating the collective unity.

And is it not significant that the Master's strong and final words concerning the unity of his brethren in his prayer to his Father for them (John xvii.) immediately follows what He said to them in the three preceding chapters about the Spirit? Christian unity will not come from our all gazing at the cross only, while declining to give full weight to what the same Jesus who died on the cross did, when He had ascended, on the day of Pentecost.

The descent of God into human souls put that matter of Christian unity out of the list of unsettled questions; for those who received the word of Peter, which promised to them the gift of the Holy Ghost, "continued stedfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."

The Apostolic Church obeyed the Holy Ghost implicitly, and without doubt, compromise, or hesitation; those who in these days do the same are those who speak and do the wonderful works of God.

Toronto, Canada. B. SHERLOCK.

A CALL FROM INDIA.

QUITE different from the usual appeals from the Mission fields is the following letter. It was sent by an experienced missionary to a "cheerful giver" in England. Names are withheld. This letter should be carefully and prayerfully studied. May it be used of the Spirit to arouse many to consecrate themselves to direct and immediate obedience to our Saviour's great command:—

"God is blessing this small Mission work. We are on clear Gospel lines, and I am sure the Lord is calling us to lengthen and strengthen and enlarge. But how can we do this unless we have the proper co-operation and aid? Here are hundreds of millions of heathen before us; hundreds of thousands of nominal Christians unsaved, and so a grievous hindrance to the spread of the Gospel; fields all white ready for the harvest, yet we cannot take up a hundredth part of the pressing work.

"And why? Probably you now expect an appeal for money, but I must disappoint you! In reply to your kind intimation that you 'shall be able to send pecuniary help if needed to this Christ-like work,' it is with regret, and even shame, that I must admit that I do not at present need money. I ought to need it. I am ashamed of the great hosts of Christians who ought to be eagerly and zealously pressing out to these Mission fields, yet who are staying at home.

"I have only two helpers. I need a dozen more at once. I cannot get them. We make no appeals to men for support. But I have no more fear for the support of twelve more disciples of Jesus here than I have for my own needs. My personal expenses, food, clothing, etc., are about thirty shillings per month, and I live comfortably. The God of the Universe who so loved the world as to come in the person of Jesus to die for sinners, can easily send the £200 per year to keep twelve workers here. But where are they? Why do they not claim a crucified and sanctified experience, and go the front in God's Holy War?

"If the Lord bids you send me aid I cannot decline it, but at present my only need from the earth-side is holy workers. Workers at the front and givers at home should join fervently in pleading the Lord of the harvest for more labourers. God only can call them, but He may sometimes send his messages through us, if we are humble, cleansed, and watchful. Purified, cross-bearing, and obedient souls will not wait for some human pledge of support, but will look to God for guidance, support, and power. India needs 1000 such new workers in 1894. Of these, my little Mission wants a dozen or a score. 'Who, then, is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?'"

A POLICEMAN'S DREAM.

A POLICEMAN in Tokio named Inahara had been a member of the Ushigome Church for about ten years. Like many in this and other lands, he seemed to regard his public profession of Christianity and membership of the church as a sure title of admission to the blessing of God's eternal kingdom; and there was no special endeavour on his part to secure the enjoyment which comes from close fellowship with Christ, or to bring others to a knowledge of his salvation.

This man was one night sleeping at the police quarters, when he dreamed that it was Sunday morning, and a friend came to invite him to go to church. He was not at all anxious to go, and replied that there was now an opportunity for him to capture a very celebrated thief, and if he was successful he would probably get some reward, and perhaps be promoted.

Going to the house where the thief was concealed he succeeded in his arrest, and was leading him away, when there suddenly gathered around them a whole band of thieves who had come to the rescue of their chief. With fierce looks and waving swords they told him that he must prepare at once to die. He gave up all hope of life, but said, "I cannot die just yet, as I am a Christian, and having been unfaithful heretofore I must first tell my family and friends about Christ and his salvation." The angry crowd replied: "We will give you a sufficient time for that purpose, but you must be quick about it."

Immediately his family and friends were assembled about him, and he began with all his power of persuasion to tell them of the only way of escape from the wrath to come. To his astonishment, and as by magic, the whole band dropped their swords and listened with the most rapt attention. So impressed was he with the importance of the occasion and the message he had to tell that he poured forth his thoughts with rapid utterance, and in an effort to speak with still greater effect he strove so hard that he suddenly awoke.

A companion who was sleeping by his side asked why he had cried out in that peculiar manner, as it was just such a cry as a comrade uttered when he fell from a mortal wound received in battle.

This peculiar and vivid dream so wrought upon his mind that he could not rest. He felt that it was his duty from that time forth to preach the Gospel to his kindred and nation, and he must do it, come what would. Just then he saw an account of Rev. Mr. Thompson having prepared a tent which he could move about, and in which he proposed to hold daily services. He went at once to Mr. Thompson and asked if he could have the privilege of drawing the cart in which the tent was carried, and also assisting in the services.

Mr. Thompson consented to this arrangement, and he immediately resigned his place and gave up a better salary to begin this laborious and humiliating work. His great desire was to learn how and what to preach in order to save men.

Since that time he has gone out regularly, dragging the cart through storm and heat, and Mr. Thompson reports him to be faithful and useful in all his work. Whenever he speaks to the people he is better able to hold their attention and interest them in his subject than many who have had years of training and long experience in the work.

GARD, FRANCE.—A deeply interesting work among young men at Alais, in the department of Gard, is superintended by Pastor Gounelle. The most popular element is a Young Men's Christian Association, which has a membership of about 130, and is steadily increasing in strength and influence. In a recent letter, M. Gounelle says: "This work is an adjunct of my ministry, and the one in which I take peculiar interest. We have had the joy of leading some souls to the point of conversion, and others have had their feet directed into good paths. I regret that, in spite of all our endeavours, the balance-sheet shows a deficit amounting to about £12 in English money, I am hoping that friends from a distance will come to our aid, so that our work may go on without the impediment of debt." Communications to Pasteur Gounelle may be addressed 15, Rue St. Jean, Alais, Gard, France.

THE SPIRITUAL CONDITION OF THE CHURCHES.

Dear Sir,—Like myself and many others, you would seem to have been impressed with the letter from Mr. William Crosbie, of Nottingham, in regard to the spiritual condition of many of our Congregational Churches, which recently appeared in the columns of a contemporary. It is to be hoped that the note of warning which he raises may be taken seriously to heart by those who lead the churches in these matters. It must be dreary work for earnest men like Mr. Clarkson, Mr. Wardlaw Thompson, and others, to find themselves called upon year after year to rack their brains to discover some new incentive to rouse the churches to a sense of their duty in relation to missionary work outside their own sphere.

But, Sir, the interest in home missions, foreign missions, or any other good work, will be the measure of the spiritual force behind it; and the repeated and urgent appeals to the churches in relation to a duty which a real live Christian Church would be simply incapable of overlooking, is painfully suggestive of the spiritual sluggishness and indifference which prevails. It is sorrowfully like the effort to flog a dead horse into going. The reason, as Mr. Crosbie points out, does not lie in deficient organisation. What is wanted is the Spirit to give it Life. If anything, there is too much organisation—too much reliance on the world's methods in doing Christ's work. As Mr. Crosbie urges, "It is the spiritual condition of the Congregational Churches that is to blame for the low state of vital godliness amongst us. That is the secret; that is the spot upon which the finger must be laid; and unless there is an alteration in that, all the new machinery in the world won't help us. The great remedy is Life from God, a revived and spiritualised Congregationalism."

But, Sir, how can we expect this life from God when for years past many of those holding high places in the Congregational ministry have been discrediting the foundation upon which it rests? The complaint everywhere is that we cannot get the working classes into our churches. What else can we expect, when they see the most eminent men in the pulpits vying with each other in their destructive criticism of the Scriptures? It is noteworthy that the only London man of eminence who has been old-fashioned enough to lift up his voice by way of protest is Dr. Parker. "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him," weeps Mary. "The spiritual leaders of our churches have shattered my faith in the Word of God, and they have given me nothing in its place," is the cry of thousands of perplexed souls, utterly unable to understand the subtle distinctions of theologians, who can snub, patronise, fondle, and repudiate the Scriptures in one breath. Can we wonder at the increasing indifference to the old Book so painfully manifest among the rising generation; the declining reverence for the worthy and worshipful, and the impatient rejection of all authority in the Church, in the home, or anywhere else? Let there be no mistake about it — the power of the Almighty Spirit to make the Word of God life to the soul is conditioned by a spiritual attitude which the fashionable destructive criticism of to-day is rendering simply impossible. A house divided against itself cannot stand. It is difficult, if not impossible, to raise the spiritual standard of the man in the pew above that of the man in the pulpit. It will be an evil day for the Churches when it becomes fully recognised that the preacher has himself so little faith in his Bible that he only uses it, or so much of it as he, the new medium of inspiration, thinks trustworthy or useful to point a moral or adorn a tale.

A few months ago I was travelling home from London. There were two gentlemen in the carriage freely discussing religious matters and the influence of the different denominations. Presently, in reply to a remark by one of them which I did not catch, the other retorted, "Can you wonder at it? Congregationalism is a Christless Church." Is there any truth in this terrible charge? If so, have we far to look for the cause of the spiritual condition of many of our Churches? I would only add that I have known what it is, as Coleridge says of himself, to "skirt the howling wastes of infidelity," and therefore am scarcely likely to advocate a blind or unreasoning faith either in a book or any ex parte authority. But I confess I have trembled as I have thought of the view which the sceptic, the selfish worldling, and the indifferent multitude, which neither knows nor cares to know about God, must take of the discussion which has for some months past been taking place among some of the defenders of the faith as to the extent of the authority of the recognised canon of Scripture.

Yours faithfully,

Alexr. Forrow.

Hainault-road, Leytonstone,
Dec. 30, 1893.

[Evidently what is here said by our correspondent is not confined to the one denomination named.—Ed.]

DR. JOHNSTON AND AFRICAN MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of December 22 you refer to Dr. Johnston's criticism of the work in Central Africa, with which my name has been connected, and suggest that some reply may be forthcoming.

It is some time since the rumour reached my ears of the coming "exposure," and I can honestly say I have looked forward to the publishing of Dr. Johnston's book with some measure of apprehension, as certainly some of us are quite conscious of bungling, and that the wisdom needed for work in Africa is only gained by experience. Judge, then, my surprise in finding that the writer has only hurled against us charges that have no weight in them, our consciences being perfectly clear in the matters of which he speaks, though there are other things better known to God and to myself about which I would be humbled.

When Dr. Johnston writes in his book that "not a single Gospel meeting was held for three successive Sundays at Kwanjulula," I suppose he refers to the three Sundays he spent with us or in the neighbourhood. Surely he cannot have forgotten his expression of surprise as he saw the numbers at the afternoon meeting at the chief's village, and how he came on the second Sunday with his camera and photographed the large meeting from a short distance off, and how one of our brethren present afterwards objected to this being done on the Lord's day!

We always aimed at having at least three Gospel meetings on the Lord's day amongst the natives at Kwanjulula and in the neighbourhood, and sometimes we have had as many as five. Dr. Walter Fisher also has long made it his custom to spend three afternoons of each week in distant village work, and every night in the week we have had preaching of the Gospel at the stations at Kwanjulula, and on moonlight evenings the attendance has been very good indeed.

Dr. Johnston is unfortunate in his insinuation that the presence in the district of Bihé of this "transport station" is a grievance to our neighbours, the American missionaries (whose stations are fully thirty miles distant); for only a few months ago a document was drawn up at the annual meeting of that society, expressing their indebtedness to my brother-in-law, Dr. Walter Fisher, for his services and help rendered to them; and he has been practically in charge of the work at Kwanjulula for the past two years. Many other proofs could be given of the good feeling and good understanding existing between us and our American brethren—e.g., vide "A Bird's Eye View of West African Missions," in the (American) Missionary Herald for October.

I am thankful for Dr. Johnston's approving words concerning the work of our American friends, and we may surely take courage from their encouragements. From his remarks on the long-continued trial of faith and patience endured by the French missionaries on the Zambesi, we may also benefit.

Your readers will doubtless be interested to hear that Msidi's son, Mukanda Vantu, has taken his father's name, and that under him the Garenganze country is recovering itself. Our two brethren Thompson and Crawford are still alone there, but we hope helpers will reach them shortly. Their health is good, and they are encouraged in their work. Three hundred miles nearer the west coast, in the Lovale country, Mr. and Mrs. Bird and Messrs. Schindler and Smith have the honour of being the first Gospel messengers to that vast region. Six hundred miles still further west is Bihé, our base and starting point.

My wife and I hope, God willing, to return in April, and we call for the prayers of the Lord's people.

F. S. Arnot.

Erfurt Lodge, Greenwich,
Dec. 23, 1893.

Dear Sir,—Dr. Johnston, amongst other accusations against Mr. Arnot and his work, mentions the fact of there being no results, and insinuates that false reports are sent home. No false reports have been sent, but that is not the point I wish to refer to. While he blames the work at Kwanjulula as useless, he praises M. Coillard for toiling on without results. M. Coillard is highly esteemed and worthy of all praise, but Dr. Johnston, perhaps, was not aware that among M. Coillard's first converts were two boys who had lived with and had been instructed by Mr. Arnot, when he was on the Barotze. Dr. Johnston gives a photograph of a Christian wedding, perhaps ignorant of the fact that the bridegroom first heard the Gospel from Mr. Arnot. One of the former companions of these boys is now in Bihé engaged in Gospel work amongst his fellow Africans.

How little credence can be placed upon the words of Dr. Johnston may be seen from the following. On page 102, line 23, when speaking of his journey, he says, "I am not aware of any European having gone into the interior through this route." Yet on page 190, he shows that he is fully cognisant of the fact that he was travelling in the very footsteps of Major Serpa Pinto, since he quotes his book and criticises his statements.

On page 40 Dr. Johnston tells how he laid a stick about the shoulders of two of his carriers "with some vigour." Only slaves are beaten, and to use a stick to a free man means making that man and his friends into lasting enemies. These carriers were collected by Mr. Arnot with considerable difficulty, and sent down to the coast to meet Dr. Johnston; and to sanction such proceedings on the part of a white man, considered to be coming out to aid Mr. Arnot, would cut off all further hope of receiving any aid from the natives in transport work. The men were especially indignant, since not only were some beaten, but beaten unjustly, owing to Dr. Johnston's ignorance of the language.

On page 343, line 7, of Dr. Johnston's book, the statement will be found, "If danger from hostile natives is anticipated a few Winchester repeaters will be found invaluable." It was the determination of Dr. Johnston to carry this principle into practice, if he should think necessary, that compelled Mr. Arnot to withdraw from him in his contemplated journey across Africa. This lies at the root of his resentment.

In the preface, Dr. Johnston states he fitted out this expedition himself, thus entirely ignoring all those who helped him so liberally at meetings and in private. While staying in my father's house, before leaving for Africa, amongst numerous contributions he received a cheque for £100 from a gentleman, and £5 from a servant-girl, possibly nearly all that she possessed. Of what esteem is a man worthy who, having marched across Africa with the name of Christ on his lips and the Winchester rifle in his hand, ready to take the life of any that he may think intend to obstruct his path, comes to England with the avowed object of trying to defame the character of those who have given their all, in order that they may preach peace on earth and good will to men?

I am, Sir, yours truly,

Theodore Fisher, M.D.

Pembroke-road, Clifton, Bristol,
Dec. 25, 1893.

SAN FRANCISCO.—A Seamen's Institute has been begun in this port by Rev. J. Fell, who laboured in this country in connection with the Missions to Seamen.

B.W.T.A. SUNDAY. — The executive committee recommend all members of the Association to devote Sunday, January 7, to special prayer as to the use of alcoholic wine at the Lord's Supper. They also urge ministers to co-operate in calling attention to the matter.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.—Mr. James Harrison was able to take the service at the Great Assembly Hall on Sunday last, after an illness of some weeks through influenza. This servant of God spoke with more than usual power, the address on this occasion being to Christian workers. Very many Christians here were greatly blessed and helped by his words, and we are grateful to God for having restored him somewhat to a measure of health again.—E. Philbrick.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

SICKNESS and poverty have made the winter to many of us a time of depression and weariness, but the bright lines stand out with unusual distinctness, and notwithstanding many anxieties, our hearts are full of thankfulness.

Very few of our friends, I imagine, receive more loving greetings than are sent to the workers at the "Bridge of Hope" from the many who have now left us, and are doing well in useful spheres of life. Some greetings come from those who have left us many years, and although they have gained honourable positions, they are not ashamed to own that the first step to a new life was taken from the "Bridge of Hope." Many have been the contributions sent from such, with the prayer that their little savings may help to save those who are as hopeless as they themselves once were.

Here is the story of one who this Christmas sent a sovereign to help us in our need. Tired of sin, and sick at heart, she was walking one winter's night over Westminster Bridge, looking half longingly, and yet with terror, at the dark water beneath, and as she glanced at one after the other of the hundreds who passed by, she felt there was no one to care for her, as she so pitifully expressed it, "They all looked too respectable, and too happy, I did not dare to speak." At last a poor blind man passed her, and thinking he might, perhaps, be only a shade less desolate than herself, she asked him if he knew of any kind friend who could help such an one as she.

He could only take her to a Home for poor blind men, from which the astonished matron directed her to a servants' home. From there she was sent to Miss Heath's in the Borough, and by her on to the "Bridge of Hope." We remember how earnestly she entreated not to be "sent on" again, and we were thankful that our doors and our hearts were wide open that another poor wanderer could find here home, and love, and Saviour, and the peace God gives when He forgives sin.

We have had a very happy Christmas time at the Refuge. Our party is always a very merry one, and the happiness is as real as it is innocent. Outsiders can scarcely understand the sympathy between inmates and workers, which gives to us all a very real sense of family life.

Among the children, the newcomers are always well instructed by the others concerning the joys of Christmas, but nevertheless it bursts upon them as a surprise—for the half has not been told. It is hard to keep dry eyes among our little ones at this happy time, their joy is so pathetic. We are so poor this year the fiat had to go forth that no luxuries whatever were to be bought, but friends were unusually good in gifts of kind, and we missed but little of our usual fare, and the children were remembered by name.

It is a blessed thing that children's memories are so short-lived, and though the impress made by cruelty and sin lasts awhile it soon gets obliterated, and that father is in prison, or maybe mother lies in a drunkard's grave does not trouble the little mind long. One of the happiest of our little children only a few months ago was dragged by her mother every night from shelter to casual ward, or from the public-house to the lodging-house.

When she first came to us her little mind was full of the unclean gossip of the older women. Now, however, it is directed into another channel, and her young life is as full of childish interests as any in our own home circle.

We have 130 of such children, whom we are training we hope for God. We never needed the help and prayers of Christian people so much as we need them this winter. MARY H. STEER.

"Bridge of Hope," St. George's, London, E.

DUBLIN MEDICAL MISSION.

I HAVE read a letter in your issue of to-day from one of our council (Mrs. Smyly), who speaks of the sickness in our city. Your readers will be glad to hear that this mission is doing a great work amongst these sick poor. Though so lately opened, the poor are flocking in in large numbers; often seventy attend the morning dispensary. We have usually from forty to fifty at our little Gospel service before the medical work commences, and at these services many a weary soul has found rest and peace through our Lord Jesus Christ. Our out-patient work is also rapidly increasing. We need funds to carry on the work. (Mrs.) E. EDITH FIGGIS, Hon. Sec.

6, Simmons Court Villas, Donnybrook, Dublin.

DR. BAEDEKER AT MILDMAY.

ON Thursday last Dr. F. W. Baedeker arrived in London, after completing his third evangelistic journey through Russia and Siberia. In the evening he told the interesting story of his travels to a goodly assemblage of friends at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. Though evidently weary, he looked fairly well, his years and toils not pressing too heavily upon him.

There were some pathetic passages in the narrative, especially in regard to the persecuted Stundists. At the outset Dr. Baedeker spoke of the desolation of the penal settlements of the Empire, a desolation which is matched by the absence of Gospel preaching and teaching. As the prisoners are constantly being moved about, he did not see many whom he had visited before, but those who did recognise him rejoiced at his return, and showed the New Testaments which they had previously received from his hand, making it evident that they set a high value upon them. After visiting Berlin and St. Petersburg, he went to Moscow, and thence to Kharkov and Odessa, where he addressed the prisoners. He was specially desirous of cheering and helping those who are imprisoned for the Gospel sake. One man, whom on his earlier visit he saw at Moscow, where he had been confined for a year while still untried for any offence, he now found in the inhospitable region of Tiflis, in Transcaucasia, whither he had been banished with five others. It is difficult to conceive that people should be sent there with any other object than to be starved. Two of the five in due course found situations enabling them to earn a little, whereupon they were ordered further away, into a still more barren desert district. The land is searched for such men, and they are ferreted out as noxious creatures. In some cases, he was enabled to assist wives and families to join their husbands and fathers in exile.

Tracing his route on the map, Dr. Baedeker described visits to Saratov, Tjumen, Omsk, Tomsk, Irkutsk, and then the journey eastward to the coast and the island of Saghalien. Much pity was felt for the unfortunate people who emigrate from European Russia in the hope of cultivating land in Siberia. After battling with misfortune they have no workhouse to which to resort; prison fare is preferred to starvation, but the only way to have the benefit of the prison is to commit a crime! Thus it is easy to get into prison, but not so easy to get out. The prisoners readily admitted that they are sinners, and they listened eagerly to the Gospel story that "the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." It is a common thing to find prisoners in solitude with hands and feet chained, even although not convicted of any crime.

In conclusion, he said that although he could not hope to visit Siberia again, he was not without expectations of doing further work in Transcaucasia, where Stundists, persecuted for love to Christ and loyalty to the Word of God, are gathered. The hunting of these poor people from their homes, and the hardships heaped upon them in their banishment, were briefly related. It was to a deeply sympathetic audience that Dr. Baedeker appealed for prayer to God on behalf of the Evangelical Protestants of the Russian Empire.

FARWIG MISSION, BROMLEY.

MR. W. R. LANE conducted the services at this mission on the last day of 1893, and many were brought to the Lord Jesus Christ. He spoke at 11.0, 3.0, and at 6.30, the attendance being very good, and the hall quite full at the evening service. At the close of the after meeting, tea and coffee were provided for all who could stay, and at 9.45 a lantern service was held, texts, pictures, and hymns being shown by limelight. At 11.0 the watch-night service commenced. The secretary led the meeting, and the hall was nearly full. Mr. Lane spoke with great power on "What shall I do with Jesus?" and as the new year came in it is believed that some stepped into newness of life.

The members of this mission, in addition to the large amount required to carry on their many agencies, have raised £207 in 1893 for foreign missions.

THE PORT OF MANCHESTER.—Through the opening of the Ship Canal, Manchester is now a port. A project is already on foot for forming a Sailors' Rest and Home

GIPSY SMITH IN GLASGOW.

OUR gifted and consecrated young brother Gipsy Smith lately concluded for the present his series of evangelistic missions in the Free churches situated in the East-end of Glasgow. The writer's church was the last of ten, including the Free College Church (Rev. Dr. Reith's), which this evangelist visited since September last year, and the last of seven churches visited during a corresponding number of successive weeks.

The magnitude and character of the work wrought by God, as we all believe, through this man's ministry during these weeks, may be seen from the circumstance that these churches, each of which affords sitting accommodation for from 900 to 1200 adults, were densely crowded, and in some cases much over-crowded, nightly, by eager anxious throngs, whose aspect showed that the great majority had come together in quest of something which they knew they sorely needed, and which they believed to be vastly important to them.

The hundreds who could not obtain admission to the church last visited, although they came nearly an hour before the time of meeting, were addressed by local workers contemporaneously with the indoor service. It was with great difficulty that passages could be made through the crowded aisles sufficiently wide to allow inquirers to pass into the hall behind, which was dedicated to the purpose of an inquiry-room. The depth of the work might be gathered from the circumstance that from its commencement somewhere about 2400 persons were personally dealt with in the after meetings, and nearly all seemed to rejoice in a Saviour revealed to them as they were being spoken to. Five special services in the writer's church yielded a large number of most hopeful cases of conversion.

The spontaneous and unanimous testimony of the workers, ministers, and others, is that very seldom indeed have they had to deal with inquirers whom it seemed so easy to lead to the Saviour. Their names, addresses, and other particulars were diligently noted down by the workers upon cards provided for the purpose, with a view to their being visited in their homes afterwards by their own pastors, who are being communicated with on the subject; while the ministers and workers of the respective congregations will do their endeavour to shepherd those found in their meetings who profess no church connection.

The permanent results remain to be seen, but the present writer feels free and bound to say that he has witnessed no equally magnificent religious meetings of this kind, and no equally impressive appearances of religious interest, for more than twenty years.

The Committee of Free Church ministers in the East-end that have employed our brother at this time, believe they have been led of God in calling him to their great and needy field. They recognise this as only a fresh beginning, and feel that the responsibility of completing and rendering it enduring rests with workers belonging to the field.

Readers are warmly requested to join them in thanksgiving for what God has lately wrought, and in prayer for all the grace required for the subsequent stages of this never-ending evangelistic work. DAVID LOWE,

Minister of London-road Free Church.

Glasgow, December 23.

AMONG JEWS IN PHILADELPHIA.

WE have resumed our Hebron Mission Prayer Meeting for Israel at Dental Hall, corner of Thirteenth and Arch Streets, and hope, if the Lord tarry, to continue it every Friday afternoon till the great heat of summer.

Mr. Mark Lev, the friend of Mr. Rabinowich, is now labouring here for his brethren the Jews, in the Florence Crittenden Mission, 318, South Seventh-street, near Spruce. He preaches twice in the week. He has prayer meetings and a Bible class every Tuesday, and receives inquirers daily. The Lord has given him hearers and some souls for his hire.

Mr. Lev earnestly desires to establish a Hebrew Christian congregation here. Will not all friends of Israel call mightily upon the Lord that he may be greatly strengthened and set apart for the ingathering of many souls? He has only been here a few months, and will have to meet with much conservatism and worldliness. MIRIAM W. JENNISON

LYDIA W. PARRISH.

P.O. Box, 266, Philadelphia.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 7.—PSALM CL.

The Psalter begins with "blessed" and ends with "hallelujah." But, oh! what an infinite amount of suffering, disquietude, and reasoning on the ways of God lies between. It is like human life. Many minor chords and plaintive strains and bitter complaints, and yet the outcome of all is in the hallelujahs, if not of time, then of eternity.

(1) The sanctuary is the temple on earth, as contrasted with the firmament of his power, the temple in heaven. Between these two, the Church on earth and the Church of the redeemed, there is constant sympathy. It is in praise rather than in any other religious exercise that we come into closest communion with the sweet societies that circle around the throne of God,

(2) For what God has done, for what He is in Himself, for his mighty acts, and for his excellent greatness, we must praise Him. And it is good to enumerate his attributes, that each may yield their chorister to the choir of the soul.

(3-5) Nine instruments of music are summoned to express the gladness that arose from the pious heart of the Psalmist. As though nature, by its many voices, might help to intensify the note of adoration. Then, from inanimate nature, he rises to a conception of the vast myriads of living things in the sea, and on earth, and in the air, and hears them saying, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

MONDAY, JANUARY 8.—PROV. I.

Introduction (1-6).—Throughout this book wisdom is used less of the intellect than of the moral nature. There are two ways by which we may know, by reasoning our way through difficult problems, or by that clear vision into the meaning and heart of things which we call intuition. It is of the latter that Solomon speaks as wisdom. The counterpart of these opening words is given in 1 Cor. i. 2, where the Apostle says we have received the wisdom that is of God, that we might know. This knowledge of right and wrong; this insight into truth, purity, and righteousness; this quickness to detect their opposites, and to flee from them, constitute a spiritual sense of the utmost value in the practical conduct of life. They depend upon the influence of the Holy Spirit, the integrity of conscience, and the study of the wise and sententious maxims incorporated in this book.

Cautions to the Young (7-19).—The cleverness which is not based upon religion is not real knowledge. A man may carry an encyclopædia in mind, and yet not be wise. A strong and noble character is based on obedience. The chains by which the godly youth is bound are not fetters but ornaments. On all hands syren voices will entice young souls from their course. The lure is often enough wealth, regardless of the injustice or suffering through which it is won. But be sure that those promises will never be realised, or, if they seem to be, it is only for a little. The curse meditated for another will come back to roost. They lay wait for their own blood. Happy the man who casts in his lot with Christ, and has one purse with Him.

The Cry of Wisdom (20-33).—With noiseless feet Wisdom is ever passing in and out amongst men, and crying. There is no life that does not come under her influence. Not in the church only, but in the market-place, she pleads with men, through their consciences, to heed her. Woeful indeed is the penalty of those who refuse, impetuous and overwhelming as the sandstorm of the desert. But against all the misery enumerated we may set the assurance of the closing words. If the life is ruled by the Word of God, there is safe dwelling and quietness from alarm.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 9.—PROV. II.

Wisdom's Address to the Young (1-9).—Let us not only receive the word, but treasure up the commandment. Nay, further, we must make it the object of our earnest and diligent search, crying after knowledge, and seeking for it, as the merchant for the precious stones. It is only under such conditions that the soul can find the pearl of great price in the knowledge of God. But even when we have exerted ourselves to the utmost, there is the necessity of waiting upon the Lord in humble dependence until He give his Holy Spirit. Wisdom is his gift. It is laid up for us, but we must seek it. But God does more than give the knowledge of good and evil to the soul, He is a shield and buckler, He preserveth the way of his saints, He makes them know every good path.

The Advantages of Wisdom (10-22).—A noble moral nature filled with a spirit of truth and light, imparts discretion in the conduct of the affairs of life, and delivers from those that deal in the sophistries of error and the seductions of vice. What more awful character could be given of a man than that he rejoices to do evil, and delights in the frowardness of others.

Many vivid pictures are given in this book of the impurity which lay in wait in the great cities of the old world, as in ours. The word stranger does not mean foreigner, but one who has strayed from God. The false heart flatters, but her house leads down to death. There is nothing that so destroys all nobility of heart and saps the strength of life like unchastity, and when once a man has become involved in its toils he very rarely emerges into the light of life. Or if he do, like Augustine, he carries with him the scar of his sin till death. A long life in the land of their possession was the cherished ambition of the Jew. It has its counterpart in our own time in the depth and intensity in which holy souls drink in the meaning of true life.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10.—PROV. III.

The Obedient Life will be Blessed and Successful (1-10).—We must remember God's law and obey it. The Holy Spirit will write it on our heart (ver. 3, Jer. xxxi. 13), and bind it around us. He will also give us power to keep it. Forget not, but keep, is a momentous command. (a) The obedient will be trustful and God-dependent. It is a sign of the highest wisdom to distrust our own understanding. This was where Joshua and David failed (Josh. ix. 14; 1 Sam. xxvii. 1). But we must make no compromises: all thine heart, all thy ways, all thine increase. Withdraw any fraction and you vitiate all. It is only the heart which is fully consecrated, that can fully trust. But so soon as we deny self, it is natural and easy to turn to God. (b) The obedient will reap many advantages: a long and peaceful life (Psa. xxiii. 6; 1 Tim. iv. 8); favour with God and man, as in the cases of Joseph, David, and Daniel (Gen. xxxix. 2-4; 1 Sam. xviii. 12-15; Dan. ii. and iii.); health of body and soul (3 John ii.). (c) The obedient will use all for God. Our substance is his, and our duty and joy should be to use it for Him. Such giving is the condition of getting (1 Kings xvii. 10-16; 2 Cor. ix. 6).

The Divine Correction (11-12).—We must not only do all that God commands, but bear all He sends. Not even the perfect Son was exempt from this discipline (Heb. v. 8; xii. 7). To despise is to make light of it, to refuse to regard it from God, or to be unhumbled by it. To be weary is to be crushed by it, and to fail to see the love that prompts it. "Not to feel thy evils would be unhuman, not to bear them, unmanly."

The Value of Wisdom (13-20).—Though it brings correction, yet it is laden with blessedness. The pearl of great price costs all, but it is better than all. Paul counted all things but dung in comparison. Both her hands are laden with priceless gifts (16). The paths she treads are not always palatable to the flesh, but they are pleasantness and peace in their outgoing. "Some of the world's ways are pleasant, but not safe; others safe, but not pleasant." Wisdom's ways are both. The tree of life was a type of Christ. Adam lost it, but the consecrated character finds and feeds on it.

The Godly Life (21-35).—Its soul lives; the neck is clothed with beauty; the foot does not slip; there is no dread of sudden alarm. "It sleeps in the woods." And it is prodigal of blessing to others. It does not postpone its deeds of mercy. It is neighbourly and peaceable. It shuns the ways of the violent and perverse. It knows the secret of God.

Note the contrasts of these closing verses (32-35). For fellowship, abomination; for blessing, a curse; for glory, shame.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11.—PROV. IV.

A Father's Instruction (1-9).—Solomon teaches good doctrine. This is very important. The creed makes the life. It is well when a father can quote for his children the experiences of his own childhood. Is not this a reminiscence of David and Bathsheba? Their sin had been forgiven, and they devoted themselves to the training of their beloved child. "He taught me and said unto me," so act that your children may say this of you. True religion secures promotion (8), and grace (9), and ultimately a crown of glory (9), and these are of more value than the worldly advancement many parents so eagerly seek for their children. How many have been ruined because the maxim of their early training was get on, but there was no strong or noble basis to their character.

The Practice of Piety (10-27).—We must not only hear, but receive. We must not only be taught, but we must go where we have been led, and run. We must take fast hold of God's truth and keep it. An indolent hearer cannot be saved. We must carefully avoid the paths of wickedness and sin. Without perpetual watchfulness we shall slip into them. Our foes are crafty and sleepless. To do us harm is their meat and drink. Oh for the upward path, which resembles the growing light of the dawn, brighter and brighter, till we shine as the sun in the kingdom of our Father (Matt. xiii. 43).

The urgency of the Divine Appeal (20-27).—Again the earnest call for attention is repeated. Ear, eye, and heart, are alike laid under the Divine summons to receive and retain. And this from motives of the purest benevolence. Life and health lie only in the path of obedience. Then, seriatim, the various departments of human life are mentioned. The heart, the seat of the affections, this must be guarded above all keeping. For these determine the life (Matt. xii. 34: xv. 19). Then the lips: the eyes: the path of the feet. What we say, where we look, how and whither we walk, are all important.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12.—PROV. V.

The Temptation to Unchastity (8-14).—There is no great city or country village that is not the scene of the tempter's snares for the unwary and thoughtless. What a contrast between the beginning and the end of sin. At first as the honeycomb (3). But the end bitter as wormwood (4, 5). The wise man tears aside the veil by which the real nature of sin is hidden. The pleasures of sin are but for a season, whilst the bitterness, the death, the accusing conscience, look on to the eternal world. Oh, how bitter is the mourning over the irretrievable past (11, etc.). Surely here is the wail of the lost—an anticipation of the wailing and gnashing of teeth. While all this is terribly true of the special evil here described, it is not less applicable to ALL sin. Let us keep the words of wisdom in our heart, and use them as our defence (7). There is no other way of safety. Forsake the Word, and you are as a man unarmed in the midst of a battle.

The Pure Joys of Chastity (15-23). Enjoy in moderation and with thankfulness those blessings which are found within a godly home, where the wife is a partner of the grace of life, and the children grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. No natural instinct is in itself wrong, but we must only take such satisfaction as God gives. He gave the hunger for human love, and Satan often tempts us to try to make stones into bread; but we must forbear, and wait till God sends our food at the hand of angel messengers. We live by every word of God.

How searching the closing verses (21-23). God's eyes are on all our ways. He weighs carefully all our paths. Every sin tends to involve the sinner in hopeless bondage (22; John viii. 34) and ends in death (23; Matt. vii. 13).

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13.—PROVERBS VI.

A chapter of warnings. Wisdom directs us, not only what to do, but what not to do. The hidden rocks are carefully marked on the chart of life. Continuous and whole-hearted obedience to the Word of God is our only safety. If we get wrong, it is not for lack of clear direction, but because we do not follow it. When we walk, we must follow God's guidance. When we lie down, we must sleep with his benediction. When we awake, we must commune with Him through his Word (20-22).

Suretyship (1-5).—How many have rued their disobedience to this distinct command. They have put their names to the back of bills, and have been ruined. True Christians might always give this as the warrant to refuse to comply with the request of friends. Let us extricate ourselves before it is too late. And yet what would be our fate, had it not been for the suretyship of our Saviour!

Indolence (6-11).—A wise man will take instruction even from ants. Their industry and providence rebuke the sluggard. If they do so much without chief, overseer, or ruler, how much more should we, who are under the law to Christ, our Prince and Saviour! How constantly do we meet with temptations to procrastination! In early rising, in the commencing of a pressing duty, in regard to the great work of conversion or consecration. The time slips away which ought to have been spent in seed-sowing, and lo, harvest is upon us, with no crops to reap.

Mischievous Wickedness (12-19).—The poverty of the sluggard results from his slothfulness, that of the naughty or worthless person from his unwearied activity in evil (15). What a picture is here, of the froward mouth, the winking eyes, the shuffling feet, the sleight of hand, the froward heart. They reappear in the enunciation of the abominations which the Lord hates. The sower of discord is put in strange company (19). And from his being classed with abominable things, let him learn how evil he is in God's holy sight.

The Evil Woman (20-35).—Her flattering tongue and her beauty are her attraction. Beware of them. When you begin to feel the pull of the current, stand still and reason with yourself how inevitable and awful are the wages of sin. Poverty (26), suffering as of fire (27), dishonour and reproach (33), and death (26, 34, 35) are the harvest for such a sowing. "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption."

F. B. M.

THE INDIAN ARMY Temperance Association is stated by On Guard to have a membership of 22,607

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 14.

ADAM'S SIN AND GOD'S GRACE.—Gen. iii. 1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT, 1 Cor. xv. 22.

IT would be a mistake to allow the speculations which have been raised upon this incident to crowd out the important and practical lessons it contains. Two facts are indisputable, first, that sin is here; and next, that God's grace has provided a remedy for it. To waste time in useless speculation as to how sin entered into the world, instead of welcoming the Divinely-provided deliverance, is as unwise as if a man should refuse to take the remedy for some desperate disease because he does not understand how the disease began. The story is told with artless simplicity, and bears the stamp of truth. The traditions preserved by other nations as to the origin of evil so far resemble this as to suggest that they were derived from it.

I. THE TEMPTATION (1-5).—The name of Satan is "the great dragon, that old serpent" (Rev. xii. 9). The subtlety of the literal serpent, its natural cunning, and craft, and guile, fitted it for his purpose. The tempter himself embodied, in their very worst forms, the characteristics of the creature he used.

The method adopted was full of craft. He began with the woman (1), the weaker vessel, who had been but a short while in being. He found her alone, and near to the forbidden tree. Satan times his temptations when we are least prepared to meet them. He began with Eve in order to seduce Adam, as he afterwards sought to get at Job by his wife, and at Jesus by the rebuke of Peter. Temptations are never more subtle than when they come to us through those we only regard as friends.

To compass his purpose he did three things:—(1) He suggested a doubt, not first as to the truthfulness of a Divine word, but as to whether God had really said what Eve supposed. "Yea, hath God said?" (1). There are many dangerous forms in which he is repeating the question to-day (2). He denied God's statement (4). The statement of God is directly contradicted by that of Satan. The subtlety of the temptation lies in the fact that Satan's lie was a half truth. There was a sense in which death would not immediately result from eating the forbidden fruit. But physical death was not all that God meant, nor all that the woman needed to fear. To conceal some of the consequences of sin and to magnify others is one of the methods of the father of lies still (Jno. viii. 44). (3) He promised them advantage through eating the fruit. (5) Again he concealed the worst part of his meaning. As a skilful fisherman he shows the tempting bait, but hides the hook. Of course they would know good and evil after their fall, as they did not before; but would this make them as gods? Let the condition of men through sin furnish the reply. This last attack touched the character of God. How could Eve think of Him as good if He denies her what would be to her advantage?

II. The Fall (6, 7). Eve has parleyed with the tempter, and his point is almost gained. Compare what is said of the tree (6) with what is declared to be in the world (1 Jno. ii. 16); and see how the same tempting objects were presented to our Lord (Matt. iv.). The progress of the temptation can be clearly traced, and is true of every other temptation, too:—First, she saw, then desire was inflamed; finally, the desire triumphed over conscience, and the act was committed.

How soon the fruit of sin appears! (1) Their eyes were opened (7). The delirious enjoyment of the sin is soon over, and they see what they have done. They had not known shame if they had never known sin. (2) They attempted to cover their sinful nakedness (7). The aprons of fig-leaves were the first efforts of man to hide his sin beneath an outward covering of righteousness. No man can succeed in such an attempt (Prov. xxviii. 13). (3) They were afraid of God (8-10).—They had never done this before. "God, our exceeding joy," becomes unbearable to those who are defiled with sin. (4) They began to make excuses.—Neither of them owned frankly to their own sin. Adam blamed Eve, and even suggested that God was the occasion of the sin because He had given him the woman (12). And Eve blamed the serpent (13). This is folly. God sees the sin under all our excuses.

III. GOD'S GRACE.—This appears in God's first word to fallen man (9). Adam had lost everything in losing God, but it is God who first seeks Adam. And especially in the word spoken to the serpent (14, 15). It was a word of judgment to the tempter, but contained the first promise of grace to men. God undertook the case of fallen man. The seed of the woman is Christ Himself (Gal. iv. 4). The cross was the occasion of his having his heel bruised, and of his defeat of Satan (Jno. xii. 31). But the conflict is also between all believers and Satan. The issue of this is made certain also (1 Jno. iv. 4; Rom. xvi. 20)

For the Young.

WHAT THE SABBATH SHOULD BE.

BY REV. WM. BRYANT.

Our little ones wake on the Sabbath;
"What is to-day?" they cry;
"Sunday," is softly answered,
Bright'ning each childish eye.

For Sunday with them is no cloud day,
Dreaded the livelong week,
When faces grow long as the shadows,
And they hardly dare to speak.

No: Sunday with them means sun-day,
Brightest of all the seven;
When on the week's enjoyment
Comes most of the light of heaven.

The services, songs, and stories,
All in sweet harmony blend;
They are full of the Gospel of Jesus,
The children's Saviour and Friend.

Our Church is no gloomy prison,
Where body and soul are bound;
But a place where even the children
Are glad when the hour comes round.

Our school, too, is full of pleasure;
Lesson, and song, and prayer,
And the tender words of the teacher
All make it good to be there.

But home, ah! home is the sweetest,
The happiest part of the day;
And father's and mother's stories
Are better than all their play.

Oh, when, in the unknown future,
Life comes with its pain and care,
And sorrow and dark temptation
Shall leave them no hope but prayer,

Will our children forget these lessons?
Will they stumble or darkly roam?
Or will they be bound more truly,
To Sabbath, and Christ, and home?

Our Father, take Thou our children,
Their future we cannot see.
O Lord of the Sabbath hear us,
And bind their young hearts to Thee!

DARE TO DO RIGHT.

BY MRS. LUCY E. SANDFORD.

A LADY related in my hearing the following incident:—When my parents told me that I was to be sent to a boarding-school, I felt I had taken a flying leap into young ladyhood; but when the good-bye moment came I found I had leaped into second childhood. But the dignity of the situation came upon me in full force when I saw the—to my young country eyes—grand building and crowd of strangers.

I had two room-mates—Nettie, sixteen and handsome (she took my heart at once), and Ida, a few months younger. At noon we were strangers, but at bed-time sworn friends, with a full knowledge of each other's home and life history.

The nine o'clock bell came only too soon, and I had quite forgotten to be miserably home-sick, as I had loyally intended to be. When the first retiring bell rang, Nettie undressed quickly, kissed each of us, and hopped gracefully into bed.

I hesitated, looked at my Bible, and I said to myself, and myself said to me, "I ought to read." "Nettie did not."

"Those at home are reading and praying." "Oh, well, I do not wish to set myself up for being better than my room-mates."

"Yes; but mother told me to continue my regular reading and prayer." "I can read and pray in secret: the idea of private devotion with two looking on! My closet must be my own heart."

"And yet, if I begin to pray carelessly, I shall soon cease to pray at all. I must kneel before the Lord, my Maker." "Why kneel? I can pray quite as well lying down, and those two not looking at me."

The evil prompter, having a powerful ally in my natural timidity, conquered, and I went towards the bed Nettie was in with a dull, restless, dissatisfied feeling in my soul. Just then Ida took down her Bible and commenced to read. I turned back and took mine with a feeling of relief, as if a load were lifted that was pressing me downward. I felt like kissing the book and asking its forgiveness. As I was reading, Ida went into a corner by herself and kneeled. As she rose, Nettie said:—

"I should like to know if you read your Bible, and say your prayers every night?" "Yes, I never miss." "I never say mine."

"I should be ashamed not to." There was no bravado or assumption of goodness, but a calm, matter-of-fact, pleasant tone and air. I went from my knees to Ida's bed, and nestled close to her. She soon slept, but without a dream of the great blessing she had been to me that night.

And not to me only; for when, somewhat more than a year after, Nettie, who did not come from a Christian home, became herself a pronounced Christian, she dated her first religious impressions from Ida's answer that night.

And I felt so ashamed of myself that I had been ashamed of Jesus!

CHRISTMAS GATHERINGS IN MADRID.

These are called fiestas (feasts) for want of a more appropriate name. For some time the children of the Mission Schools at Chamberi have been learning their portions of Scripture and their pieces of poetry, and practising their Christmas carols; and for two or three days the lady workers have been dividing out, in five hundred paper bags, various kinds of fruits, such as nuts, dates, figs, and chestnuts, and rolling up the Christmas numbers of El Cristiano and Hojas Ilustradas (Illustrated Leaves).

With all the crowding possible, these gatherings occupied three evenings and one afternoon. When the scholars are seated there is not room for all their parents, though there is no standing space unoccupied. On these occasions a room holding a thousand would not be too large. It is difficult even for two policemen at the door to keep people from pressing in when there is no room, and at last the greater number have to retire.

The many Scriptures repeated by the scholars, and upon which they are questioned, are on the fall of man, the promises concerning the coming of a Saviour in the Old Testament, and their fulfilment in the New; then the prophecies concerning the second coming and reign of Christ. Pieces of poetry are recited or read, and Christmas hymns and carols are sung, accompanied by tambourines, castanets, and triangles, which even the little children play very prettily—very differently from any performance on such instruments I have ever heard in England.

We have often wished the crowds of people who cannot get in might hear, if only once, the clear and repeated statements of Gospel truth as given out by the boys, girls, and even infants, on these occasions. One of these last closed the infant school "feast" by clearly announcing the times of meeting in the "locale," earnestly inviting those present to come and hear of the love of God.

Another, whose recitations were very distinct, about six years of age, is known as "the little Protestant" among her neighbours. One day a neighbour offered to take her for a little walk, with the secret purpose of beguiling her into church to hear mass. When the woman was about to enter the church, little M—— turned back, saying, "I am not going in there." Her father remarked in her hearing one day that God did not hear his prayers. She said, "It must be because you do not belong to God, for He hears all his people's prayers." She tells him she will not be satisfied until she hears him preach like Don Alberto and Don Mariano; then she will know he is right.

These gatherings, presided over by Mr. Fenn, have been commenced with a suitable word from the Book, and closed by a very short Gospel appeal; then the children, answering to their names, come forward and receive a paper bag of fruits, and the roll of papers prepared. One cannot see these children without loving them. If Spain had had the Gospel privileges England has she would, we believe, have been at least as faithful as England.

CHARLOTTE FENN.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Peter's, Colchester, Jan. 5 to 11; York, Jan. 13 to 21; Stalybridge, Jan. 25 to 26; St. Luke's; Liverpool, Jan. 27 to Feb. 7; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Parmiter-street School, Cambridge Heath, Jan. 21 to 28; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Battisford, Jan. 1 to 8; Ipswich, Jan. 13 to 21 (with Mr. Goodman); Mr. George Goodman, Sefton Park, Putney, Jan. 7 to 12: Mr. Edward Hughes, Aldenham Hall, Somers Town, Jan. 10 to 12; Albany-road Institute, Camberwell, Jan. 24; Mr. J. M. Wigner, Camden-road Baptist Chapel, Jan. 8 to 13; Mr. Arthur Outram and Mr. T. Cave-Moyles, Ealing, Jan. 7 to 12; Holiday Services for Young People, Hove Town Hall, by Mr. A. G. Dodderidge and others, Jan. 7 to 15.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—S., Jan. 7, 2 Kings iii. 13-27; 8, iv. 1-17; 9, iv. 18-30: 10, iv. 31-44; 11, v. 1-14; 12, v. 15-27: 13. vi. 1-12.

New Year Poems.

THOUGHTS FOR A NEW YEAR.

Years are flying, souls are dying,
Thousands are going down to hell;
Men are hating, God is waiting,
While they think that all is well.

Time is speeding, graves are feeding,
Death is busy all round;
God is calling, 'tis appalling
That such fearful sins abound.

Are we seeking, are we yearning,
For the souls we ought to save?
Are we ready, are we watching,
As they rise upon the wave?

Christ is coming, time is ending,
Are we serving while we may?
Night is coming, light is fading,
Are we working while 'tis day?

Edinburgh. J. Forbes Moncrieff.

"Thy blessing is upon thy people."—Psalm iii. 8.

Say what thou bringest us, O new-born year!
Say what along thy course to us will flow,
Say whether weal awaiteth us or woe;
Tell, if thou canst, what we should hope or fear.
Thou hast not power to make our future clear,
Nor has the wisest seer who dwells below;
But He, who reigns above, has deigned to show
Whose souls He will with daily sunshine cheer.
The silver trumpet of his Word proclaims
From spot to spot throughout its wide extent
That blessing on the people will be sent
Who humbly own the Saviour's sacred claims,
Have ears to hear the Gospel's joyful sound,
And in the works of faith and love abound.

Edlaston Rectory, Ashbourne, Derbyshire, W. S.
January 1, 1894.

NIGHT AND MORNING.

"His favour is for a life-time; weeping may come in to lodge at even, but joy cometh in the morning."—Ps. xxx. 5, R.V. marg.

A lifetime of gladness and praise,
And only a night of pain;
A morning of sunshine and joy,
Never to darken again!

A lifetime eternal with Jesus,
And sorrow a passing guest;
Till the morning of joy has dawned,
And pain given place to rest.

I will hush my soul in the silence,
The night has so nearly gone;
His smile is for ever and ever,
I will smile and go gladly on!

C. W. Ashby.

The above may be had as a New Year's leaflet from Mr. A. Holness, Paternoster-row.

VICTORY—A WATCHWORD.

(1 Cor. xv. 57.)

Victory, our watchword for the coming year!
Write it on the banner that aloft we bear;
Keep it in the forefront, as we charge the foe,
Victory through Jesus, comrades, we shall know.

Victory, when before us gleams an earthly prize,
See the crown immortal, yonder in the skies;
Though the heart may falter, and the eye be dim,
"Looking unto Jesus," faithful be to Him.

Victory for Jesus, all along the line;
When the night is darkest, shall this watchword shine;
Victory for Jesus, till the rising sun
Floods the field with glory, and the day is won.

In the thick of battle, fierce assaults of sin,
Wave on high our banner, and the victory win.
All the snares of Satan then can never harm,
Nor the world beguile us with its fairest charm.

When the hosts of darkness, with their fiery breath,
Meet the Christian soldier in the vale of death,
Through the direst conflict with the last dread foe,
Christ hath been victorious—we shall triumph know.

Victory over sorrow, pain, and gloomy fear.
Seems the day against us? Still our Captain's near.
Through the power of Jesus we shall conqu'rors be:
Shout aloud, ye soldiers, songs of victory!
Christ, our glorious Leader, 'tis thy mighty love
That alone can make us "more than conqu'rors" prove.
Through thy Blood the victors in the past o'ercame,
Victory still our watchword, Jesus, through thy name.

J. H. S.

The above may be had printed as a wall-card, price 3d. each, from G. H. Himmel, Langport.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The members of this Association held their annual meeting in Exeter Hall, on Thursday, Dec. 28, Mr. George Williams presiding. The afternoon conference was for the consideration of the question: "Is the Christian life a help or a hindrance to success in business?" The discussion was opened Mr. J. T. Mogridge, one of the members, who said that the Christian life is many-sided; real Christians are under its influence in whatever they may be engaged, whether in the home, the church, or the business. With regard to success in business, if it pleased God to give it to them, they thanked Him for it; but if they did not enjoy what the world would call success, they were content to be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ in the humbler spheres of life. He admitted frankly that so-called "success" could be obtained in business without Christianity at all. There were millions of successful men who were of no religious belief, and who thought little, if anything, of Christ. But he strongly maintained that if it was possible to be successful without religion, it was equally possible to be successful with religion. Indeed, they all knew a large number of men who, by virtue of being Christians had made their mark in the world, had developed enormous establishments, employed a large number of men and women, and then given generously of their profits to assist good work in all directions. They were told that the three essential qualifications for a business man were "tact, push, and principle." It was not enough for them to be good—they must also be competent. If they engaged a man who did his work well, they would rejoice to know that he was a Christian; but speaking as a business man, he would rather have a clock made by an infidel if it kept good time, than have one made by a Christian that did not keep good time. The speaker then showed where the Christian differentiates from the worldling. There were many occupations, he said, which a man of the world could follow which a Christian must avoid. A Christian could not follow an unholy calling. If he was in one he must leave it and enter another. He could never succeed in an unholy calling, and if he stayed in it, he would always be at war with his God and his calling. A Christian could not grind the face of the poor; he could not promote his business by drinking, misrepresentation, fraud, or bribery. In short, he must carefully avoid making his business the be-all and end-all of his existence. With a Christian, Christ must be his first thought. The Lord God always gave a Christian full compensation for any apparent disadvantage which he might suffer. The Christian business man who was persistent in well doing would be sure to make a good reputation for himself, and such a reputation that those who did not like him would be compelled to respect him.

Mr. John Jackson, Mr. W. Barrett, and Mr. Verry and others spoke, and the president concluded the discussion with a few practical and helpful remarks.

After tea, the annual meeting took place. Mr. L. Courtney, secretary, read the report, which showed that during the twenty-one years of the existence of the Association, much blessing had resulted from its labours. During the past year 226 new members had been enrolled, two new libraries and seven renewals had been sent out. Bibles had been supplied to bedrooms of thirteen Irish hotels and seven English hotels. The committee are thankful for all past mercies, and pleased to be able to report the great desire on the part of many of the members for greater spiritual power, and a fuller consecration of life to the service of Christ. The work of the coming year is looked forward to with great interest and expectation. Excellent speeches were delivered by the president (Mr. G. Williams), Messrs. Geo. Lidgett, J. E. Kirby, J. H. Lynn, and others.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

The workers of the London City Mission assembled in good force at the New Year's meeting on Monday morning in Exeter Hall. The president on the occasion was Rev. R. Dawson, joint secretary, who a year ago was lying dangerously ill, but, by the mercy of God, has been restored to health and vigour. This fact added to the cheerfulness of a meeting which was full of stimulus and joy.

It has become a regular thing for the missionaries to receive a New Year's gift from Mr. George Williams. This year the present consisted of the second volume of the work, "Class and Desk," and the autobiography of Dr. J. G. Paton, the New Hebrides missionary. These books are calculated to encourage the missionaries and equip them for more efficient service in the Gospel.

The address this year was by Dr. Newman Hall, whose words were sympathetic and helpful in a high degree, and calculated to instruct his hearers as to their duties and privileges in the Kingdom of Christ. Taking as a text Heb. vi. 11 ("The same diligence to the full assurance of faith unto the end"), he spoke of work and hope, and showed their mutual connection. Devoted service is a sure cure for doubts, and assurance of hope is a great incentive to service.

Brief addresses were also delivered by Messrs. G. Williams and W. H. Seagram, and Rev. P. B. Power, the well-known tract-writer, the latter giving to the missionaries a word of encouragement, founded on the assurance that "he that soweth and he that reapeth shall rejoice together." Although present effort may be irksome and without apparent fruit, the weary sower shall share in the rejoicings of harvest.

Mrs. Newman Hall offered a large number of her husband's well-known booklet, "Come to Jesus," for distribution by the missionaries. By the generosity of another lady present the number was multiplied fivefold, so that each of the workers will have a little parcel of these Gospel appeals for distribution.

"MY NEIGHBOUR AND I."

The following, sent by a lady friend, illustrates the value of personal dealing, and also brings out the beauty of simple and full trust in everything.

"As we stood together (my neighbour and I), I asked God to speak to her, and through me to her, and He did so. She came to me because she said I had something in my life that she had not, and she wanted the same. I told her it was simply letting God take the management—just giving everything over into his hands, and trusting Him for all; not trying one little bit, but daring to take God at his word and believe implicitly. She said 'Yes, I know it in my head. I know He has said, "Though your sins are as scarlet, they shall be as snow."' I will try and believe it means me. I don't want to be a mere church-going Christian, but to live an out-and-out Christ-like life, and I am afraid of myself how I shall get on to-morrow and next week, and when trouble comes.' I told her to begin by giving herself to Jesus now, and He would do for her as He had done for me—manage all the rest. The promise stood sure, 'Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver and thou shalt glorify me.'

"She asked, 'Do you mean all the little things in one's everyday life? Do you think He would do that?' I told her I thought nothing about it, I knew He did every day of my life. 'Ah!' she said, 'I would give all I possess to feel as you do about it.'

"I told her that was what God wanted her to feel, and was pleading with her by his Spirit to trust Him now. She said, 'Will you ask Him that I may trust Him?' So together we knelt, and just told Jesus all about it, and asked that God our Father would show her it was not trying ourselves, but trusting Him. After a long struggle her face lighted up, and through her tears she said, 'I must trust Him, He is so good and loving; I see it all now. I won't try any more, I will take Him at his word.' I replied, 'Tell Him so,' and together again we knelt, and she told Him she just wanted Him to manage her life for her, and all belonging to her; and she went home looking radiant.

"I saw her this morning, and to my inquiry, 'Are you still trusting?' she answered, 'Ah! Yes, it is so lovely: all the little things, just as you said, I take them all to Him, and He does manage them beautifully."

REV. GEORGE DOUGLAS, D.D.,

PRINCIPAL OF THE FREE CHURCH COLLEGE, GLASGOW.

THE subject of our present sketch was born at Kilbarchan, in the heart of Renfrewshire, in March, 1826. His father was for nearly fifty years minister of that parish. On account of infirm health he was under the necessity of employing an assistant, who aided him in many of the duties devolving on a parish minister. Thus he was enabled to devote himself more particularly to the education of his sons as they grew up, and to prepare them for entering on their career as students at the University of Glasgow. All of them, except one who died when he was comparatively young, were eventually called to office in the Free Presbyterian Church. The youngest of the family became well-known as holding an honoured place in the roll of missionaries, having laboured in Amoy, under the direction of the English Presbyterian Church, for some three and twenty years.

(From a Photograph by Mr. Rettie, Kirkcaldy, N.B.)

George Douglas had the unspeakable privilege of being brought up in a pious home under the care of godly parents, who, in a wise and loving way, both by their instruction and their example, sought to lead their children to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to win them to his service. Their son George early gave token of his consecration to God. Fully equipped by the careful training of the Manse, he entered upon and completed his undergraduate curriculum of four sessions at Glasgow University, where he soon acquired and consistently maintained among his fellow students the reputation of being an earnest, thorough, able scholar. His genial, kindly nature secured for him the esteem and affection of all.

In the splendid efforts she put forth to complete her organisation as the "Church of Scotland, Free" (for that was her claim), the Free Church was at first able to establish only one Theological Hall for the education of her students for the ministry—that of Edinburgh. But she had great men to fill the several chairs in her new college; she had Chalmers, Welsh, Cunningham, and "Rabbi" Duncan. That was a noble Theological Institution, and the young men who had the privilege of studying under such professors were singularly favoured. There are not many now surviving and in active service who came under the spell of these great teachers, and were fired by the enthusiasm which so wonderfully characterised the Free Church in those early days of her history.

George Douglas was one of those students. Having finished his curriculum, and graduated at the University of Glasgow, he forthwith proceeded to Edinburgh, and for four successive sessions sat at the feet of these professors, gaining from their instruction and their influence preparation for the great life's work to which he had devoted himself, the preaching of the glorious Gospel. At the close of this period of preparation he was duly licensed by his presbytery, and commissioned by them to go forth and preach the Gospel. After spending thus some three and a half years, mainly in assisting ministers in various towns, he received a call (1852) from the congregation of Bridge of Weir, a considerable cotton-spinning village in his native parish. He was in due course ordained to the work of the ministry there, and soon entered on the responsibilities of his sacred office. For the space of about five and a half years, with unintermitting devotion, he gave himself to his work. But the men of the present generation can scarcely realise what that work implied. The frequent calls for service beyond the bounds of their own parishes, and in connection with the interests of the Church at large, taxed the strength of ministers to the utmost. Mr. Douglas took his full share of such calls upon his service. But the interest he had taken in Hebrew studies, while attending "Rabbi" Duncan's class, never abated. These studies continued to be prosecuted with increasing zest, and accordingly, when the Free Church established a Theological Hall at Glasgow (1856), the eyes of the Church were directed to him as a well known Hebrew scholar, and he was unanimously invited to become Hebrew Tutor.

After discharging the duties of that office for one session, the General Assembly appointed him to the chair of Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Theology, which he ably filled to the satisfaction of the Church, and to the advantage of a succession of students, many of whom now occupy important fields of labour, till he tendered his resignation in 1892. In 1857 the University of Glasgow, in recognition of his learning, conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. On the death of Principal Fairbairn, in 1875, Dr. Douglas was appointed by the Assembly to fill the office of Principal, which had then become vacant. He retains that office by the unanimous and urgent request of the Assembly. We thus still delight to think of him as the revered and much-honoured Principal of the Free Church College of Glasgow.

As Professor and Principal of his college, new and very weighty responsibilities were laid on Dr. Douglas, not only with reference to the welfare of his own Church, but also of the City of Glasgow. The circumstances in which the Free Church was at first placed rendered it necessary for her to erect schools alongside the churches all over the country. All the while, however, the church deliberately preferred a national to a denominational system, and accordingly, when the national scheme was constituted in 1872, she finally handed over all her schools, which she had erected at the cost of many thousands of pounds, to the State, with a few unimportant exceptions where it was found impossible to carry out that policy. Dr. Douglas was fully alive to the importance of the efforts that were made to frame an Educational Bill for Scotland, and exercised no little influence in guiding public opinion on the subject, till the Bill assumed its final form and was made fairly satisfactory. For some years also, after the passing of that Bill, he held an important place in the Glasgow School Board, and afterwards in the "Hutcheson Educational Trust," a wealthy corporation which has done much to help forward the great cause of education in Glasgow.

These and other general engagements connected with educational and social questions had, however, at length to be partially given up on account of a severe illness lasting through the early months of 1877, and recurring occasionally afterwards, though in a slighter degree. From that time Dr. Douglas was much restricted in reference to exacting work and public meetings. Yet he has never ceased to be prominent in helping on all philanthropic and religious movements in the City, and in work connected with the Evangelical Alliance and the Alliance of the Reformed Churches. He is not slow also to make his voice heard from the platform of Temperance Reform; and the cause of Sabbath Observance, as well as other causes having a bearing on the religious and social welfare of the people, have his ready and able and ever welcome advocacy.

His high reputation as a Hebrew scholar led to his being appointed as a member of the Company for Old Testament Revision, where he rendered (1870—1884) valuable service. Principal Douglas is author of two excellent handbooks on Joshua and Judges, a work on the Intermediate Minor Prophets, and an Analysis of the Old Testament. During the controversy regarding the case of Professor Robertson Smith, of Aberdeen, which for some two years agitated the Free Church, he issued a pamphlet, in which he entered at length into the question of the authorship of the Book of Deuteronomy, showing good reasons for still believing in its Mosaic authorship. The lecture which he delivered to his students at the opening of his last session as Professor of Hebrew, has been published under the title, "The Old Testament and its Critics." It is an admirable historico-doctrinal discussion of the whole subject—up to the most recent developments of criticism—and shows how little reliance can be placed on the assertions of the "higher critics." We cannot but express our regret that one so able from his learning to sift the speculations of German theologians and their disciples in this country, should not have seen his way to do more to enrich our Old Testament theological literature. That we hope, however, he may yet be able to do, now that he is free from the work of the professoriate. Besides the works referred to above, Dr. Douglas has been a frequent contributor to our periodical religious literature, and has written important articles for our larger theological encyclopædias. As a preacher he is earnest, massive, practical. He delights to give prominence to the great truths of the Gospel of the grace of God, giving no tolerance to the superficial speculations of the so-called "Broad Churchmen" who try to remove the "offence of the cross." All who know him love and honour him and confide in him as a true man of God.

At a recent meeting (November 14) of the "Standing Committees" and of the ex-Moderators of the Free Church, Principal Douglas was nominated to the office of Moderator of the next General Assembly, in succession to Dr. W. C. Smith, of Edinburgh. This is the highest honour that can be conferred upon him by his Church.

BELIEVERS' MEETINGS, BRISTOL.—The letter calling this annual conference in the Gospel Hall, St. Nicholas-road, for Jan. 16 and 17 says: If our conferences are to be what they ought to be, seasons—not of mere passing enjoyment in hearing religious truth from men of God, and of Christian fellowship—but rather of reverent waiting at our Master's feet, of enlargement of heart, of fuller consecration to his service, we must come to them with spirits prepared in private, with longing expectations, and with subject wills. The time is too short, the conflict around us too severe, the cry of perishing multitudes too piercing, our sworn allegiance to Christ too sacred, for us to devote the precious opportunity of our conference days to anything but that resolute concentrated pursuit of the knowledge of God, which alone will be rewarded by Him, and without which our lives must be worse than useless.

The Evangelist.

JOSEPH'S CONVERSION.

The son of consistent and earnest Christian parents, Joseph S—— was the child of many prayers. One after another, others of the family had yielded their hearts to the Saviour, and day by day the prayer still ascended that each one might be truly saved. In addition to this these parents continually pleaded that at least one of their sons might be a preacher of the Gospel, and thus definitely be, as was Samuel of old, "lent unto the Lord."

The only one of the children who was manifestly opposed to the Gospel was Joseph. Not that he was ignorant of Bible truths—far from it; nor was he able altogether to stifle the voice of conscience. There were times when the earnest pleadings of his Sunday-school teacher and the constant intercessions of his parents moved him more than he was willing to admit, even to himself. But, for all that, he had refused to listen to the voice of Jesus, and had so far departed from the paths of peace as to give great anxiety to his friends.

Naturally something of an athlete, anything in the way of a village-show or theatrical entertainment had peculiar and irresistible attractions for the boy: and his own notorious agility in sundry curious performances, such as the evolution of "catherine wheels," walking on his head, etc., seemed to mark him out as suitable for a career the very opposite of that for which his mother's prayers and tears were poured out before God.

"I was a wicked boy, and a born clown," is his description of himself at the time of which we write, "though my parents did everything in their power to prevent my getting into the company I loved, and tried to keep me from attending shows."

One Saturday evening his mother was unusually anxious, for a village entertainment of some kind had attracted and detained her boy until a later hour than before, and she could not conceal her uneasiness.

"Joseph, we cannot go on like this," she said, the next morning. "Come with me, my son." And leading him into her own room, she knelt and implored God's mercy upon her wayward boy. As she pleaded, her faith became stronger and more importunate. "O Lord, wilt Thou not save him to-day—this very day?" she cried. "Speak to him, Lord, in the Sunday-school. If the teacher has chosen a lesson which is not thy message for my boy, be pleased to perplex his mind, and lead him to choose a chapter which will suit the case, and will be the means of changing his heart. O Lord, save Joseph to-day."

"Not I," thought the boy, as he walked off to his place; "I am not going to be saved to-day neither."

He was early, for his father and mother were particular about this, and besides, he liked to keep his own seat at the top of the class. One and another of the boys came in, and in due time the teacher came also.

With the remembrance of his mother's petition fresh in his mind, Joseph could not help noticing that the teacher's face wore an anxious, troubled expression—very seldom seen there. "Boys," he said, when the opening hymn and prayer were over, "boys, I do not know how it is, but I cannot seem to decide on a chapter for to-day's lesson. One of you may choose a chapter this morning." Several chapters were suggested, from different members of the class, but the teacher hesitated.

"I will not choose one," Joseph resolved within his own heart; "not I, indeed!" But even as the resolution was framed in his secret mind, his lips moved, and—as it seemed, against his own will—he had spoken the words, "The twenty-fifth of Matthew." "That will do," said the teacher at once. "Boys, we will read Matthew xxv."

They read all round, and it was Joseph's turn to read again, the tenth verse of the chapter. He finished the verse, "And the door was shut." But a feeling of strange terror and conviction of sinfulness had seized the boy, and even as he read the solemn words he had risen from his seat. Throwing down the Bible, he rushed from his place, and from the school.

Not homewards, no, he could not go there. Already he was two miles from home, and now, slipping quietly to the outside of the country town, he crept through a hole in the hedge, and with the sound of the rippling brooklet in his ears, threw himself down on the green grass in the corner of a quiet field.

He was at length thoroughly awakened to his state as a sinner, and, though a very young sinner, there was the terrible fear that it might be the door of grace which he had been so often urged to enter was shut for him for ever.

The Spirit of God worked mightily, and from the depths of his despair the lad cried to God to forgive his sins and to change his heart. The hours of morning service passed away, but he still knelt there in anguish of spirit. Dinner time came and passed, but he heeded it not. It was time for afternoon school, but his place was empty.

It was about four o'clock in the afternoon when, as he still cried for mercy by that quiet hedgerow, he started to his feet, arrested by the sudden words, "Be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." It may probably seem to the reader that it was largely imagination, but to this very day he himself can hardly believe that it was not a distinctly audible voice which spoke the blessed words of comfort which poor Joseph so sorely needed. Ah, how welcome they were!

He was ready now to go home, and he went, rejoicing at every step in the forgiveness and acceptance of his Saviour. Mrs. S. met him at the door.

"I know all about it, my boy," were her first words, quietly spoken; but the thankful eyes were more eloquent than words could be. "Your father and I have been praying for you all day, and God has heard my prayer. He has made me sure of it."

Great was the rejoicing in that now happy home; great was the thankfulness. And before three months had passed Joseph had written down in pencil the heads of a sermon—his first. "Ye must be born again," was the text he had chosen. Some years passed before he actually began to preach, but the desire was ever in his heart, and was at length, in God's own time, gratified. Meanwhile, the one-time careless lad was deeply in earnest for the souls of others. Especially he longed for the conversion of three boys who had been the companions in mischief, and for these he prayed continually. It is believed that each one of these three was truly brought to God within a little while; two of the three being at the present time local preachers.

So unalterable was Joseph's own desire to speak for Christ, that his mother one day promised, "I will come and stand beside you on the village green." And this she actually did, accompanied by the father and the brothers and sisters! The three boy companions—now Christians—were also there. This took place about four years after Joseph's conversion to God, and not until he had fully resolved to devote his life to the ministry of the Word. And thus, in his own little village, was commenced a life of pastoral labour which has, by the grace of God, been continued till this day. Of that work it is not, however, our object now to speak. Our desire is to glorify Christ, and to encourage his people in believing prayer. Praying mother, earnest Christian teacher, take courage! Expect great things of God. L. A. B.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.—The new issue of Whitaker's Almanack contains a brief article on Medical Missions, from which it appear that there are at present 359 fully qualified medical missionaries at work seventy-four of whom are women. About 150 persons are pursuing studies in preparation for the same work. There are sixty mission hospitals in China, those at Swatow and Canton having 100 beds each, the hospital at Srinagar, in Kashmir, has eighty beds. The Church Missionary Society has twenty-eight medical missionaries, and the Free Church of Scotland twenty-five.

JEWISH NOTES.

BRAZIL.

DR. and MRS. ROCHA, who lately proceeded to Brazil for the purpose of New Testament distribution, are finding the soil very hard at Rio de Janeiro. The Jews, many of whom are rich and prosperous, do not want to be known as Jews, and some have accordingly changed their names. They have no synagogue, but a few Portuguese meet together in a hired room. Mrs. Rocha sends a pitiable account of a visit which she paid to a street occupied by fallen Jewesses, most of whom were Austrians. In some of their visits Dr. and Mrs. Rocha were in close proximity to the bombardment proceedings.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Messrs. Day and Malbert, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, arrived at Cape Town on October 24. They were given an opportunity of addressing the "Keswick" Convention at Wellington, at the open-air missionary meeting, and were the means of stirring up interest in Israel among those who were present. They have been greatly assisted in their labours by Rev. Andrew Murray, who kindly furnished them with letters of introduction to all the Dutch Reformed Ministers in the colony, and who brought them into communication with a young Russian Jew, who has joined them for the purpose of assisting their labours to the best of his ability. A most interesting letter appears in the "Occasional Paper of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews," which has just been published, describing incidents on the voyage to South Africa.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

After difficulties and delays such as usually confront Christian workers in the East, Messrs. Dressler and Goldstein have been much encouraged by the evident interest aroused by their visit among the Jews in Constantinople. In spite of much opposition, a spirit of inquiry was manifested, and, after listening attentively to the preaching of the Gospel, questions were put which showed that thoughts had been awakened in their hearts, and their former indifference conquered. What Mr. Goldstein was most struck with was the entrance found to Jewish hearts by private conversation. "Speaking once to a grey-bearded Polish Jew, I told him of the first coming of our Saviour, expressing also my hopes respecting the second advent of our Master. Astonished at this being my belief, he looked into my face and said: 'I, too, believe that we are now living in the last quarter of an hour. One more quarter, and He for whom we wait will come.'" Almost every Jew in the Jewish district received a copy of the New Testament, and groups might be seen reading and conversing together about the books. On December 2nd, the two brethren left Constantinople for Salonica, where also they have found many open doors for distributing the Word.

PERSIA.

We are glad to hear from the C.M.S. missionaries at Julfa, Ispahan, Persia, that another Jewess has lately accepted Christ as her Saviour and confessed Him in baptism. Her husband was baptized by Dr. Bruce a year ago, and a few months later this man, whose name is Benjamin, arranged to bring his two sons to be baptized. On the Wednesday before the day fixed for their baptism, the eldest boy died very unexpectedly, and his little brother, who was baptized on the following Sunday, died the next day. The Jews of the district told Benjamin that without doubt this was God's judgment upon him for forsaking the faith of his fathers, but his answer was that he was quite satisfied about the loss of his boys, for the very reason that he had found the Messiah and had in Him found a source of comfort and joy which he could have obtained in no other way. His consistent testimony and his conduct in his sad bereavement made a great impression upon those who knew him, and if his wife had previously entertained any doubts as to his sincerity, those doubts were finally dispelled, and after careful instruction she has now openly embraced the faith of Christ crucified.

Writing from Oroomiah, Pastor Yonan states that the seed of the Gospel is taking root among the Jewish community there, and also among their Moslem neighbours. It is a belief among some students of the Word that the Mohammedans will be converted to Christ by the instrumentality of the Jews. Pastor Yonan apparently shares this view, for he writes: "A Jew who is truly enlightened, and has received the grace of God, is a better worker for Moslems than a Christian can be, as the Apostle teaches in Rom. xi. 11—15." He proceeds to show that the faith of the Moslem permits him to practise deception; and to pretend to be a Christian, while at heart he is not one; but it is not so with the Jew, whose renunciation of the traditions of the fathers is an evident miracle in the eyes of the Moslems. Pastor Yonan closes by an earnest appeal for funds to build a place of worship for those Jews who in Oroomiah have turned to Christ.

MR. RABINOWICH'S WORK.

THE report for 1893 of the London Council for aiding Mr. Rabinowich in his mission to Israel is a deeply interesting narrative. We make some extracts:—

"The success and fruit of my ten years' labour for the Lord in Russia I cannot count, only that thousands of Jews are attending our hall at Kishineff, and that ten thousands of Jews are reading with interest my printed sermons in four different languages. I am not going even to count that, through my sermons, conversations with individuals, personal intercourse with Jews, and also through letters, hundreds of Jews have been baptized in various churches, in the name of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

"From various corners of great Russia I receive letters and accounts of young Jews whose hearts have really been humbled before the God of Israel, and who have submitted themselves to our Lord Jesus. There are some Jews, baptized and not baptized, who, in small places, where Jews may reside, amidst dreadful poverty and great persecution, there in the quiet, without making much noise, are with great zeal and self-denial proclaiming and preaching Christ and Him crucified to their brethren, the fellow-sufferers, as their Messiah, their Saviour, High Priest, and their all.

"I repeat again, that the secret of the success of my work rests in my constant and incessant witnessing for Christ, here not there, in my own town, among those who knew me before as an enemy of Christ. In this way the Lord has enabled me to awaken the Russian Jews, and make them understand that it is a shame to fulfil the old and dark ordinances of the Talmud; but glory and honour to the believer in Christ, who died for sinners and rose again for our justification, and showing to them that the power of the Jewish congregation was brought to nothing."

After referring to his visit to America, in response to Mr. Moody's invitation, to preach to Jews in Chicago, Mr. Rabinowich says:—"My ten years' experience in the Lord's work has persuaded me that besides the Word of God nothing in the world can influence and reach the stony Jewish heart, that would submit itself to the Son of the living God, and receive his words. Not the person of the missionaries, though they might be men pious and just as Noah, Daniel, and Job, and have the wisdom of Solomon, nor even the riches of the Bank of England, can prove the power to drive out those seven evil spirits which have settled themselves deep in the Jewish heart, boasting of its purity.

"It is a great mistake of those who think that one could work among Israel without the Holy Scripture, but only by the action of the Holy Ghost. The thaumaturgy of the Holy Ghost comes only through the word of the Scripture—the Word and the Holy Ghost—as the body and soul. David says:—'The Spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue' (2 Sam. xxiii. 2). And we find also in Isaiah:—'My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth' (lix. 21). Therefore those to whom the Lord's work among Israel is dear, should discuss how to carry out my plan, suggested when in London, for founding in Palestine a Missionary Training School specially for young Jews, where such may be prepared for work and service among their brethren in all parts of the world."

Appended to the report is an allegorical interpretation of John xi. 1-44, in which Lazarus is regarded as a type of Israel. This is a striking specimen of Mr. Rabinowich's method of viewing and explaining Holy Scripture, and to Hebrew hearers it cannot but prove very effective. Copies of the report may be had from the hon. sec. and treasurer, Mr. James E. Mathieson, 47, Phillimore-gardens, Kensington, W.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES.

AT this season of the year we receive many communications from workers in the foreign field, in grateful acknowledgment of the help and stimulus received through reading the copies of THE CHRISTIAN sent to them week by week by various friends in this country. It is of course impossible to reproduce all these words of warm thanks, but those readers who supply copies to lonely and distant toilers for the Master may be assured that they are doing good service to his cause by thus contributing to the cheer and equipment of fellow-workers in heathen lands. As we have before us several further applications, we shall be glad to receive the names of any friends who would undertake to supply them regularly. We append in substance some of the interesting missionary letters we have lately received from China:—

Mr. W. R. Hunt, of the F.C. Missionary Society, Nanking, writes:—

The work in China is costing more than ever it did. Millions of scattered Scriptures are influencing thought. There is a spirit of inquiry all along the line. We are feeling the inspiration and realising the answers to the prayers of all God's people for the regeneration of this vast and ancient Empire. The native Christian church is preparing to suffer for his name's sake. As yet the history of the early days of Christianity in China is an unwritten volume, but it will blaze with living interest in coming days. The native church is learning to distinguish the difference between cold civilisation and regeneration.

Mr. Robert Grierson, C.I.M., Ping Yang, Wenchow, tells of an interesting expedition into a mountainous region by an energetic young Chinese colporteur, "Mr. Come-of-Nobility," in connection with the Scottish Bible Society. He suffered much in person from scarcity of food, and met with some repulses from the people, but others showed him much kindness and encouragement. Mr. Grierson adds:—

"Our work here gives us much cause for praise to God. The first Lord's Day of October we had the joy of baptizing eight farmers, one a young lad of 18 years, a bright promising youth. In all during the last few months, forty persons have been baptized, and our Enquirers' List is quite a long one. The work is branching out in several directions, and bears many fair buds of promise."

Mr. A. R. Saunders, of the C.I.M., Taiguen-fu, Shansi, thus reports:—

"I wrote you last year of twenty enquirers at this station. Now let me ask you to join with us in praise for six of the twenty whom I was recently privileged to baptize. The others, with one or two exceptions, are still going on well, and a few have been added to their number; it is hoped that several may be baptized next spring.

"The need for additional workers in Shansi and throughout China continues, and we exceedingly regret the smallness of the number of young men who are offering to serve the Lord in this distant empire of darkness. In Shansi we have an open, inviting field; the people on the whole are very friendly, and the Gospel can be freely preached throughout the whole province. May the Lord lead many to join us in this glorious work!

"Another medical centre is soon to be opened in this province, Dr. W. Millar Wilson, a graduate of Glasgow, has been appointed by the C.I.M. to Pingyangfu, seven days' cart journey south of this city. In addition to the baptisms we have had in this city, I have also heard of ten (five men and five women) being baptized at Ta-ning, and five at K'üh-uh. We ask you to praise God with us for these additions to Christ's church in Shansi, and to pray that those who have so recently confessed Christ may be kept faithful."

UGANDA.—Reuter's Agency is requested by the Church Missionary Society to state that the disquieting reports published by some German newspapers during the last few days regarding the state of affairs in Uganda merely repeat intelligence which reached England in October last, and was published at the time. The Church Missionary Society has this week received letters from Uganda, stating that no further disturbances had broken out between the Protestants and the Mohammedans in that country since the time of Selim Bey's rebellion. When the latter left in September, work was going on satisfactorily, the two factions were at peace, and the country was prosperous.

THE WELCOME HOME.

Sailors in port at Christmas, and far away from home, respond willingly to invitations to spend a few hours in a home-like way. This willingness has been for several years turned to good account by Miss Child and other workers, at the Welcome Home and the Strangers' Rest, among seamen. Special meetings are arranged, and full care is taken that those who come shall hear the Gospel in the plainest and most personal manner. A delightful gathering of this kind was held on Saturday evening at the Welcome Home, 173, Ratcliff Highway, when the Christmas boat was unloaded, and its cargo dispensed among sailors. This boat has for some years taken the place of the Christmas tree, as being peculiarly appropriate to the associations of the work.

Many ladies who had worked hard to fill the boat or given useful articles were present to enjoy the scene. Mrs. Watts, of Chiswick, Mr. R. C. Morgan, and others undertook to act as voluntary stevedores in discharging the presents, including woollen mufflers, helmets, mittens, cuffs, shirts, housewives, and books, and other warm and useful articles prized by sailors. Before the unloading the sailors gathered in the different rooms, and were entertained with singing and cheerful talk; then followed a Christmas tea, after which came the handing out of the cargo to the sailors of all nations, who passed the boat in single file, and received the parcel allotted to each. The unloading took over two hours, between 350 and 450 gifts being distributed.

As soon as the men had received their gifts they passed into one or other of the rooms prepared for Gospel meetings. The large upper room and the well-known "Fo'castle" were soon crowded out, and the shop was quickly filled by the men, who were quite content to stand and listen to the earnest words spoken or sung. The Misses Clark sang solos in the different meetings; while two young Swedes, going out with Miss Taylor to Tibet, played sweetly on their guitars and sang with much feeling. Many friends, ladies as well as gentlemen, spoke earnestly and faithfully. The meetings went on until a late hour, and not a few professed conviction of sin.

As showing the interest felt by sailors in these reunions, we give the following extract from a letter signed by three seamen, and written from Halifax, Nova Scotia:—"Yesterday (Sunday, December 10) was a blessed day for us. The Lord used us to 'stir up' some Christians, as they told us afterwards. So we had the privilege to pray with two brothers, one a Portuguese and the other a coloured man. More than ever do we need prayer that our life may be fully consecrated in our Captain's, that we might be able to point out the right course to those who are willing to steer for our glory-land. God bless the C.L.B. Crew and all their efforts in the lifeboat.

"People know the gold cord over here, too. It is our daily prayer that you may have a blessed Christmas in reaping many souls for the Master, that many when they enjoy his blessings may think of Him who left the unspeakable glory to save us, that our hearts and theirs may be open to receive Him, for in that lies the 'power to become children of God.'—Gilbert, John, and Jim."

RAILWAY MEN IN CANADA.

A very large proportion of the men of our town are railroad employés. These men, on account of their occupation, involving as it does irregular hours, cannot be reached by the ordinary church services. A month or so ago the men of St. John's Church formed a Men's Association for the purpose of undertaking a work for Christ among the railroad men. They have rented a hall, and are fitting it up as reading-room, where the men may spend their spare hours comfortably and profitably. Bright Gospel meetings will also be held. We trust the Lord will move the hearts of his stewards to send us help for carrying on the work. Robt. P. McKim, Curate in charge St. John's Church.

Toronto Junction, Canada, Dec. 12, 1893.

SUNDAYS IN SAVONA.—Of late years there has grown up a very reprehensible custom of working the cargoes on Sundays on board British ships, and on board British ships almost alone, in the Italian harbour of Savona, which prevents the crews joining in Sunday worship either on board their own ships or on shore.

PASTOR A. G. BROWN'S WORK.

On Monday Pastor Archibald G. Brown celebrated his twenty-seventh anniversary at the East London Tabernacle. As at all gatherings in the spacious building, there was a large attendance at the public meeting in the evening, which was held in succession to a cheerful tea-party in the schoolroom. The meeting was presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny in his well-known genial manner.

In the course of a brief statement, Mr. Brown remarked upon the great change that has come over Bow since he first began his work there. He recognised also the fact that, although his teaching is unchanged, he himself has undergone physical change; time was when people went to the Tabernacle to hear "Young Brown," but now they are said to go to hear "Old Brown." There are to-day only three persons in membership who were in the church at its formation thirty-two years ago. When he settled twenty-seven years ago there were 250 members, of whom fifty are still left. At the present time there is a church membership of 2400—bonâ-fide attendants, to be found at the Lord's Table. The number on the register is 5560; whence it appears that during his pastorate over five thousand have been added to the church. Out of that number the vast majority have been saved through his ministry, and it had been his privilege to baptize over four thousand people upon a confession of their faith in Jesus.

Mr. Brown gave an encouraging account of the outside work—missionary and merciful—and asked for the prayers of God's people that increased blessing may be experienced in the future. Addresses were also delivered by other friends, Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Luton, making an excellent speech. He referred in sympathetic terms to the domestic trials of the worthy pastor, whose wife is still very ill. He also praised God for his fidelity to Evangelical doctrine; for, as the Chairman said, he preaches the pure Word of God without mitigation or apology.

AN INDIAN SUNSET.

The purple landscape lies hushed and darkling,
And in the river
The downy grasses, in silver masses,
That gently quiver,
Are tipped with light from the gleaming west
In gold and topaz and amber drest.
Like saints communing with God at sundown
In ages olden;
On such an even we deem that heaven,
Its portals golden
To faith's keen vision has opened wide,
To cheer with glimpses of joys inside.

Isette Teresa Mody, LL.A.

LIVERPOOL CHILDREN.

Two thousand of the poorest children of this city were entertained and feasted last week in St. George's Hall under the auspices of the Liverpool Sheltering Homes; 2,500 assembled in the morning at 12 o'clock, and 2,500 in the evening. They came from all parts of the city, and represented about thirty of the Mission, and evening ragged schools. The helping of these poor boys and girls, brought up in such terrible surroundings, and, in very many cases, under the influence of drunken and wicked parents, was a real duty, and the result, it is hoped, will be untold good.

A GRATEFUL PRISONER.

The following telling letter was received last week by Mr. Wheatley, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, from one who had served a lengthened period of imprisonment, and for whom he had been instrumental in securing good employment:—I cannot allow this season to pass without offering my sincere thanks for all the kindness shown us. I would not have found employment on receiving my liberty, had it not been for you; I should have had neither clothes to work nor home to live in. I am getting on well with my employer. May God bless you and the Mission Home always.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—A number of ministers and friends assembled on Thursday last at the Homes for the Aged Christian Blind, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, when the inmates were entertained according to annual custom. About half of the inmates are between seventy and ninety years of age.

THE PRESENT DISTRESS.

An East-end pastor writes:—"Your descriptions of the distress and need fall below the actual truth. The tales of suffering are sad indeed. In the heart and centre of the poorest part of East London, and working from year's end to year's end amongst the people, we know their condition. In the distribution of our Christmas dinners we have been obliged to refuse many cases of real poverty. One poor woman at the last moment came begging that she might be helped. We were able to give this case help, and the woman almost danced for joy. Desolate homes and aching hearts abound. Every East London pastor and worker owes a debt of gratitude to you for bringing this matter so prominently and wisely before your readers."

Another pastor says: "I was in despair, and resolved to have a special Sunday for the poor. Last Sunday week we had it, and I conducted the services. It looked like a sarcasm to appeal to such a congregation for money for the poor all round us. But to show how the poor help the poor our dear people gave over £50. It was all in coppers and small coins, with one or two exceptions. So we had something to distribute after all. We gave stuff for a good dinner to 330 families on Saturday. We clothed about 400 more during last week, and gave away many coal and grocery tickets. I am deeply thankful for all help sent to us."

FIELD LANE INSTITUTION.

One of the best known of London's philanthropic agencies is the Field Lane Institution, in Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road. It comprises refuges, ragged-schools, servants' training home, boys and girls' certified industrial homes, crèche, and a host of other agencies for reaching and rescuing the struggling poor from situations of moral and spiritual peril and physical distress. For upwards of half-a-century it has been engaged with ever-increasing success in this noble ministry, and has attracted to its support a band of devoted Christian workers.

It is impossible to tabulate all the work, since a great deal of it is of a preventive and moral character. But here are some of the results from last year's report:—838 men and women sheltered in the refuges, and 268 persons placed in or assisted to obtain employment; 29 friendless girls trained in the servants' home; 2886 attendances at the crèche, 30,044 at the adult mission services, 74,450 at the Bible ragged-schools and classes, 5673 at the Band of Hope, 12,710 at the mothers' meetings; 20,528 distributions of broken food, 17,953 loaves of bread distributed, and 6402 hot dinners to poor children.

Resting on the same evangelical basis as at its inception, it proclaims the same simple Gospel and labours amongst a similar description of squalid poverty, whilst the high degree of efficiency it has attained under judicious management gives promise of a still more extended sphere of usefulness in the future. In order to this, however, the Institution stands in need of further and liberal support. Mr. Peregrine Platt, secretary, will gladly send a copy of the last annual report to any applicant.

THE CHURCH'S NEED.

The notion of a Christianity that trusts to ceremony and celebration was quite foreign to the apostolic conception. On the day of Pentecost St. Peter prevailed by the word of his testimony. The three thousand felt the power of the truth and yielded to it—the Spirit of the Lord disposing and enabling them so to do. Thus they repented, believed, were baptized, were pardoned, were quickened to newness of life. That was the typical and significant day of our dispensation, a day which should be expected to repeat itself. True, there cannot be a second descent of the Holy Spirit, any more than there can be a second incarnation of the Son. But the Church should ask and look for a continuance of the mighty working of the Holy Ghost, and so for the conversion of thousands. The Church wants no other means of increase than those by which it was founded—the fire of the Holy Ghost, and the testimony of anointed witnesses, in sound speech that cannot be gainsaid testifying to Jesus, the Saviour, that He is the Christ of Israel, and the Lord of all.—Dr. Donald Fraser.

A Y.P.S.C.E. GREETING.

WE have received the following lines on a card of greeting from our friends, Dr. F. E. Clark, President of the Y.P.S.C.E., and Mrs. Clark, dated Auburndale, Mass., December, 1893:—

"'For, looking backwards through the year,
Along the way our feet have pressed,
We seek sweet places everywhere,
Sweet places where our souls had rest.'"

"So say your friends, while they wish you the blessedness of a new year of service.

"A thousand leagues of wind-blown space,
A thousand leagues of sea,
Half of the great earth's hiding face
Divides mine eyes from thee.
The world is strong, the waves are wide,
But my good will is stronger still
Than wind or tide.

"These sentinels which Fate has set
To bar and hold me here,
I make my errand-men, to get
A message to thine ear.
The winds shall waft, the waters bear,
And, spite of seas, I, when I please,
Can reach thee everywhere.

"Prayers are like birds to find the way;
Thoughts have a swifter flight,
And these stream on and on all day,
Nor stop to rest at night."

NEW YEAR'S DAY PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

THE library of the Baptist Mission House was well filled on New Year's morning (Monday), when friends of missions generally met to unite in prayer on behalf of work among the heathen. Revs. C. C. Fenn, of the C.M.S., Wright Hay, of Dacca, and E. C. Gange, Mr. A. H. Baynes, and others, took part in the proceedings.

Dr. E. B. UNDERHILL, who presided, gave an address on the foundation of all mission work in the twofold fact that men are ruined and undone by sin, and that the Gospel has power to save. After depicting, in true yet startling terms, the ignorance, guilt, and misery prevailing in heathen lands—some of the grossest and saddest phases being sins which cannot even be mentioned—the chairman went on to give illustrations from his own forty-five years' experience in connection with missions of the power of the Gospel to save, transform, and raise the worst and vilest of mankind. These things being so, he called on all to go forward with fresh heart and zeal in the great work of publishing abroad the glad tidings of salvation.

IN WELSH VALLEYS.

THE Argus (Newport, Mon.) gives an animated and sympathetic account of the work carried on by Mr. Wintle and his helpers at Pontnewydd and Pontymoile, more especially among the unemployed and distressed. The editor states that:—"In no county in England, perhaps, is the number of workless workers so large in proportion to the industrial population as it is in Monmouthshire. Through no act of their own, thousands of men, women, and children are, and have long been, on the verge of actual starvation." On Christmas Day 600 dinners were distributed to the most deserving cases. A free meal every day is still continued to the children at Pontymoile and Pontnewydd, while three meals a week are given at Pontymoile to mothers and one to fathers. One meal a week for fathers is also given at Pontnewydd.

Mr. Wintle would be thankful for any information likely to help him in the discovery of a "girl named Annie Maria Boytt, who lived with her parents at Pontymoile, left home on December 20, and has not since been heard of. She is fourteen years old, rather tall, and is pale and thin. When she left home she was wearing a thick brown dress and cap."

STIRLING TRACT ENTERPRISE.—Last year, ending September, 1893, the enormous number of nearly 19,000,000 periodicals, tracts, volumes, and booklets were issued. The numbers given gratuitously, for free distribution, amounted to 8,458,637, equal in value to £3,193 12s. 5d., while the donations received for gratuitous distribution amounted (including legacies) to £1,956 12s. 2½d. All this sum, as well as all the expenses connected with the working of the enterprise, have been entirely borne by the business department, so that every penny of the contributions sent in is devoted directly to missionary work.

"A.L.O.E."

DEAR SIR,—The announcement of the death of Miss C. M. Tucker, A.L.O.E., in India, lends such a special interest to the last letter I received from my brother-in-law, Rev. T. R. Wade, C.M.S., that I venture to send you an extract. "A.L.O.E.'s" unnumbered friends in England will no doubt be glad to hear such recent tidings of her from one who has known her intimately since she went to India, eighteen years ago, and who greatly valued her work among the villages of the Punjab. Mr. Wade's letter is dated, Amritsar, November 29, and the extract is as follows:—

"Miss C. M. Tucker was brought in here from Batala last Saturday week, and now she is lying in the City Mission House, very weak and suffering from fever. I was with her yesterday, and we partook of the Holy Communion with several of the ladies. She joined in as much as she could, and seemed to thoroughly enjoy it. I heard her repeating distinctly the 'Glory to God in the highest.' She said to A., 'Do you notice any change?' and thinking there was a little hesitation in A.'s replying, she said, 'Oh don't be afraid to tell me. It would be so much nicer to enter in at the golden gates than to lie here.' She really now feels her work is over, and she is longing to depart and to be with Christ. The ladies have to press her to take proper nourishment. There is a trained nurse, and the ladies are devoted to her, so everything that is possible for love to do is done for her. I myself, do not think she will now be long with us."—Yours faithfully,

AGNES A. ANDERSON.

39, Linden Gardens, W., December 29.

We extract the following details from Press notices that have appeared:—The popular authoress, "A.L.O.E." ("A Lady of England"), otherwise simply MISS TUCKER, has passed away at the age of 72, at Batala, a populous city in Northern India, where she has been for 17 years actively engaged in missionary work. Batala is now in direct communication by rail with Lahore, the capital of the Punjab, and is about an hour's journey further north than Amritsar, the famous centre of Sikh influence. Miss Tucker's home was under the shadow of the Baring High School for native Christian boys, in whom she has taken the greatest and most loving interest. Her missionary friends, young and old, white and dark, tended and watched over her to the last. Her funeral was carried out according to native ideas as regards the mode of interment; that is to say, no coffin was used, the body being merely placed on a slab of wood and lowered into the ground. Many friends, English and native, came from Amritsar, Lahore, and other places to pay the last tribute of affection to her memory.

Rev. R. Clark, in communicating the intelligence, writes:—"The story of how she lived and laboured and died among the people to whom she was sent at the age of fifty-four, and with whom she remained, without ever once returning to England, till the age of seventy-two, will be one of the most interesting and stirring records in the annals of Missions. Her visits to zenanas in both town and village in her little dhoolie, her frequent journeys in native ekkas, her wonderful influence among the boys at the Baring High School at Batala, and her attachment to them and theirs to her, can never be forgotten."

THE OPIUM CURSE IN CHINA.

REV. T. BRAMFITT, Wesleyan missionary, Hankow, writes on this subject in the "Notices" accompanying the January issue of the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine. He says: "Years ago people were ashamed to be known as opium smokers, and smoked only at night and in out-of-the-way opium dens, where there was little fear of detection. Now all this is changed. They smoke in broad daylight and talk freely of the fact, as though it were no more harmful than smoking tobacco or drinking tea. Opium dens are fearfully on the increase, and the proprietors provide not only opium, but every other evil thing with which they may bewitch and enslave the feeble mind of the Chinese youth. The climate of this land is enervating, and her ease-loving sons fall a ready prey to the drug which brings relief from pain, and makes the toiler half forget his toil, and helps the careworn wretch to lay aside the things which fret and chafe him in this weary world. All too often the Christian believer, who lacks the full heroism of that faith which cheerfully bears the cross of life, falls by the seductive power of the lethean drug."

Mr. Bramfitt relates some of the havoc opium has wrought in the Christian community, and adds: "These bad cases are but a few out of many which might be given, and show how wise the Church in China is when she decrees that no one who cultivates or sells or smokes opium shall remain within her pale."

PROGRESS IN FLORENCE.

MR. F. A. FREER, of Bristol, now on a visit to Italy, reports the steady progress of the Baptist mission superintended by Rev. N. H. Shaw. He says: "I have attended a number of the meetings, both at the central station in Piazza Trinità, and at the branch in Via Palazzuolo. I have been pleased and cheered in witnessing the intelligent attention of the people, while I have been more and more dissatisfied with the place in which the meetings are held in Piazza Trinità. It consists of a vaulted room without light or ventilation other than that which comes through the doorway. It is accordingly dark, and when there is a full congregation, which, I am glad to say, is often the case, the air becomes so vitiated as to be certainly injurious to health. The great difficulty is to find and secure a better place equally central.

"The Friday evening meetings for Bible study have greatly interested me, and I have not missed one during my stay. They are well attended. I cannot doubt that these meetings are very useful as an educational influence, much needed, indeed, on account of the dense ignorance in which the people generally are kept by the Roman Catholic Church, wherever it is dominant.

"Notwithstanding the indifference of the cultivated classes generally towards all religion, and the hindrances in the way of aggressive evangelisation, no open-air preaching being allowed, and the houses being to so large an extent closed against the evangelist, it seems to me that the work under Mr. Shaw is going on steadily and quietly, making solid if not rapid progress."

A CONFERENCE IN OXFORD.

DEAR FRIEND,—The proposed conference in the great hall of the examination schools of the University, for the Promotion of Practical Christianity, is of necessity put off until October 30 and 31 and November 1. This unavoidable postponement will give more time for prayer. The usefulness of this conference will greatly depend upon a preparatory work of the Spirit being obtained by believing prayer in the Name which has power with God. Is not Oxford worth praying for? May your readers pray for both the city and the University.

The following have promised, if God permit, to take part in this conference at the date now fixed:—Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, Rev. Hubert Brooke, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. Evan Hopkins, and Mr. Robert Wilson, of Broughton Grange.

The curators of the University Examination Schools have very kindly sanctioned the change of date.—Sincerely yours,

ALFRED M. W. CHRISTOPHER.

St. Aldate's, Oxford.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTMAS GATHERING.

SEVERAL hundreds of seamen, representing many nations, have had a Christmas réunion at the headquarters of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, Shadwell, E. After tea came bright Gospel singing, interspersed with kindly words spoken of the great gift of God and the way to have a happy New Year, by Hon. Granville Waldegrave, Rev. E. W. Matthews, and Captain Clarke, some of the seamen present testifying to the saving and keeping power of Jesus Christ in calm and storm. At the close of this bright and happy meeting our Christmas ship was launched, and every seaman who came alongside had a share of the cargo. Any old "CHRISTIANS" or other Christian literature for distribution amongst seamen will be very thankfully received.

DAVID CARNEGIE.

Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, E.

PESHAWAR, INDIA.—We are glad to report good work being done among the men of the regiments stationed here. With the assistance of friends, meetings are being held. Hospital meetings have been a success, also meetings held in the prayer-room, and a kind friend's bungalow. The 5th Regiment had some converts before leaving the station, and we are hoping to have more workers in the [illegible] Regiment. T. W.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a [illegible] weeks' mission commenced by Mr. Walter Notman in Auchterarder, N.B., on Sunday, December 31.—For blessing on a mission to be held in the West End by Rev. James Otey.—For a Christian worker in deep waters of affliction.—For two Christians, in circumstances of deep trial and perplexity, that God will be pleased to manifest his guidance.—For a beloved son, that he may know Jesus in simplicity.

(15)

Letters to the Editor.

THE PURITY MEETING IN CALCUTTA.

Dear Sir,—All can join heartily in the satisfaction of your Calcutta correspondent that such a veteran worker in the purity cause as Mr. Henry J. Wilson should have the opportunity of speaking to such a large audience in a city like Calcutta on the fundamental truths that underlie that great question. One is so sure that his words would go straight to the point.

But there was strange blundering on the part of the promoters of that meeting on two points. The Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, whom your correspondent lauds for his "inflexible independence," is the High Court judge who, five years ago, riveted the chains of slavery upon poor little Luchminnin, of the Patna case (well known to your readers at the time). A year or two later he was one of the most determined opponents of the "Age of Consent Bill" in the Viceroy's Council—one of the most potent measures that has ever been passed in India for the protection of girls.

One of the objects of the meeting (as stated by your correspondent) was to protest against "the shameful inefficiency of the law to protect young girls as recently interpreted by an English judge of the High Court of Calcutta." Without in any way claiming that the Indian law for the protection of girls is perfect, I believe that any average commonsense Englishman would dissent from Mr. Justice Pigot's interpretation of it.

Clause 372 of the Indian Penal Code says:—Whoever sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of any minor under the age of sixteen years, with intent that such minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be employed or used for any such purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall be liable to fine.

No form of words, it would be thought, could be more explicit than the above. In spite of this, however, Justice Pigot declared that while it would be illegal to sell the child for continual prostitution, it would not be illegal to decoy and sell that child for one act of violation; she was, therefore, sent back to her destroyers. I think that your readers will agree with me that a judge who could drive "a coach and horses" through such a plain sensible enactment as the foregoing would do the same through any further law that might be promulgated, and that what should be done is to educate public opinion to demand that righteous men should be chosen to administer the law in our Indian Empire.—Yours faithfully, Helen S. Dyer.

London, Dec. 29, 1893.

DID YE RECEIVE THE HOLY GHOST?

Sir,—I am sorry to observe in this week's Christian an article on the above subject signed by "R. C. M.," in which he confounds conversion with the baptism of the Holy Ghost, on the strength of Paul's question to the disciples in Ephesus (Acts xix. 2), Did ye receive (elabete) the Holy Ghost, having believed (pisteusantes)?—as if the believing and the receiving the Holy Ghost took place at the same time. This, however, is a mistake. This phrase of a past participle followed by an indicative aorist occurs in every page of the New Testament, and I am quite safe in saying that not once in a hundred times (if ever) are the two events simultaneous. Take for example Matt. ii. 1, "Jesus having been born in Bethlehem (past participle), wise men came from the east to Jerusalem (aorist)." The wise men did not come to Jerusalem at the same moment that Jesus was born.

Besides, does "R. C. M." suppose that nobody believed in Christ before Pentecost? Or that Paul could convert twelve unbelievers by laying his hands on them?

No doubt we receive the Holy Ghost at conversion, but there are different administrations though the same Spirit (1 Cor. xii. 5). At conversion the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son, for "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. viii.); and he who hath the Son hath life. But the Pentecostal Spirit proceeds not from the Son but the Father (John xv. 26). The Holy Ghost proceeding from the Son gives life; the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father gives power (Luke xxiv. 49).

Edinburgh, Dec. 29, 1893. James Gall.

Dear Sir,—Your "Expository Notes" in this week's Christian contain a somewhat harsh condemnation of all who do not agree with the writer, stating that they are "not rightly dividing the word of truth," and implying that they are "dealing deceitfully with the Word of God." This seems rather strong language for a Protestant commentator to use with reference to his brother expositors, and would better befit the pen of an infallible Pope, whose ipse dixit decides the matter, and puts every one else in the wrong.

The whole question is far too wide to permit of settlement in the brief limits of the "Expository Notes," or of a letter in reply. But I would ask you to let your readers compare two statements, and judge from those whether the writer of "Expository Notes" is so very accurate in his solution of the passage, and in his condemnation of all who differ from him.

The "Notes" say of the Apostle's words: "It was a test question to prove whether they had heard and believed the good tidings of Jesus Christ, for, if so, they would have received the Holy Ghost."

The Scriptures say (Acts viii. 12, 14, 15, 16): "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized. . . . When the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the Word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost (for as yet He was fallen upon none of them, only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus)."

Here is a plain description of Christians, believers in the name of the Lord Jesus, who had received the Word of God and were baptized; and yet they had not "received the Holy Ghost."

Reading, Dec. 29, 1893. Hubert Brooke.

All the commentators that I have had the opportunity of consulting agree with the R.V., in translating "Did ye receive. . . when . . ?" and justify me in saying that "it is not rightly dividing the word of truth, to make these disciples who only knew the baptism of John, the counterpart of those who [now] believe in Christ"—[as crucified and risen].

The last paragraph of the Notes, beginning, "It is dealing deceitfully with the Word of God," lays down two principles which I am assured no commentator or teacher can afford to disregard, and which Mr. Brooke does not traverse.

The charge that I condemn those who do not agree with me, and that my words befit "an infallible Pope" are, I therefore submit, unjustified and irrelevant. I am satisfied that both the brethren who have written as above desire equally with myself to know and teach only the truth. Therefore, it is well to avoid too great sensitiveness on the one hand, and acerbity on the other. I will endeavour, God willing, to reply to these letters next week.

R. C. M.

"THE COMING REVOLUTION."

Sir,—As an ardent Socialist, and a constant reader of The Christian from my boyhood, I have been much pained by the attack upon Socialism contained in your last week's issue, and beg that you will in fairness allow me to point out the unjustness of Rev. James Douglas' remarks. I should be equally just if I, as a Socialist, were to attack Christianity on the ground that members of Christian churches are some of the worst offenders in the "sweating" of the poor, and that it is a Christian Czar who persecutes the Stundists; and were to support my assertions of what Christianity is by quotations from some members of the Agapemone, or—if you will—from the Pope himself!

Mr. Douglas does just what we blame heathen for doing—but with less excuse than they—when they accuse "Christianity" of teaching drunkenness, uncleanness, cheating, and all the vices of the white man! The varieties of "Socialists" are just as pronounced as the varieties of "Christians," and it is not just or fair to decry Socialism, any more than it is to decry Christianity, because of the faults or extravagances of any or all of its professors.

It is much easier to make accusations than to refute them: I can only say that the statements made by Mr. Douglas as to Socialist "disbelief in Revelation," and "respect for Christ," and the statement that "there is no room left either for the fact of sin, or its Divine remedy . . . in the Cross," might be as truthfully predicated of teetotalism! There are teetotallers, as there are Socialists, who deny the fundamental doctrines of Christianity; there are Socialists as there are teetotallers, to whom these truths are utterly essential. And to make Socialism, and Socialists in general, responsible for the crimes of Anarchists is—well, worse than making Christianity, and Mr. Douglas himself, responsible for the deeds of the Inquisition, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, or the doings of "Holy Russia!"

If Mr. Douglas had contented himself with saying that some Socialists dream idle dreams, ignore the fact of the Fall, see no need of the Atonement, put man in the place of God, etc., he would have been, unfortunately, perfectly justified and perfectly correct. But the "fundamental doctrines" of Socialism are simple; they are (1) That much of the social evils which abound is due to unfair distribution of wealth. (2) That these evils can be largely remedied by the abolition of privilege and its claims. If all Christians had been, and were now, as good Socialists in their own practice as were Jesus Christ and his Apostles, there would have been no doctrines of dynamite, and the belief in the "Gospel of the Kingdom" would have satisfied the wildest dreamer. I refrain from more.—Yours in the "One Lord,"

Henry Bazett.

Southwick, Brighton, Dec. 31, 1893.

THE DAY OF REST.

A New Year's address has been issued by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, which states that the question of Sunday observance concerns every worker. It touches the disposal of one-seventh of the lives of all mankind. The religious life of our country depends on the religious observance of the day of holy rest. To preserve this day of rest from the encroaches of needless labour has been for another year the aim of the Association. The Sacred Music on Sunday Bill would (if passed) have enabled every speculator for the public amusement to cater for business on Sundays, and it would have inflicted Sunday labour on vast numbers of professional musicians. The bill was vigorously opposed, discussed, postponed, and finally dropped.

Mr. Acland had received a large deputation from the Association against the Sunday opening of museums, and he had stated in Parliament that one of the chief obstacles to Sunday opening was the last vote of the House of Commons when Sunday opening was defeated by 166 votes against 39. Memorials signed by 146 delegates to the Trades Union Congress and by the officers of 149 religious and philanthropic societies were presented to Mr. Acland against Sunday opening.

The Railway Regulation Act and other efforts have improved the condition of railway servants as to Sunday rest. One of the most eminent counsel of the day has given his opinion that the Sunday concerts at the Albert Hall for money payment are illegal. So far as can be ascertained, no additional public museums or galleries have been opened on Sundays during the past year. At Derby a proposal to open the art gallery on Sunday was defeated. At Cardiff a public meeting was called to promote the Sunday opening movement, when an amendment against Sunday opening was carried by an overwhelming majority. The Trades Union Congress by sixty votes against fifty-eight decided not to hold political demonstrations on Sunday. The Bishop of Rochester's proposal to open museums on Sundays was opposed by the Bishops of London, Exeter, Gloucester, and others, and postponed. The House of Laymen of the Convocation of Canterbury, led by Lords Selborne and Harrowby, Sir Douglas Fox, Mr. Spottiswoode and others, passed unanimously a resolution against the Sunday opening of museums.

The Sunday opening of the Chicago Exhibition was a great failure, and by twenty-four votes against four the commissioners decided to close. All the postage stamps now issued in Belgium have attached to them a small perforated label containing the words, "not to be delivered on Sundays." The label must be torn off by persons who wish their letters to be delivered on Sundays. A Lord's Day Union for India has been formed; 238,000 publications have been issued; 490 sermons on Sunday observance have been preached, twenty-seven illustrated lectures and thirty-eight addresses at meetings have been delivered. Posters with the opinions of public men have been exhibited at railway stations and numerous other efforts made.

The committee ask for the sympathetic co-operation of all who feel that the preservation of the Lord's Day is worth fighting for.

BEQUESTS.—By the will of the late Mrs. Martin, widow of a former Bolton manufacturer, philanthropic and religious institutions benefit to the extent of £30,000. Amongst other bequests there are £3000 each to the London Missionary Society, the Bible Society, the Lancashire Independent College, and the Bolton Infirmary; £2000 to the Religious Tract Society, £1000 to the Lancashire Congregational Union, and £500 to Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home.

INDIAN CANTONMENTS SCANDALS.—In the House of Commons, December 29, the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P., presented an important petition from the representatives of the Conference of Women Workers which met at Leeds in November, under the presidency of Mrs. Boyd Carpenter, wife of the Bishop of Ripon. The petition, which bore the signatures of the Hon. Mrs. Lyttelton, of Eccles, Mrs. Creighton, wife of the Bishop of Peterborough, Lady Frederick Cavendish, Mrs. Boyd Carpenter, Lady Frances Balfour, the Hon. Mrs. E. S. Talbot, of Leeds, Miss Clifford, Poor Law Guardian, Bristol, and other influential women, expressed the earnest desire that the resolution of the House of Commons of June 5, 1888, which declared: "That, in the opinion of this House, any mere suspension of measures for the compulsory examination of women, and for licensing and regulating prostitution in India, is insufficient; and the legislation which enjoins, authorises, and permits such measures ought to be repealed," should be carried out "loyally and without evasion."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A DEMONSTRATION in favour of Medical Missions was held last week at Bathgate.

Dr. John G. Paton, having completed his tour in Ireland, is once more in Scotland, addressing large assemblies of his countrymen.

The death of Mr. Jas. Cunningham, senior, manufacturer, Dundee, deprives the Free Church of a warm and generous supporter.

The death is reported of Mr. John Kydd, a native of Montrose, and a worker in the service of the British Central Africa Administration.

The numbers of students attending the different Free Church Divinity Halls this session, are as follows:—Edinburgh 137, Glasgow 89, and Aberdeen 31.

Lord Young, one of the Scottish judges, in a recent charge at Glasgow, commented on the conspicuous absence of serious crime in such a great and populous community.

The well-known worker among Glasgow poor, "The Amateur Vagrant," issues a strong appeal in The Daily Mail for help in money and clothing to be sent to 115, Bath-street, Glasgow.

That Mr. Spurgeon was loved and revered by the Baptists of Scotland has been made evident at Leith by the laying of the memorial stone of a new church, which is to be called the Spurgeon Memorial Temple.

In the January number of The Free Church Monthly there is a sermon by the Moderator, Dr. W. Smith, of Edinburgh, on "Strong Young Men." This is a new departure; sermons are to appear monthly under the title, "The Free Church Pulpit."

The annual Christmas dinner to the poor of Glasgow, provided by the business men of the city, was given in the City Halls. Provision was made for about 3500 guests, and as these could not all be accommodated in the main hall, two of the smaller halls in front were requisitioned.

London has gained an acquisition to its pulpit power in the translation of Rev. David McQueen from Pleasance U.P. Church, Edinburgh, where he has laboured for the past six years with marked success, having increased the membership of the church, which is situated in a very necessitous district, from 115 to 450.

A very successful series of evangelistic meetings have been carried on by Mr. D. McLachlan, evangelist, and the pastor, Rev. W. C. McDougall, in the West Free Church, Coatbridge. The town is greatly cursed by the common public-house, and, in addition, there is the evil of Sabbath labour carried on to a great extent.

The largest Bible-class we have heard of in Scotland, is that which meets in the Queens' Rooms, Glasgow. It numbers 300, and is taught by Mr. Maclean, one of the elders in Wellington-street U.P. Church. Its members are mostly engaged during the week in shops, warehouses, mills, and other places of business in the city.

The work in connection with Cowcaddens Free Church continues to be prosecuted by Rev. William Ross and his assistants with unflagging zeal and unfailing success. At the bi-monthly communion, forty-seven new members were admitted, most of them from the non-church-going class. This congregation has now ninety office bearers.

Rev. A. F. Forest, of Renfield-street U.P. Church, Glasgow, is this winter carrying on a good work among young men. His church is crowded with them every Sabbath evening, and the subjects dealt with are such as deeply interest them. Many are led to join the Young Men's Christian Association, which is rapidly becoming a very powerful institution.

The Prison Aid Society of Glasgow continues to do excellent work. A recent case shows conclusively that even the most hardened criminals can be reclaimed. A man who had spent thirty-five years in prison has now for a considerable time been in regular employment, and is in every respect an upright man, who has the respect of his companions.

Dr. George Smith, secretary of the Foreign Mission Committee of the Free Church of Scotland, has received several letters from the church's missionaries in east Central Africa. Dr. W. A. Elmslie and Dr. Cross, of the Livingstonia Mission, report considerable progress both ecclesiastically and educationally in the northern portion of British Central Africa.

In most of the Scotch towns the public-houses were closed on New Year's Day, and the consequence was that the streets were free from those scenes which made walking on them a pain to any Christian man. In Glasgow, however, these houses were kept open till 3 p.m., and this was done after a protracted discussion by the publicans, who divided on the question, when the 3 o'clock hour was carried by ninety-eight to ninety-two.

Rev. George Bain, of Pitcaple, Aberdeenshire, who died a few days ago in Edinburgh, at the advanced age of eighty-five, was one who had a remarkable record as a minister. He was, from the time of the revival in Ulster, identified with aggressive work, and one of the supports of the great Huntly gatherings, where so many were won for Christ. Over and over again his beloved Pitcaple was visited by times of refreshing. He was one of Mr. Duncan Mathieson's bosom friends.

The latest development of the work of the United Evangelistic Association of Glasgow is vigorous open-air meetings near Sauchiehall-street, on Saturday and Sabbath evenings, in which the entire force of the young men of the Bible Training Institute is enlisted. About £400 a month are expended on the work of the Association, and only £600 have been sent in since Lord Overtoun appealed for special subscriptions to meet the deficit. This sum will require to be largely increased if the work is to be carried on as before.

IRISH NOTES.

REV. ROBERT WILSON, of Cargycreedy, has been appointed a Presbyterian missionary to India.

Watch-night services, which in most instances were largely attended, were held on Sunday night in all Methodist and in many Episcopalian and Presbyterian churches in Ireland.

A bequest of £1,300 has been left by the late Mrs. Innes, of Enniskillen, to the Society for orphans of ministers and missionaries and other objects connected with the Presbyterian church.

Evangelistic services have been held in Ardara, co Donegal, by Rev. Jno. Wilson, of Dunkineely, and in Duncairn Gardens New Church, Belfast, by Rev. Thomas Cook, Wesleyan evangelist.

The Misses Black, who have been labouring for ten years as missionaries in China, are home at present, and have been addressing, with great power and much interest, a series of meetings in the North of Ireland on behalf of missions.

Dr. John G. Paton, after visiting several towns and cities in this country, paid his farewell visit to Ireland, when he addressed a very large audience in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, and expressed himself as having been greatly pleased with his tour through the country.

 With reference to a note in a recent issue, we are desired to state that Mr. G. B. Millar is not now attached to the Faith Mission.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A NEW branch has been formed in Hereford.

At Wilmington, Del., the Endeavourers are giving free Sunday breakfasts to poor children.

A united meeting of four local C.E. Societies has been held at Taunton with much enthusiasm.

The Ramsden Road Society, Balham, formed in July last, has grown greatly, and resulted in much blessing.

The Auckland Provincial C.E. Union reported at its first convention, thirty societies and over 1000 members.

The South London C.E. Societies have formed a District Union, and intend holding an inaugural meeting on January 30.

We hear from Toronto that "the affiliation of the Epworth League and Christian Endeavour Society in Canada is, as judged by results, a great success."

Dr. F. E. Clark issues a "familiar letter" to C.E. members, urging them strongly to throw themselves thoroughly into the observance of the Week of Prayer.

A series of seven missionary meetings, planned by the C.E. Societies in co-operation with the pastors of the churches, has been conducted in Washington and Warren Counties, New York.

The Oldham Road C.E. Society, Manchester, has celebrated its third anniversary. Addresses were given afternoon and evening by Revs. F. B. Meyer and W. H. Towers. After tea, a missionary prayer-meeting was held, which was presided over by Rev. Jonathan Lees, of Tien-tsin, China.

LIBERIA, WEST AFRICA.—A favourable account is given by the American Colonisation Society of this black men's republic. The Christian population, numbering about 35,000, is composed in about equal parts of natives and the colonists, that is to say, black men from the Southern States of the American Union. Besides these, there are between one and two million aborigines, who are pagans or Mohammedans. The drink question causes little trouble, for Liberia has absolutely no drinking saloons. In the United States there are associations supported by the negroes, and designed to give information as to the advantages of emigrating to the little free republic inhabited and governed entirely by their own race.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A NEW association has just been formed at Belper, near Derby.

The Cork Y.M.C.A. building will be opened in March next.

Mr. Henry Varley will commence a mission at the Bristol Association on January 8.

At the quarterly meeting of Carluke United Association, Mr. John Shirlaw read a paper on "Unity," based on Psalm cxxxiii., after which a large number of members took part.

The Croydon and Abergavenny Associations have each a new building in course of erection, which they purpose opening during next year, in commemoration of the Y.M.C.A. Jubilee.

The annual meeting of the West Hartlepool Association, has just been held, under the presidency of Mr. R. W. Vick, J.P. There are 300 members and associates connected with the institution.

The annual meetings of Aberdeen morning and afternoon Bible-classes took the form of an "At Home," with conferences following. Mr. Glenesk, of the Congo Mission, an old member of the Association, is home on a visit.

The Bradford Association issue a report showing that the religious work has been kept well to the front; that the lodging-house, open-air, and temperance work has gone on usefully. The former secretary (Mr. Gardiner) is now a missionary in Ceylon.

Mr. Budgett Meakin speaks in warm terms of the Y.M.C.A. work which is being done in many countries he has visited. He found that the comparatively young association at Mexico is already exerting a great influence over the young men of that city.

At a recent District Conference held in Callander many Associations in the sub-district were represented. The reports showed that useful work was being carried on. Rev. Alex. Andrew, of the Stirling Tract Enterprise, gave an instructive address on "Motives and Methods in Christian Work."

The first convention of the Bombay District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held in that city on Saturday, December 9th. This District Union of Associations, it is said, has been put into such thorough working order that it would compare favourably in efficient working with any district in the whole of England or Ireland.

Mr. Victor Buxton, who in the early part of next year, is taking a tour in the East, has consented to visit the Associations recently formed in Egypt and Palestine, by Mr. George Holmes, Missionary Travelling Secretary. The Associations at Gibraltar and Malta, also, will probably receive the encouragement of a visit by the Hon. Granville Waldegrave.

The southern section of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A. issue a report showing vigorous work in the great and growing districts of the city lying south of the river. The branches have been kept in full action; the fellowship and evangelistic operations have been carried on fruitfully; and three new branches have been added. Thus the workers feel encouraged in reviewing the work of the past year.

Encouraging reports are to hand concerning the work that is being done in the Bombay Presidency, by Mr. Robert McCann, the missionary travelling secretary, sent out by the English National Council. His commission is that of organising and strengthening special Christian work amongst the young men of the Presidency, and the committee with whom he is co-operating to this end are much cheered by the result of his first year's work. Rev. Dr. Robertson, of Nagpoor, who is now in this country, speaks very highly of the value of the mission.

THE Y.W.C.A.

MRS. BAEYERTZ'S recent mission to Ryde, in connection with the work of the Y.W.C.A. of that town, proved very successful.

At Cambusbarron a united social meeting of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. was lately held. There was a good attendance of both societies, along with a few friends. Addresses were given by Mrs. Scrimgeour, Revs. M. Miller and R. Turnbull.

The Derby branch reports steady work and considerable encouragement. The total number of members under the head of Derby is 414, divided as follows:—Derby Centre 302, including 20 at Quarndon, Christ Church 62, Duffield 28, Nurses' Union 22.

A series of temperance lectures has been given in seven different parts of London in connection with the Y.W.C.A. and much interest has been awakened. Large numbers of young people have gathered to be instructed and stimulated in temperance facts, and the workers had the great satisfaction of taking 325 pledges. Another result was the putting on of 440 pieces of "blue ribbon," some taken by the new converts, and some by old temperance workers who had let slip this valuable silent testimony.

AMERICAN NOTES.

Five missionaries, all from one church in Inglewood, California, have sailed for Siam.

With the New Year Mr. Jacob Freshman's Hebrew Christian Mission, New York, is transferred to the City Mission.

The brotherhood of St. Andrew, Chicago, has organised an employment bureau, for the benefit of deserving men out of work.

Mr. Charles Minor has been evangelising with success, at Trenton, N.J., in connection with the Y.M.C.A.; and also in Brooklyn.

Mr. Sam. P. Jones, the Southern Evangelist, has recently conducted missions with immense audiences at Memphis, Tenn., and Birmingham, Ala.

After leaving Atalanta, Rev. E. P. Hammond held meetings in different parts of Georgia and Florida, many young people being brought under religious impression.

In the New York Independent, a head master makes a vigorous protest against the excessive devotion to athletic sports that is in vogue at Yale, Princeton, and other great American Colleges.

The Jerry McAuley Rescue Mission in New York, is suffering from the financial stress. There are now thirty such missions in the city, largely as the result of Mr. McAuley's pioneer work at Water Street.

A general evangelistic movement is to be begun in Brooklyn during the Week of Prayer. A series of Union meetings, to be continued indefinitely, has been commenced in one of the Baptist churches, New York.

Detroit has been greatly stirred by a series of Union revival meetings under Dr. J. W. Chapman. Every co-operating church has received an impetus, and all classes of the community have been more or less reached.

The recent municipal elections in Massachusetts were not quite so favourable to the temperance cause as was expected. In Worcester, however, where Mr. E. Murphy is carrying on a splendid temperance work, the vote in favour of licence was decreased, and that in favour of no licence increased.

Dr. A. J. Gordon's magazine, The Watchword, for 1894, will have a department on "Rescue Work," in which will be given interesting sketches and reports of work among the lost and fallen in various missions and homes of different cities, and striking incidents and illustrations of God's grace in connection with the same.

Rev. B. Fay Mills evangelised for several weeks at Grand Rapids, Mich., and the City was greatly blessed. The churches are revived, and hundreds have confessed Christ. Mr. Mills has also laboured for ten days in Ann Arbor, Mich., and his work has been eminently blessed, especially among the three thousand students in the University.

A blessed work of grace, under the direction of Dr. L. W. Munhall, in which the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist Churches of Rondout, N.Y., are harmoniously united, has been in progress. The entire community is moved as never before. Every home in Rondout has been visited by Christian women, and the people kindly and cordially invited to attend the meetings.

Rev. Dr. J. J. Moore, senior bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, recently died at Greensboro, N.C. He was the oldest bishop of any denomination in America, being ninety years old, He has been an itinerant minister more than sixty years, and has held the office of bishop nearly twenty-six years. His labours extended from New England to California, including nearly every State in the Union.

The New York City Mission and Tract Society has established mission chapels through the most neglected districts of the city below Fourteenth-street. The Society now supports three English, two German, one Italian, and one Hebrew church, besides four Sunday-schools, with 3,500 scholars. One of these schools is for Chinese. There are forty-five women missionaries, some of whom are trained nurses. There are, besides, three day nurseries and a home for nurses and missionaries supported by the Society.

---

THE CHINESE WOMAN'S BIBLE MISSION has a quarterly paper entitled The Lamp of China. (1s. yearly. Nisbet.) The January issue contains some interesting items of intelligence and stimulating articles. The hon. organiser and treasurer of the mission is Mrs. Elborough Woodcock, 28, Wilton-crescent, S.W.

THE FLOODS IN JAPAN.—Mr. R. Wilson, Broughton Grange, Cockermouth, has been able to forward £50 to his daughter working at Matsuye, Japan, for the relief of the sufferers from the late typhoon and floods. Further help will be welcomed. It is trusted that these expressions of Christian sympathy with the natives will exercise a good influence in opening their hearts to the Gospel message.

[18]

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A correspondent of The Daily Chronicle calls earnest attention to the gambling permitted and even encouraged in East-end public-houses.

In Norway temperance women asked the public authorities to make it unlawful for women or girls to serve in public-houses. The request has been granted.

The Free Church Presbytery, Dundee, have issued a strong letter on the evil wrought by drinking customs—as, for example, treating in business transactions, "adjournment to the public-house" on all manner of pretexts, and finally the deplorable habit of New Year drinking and "first-footing."

Mr. Ralph Temple, of the American Cyclist Team, says:—"I would advise total abstinence from all alcoholic liquors whatever. I have found pure buttermilk to be the best drink to allay thirst, but do not advise drinking in quantity. Soda-and-milk is another good drink. Clearing the throat often with clean cool water is as good as anything. Drink as little as possible. Smokers will find more trouble in this respect than those who do not indulge."

In view of the excessive drinking sometimes observed at Christmas in the ranks, the Duke of Connaught issued, at Aldershot, the following order: "Until the dinners (on Christmas day) are served no beer is to be allowed in the men's rooms, and the total amount allowed to be passed into the rooms during the day is not to exceed one quart per man. No spirits are to be permitted to be taken into the barrack-rooms." This order has been much commented upon, but it had apparently very little effect on the garrison, which was as well supplied as heretofore with liquors of all descriptions.

A joint meeting of the British Medical Association Inebriates Legislation Committee, the Society for the Study of Inebriety, and the Homes for Inebriates Association, was held last week at the offices of the former association, 429, Strand, to receive a report of the joint deputation to the Home Secretary on the question of the compulsory seclusion of inebriates. In the course of various addresses it was strongly urged that unless power be given for the compulsory detention of inebriates, little real good will be effected. This, of course, involves due precautions to prevent unauthorised persons improperly opening homes or detaining inmates.

The president of the Australasian W.C.T.U. gives these reasons for a week of prayer, self-denial, and special effort by the white-ribboners of that country:—1. The annual drink bill of South Australia is a million and a-quarter of money (£1,250,000), which would send out 12,500 missionaries at a salary of £100 per year. 2. The annual drink bill of New South Wales, Victoria, and New Zealand is thirteen and a quarter millions (£13,250,000), a larger amount than that raised the world over for Foreign Missions. 3. The annual drink bill for Australia is twenty millions (£20,000,000), a greater sum than that paid by the British nation for the liberation of the slaves.

In an article on the Colonies, The Times says:—"The Act passed by the Legislature of New Zealand for the regulation of the sale of liquor in the colony is tolerably drastic. The Parliamentary electoral rolls serve the secondary purpose of licensing rolls. Women have a vote, therefore, with regard to the continuance, the increase, or the diminution of the number of licences. With a few unimportant exceptions the issue of fresh licences will be subject to the consent of the electorate, and will be voted upon by ballot. Stringent conditions are included in the Act as to forfeiture of licences. Clubs, which have hitherto been regarded as private institutions existing under charter from the Colonial Secretary, are for the future to be subject to inspection by the police or by any inspector of licensed premises."

On Saturday night, the annual dinner was given in Wardour Hall by the West London Mission, to men found under the influence of liquor in the streets on the previous night. Nearly 200 men sat down to dinner. Among the speakers was the chairman of the County Council, who in the course of his address used a very effective illustration. Most of the men present spent 1s. a day on drink, and would probably spend more if they had it. Now, suppose they saved that shilling from the age of twenty to fifty, instead of sixty, what would be the result? Mr. Hutton then laid out on a table bag after bag of new farthings, to the number of 1,000, and by this means brought home vividly to his audience what they might save. The coins were taken out of the bags and made into piles on the table. At the close many of the men signed the pledge.

---

PROTESTANT LECTURES.—Rev. William Frith, of Haringay, N., has delivered a series of lectures under the auspices of the Bristol and Clifton Protestant League. Local ministers and others supported him at the meetings, which were fairly well attended.

WE HAVE A GREAT HIGH PRIEST.

Who hath passed through the heavens—Jesus, the Son of God.

Let us hold fast our confession

Not a High Priest who cannot sympathise with our infirmities.

In all points (body, soul, spirit—Luke iv.) tempted like as we are—without sin.

Let us come with confidence to the Throne of Grace. that we may obtain compassion and find grace to help in time of need.

Glorified not Himself to be made a High Priest, but He that said unto Him, "My Son, this day have I begotten Thee" (from the dead).

Though Son, He learned obedience by the things He suffered.

Author of eternal salvation to all that obey Him.

Declared of God High Priest after the order of Melchisedek.

First King of Righteousness: after that King of Peace.

Continueth ever; hath an untransferable priesthood.

Able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him.

Ever liveth to make intercession for them.

Holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens.

The Son, perfected for evermore.

We have such a High Priest on the right hand of the Throne of Majesty in heaven.

If He were on earth He would not be a priest at all.

By his own blood He entered once for all into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption.

Through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God.

A second time, apart from sin, He shall appear to them that wait for Him, unto salvation.

In the end of the ages He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself.

Having, therefore, liberty to enter the holiest by Jesus' blood—by a new and living way which He hath opened through the veil, his flesh,

And having a Great Priest over the house of God,

Let us draw near with true heart, in fulness of faith, heart sprinkled from evil conscience, body washed with pure water.

Let us hold fast the confession of our hope—for the Promiser is faithful.

Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works,

Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together,

But exhorting one another—so much the more as ye see the day drawing nigh. R. C. M.

[The above forms Miss Macpherson's message for 1894 to her friends. She will be glad to send the card on receipt of a penny stamp. One of the chief evils of the day is priestcraft; one of the greatest needs is instruction as to the priesthood of Jesus, the Son of God.]

---

NOTES FROM BARCELONA.

Mr. Jose Jimenez Ronsero, evangelist, writes to Mr. William Greene:—"I wish to congratulate you on the good results obtained by the Gospel Mission carried on at Caldas de Montbrey, Province of Barcelona, where I recently passed four days. I found that nearly all the inhabitants are instructed in the Gospel.

"I had the pleasure of visiting the schools under the direction of Miss Lawrence, and was quite delighted with the advanced state of the instruction given to the scholars, particularly the girls. Who knows but that from among the students a Spanish Lincoln may not spring up? I had the honour of holding a conference in the hall, which was completely filled. My address was directed principally to the importance of the Bible, and the great results obtained everywhere it has been studied. The close attention quite astonished me. You would have thought that you were in a hall in London. After the meeting I sold twenty-three books."

---

CHRISTIAN FRATERNITY.

An interesting incident occurred a fortnight ago at a wedding in an Episcopal Church, Hampstead. The bride and groom were members of the Church of England. Dr. Newman Hall acted as father, and at the close of the service was invited by the vicar to address the company in the church, which he did from the chancel steps.

An M.P. informs us that on several occasions he has addressed congregations by invitation of the rector at the close of the regular service on Sunday evening, which is quite lawful, when thus requested, and after the benediction, the entire service having been first completed.

OBITUARY.

MISS E. C. CORNFORD, SHAOU-HING, CHINA.

BISHOP MOULE, Mid-China, writes expressing his deep sorrow, and that of the whole mission, at the death of Miss Cornford. It took place at Cheefoo, in Shan-tung, whither she had gone on medical advice to promote convalescence after a serious attack of malarial fever. The illness returned, and in spite of devoted nursing by Miss Bullock and Miss Clarke, she died.—Church Missionary Intelligencer.

MISS F. A. ADAMS.

Many of our readers will regret to hear that Miss Fanny Ann Adams, of Camberwell, who for many years has led the psalmody at the Central Noon Meeting at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Mondays, passed away on December 19, aged 36 years. She was also known as an active worker in connection with the choir at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings. It is a singular coincidence that the chairman and the organist of the Monday prayer-meeting should have passed to their heavenly rest in the close of the same year.

BISHOP HARPER, NEW ZEALAND.

A telegram from Wellington, New Zealand, announces that the Right Rev. Dr. Henry John Chitty Harper, formerly Bishop of Christchurch and Primate of New Zealand, died on Wednesday, Dec. 27. He was born at Gosport in 1807, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford; he acted from 1832 until 1840 as "conduct," or chaplain, at Eton. He was then appointed to the charge of Strathfield-Mortimer, Berkshire, which he held until 1856, when he was consecrated first Bishop of Christchurch by Archbishop Sumner. In 1859 he was made Primate of New Zealand, in which post he remained for twenty years. Since 1889 he has lived in retirement.

MR. PETER SCOTT, LIVERPOOL.

Many workers in distant lands will have cause to mourn the loss, through influenza, after a week's illness, of one who has for some years been a true helper in the Lord. In 1886, Mr. Scott went out with Mr. Swan to Africa, returning in the following year—his health forbidding a longer stay. Since then he made a special line of service for himself by showing helpfulness to missionaries coming and going; meeting the vessels, aiding in luggage difficulties, and giving them hospitality while staying in Liverpool. Moreover, he turned his acquaintance with foreign trade to good account by acting voluntarily as business agent at home for many missionaries abroad, whom he practically undertook to represent here by attending to necessary business matters, and thus doing them genuine service. A friend describes him thus: "He was not a public character, but a quiet man, known by few as one who helped in any way that was in his power, wherever he saw need." Such willing helpers are all too few, and his place will not easily be filled.

MRS. WORTHINGTON-ATKIN.

We regret to record the death of the wife of the rector of St. Peter's, Cork, and of the "Daily Prayer Union." Her death resulted from influenza at the early age of thirty-five years. She was an active and successful worker amongst young women, and has conducted an evangelistic meeting for young women every Wednesday evening, which was very largely attended. She was also an active Sunday school teacher, and her counsel at teachers' meetings was always most helpful. She had a sweet voice, and loved to sing hymns to the sick and invalids of the parish. The poor found in her a real friend. Many will for years miss her kind deeds, her sweet and gentle voice, and her loving smile. Truly "she did what she could" for the Saviour whom she loved so dearly. She was a devoted mother, an affectionate wife, and a true helpmeet to her husband. She was a member of the committee of The Maternity, also of the "Penny Dinner," etc., and has worked for the Y.W.C.A. for many years. The funeral sermon was preached by Canon Harley, of Holy Trinity.

MISS EMILY SARAH HOLT.

There will be many to mourn the death, at her residence, Balham House, Balham, of this accomplished authoress, whose historical tales have for many years occupied a remarkable place in general esteem and acceptance. Miss Holt had been for some years failing somewhat in health, but with indomitable energy of spirit, she triumphed over bodily weakness, and continued her painstaking researches—for every tale was the result of much study of old and faded documents stowed away in ancient English houses, or in the British Museum; her exquisitely written tales being based on accurate knowledge of historical facts.

We understand that Miss Holt had been seriously ill for about a month, but had become so much better in health that her recovery was expected. Miss Holt's first published work was entitled "Royal Ladies," and was a purely historical production, similar to Miss Strickland's "Lives of the Queens of England." Her first religious tale, "Mistress Margery," appeared in 1868, since which one or more stories from her pen have appeared each year. They are all of a distinctly Protestant character, and have done much towards educating the young in Reformation principles. Her work on earth is ended, but, through her books, her influence for good will continue for many years to come. Miss Holt was the only sister of Mr. James Maden Holt, formerly chairman of the Church Association. Her works are published by Messrs. J. F. Shaw and Co. Her last book, ONE SNOWY NIGHT, was issued in November last, and heartily commended in our issue for November 23. The funeral took place at Bacup, Miss Holt's native place.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. William Forbes has been labouring for several weeks in Glasgow. On Thursday last he was at Coatbridge Free West Church.

Mr. Henry Smith completed on Sunday week a special mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Coxhoe. Many professed to receive pardon and life. Later on he commenced his fourth mission at Nawton, Yorks.

Monmouthshire.—A three weeks' mission has been held by Mr. Alexander Clark at the Town Hall, Usk, Mon., at the invitation of the Y.M.C.A. The meetings were well attended, especially on Sundays, and much good has resulted. Sinners have been converted, and Christians aroused.

Birkenhead.—Mr. James Eyres has just completed a fortnight's successful mission in the Lowe-street Wesleyan Chapel, with signal manifestations of God's presence and power. Many have been saved, and the Lord's own people have been greatly quickened. A farewell address was given to converts and workers, closing a memorable mission.—J. K.

North Sunderland.—Evangelistic services were conducted by Mr. W. Hall in the Presbyterian Church, North Sunderland, from December 3 to 21. The meetings were well attended, while the addresses were clear and earnest, and it is believed there will be good results in the quickening and establishing in the faith of believers, and in the beginnings of spiritual life in others.

Soldiers in Canterbury.—God is giving us much blessing in mission work. Numbers of the soldiers in our depôt attend the meetings, and several have been led to the Saviour. We give them tea on Sunday afternoons, and thus get a goodly number at our afternoon and evening service. We hope ere long to secure a small room to open as a Soldiers' Home.—GEORGE HEATH, Ethelbert Villa, Norman-road, Canterbury.

Hampstead.—During the earlier part of December Mr. George Clarke conducted a united evangelistic mission in Trinity Presbyterian Church and Heath-street Baptist Chapel, Hampstead. The evening meetings were largely attended, and the preaching of the Gospel was equally blessed, many through the power of the Spirit finding salvation in Jesus. The afternoon Bible readings were also full of instruction, and many older Christians were glad to profit by Mr. Clarke's teaching. Both congregations have been revived and strengthened.—J. E. J.

Manchester.—Last Sunday we had Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver at Mill-street Mission Room, a branch of the Manchester City Mission, and I wish to testify to the blessing our young friends brought with them. Many came out for Christ. Mr. Bewley spoke with great power, and Frank sang the Gospel clearly and powerfully. Some time ago Frank gave his testimony in his own town, where he is well known, confessing his sinful life and his conversion by God's almighty grace, and singing as a solo No. 564 in Mr. Sankey's "Songs and Solos." Several young men have said, "Ah, Frank, if He could save you He can save me." I would ask the Lord's people very earnestly to follow these young evangelists with prayer.—CHAS. H. JOHNSON.

Church Parochial Missions Society.—The following Missions have been arranged for the month of January. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Jan. 6—22, Maindee, Newport, Mon.; Jan. 27—Feb. 12, St. Bede's, Liverpool; Rev. Preb. Askwith, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Mary's, Walton-on-the-Hill, Liverpool; Rev. J. S. Barrass, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, All Saints', Stoneycroft, Liverpool; Rev. W. St. Hill Bourne, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, Christ Church, Kensington, Liverpool; Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, All Saints', Liverpool; Rev. T. E. Cleworth, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Luke's, Liverpool; Rev. A. R. D'Arcy, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Polycarp, St. Domingo Grove, Liverpool; Rev. J. Edwards, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Athanasius', Kirkdale, Liverpool; Rev. A. J. Harrison (Residential Missioner), Jan. 14—21, Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall; Jan. 28—Feb. 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Rev. J. H. Haslam, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, Holy Trinity, Walton Buck, Liverpool; Rev. W. Hayton, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, Aintree, Liverpool; Rev. E. H. Jones, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Dunstan's, Liverpool; Rev. W. H. Langhorne, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Cleopas', Liverpool; Rev. Canon Lester, Jan. 11—21, St. Augustine's, Tonge Moor, Bolton; Jan. 22—Feb. 5, St. John's, Bootle, Liverpool; Rev. C. E. Meeres, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Matthias', Liverpool; Rev. D. Monro, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, Christ Church, Everton, Liverpool; Rev. J. Morris, M.D., Jan. 21—Feb. 7, St. Michael's, Langley; Rev. R. Patterson, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, Gateacre, Liverpool; Rev. H. Foster Pegg, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Philemon's, Liverpool; Rev. T. P. Rinz, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Thomas', Toxteth Park, Liverpool; Rev. F. E. Rogers, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Ann's, Stanley, Liverpool; Rev. E. B. Russell, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Clement's, Toxteth Park, Liverpool; Rev. J. Stephens, Jan. 13—25, St. John's Epsom; Jan. 27—Feb. 12, St. Bede's, Liverpool; Rev. Thos. Tirebuck, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. Saviour's, Everton, Liverpool; Rev. Canon Williams, Jan. 27—Feb. 7, St. David's (Welsh Church), Liverpool.

PERSONALIA.

Bishop Pelham, many will regret to hear, is very seriously ill with bronchitis, supervening on influenza.

Rev. J. D. Jones, of Lincoln, has been appointed Lecturer in Church History and New Testament Criticism at the Theological Institute, Nottingham.

Lord Coleridge has withdrawn all patronage from the S.P.C.K. because of its publication of works favouring the practice of vivisection on living animals.

Mr. F. N. Charrington has been compelled by the state of his health to leave England for Egypt. His medical man advises him, if he does not get better, to go on to Australia.

Rev. James Gordon Watt, of Mansfield College, Oxford, has been appointed assistant secretary to Rev. W. Major Paull, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, for the ensuing year.

Pastor Charles Spurgeon has again been suffering—this time from a serious attack of bronchitis—he is now recovering, but in the meantime must refuse all requests to preach for others.

Dr. John Smith, we regret to hear, has, owing to the unsatisfactory state of his health, been prohibited from undertaking literary work, or, indeed, any work outside his own regular pastoral duties.

Rev. E. C. Moore, of Providence, Rhode Island, has been invited by Principal Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, Oxford, to spend the month of March at that college lecturing on "Preaching and Pastoral Work," and preaching in the chapel.

Dr. Herbert Lankester, hon. sec. of the Medical Missions Auxiliary Committee of the Church Missionary Society, has been appointed secretary to that committee and the Special Fund, with other duties in relation to the outgoing and returning missionaries.

Bishop Taylor of Africa.—In connection with the venerable Bishop's present visit to this country it may be well to remind the friends of missions of his deeply interesting book, "Ten Years of Self-supporting Missions in India." A few copies can be had from the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN, price 5s.

Mrs. Douglas Hooper (née Edith Baldey).—After nearly three years' testimony for Jesus, on the east coast of Africa, this devoted young missionary was called home in October last. Rev. E. N. Thwaites writes that Principal H. C. G. Moule, and a few others, think some memorial ought to be raised of so saintly a life. He suggests the building of a church at Jilhove (where she died), on which her own heart had been set, and which would cost from £500 to £600. As Mr. Thwaites is leaving England for a time, Rev. F. Baldey, St. Simon's, Southsea, will receive any communications.

APPEALS.

WALWORTH MISSION.—Mr. John T. Dunn pleads for aid on behalf of this valuable Mission. He cannot think that in the East of London any mission is surrounded by a much more needy class. Address, 25, Grosvenor-park, Camberwell, S.E.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER, who is only a workman, asks gifts of Christmas cards or a few books to give a large class of children that attended for eighteen months.—Address, Mrs. Morrison, Mission Hall, Green-street Green, Orpington, Kent.

THE CHELTENHAM Police Court Missionary asks for wall texts, almanacks, and lantern slides; also would be very thankful for any left-off clothing for the rescue work in visiting the Police Court and the homes of discharged prisoners, and also the common lodging-house work.—W. Mortlock, 13, Corpus-street, Cheltenham.

BETHNAL GREEN CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Mrs. Stockwell Watts' soup kitchen has for many years proved a real boon to the poor of the neighbourhood, and this season the distress from lack of regular employment owing to slackness of trade is greater than usual. Funds are urgently needed. Address, Mrs. Watts, 3, West Bank, Stamford Hill, N.

PROTESTANT GOVERNESSES' HOME.—The superintendent writes:—I am dealing with most distressing cases, some are without home, money, or even warm clothing. In all my experience I have never witnessed ladies in such painful circumstances. Surely the Lord's people will rally round me, and send help for these silent sufferers.—Clementine Kingdon, 22, Chatham-road, Brighton.

A NATIVE CHURCH.—Principal Ll. G. S. Price, of the C.M.S. College, Tinnevelly, pleads for help on behalf of a few earnest villagers at Pattakaral. "The men are only able to earn about two annas a day by tapping palmyra trees. Yet out of their poverty they raised Rs.500, and, helped by friends, built the walls of the church for Rs.1000. But there the work stands, for although the men put by a proportion of their daily earnings, and the women deny themselves of a quarter measure of rice every week, what they are able to do is so very small that the task seems to them hopeless unless they are helped To complete the church Rs.750 (£50) are needed."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Bishop Tucker intends visiting Scotland after coming to Durham, Newcastle, and Sunderland.

The annual sermon of the London Jews Society will be preached by the Archbishop of Dublin.

The Spring Conference for 1894 of the Church Association is to be held at Bradford on March 7, 8, and 9.

Rev. W. S. Knowles, vicar of St. Thomas's, Toxteth, Liverpool, succeeds Rev. T. P. Ring at Hanley.

The new Bishop of Honduras (Rev. G. A. Ormsby) was consecrated on Thursday in St. Mary, Newington.

Rev. William Jennings, formerly curate of St. Luke's, Weaste, has been presented to the rectory of Grasmere.

The Dean of Armagh (Dr. George A. Chadwick) has been offered the still vacant vicarage of St. James's, Holloway.

Canon Hitchcock having been compelled by ill-health to resign his charge at East Farleigh, Kent, Rev. M. Trotter has been appointed his successor.

The Bishop of London has appointed Tuesday and Wednesday, April 10 and 11, 1894, for the next session of the London Diocesan Conference.

Rev. G. K. Baskerville writes from Ziba, Kyagwe, one of the new stations in Uganda, that a small church has now been built, and services are held regularly every morning.

The annual report of Toynbee Hall, Whitechapel, shows that the aim of the founders is being kept in view. On the educational side there have been 1200 students, while the more strictly social work in clubs and various societies is diligently carried on.

A series of special sermons on Christian Evidences have been preached on Sunday evenings at St. Chrysostom's Church, Victoria Park. On Christmas Eve Rev. J. E. Mercer took as his subject "The future, according to science and according to Christianity."

The work of translation and revision is (says the Gleaner) advancing apace in Uganda; the Prayer-book is finished, Matthew, Romans, and part of John revised, and First Epistle of John translated. Mr. G. L. Pilkington is hoping to personally see these through the press in England during his coming furlough.

In commemoration of the arrival of the first Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem, and the forty-fourth anniversary of the consecration of Christ Church on Mount Zion, the London Jews Society invite the friends of Israel to the annual prayer-meeting to be held at the society's house, 16, Lincoln's-inn-fields, on Monday, January 22, at 3 p.m.

A Northumberland clergyman seems determined to have the palm for a novel suggestion in the matter of parochial organisation. He is anxious to get a "parochial omnibus," which shall be used on Sundays (especially on wet days) for bringing people to church from outlying hamlets. He expresses his belief that farmers would be glad in turn to lend their horses for the purpose.

Rev. W. Bryant Salmon has been licensed as chaplain to the Missions to Seamen in the Port of London, to officiate in the Well-street (London Docks) Institute . . . to serve the chapel belonging to the said Institute in preaching the Word of God, and in reading the Common-prayer, and in celebrating the Holy Communion. Mr. Salmon is the first chaplain so licensed for the exclusive service of sailors in London.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. G. Ball, of Horningham, has accepted a call to Nova Scotia.

Rev. W. Lower Carter, M.A., of Leeds, has accepted the pastorate of Hopton Church, Mirfield.

Rev. W. Whittley, of Claremont Chapel, Pentonville, has accepted the pastorate at Cricklewood.

Rev. C. Lemoine, of Soho Hill, Birmingham, has been called to succeed the late Dr. Conder at Leeds.

Rev. Dr. Hiles Hitchens, of Belgravia, London, is suffering from dislocation of the right shoulder caused by a fall.

Rev. G. Burgoyne, after a useful eleven years' pastorate at Thames Ditton, has felt compelled to resign owing to his health.

Mr. D. D. Green has been appointed by the directors of the London Missionary Society to the Sihanaka Mission, in Madagascar.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne has been requested by the directors to write a popular history of the London Missionary Society, in connection with the approaching centenary.

Rev. Stephen Todd has resigned his charge at Oxford-road, Putney. Having completed forty-one years of ministerial service, he does not propose to take another pastorate.

Rev. G. S. Barrett, who for many years has been minister of Princes-street Chapel, Norwich, has now entered upon his duties as president of the Congregational Union. He delivers his presidential address in London on May 8, when the Congregational Union holds its annual assembly.

Rev. H. Elwyn Thomas commences a series of special Sunday evening addresses at Tolmers Square Church on January 7, on the "Farewell Sayings of our Lord." A solo will be sung each evening throughout the series. The expenses of the recent renovation and redecoration, which amounted to £410, exclusive of the members' work, have all been paid.

At the annual meeting of the Lancashire College it was stated that the number of students had increased from forty-three to forty-six. All the students who left the college in June are happily settled in pastorates. Principal Scott said that there never was a time when the industry of the students was more satisfactory, and when the students took so deep and wide an interest in mission work as they are doing to-day.

Dr. Parker's Christmas morning sermon attracted a large congregation. His theme was Christ in a fourfold aspect. He said they might have the Man Christ Jesus on a crucifix and yet know nothing about Him. They might perform a thousand ritualistic acts on that holy day around a cross or a picture of the Divine Babe, or around any point of Christ's life, and yet know nothing of Christ. Unless Christ was born in them forms and symbolism were of no avail. Christ must be within, and not without.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. F. and Mrs. Hill have safely reached Cuttack, Orissa, and resumed their loved work.

In consequence of ill-health Rev. T. D. Cameron has resigned the pastorate at Shore, Todmorden.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown has been warmly welcomed by his people on his return to his pulpit for a time.

Rev. G. P. Mackay has been celebrating his second anniversary at Devonshire-square, Stoke Newington.

The church at Chesham, Bury, has invited Pastor F. J. Greening, of Dartmouth, to the pastorate, which he has accepted.

Rev. W. Carey Sage closes on Sunday a year's pastorate at the Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool. He began as co-pastor to the late Mr. W. P. Lockhart, at whose death he consented to act as pastor for the time being.

Rev. W. Holman and Mrs. Bentley, before embarking at Antwerp for the Congo, were much cheered by the kindness shown by the members of the Temple Evangélique, in the Rue Baillard. A delightful farewell meeting was held and a good collection given.

According to present arrangements the Baptist Mission Sunday this year will be April 22. The annual missionary sermon will be delivered after the Zenana Breakfast on Wednesday, April 26, in Bloomsbury Chapel; and the annual missionary sermon to young men and women in Bloomsbury Chapel, on the evening of that day. The public missionary meeting will be held in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening, April 26.

The smallest church whose returns have found their way to the Baptist Union for this year is at Nantmawr, Buckley Mountain, Flintshire. It has only a communicants' roll of six, but this is an increase of two on the previous year. On the other hand, the largest is the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London. Its membership is returned at 5,179. There are 19 mission stations connected with it, and 25 Sunday and ragged schools. In the latter there are 611 teachers and 8,034 scholars.

METHODIST.

The foundation-stones have been laid of a new chapel at Masborough.

Mr. F. Shaw has concluded a successful mission at Providence Chapel, Sowerby Bridge. Many have professed Christ.

A mission held lately by Rev. Thomas Waugh at Otley has resulted in a considerable number of additions to the church.

Mr. George Hooper has been conducting missions in the Exeter Circuit. Large crowds have been gathered, and much blessing has resulted.

A new chapel is to be erected at Ashbourne. A wave of spiritual blessing has passed over the locality, and many persons have been converted.

After being unable to preach for about three months owing to the loss of his voice, Rev. S. K. Hocking has resumed his ministry at Duke-street, Southport.

In the Methodist New Connexion, 522 Sunday scholars under twenty-one years of age met last year in special training classes on Connexional history, polity, and doctrine.

The new Conference Hall, built by Rev. Joseph Odell, at Birmingham, is finished, the keys have been handed over, and all is ready for church and Sunday-school to take possession.

The Primitive Methodists in London have formed a Metropolitan Council, in order to guard the rights and promote the interests of the churches, to voice their opinions on current questions, and, above all, to take united action in evangelistic and missionary work in London.

Dr. Riggs' legislative proposals for the grouping of Wesleyan districts, resulting in the creation of what would practically be a Methodist episcopate, are already beginning to call forth strong opposition. Rev. T. Champness, Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., and a large number of influential laymen, have expressed their strong disapproval of the scheme.

Mr. James Duckworth, of Rochdale, suggests the establishment of a college in connection with the Methodist Free Churches. The sum of £20,000 is named as a minimum—one-half for the building and the other for an endowment. He proposes to devote the next three months to visiting friends in various parts of the country, with a view to securing their practical co-operation.

The Great Ancoats-street Mission, Manchester, begun last September, is being vigorously carried on. Rev. W. H. Kelshaw is making his influence felt, and God is greatly using him. The week-night services are well attended, showing a vast improvement week by week. The Saturday-night Gospel-temperance concerts are growing in favour with the people, and all round there is growing prosperity.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The new volume of "The Preachers of the Age" series is by Rev. C. Moinet, of Kensington.

Rev. J. V. Logan, who succeeded Mr. Rentoul at Sunderland, is attracting much attention in the North.

Great interest has recently been shown at Newport-road, Middlesbrough, in connection with special Gospel temperance work.

The anniversary of Rev. J. G. Train's pastorate at Upper Norwood has been observed with many indications of great encouragement.

A new Welsh Calvinistic chapel, which provides accommodation for 1000 persons, has been erected at Tarbach, Aberafon, at a cost of about £5000.

Rev. H. G. Wallace has intimated his intention of resigning the pastorate of the United Presbyterian Church at Kendal, which he has held for thirty-five years.

Rev. J. Reid Howatt has retired from the position of Presbyterian editor of the Review of the Churches, a position he has recently filled in succession to the late Dr. Donald Fraser. He will be succeeded by Prof. Lindsay, D.D., of Glasgow.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

One and All is another monthly devoted to adult school work, and has the hearty recommendation of the General Committee.

Our Missions is the title of a new periodical commencing on the 15th inst. Two ladies are to be the editors. The well-known qualifications of the editors who have been selected is in itself almost a guarantee of the value of the new magazine, and it has the cordial support of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association, the Syrian Committee, and the Missionary Helpers' Union.

A real want has been supplied by the compilation of a Hymn Book "for use in the Sabbath schools and mission meetings of the Society of Friends," and the fact that it has been edited by Joseph Starrs Fry, so long clerk of the yearly meeting, will inspire the confidence of Friends generally, and be a guarantee that the sentiment and teaching of the hymns will be sound and Evangelical. The book is sold at 3d., 6d., and 1s.

A great amount of useful and far-reaching work is done at Leominster, as shown by the annual report, just to hand, of the Orphan Homes and Tract Association of that town. The Orphans' Printing Press is an adjunct of great value to the Homes, and all three branches work together for the common good. Christian benevolence can find a wise outlet in feeding, clothing, and educating the orphans, and the circulation of the excellent tracts is a great help in the diffusion of truth. All the Leominster work merits hearty support, and is cause for thankfulness.

There are several Prayer Unions among Friends who feel their utter dependence on God, and their need of help in doing his work in the world. The Friends' Prayer League is one of the latest of these means of blessing, and has just announced two meetings on Tuesday next at Devonshire House at 11 and 2.30, open to all Friends disposed to attend. We cannot too warmly commend an institution like this, as the influence of believing prayer is immeasurable for good, and can only bless those who pray, and those they remember before the Lord. The solution of many perplexing questions has been found, and may be found, at the Throne of Grace.

The Adult Schools continue to carry on their educational and evangelistic work among both men and women. By their means the "rich and poor meet together," and feel a common interest in the cause of Him who is no respecter of persons, and who has told us that "One is your Master, and all ye are brethren." The annual meetings occurring this time of the year show encouraging results, and yet though the movement has spread much beyond the circle of Friends, there is endless room for the expansion of this great unsectarian work. The benevolent and uplifting institutions associated with Adult Schools teach true dependence and inter-dependence, and emphasise and illustrate the real brotherhood of man.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Social Wing is greatly in need of waste paper for the sorters.

New Zealand raised £2200 for Self Denial Fund, £269 advance on last year.

There are nineteen slum officers in the cities of New York and Brooklyn alone.

In German Switzerland a Salvationist has been imprisoned for distributing handbills.

The stone-laying of the Junior barracks at Edmonton was conducted by Miss Booth by gaslight.

The bye-law of Milton, New Zealand—under which, a few weeks back, some Salvationists were imprisoned—has been repealed.

Ex-President Hayes, of Paraguay, has expressed a deep interest in the Salvation Army, and promised to subscribe to its funds.

A Christmas gathering took place at the "Bridge," Argyle-square, on Boxing Day, when upwards of 100 returned convicts were entertained to roast beef and plum pudding, after which a meeting was held, many distinguished visitors attending.

General Booth held a great meeting at Trondjhem on the night of the 29th ult. The division of which Trondjhem is the centre has an extent of over 800 miles. Three different languages are spoken: Norwegian, Russian, and the Lapland patois. The General's tour through Sweden and Norway will extend until the 12th inst.

The premises which have just been opened in Edinburgh, as the new shelter, have been in the possession of and used by the S.A. as a barracks for more than ten years. Among the first applicants was a mother and three children who had been burnt out. They were escorted by two policemen, who paid the money for their accommodation, which had been provided by one of the town councillors.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Thornham Villa, Camden-road, Bath, on 22nd ult., Jane Gundry, widow of the late Mr. Richard Osmond, of Linkenholt, Hants, in her eighty-fourth year.—At Clitheroe, on 26th ult., Rev. George Fielden, for the last forty-one years rector of St. James's, Clitheroe, and one of the oldest clergymen in the diocese of Manchester. In this populous parish he worked with exemplary zeal for practically the whole of his clerical life. He was a pronounced Evangelical of the older school of Hugh Stowell and Hugh M'Neile. —At Ashwater, Devon, Mrs. Walter Palmer, aged sixty-five, a valued worker and faithful steward.—At Crossyullog, near Pontypool, Mrs. Jane Gething, aged eighty-nine, who in past days did good service.—At Kimbolton, Mrs. Carrol Ibbs, for forty-five years an earnest helper in the Baptist Chapel.—At Coleraine, Rev. Benj. B. Gough, formerly rector of Maghera, co. Derry, aged seventy-seven years.—At Findoy, co. Tyrone, Mr. W. J. Stevenson, an earnest Presbyterian elder.—At Belfast, Rev. G. Hay Shanks, for forty-nine years a faithful minister at Board Mills, and formerly widely known as an earnest advocate of the abolition of slavery.—At Thorpe Underwood, Miss Clara Hall, a granddaughter of Robert Hall, and, with her sister, a devoted helper of every good work.—At Wigan, Rev. Enoch Franks, Presbyterian minister, who, for nearly twenty years, did good work at Hepburn-on-Tyne and Wigan.—At The Park, Nottingham, on 19th inst., Mr. Reuben Steele, a well-known leader in Congregational matters.—At Greenhithe, Kent, Rev. J. Aspinall, for the last nine years minister of the Congregational Chapel.—At Tooting, Rev. Job Marchant, who since 1848 has done good work at Barkwall and Kennington.—At Corsham, on 21st ult., Rev. G. W. Newnham, aged eighty-six, after a faithful ministry of sixty-two years: he was a hearty Evangelical and a staunch supporter of the C.M.S. His son was but lately appointed Bishop of Moosonee.—At Bedford Gardens, Kensington, on 21st ult., Bishop Chambers, aged sixty-nine, the first missionary to the Dyaks of Borneo, at Banting. In 1881 he retired owing to ill-health.—At The Scholes, Cleckheaton, Rev. E. B. Wensley, aged fifty-five, the vicar of White Chapel, Cleckheaton.—At 65, Wolfington-road, West Norwood, London, S.E., on Dec. 28, Mrs. George Rettie, sen., mother of a member of the staff of The Christian, in her eighty-third year.

Notices

Mr. Geo. Brereton, Portarlington, Ireland, asks readers of The Christian to send him copies which they may not require for December 7, with portrait, etc., of Major-General Howard, U.S. Army, to be placed in parts of America where they may be useful.

Applicants for Tracts.—Sergt.-Major Davies, Soldiers and Sailors' Home, Edinburgh; Henry Hall, Marden Cottage, Walpole-crescent, Teddington; J. G. Clark, Hardingstone, Northampton; H. E. Nihell, 39, Spenser-road, Herne Hill, S.E.; John Onions, 65, Dudley-road, Tipton; M. Bailey, 24, Newland-street, Tate-road, Silvertown, E.; G. Coates, 83, High-street, Newport Pagnell; Miss F. Courney, 11, Chapel-row, Haslar, Gosport.

Communications Received with Thanks.—J.P. E.N.T. J.A.V. R.B.R. M.F.C. B.G. D.C. W.D. F.J.H. F.L. A.S.D. C.Z. H.S.M. H.F.S. H.W.F. W.R.H. R.P.M. T.J.I. W.H.S. E.S. J.A.K. J.H.A. H.E.K. M.W.J. F.F. J.F.F. J.B.B. J.H. F.P.T. A.M.C. G.B.M. A.R.S. G.S.W. T.B.P. M.H. R.A. S. W.J.M. D.L. T.F. L.G.S.P. J.B. A.S.R. W.T.F. R.J. T.S. J.F. A.W. W.S. T.F. R.G. R.D. E.M.B. W.M. R.B. W.J. N.R.H. W.N. A.G.N. G.B. W.D. A.E.C. R.B. C.M. W.M. J.F.M. H.S. W.N. C.H. S.G.H. E.E.P. H.P. L.B. C.H.J. M.B.G. A.A.A. J.G. E.F.F. T.W.P. A.R.F. M.G. S.S.M. R.H.S. N.C.S. E.P. J.W.A. E.S. G.L.F. T.B.P. J.W.L. M.B.G. W.A. J.K.W. J.E.J. F.B. A.N.M. C.W. G.N.M. G.W.P. J.H. G.W. T.T. R.H.P. G.L.W. M.H. H.M. A.S.D.C. M.R.E. W.T.R. G.I.I. E.E.W. W.J.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

| | |
|---|---|
| For Great Britain and Ireland .. | 6s. 7d. per annum |
| For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. .. .. .. | 8s. 10d. " " |
| For United States and Canada .. | 2¼ dols. " " |
| Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY .. .. | 2½ dols. " " |

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

| | |
|---|---|
| 4 Copies monthly .. .. .. .. | 2s. per annum. |
| 8 " " .. .. .. .. | 4s. " " |
| 12 " " .. .. .. .. | 6s. " " |
| 24 " " .. .. .. .. | 12s. " " |

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

WE purpose next week to give a portrait and sketch of the late Mr. THOMAS BAILEY, of Mussoorie, India.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if those who have not yet remitted will kindly do so at once.

A correspondent takes exception to the strong terms recently quoted in our columns, in which The Bombay Guardian had characterised some of the "official" Indian evidence given before the Opium Commission. We admit that there should be great reserve in describing the evidence of witnesses where the case is still sub judice. We think the paragraph was far too general, and unjustified in its condemnation; we cannot be surprised at the offence it gave, and which we regret. At the same time we cannot but feel that as business men too often regard commercial transactions through purely business spectacles, so Government officials are liable to take a biassed view of matters that affect them officially. We had a glaring instance of this in Lord Roberts' extraordinary contradiction of the facts revealed by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, a statement which he afterwards had the candour to withdraw and apologise for.

This is a rich and thoughtless age, trifling on the edge of doom—a generation out of breath in its eagerness to grasp the bubble of the world—a brow-wrinkled and anxious people, in whom earthly care, no less than deceitful riches, choke the Word, and render it unfruitful.

There are preachers who think more of their sermon than of their hearers; who are more concerned to get their discourse off their memory than into their people's hearts; and there are expositors who think more of the letter than the spirit, more of their interpretation of Scripture than of the effect which the inspiring Spirit intended it to produce.

The Jewish Quarterly Review contains an article by Rev. C. B. Upton on Dr. Fairbairn's "Christ in Modern Theology," which makes us pause and wonder whether we are reading the language of a Jew. He does not believe in our Lord's Divine nature, nor in the miraculous conception, but he says:—"It was clear to the early Church that it was not finite man who rose above all personal self-seeking, and really loved his fellow-creatures with quite infinite affection; that it was no mere finite man who, even when his dearest earthly friends forsook Him, could still say He was not alone, for the Father was with Him."

Mr. Upton, while of opinion that the Trinitarian doctrine has done much mischief, and led to the persecution of some of the noblest spirits in Christendom, thinks it "has done one all-important service, viz., it has constantly kept before the minds of men the vital truth that God was essentially present and active in the mind and heart of Jesus." The admission contained in the following sentence is surely far on the way to Him who is the Truth:—"The profound religious experience portrayed in the Bible, with the life and authentic utterances of Jesus as its culminating expression, . . . is the specific and quite inestimable contribution cast by the genius of the Hebrew race into the world's intellectual and spiritual treasury." If Jesus be the culminating point of Israel's religious life, for what is Israel looking now? But let our Lord be studied, and Israel, like the blind man who first said that He was "a good man," then "a prophet," then "a sinless man," then "the Son of God," will begin to behold the glory of God in his face.

The Daily Telegraph had a vigorous article on "the other and gloomier side of Christmas and New Year's festivities," as they have just received painful and dramatic illustration. It quotes from an East-end missionary, who declares, in its columns, that he has never witnessed in his experience so much drunkenness as has prevailed in London this season. "So far as he could observe, intoxication was in direct relation to acute distress, as though in sober truth men and women had drunk to drown care and earn some momentary oblivion." Cases of drunkenness are referred to, especially one of a woman aged 30, who had used a legacy of £400 in drinking herself to death. These "fruits of the traffic" are only too familiar to all temperance workers, but we are glad to see them brought under general notice. The conclusion of the article is, however, very weak and ineffective. All that the writer can suggest is, that we can confront temptation by better modes of popular amusement! But what is the use of "recreative attractions, which can offer cheerful light, grateful warmth, cheap food, and merry companionship," so long as the public-house stands as a competitor? When men can give all their time to "the trade," and when for doing it, they can realise enormous fortunes, it is idle to talk of outvying them with a few recreation rooms. "Shut the public-house up," is the cure for these Christmas scandals.

Another feature of Christmastide deserves attention before the season is quite gone. Apart from the drink, are we as considerate of tradespeople as we ought to be? One of them complained to us the other day, as he sat at home ill with Christmas exertions and exposure, that for the first half of Christmas week they had nothing to do, but on the Friday and Saturday they were inundated with orders which could not be executed until far into the Sunday. Men, servants, horses—all were tired out. "We lose as much as we gain," said our friend, "and we would rather business went on quietly." Some mitigation of the hardships of tradesmen ought surely to be possible with the exercise of a little forethought and care.

The excellent lecture which Mr. Tallack gave at the London Institute on "Prisons and Criminal Treatment" raised some points which are of great importance. Mr. Tallack is right when he says that at the very least the law ought to undertake the trouble and all the cost of prosecutions by some such arrangement as the appointment in every district of officers like the Scotch Procurator Fiscal. It is, indeed, a national scandal that anyone who may wish to expose any kind of imposition and fraud, should have to do it at his own cost. In England an injured person has to incur much expense and trouble in order to prosecute those who have robbed him, and even when he has secured their imprisonment, he obtains no compensation. If a rich man steals common land the parishioners or someone has to be at the cost of making him relax his hold, yet he is not punished for the theft. Thieves great and small are almost fostered by our present arrangements. Mr. Tallack spoke in high praise of the "separate" as distinguished from the "solitary" system of treating prisoners, and incidentally explained that the present over-lenient method of treating criminals in America is a reaction from former harshness. He said that more visitation of female prisoners by ladies is greatly to be desired.

One of the most surprising articles in the current monthlies appears in The National Review. Its author is Edward Cannan; its title, "The Decline of Urban Immigration." We have heard so much of the depletion of the villages and of the increase of towns that the title is somewhat staggering. Without even indicating the line which Mr. Cannan takes to prove and illustrate his point, we quote one or two of his most pregnant sentences:—"The most important fact is that about which there is no doubt whatever, viz., that the net immigration into the larger towns and thickly-populated manufacturing districts, which was about 700,000 between 1871 and 1881, sunk to about 250,000 between 1881 and 1891. The old days, when it could be seriously supposed that great cities would be unable even to maintain their population without a net immigration, appear to be past so far as England is concerned."

This conclusion, assuming it to be sound, means that the health of our cities has so far improved as to make them nurseries, where more survive than die. So Mr. Cannan says, "it seems highly probable that in the future our great towns will be regarded as the cradle rather than the grave of population. . . . The influx from the country districts is nearly or completely outweighed by the efflux to the rest of the world." His advice, therefore, to town people is to improve the towns, and to bring the children up in health and strength, in such godliness and learning, as that they shall be equal to the rural immigrants. That is not so easily done. Great strides are being made in the promotion of health, of strength, of learning in every form; but we are very sceptical about any great city being able to provide substitutes for the sweet ways of the country, for the influence of country scenes, for the neighbourliness and interest one in another of country people. Maybe the discoveries of science, the application of electricity to travelling, may enable almost all city workers to live in the country. Then cities will be only workshops.

It is impossible to read of the troubles in Sicily without feelings of deep commiseration for the poor overtaxed, overworked, starved peasants. Italy free seems little better than Italy under Austria, the Pope, and Bomba. Was it for this that Mazzini became an exile and a by-word, Garibaldi a captain of desperate men, and hundreds of Italy's noblest sons laid down their lives? They won freedom from outside coercion in one form; it has come back in another. The Austrian sentinel is gone and his tax with him, but instead of him there is an Italian sentinel and his tax. The people are ground to the very dust to uphold a certain standard of military and naval efficiency. Nothing could be more pathetic than the picture given in a daily paper of a scene where the soldiers were making ready to fire on the peasants, who had rebelled against the communal administration and had burned the tax offices:—

At that moment a woman ran up to the lieutenant, and holding out to him a portrait of Queen Margaret, asked him to kiss it; while at the same time the rioters, men and women, suddenly sank on their knees in front of the soldiers, crying out "Kill us; we are already dying of hunger." Then the lieutenant ordered the soldiers to retire.

Next morning from Rome comes news of fresh tumults, and the statement that the King has authorised the calling out of 12,000 reservists of the Peninsula, in addition to the 12,000 already summoned.

The King will surely come to learn that his best defence would be a prosperous, contented, and united people.

The Church Times copies into its columns a letter from a Maori which has appeared in several Colonial Church papers in answer to a question put by the Bishop of Christchurch, "Why is the fire of Christian faith so low among the Maori people in my diocese?" He says that he and his people are confused and bewildered by the way in which Europeans treat their religion, since they do not pray, nor obey the book they call divine. Of course it is the old and sad story of the inconsistency of professing Christians; with one thing added:—

I do not think the Bishop had then seen the following statement, reported in the daily newspapers as having been made at a public meeting by one of the most learned and most eloquent of the clergy: "He could not attempt to prove the existence of God, because he knew no more of Him than did the Pope, or the Bishop of Christchurch, or anyone else in the world."

Can ignorant Maoris be blamed for lukewarmness in the service of God, whose existence one of his ordained ministers tells them no man in Christendom can prove? I sometimes think, Sir, that my children would have had a better chance of developing into honourable men and women, and would have had a better prospect of happiness when the time comes for them to enter the unseen world and meet their Maker, if, like the first Maori king (Potatu), I refused to make an open profession of your European religion till, as he said, "You had settled among yourselves what your religion really is." Better, I think, the real belief in the unseen spiritual world which sustained my forefathers than the make-believe which the European people have asked us to substitute for it.

This is the final touch of sadness; the rum and gunpowder of the trader are bad enough, but the unbelief of the preacher is worse.

Rev. R. P. Ashe, of the C.M.S., who has lately returned from Uganda, is of opinion that the attitude of the Mohammedans is very hostile to British rule, and requires prompt attention. The Zanzibari Arabs, the Soudanese Mohammedans, and the Baganda Mohammedans under Juma, are all disaffected, and if they concentrate on Uganda, Mr. Ashe thinks that the very existence of Europeans on the great lakes will be jeopardised. The very success of Europeans in certain other parts of Africa—of Mr. Johnston in Nyassaland, of others on the Congo, and of others again on the Tanganika—are forcing the Mohammedans to a common centre. They are well armed, jealous of other traders (especially any chartered company), angry, and near each other. Mr. Ashe thinks there should be an Imperial Commission, as in Nyassaland, to administer the whole district.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

WEST END MEETINGS.

The West-end gatherings for united prayer, convened, as in past years, by the council of the Evangelical Alliance, are being held daily this week in Portman Rooms, Baker-street. The subject on Monday was:—

Humiliation and Thanksgiving.—Confession of sin and failure in the past, and prayer for consecration to a holier life. Prayer for grace to put away whatever hinders growth in grace, and the progress of Christ's Kingdom in the heart and in the world. Praise and thanksgiving for what God has done for his people in the year; for the gift of his Son; for the blessings of salvation; for the presence and power of his Holy Spirit; and for the fruitful observance of the week of universal prayer.

Mr. Donald Matheson presided, and, after praise, a season was spent in prayer, led by Revs. Marmaduke Washington, James Paterson, and S. Churchill.

Archdeacon Sinclair said there is always a danger of our forgetting that Christianity means not only a creed of form and worship, but an active permeating principle of life. Now, in the chapter noted on the programme for to-day, i.e. Matt. v., our Lord gives us hints on the character and the life He would have us lead. Do we, looking into our own heart, find ourselves "poor in spirit," mourning by reason of sin, meek in bearing injury, or hungering or thirsting after righteousness? Are we merciful, and pure in heart? Are we known as peacemakers, and as those who speak the truth simply, fully, and directly, without reserve or exaggeration? Further, do we fulfil our Lord's word in the way we meet evil; that is, by non-resistance, by submission, and not resistance? And do we carry out his principle as to secrecy in almsgiving? Our Master lays great emphasis on this point, but alas! how differently do we act to-day! Many cannot be persuaded to give at all, unless where a subscribers' list is published.

After dealing in a similar way with the other exhortations of the chapter, the speaker concluded by recalling the testimony of the bigoted Mohammedan, who, telling of General Gordon's last days at Khartoum, added: "If all Christians were like Gordon, the whole world must soon become Christian."

On Tuesday the subject assigned was:—

The Church Universal.—Prayer for the whole Church of Christ, that the power of the Holy Ghost may rest upon it; that the unity of believers in Christ may be more fully apprehended; that all who call themselves Christians may be truly converted; that all Christ's true disciples may be faithful witnesses for Him by their love, zeal, and holiness of life; and that the growth of error and superstition may be arrested.

Gen. Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, called earnest attention to the present state of the Church, more especially with regard to the laxity and uncertainty of views so characteristic of the teaching of the present day. Thus the Church is being robbed of her vitality and power. What can be done? The only remedy is the simple Gospel of Christ, faithfully preached in the power of the Holy Ghost.

Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D., said that while we are praying to-day for the Church it is well to seek to understand what the Church is. To take but one aspect of a vast subject, let us remember what the Apostle Peter wrote, "Ye are a royal priesthood." Under the old covenant there was a priestly office filled by Aaron and his sons, but all Israel was a kingdom of priests. So the apostle urges that the whole Church of Christ forms a kingdom of priests. The very apostle whose name has been most unwarrantably used as establishing priestly claims is most emphatic in his statement of the priestly character of all believers, who exercise, in union with Christ, the three-fold functions associated with priesthood—that is: sacrifice, yielding ourselves to God; intercession, our peculiar priestly privilege; and benediction, the extension of blessing to others around us. This is the royal aspect of priesthood; for a prince in the true sense, is one who dispenses good in the widest possible way; God's ideal of such a prince appears in Psa. lxxii. Now one of the most hopeful things of the present time lies in the fact that the Church is awaking to the princely character of her privileges. The day has gone when people are content to be blessed themselves, and let the matter rest there. Now they understand that, being blessed, they are to bless. God shall bless us, and all people shall know thy way. We are saved that we may show forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into light. Ye shall be a peculiar people—a treasure of possession to Me in the midst of the earth. The truth is, we must have more of the altruistic idea in our conception of the privileges of our priesthood. We are priests that we may bless men around us. We are to show our devotion to Christ by showing it to men in need all around us. And this applies both to prayer—praying for others; and good works—doing good to all men, specially to those who are of the household of faith. We need a new era of devotion; a new era of unselfish intercession, and then we should have a new era of power from on high. When in all our churches we realise the royal priesthood, we shall not be able to keep apart, heart will glow to heart, and we shall be filled with new power for service and testimony.

ALDERSGATE-STREET NOON MEETING.

The speaker on Monday at the Aldersgate-street Meeting was the Rev. Henry Sharpe, of Hampstead, who based some stirring words on 2 Chron. xxix. 36. The chapter, as he said, has been called a historical parable, showing the power of sin, and the power of vital religion. The action of Hezekiah showed the power of a godly man, and he a young man. His reformation was wrought suddenly, all was changed in sixteen days! First the chapter illustrates the power of sin, then the power of holiness, and finally the power of united prayer and praise. The offerings of the people were at length so numerous that there were not sufficient priests to attend to them. So when men live consecrated lives there will be no lack of funds; the only people who will be in difficulty will be the treasurers of the churches.

TRUST IN GOD.

What fills the soul with perfect peace?
What breathes a tranquil joy?
What makes doubt's weary troublings cease?
The tongue with praise employ?
What gives us grace to follow on
In paths the saints have trod?
Nought but the love of Christ the Son,
With steadfast trust in God.

What lightens up the darkest heart,
As with the sun's bright beam?
And life and love within upstart,
Lit by the dawning gleam?
What gives us grace to follow on;
The heavenward path to plod?
Nought but the love of Christ the Son,
With earnest trust in God.

O troubled soul! would you have balm,
Your sin's deep wounds to cure?
In Christ there is a heavenly calm,
And healing ever sure.
Then pray for grace to follow on
The path that He has trod.
Pray for deep love to Christ the Son,
And perfect trust in God.

Elgin, N.B. (Rev.) E. E. Williamson.

UNITED KINGDOM BAND OF HOPE UNION.—Under the auspices of the committee of this Union, a New Year's gathering of Band of Hope workers took place at Exeter (Lower) Hall on Saturday evening. Mr. George Williams, who presided, spoke of the difficulties and joys of temperance work, observing that those engaged in it had the satisfaction of knowing, not only that the Church was on their side, but that the Government would certainly do all it could to help them. Canon Barker prophesied that 1894 would be an eventful year in the temperance movement, "but," he added, "success will depend on our untiring efforts during many years to come, whatever legislation may do for us." Addresses followed by Rev. W. J. Woods, Mr. C. Wakely, and others.

A Serious Question.

THERE are many valuable labourers in the Lord's service who are unable to support themselves, and who are truly worthy of their hire: whom also, according to Apostolic teaching, we are bound to provide for. It grieves me very much to find that, when missions curtail their expenditure, the retrenchment means the removal of this class of workers, and either the closing of the branches of work in which they are engaged, or the substitution of those who can pay for their living. One can't help feeling for the many who are thus, without any fault of their own, driven into the ranks of the unemployed. Many of them who have served with love, and zeal, and efficiency, would, if they had engaged in secular business, have realised a subsistence for old age. Volunteer labourers, who have property, are usually persons who organise societies, and are, in fact, the employers of the time and talents of these others. Such employers rarely can do more than live on their incomes, and when they are deprived of their fellow-workers, because friends fail, and the retirement of paid assistants is compulsory, the whole establishment is endangered, and the Lord's cause injured.

What is to be done? The new year that has opened upon us must be met with considerable reduction of the mission staffs. Many trustworthy Christians are now telling us that they can only contribute half their usual donations to our funds, in consequence of loss of property. They write in terms of earnest sorrow, and loving sympathy, that this difficulty is come upon us. So tender and sweet are the letters we receive, that we enjoy them, as the fruit of the Spirit, and as signs of the unity of heart in the service of our Master of all his people. Blessed be scarcity! while it produces such evidence of the grace of God!

While it warns us against enlarging our borders, it encourages us to hope that we may retain the workers for the present duties, and trust for their bread as well as for the other expenses of the organisation.

But something may be done by forming a Workers' Union for the benefit of persons who have no incomes, and who are called to labour in the Lord's vineyard, and could get an engagement if only they had some small means of support. If a fund to subsidise such people were formed and put in trust, it might be paid to the society giving the employment, so long as there was an engagement between the parties. This system applies chiefly to women.

And now it is desirable to publish that a large number of young women apply to associations for mission work, who have luxurious homes, where they have everything given them by parents, but who will discontinue all provision of money if they join a mission, and contend that the services rendered by their daughters are value for their board and lodging, never considering that what they do is not matter of pecuniary advantage to the society. The most painful act one has to perform is to refuse those ladies, on account of this circumstance. Parents who would give a marriage dowry, refuse the little sum of even a few shillings a week to their daughters who entreat to be permitted to work in a mission. We are referring to parents who profess to be themselves Christians, and to households where daughters are pining for employment, and leading idle lives, which might be made happy and useful if a fair share of money were granted to them.

The ventilation of this subject would do good just now. Large numbers of veteran labourers are failing in health, and needing help which could be rendered by the vast multitude of educated, capable, willing, young ladies, now detained in homes where they are suffering in mind and body for want of an outlet for their powers, and whence they would be permitted to go anywhere without money. May we not pray for their deliverance from bondage which offends God, and hurts man? The matter is now a serious grievance, and a direct disgrace to the Church of Christ that this should be so.

Cases come before me every day in which most competent, true labourers are kept back from the field for the want of money, who have parents and friends able to give it to them, and willing to let them go. I dare not encourage these young people to come to our work and relieve their relatives of their support, for I do not see their claim on the funds that I have to administer. If we have to maintain any, it must be those who are absolutely destitute of means. S. M.

The Three Jewish Festivals

CONSIDERED IN CONNECTION WITH THE GREAT EVANGELICAL FACTS CORRESPONDING THERETO.

BY REV. G. LIVINGSTONE FENTON.

I.—THE PASSOVER.

I DO not pretend to throw any fresh light upon a subject so familiar, but I hope that a brief connected review of the Three Great Jewish National Feasts, considered in their bearing upon ourselves, will not be altogether unprofitable.

The vast importance attached by Jehovah Himself to these three great gatherings of the tribes at the central place of worship is shown by the strict injunctions given in Ex. xxiii. 14-17. These directions are repeated, with more or less of detail, in Ex. xxxiv., Lev. xxiii., Deut. xvi. Certain Psalms, we are told, were composed with the express purpose of being sung by the Israelites as they went up from the remote parts of Palestine to Jerusalem. The 84th is one of these "Psalms of Degrees," and is in itself a whole "Pilgrim's Progress" from the "Wicket-gate" to the "Celestial City." "They go from strength to strength"—from one rocky eminence to another—from one station to another, or (so the word chayil is variously rendered) from one company, one pilgrim-troop to another, without weariness, while the sacred storm of song rises up from the whole band, every step bringing them nearer, till at last they "appear before God in Zion," the city of their destination and their love.

I. The first and greatest of these national festivals was THE PASSOVER—the birthday of the nation—the day of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, when the Angel of Death "passed over" their dwellings, which had been sprinkled with the blood of a lamb. I need not recall the first institution of the feast recorded in Ex. xii. We at least do not doubt that that ordinance was typical, nor question of what it was the type. It will be sufficient to cite the comment of St. Paul (1 Cor. v. 7, 8): "Christ our Passover was sacrificed for us, therefore let us keep festival; not with the old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." For Israel in Egypt, for the Christian in the world, the one door of escape is the sprinkled blood—the "blood of the Lamb." Above all things is it necessary, in this our day, to "purge out the old leaven," the leaven of human tradition, the leaven of intellectual vanity, the leaven of moral corruption, from ourselves and from our people, and to adore and love and serve "the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth."

We are reminded how, on one of these pilgrimages to Zion of which I have been speaking, Mary brought her Divine Son with her to the sacred feast of the Passover. Scarcely would He need to ask the usual question put by the children, "What mean ye by this service?" He "needed not that any man should tell Him." Never may we press the kenosis so far as to militate against the Messianic consciousness of Jesus. That that consciousness came to Him at his baptism is asserted by Theologians,* but without proof. That He possessed it already seems to me implied in his own words on this very occasion, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" He who in after days led the Paschal Hymn with the eleven would doubtless take part in the Pilgrim's Song as one who knew Himself to be "the very Paschal Lamb which was offered for us, and hath taken away the sins of the world."†

So far I may seem only to have been writing of the "common salvation," but already occasion requires us to "contend earnestly" for that which is of the very essence of our Passover-faith—I mean the doctrine of Substitution. Surely the lamb was substituted for the firstborn, just as the ram was substituted for Isaac on Mount Moriah. But in many popular books dealing with the Atonement (as in the "Hulsean Lectures" of Rev. J. J. Lias, and "Six Sermons," by Rev. A. Hennell Simms), the substitution of Christ for sinners is either carefully eliminated or expressly denied.

Permit me to commend to the study of any who may not have seen it, a very able and learned pamphlet, entitled "Pœna Vicaria," by Dr. Saumarez Smith, now Bishop of Sydney.‡

I close this part of my subject with two quotations. Richard Hooker says, "Let it be counted folly, or phren zy, or fury, it is our comfort and our wisdom. We care for no knowledge in the world but this: that man hath sinned and that God hath suffered; that God hath made Himself the sin of man, and that man is made the righteousness of God." And Robert Hall, speaking of the same truth, exclaims: "It were better that our tongues should cleave to the roof of our mouths than that we should endeavour to suppress it, or to substitute anything in its stead."

(To be continued.)

THE IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—The committee propose the observance of January 16 as the anniversary of the earliest effort of Mr. Dallas to reach the Irish Roman Catholics. The Committee invite all who take a prayerful interest in the society's great work to meet them on this anniversary. Special arrangements have been made as follows: Tuesday, January 16, 2.30 p.m., central prayer meeting; 4 30 p.m., conference of local secretaries and other workers (open to all friends). The meetings will be held at the Christian Police Institute, No. 1A, Adelphi-terrace, Adam-street, Strand, W.C. The Committee urge the vital necessity for united intercession. They are deeply impressed with the conviction that Ireland is in a marvellous degree open at the present time to wise and faithful effort to preach the glorious gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. In this conviction they have adopted a scheme for wide extension of the society's operations, and they look to the gathering on January 16 as a time of dedication of all their plans to God, and supplication for his rich blessing, and of much-needed conference as to the advocacy of the work in England.

* Fairbairn's "Christ in Modern Theology," pp. 369, 354.
† Proper Preface, Holy Communion, Easter.
‡ Published by Plum, Birkenhead.

THE JEWS AND PALESTINE.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS BY REV. S. SCHOR

(A Native of Jerusalem).

Let us read a few verses from Jeremiah xviii.: "The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord saying, Arise and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words," &c. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh, the Bridegroom is coming. Are we prepared to meet Him? I ask your attention to the restoration of the Jews to their homeland, and will tell you something of what I have seen and heard in the Holy Land itself, in connection with the dispersion of the Jews all over the world. What do they feel and think of the restoration? Is the land prepared for the people? and are the people prepared for the land? The few verses I have read will help us to understand the position to-day. The people are in God's hands, just as the clay is in the hands of the potter. From a human point of view, until perhaps the last two or three years, nothing seemed more impossible than the restoration of the Jews. What seemed more impossible than that Abraham should have seed to possess the promised land? But God made the way clear. What seemed more impossible than that the Israelites should leave Egypt and settle in the promised land? Pharaoh did his best to stop them, and, from a human and political point of view, Moses went the wrong way to work when he tried to interfere with the plan of Pharaoh and his great advisers. If there had been newspapers in those days, we should have had a leading article to this effect: "That stupid man Moses has done the very thing which will prevent the children of Israel leaving Egypt! There seemed some chance before, but now that has gone. The Israelites will never leave Egypt now. Why did he not leave things alone?" But what seemed impossible suddenly became possible: the children of Israel left Egypt.

I am constantly asked, "What do you think of the land? Can it be cultivated? Is it under cultivation now? Could all the people settle in the Holy Land? Is the land fertile?" Some say the land is fertile, as fertile as a garden; others say it is a dreary, howling wilderness. What are we to believe? To a certain extent, both statements are true. The land is certainly fertile, and it is also a depressing and howling wilderness. It is most trying to those who visit the Holy Land, not in the best season—the spring—to have during the dry season of summer and autumn to travel for many miles without seeing a single tree or even a single shrub or blade of grass. The land is under a curse. It is trodden under foot of the Gentiles. I think Gibbon—the great historian, who was a sceptic—in his great work, "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," exults over this. He refers to the fact that this was the land which Moses said flowed with milk and honey, and then he goes on to give a rough description of it—nothing will grow; there are simply rocks in the fields, no signs of vegetation. Even Dean Milman, a very great authority and historian, seemed to overlook the fact that he ought to glory because the prophecies had been fulfilled in the utter destruction of the land. Dean Milman, in order to disprove this statement of Gibbon, travelled over the world to get some authorities to prove that the land is fertile. He need not have done so. The fact that the land is under a curse proves the fulfilment of God's prophecies.

Within the last ten years a wonderful change has taken place in the land. I remember the time when it was unsafe for anyone to go outside the city walls of Jerusalem after dark, and if any were out, they had to hasten back as soon as the sun set, for at that time all the gates were closed and not reopened until sunrise. What has taken place during these last few years? The Jews have been returning in thousands to their native land. They are settling, not only in Jerusalem, but also outside the city walls. There was not room enough inside the city for all the houses needed. I remember the time, when I was a boy, when there were not more than two or three houses outside the wall. To-day there are quite as many houses without it as within. Jerusalem has grown by leaps and bounds. To-day you find large districts—houses, shops, synagogues, etc.—outside the wall, where ten or twelve years ago there was nothing but fields.

I remember the first time when the gates were left open night and day. To-day they are all left open at all times. I always think of that wonderful passage in Zechariah, "Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein." This is already partially fulfilled. There are 43,000 Jews in Jerusalem alone. When I left home, ten years ago, I do not think there were more than 10,000 or 12,000 Jews in the city. The population has also enormously increased in the country itself. I believe there are now over 100,000 Jews in Palestine. Ten or twelve years ago there were supposed to be only 30,000. You see how the Jews have been restored within the last few years. Do you not think we are right when we say that the restoration has already commenced? Many people shake their heads, and call me a mad enthusiast. They say, "You want it to be so, and therefore you imagine it is so."

I would call your attention to the second chapter of Ezra, where the restoration of the Jews from Babylon is referred to. How many returned at that first restoration? In v. 64 it says, "The whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and three score." In addition to these there were the servants and singing men, the women and priests and Levites, etc. All told, about 48,000 were restored from Babylon at that time. In our own day, more than 70,000 have returned within a few years.

Not only has the land been in a very unfertile and uninviting condition, but the Turks did all they could to stop immigration into Palestine. They made it almost impossible for the Jews to return. They are very jealous of the Jews. They believe that when the Jews go back in large numbers, they themselves will have to leave the country. I remember, only four or five years ago, when the Jews came to Palestine, they had to smuggle themselves in. They had to bribe the officials to allow them to enter. Many a time the emigrants have arrived at Jaffa, and because of the presence of a pasha, the local officials dare not take the bribe, so the poor people were kept tossing on the rough and stormy waters, within sight of land, and yet refused entrance. Such scenes as these were most heart-rending. But the objections of Turkish authorities have been removed within the last few years. Why they were removed we do not know, but in all these things we see the hand of God. The Jews were not only allowed to return to Jerusalem, but, what is most remarkable, they were allowed to buy land and settle upon it, and do anything they pleased. Thus, another stumbling-block to their restoration has been removed by God's power.

There is a third point, another impossibility from a human point of view. The Jews are not accustomed to till the soil. They have not been allowed to possess a single inch of land for the last eighteen hundred years. People frequently ask me if the Jews can now become farmers. I could best answer that question by taking you over the twenty or twenty-five colonies which exist in Palestine alone. You would be simply astonished at the wonderful sights you would see. There are now towns, villages, hamlets, farmhouses, etc., which had no existence ten years ago, owned and worked entirely by Jews, and most of them by Jews who were not accustomed to the land, and who were simply small traders, or shopkeepers, or tailors in Russia and other places from whence they came.

Most of these colonies are wonderfully prosperous. The Jews are putting thousands and tens of thousands of acres under cultivation. Many broad miles of land that were lying fallow have been planted with the vine, fig, almond, pomegranate, mulberry, and other trees. The Jews believe they will be able to do a great deal in the cultivation of silk, and they are planting mulberry trees in all directions. A friend of mine who visited these colonies was simply astonished at what he saw there. He rode through long districts with houses on both sides. He saw their houses, synagogues, schools, hospitals. The country all round was looking like a beautiful garden. The lovely fields were covered with waving corn, and the vineyards were in a wonderful state of perfection. When you remember that this was only ten years ago a howling wilderness, you will see what a transformation has been wrought, and you will also see what will take place in God's own time. The Jews may not be good farmers now, but they will soon become so. I do believe in the genius of my own people.

I am often asked, "What about the ten or twelve million Jews? Will they return, and can they settle in the Holy Land?" In connection with this subject is a point we often forget. We look upon the Promised Land as the land having its borders in the north at Dan, and in the south at Beersheba. We make a great mistake when we limit the land to these narrow regions. The land which was promised by God to Abraham stretches north-east to the Euphrates and on the south-west to the borders of Egypt. It is as large as ten Palestines, if not larger, so that when the Jews return there will be room for them and to spare. Therefore, that difficulty vanishes.

The Jews, all over the world, are becoming immensely rich. It is true there are many poor Jews, but there are also many rich ones. They are spoiling the Egyptians, the Russians; they are accumulating wealth in Germany, Austria, England, America, and in almost every part of the world. I must confess that I am not sorry they are, for this reason:—I solemnly believe the Jews are going to be the great missionaries of the world. When they do become so, all this vast accumulated treasure will flow into the coffers of God. Look how the Lord's work languishes in our own day simply for want of funds and men to go forth. So that when the Jews are spoiling the Egyptians it is a grand thought that God's work will not suffer.

Look at it from another point of view. History repeats itself in such wonderful ways. The Jews spoiled the Egyptians when they left Egypt. I once heard a sceptical lecturer, in one of the London parks, say that the Lord was teaching the Jews to swindle; but I stopped him, and said, "You call yourself a Socialist, but you are making a great mistake. You ought to take that as a proof that God is looking after his people." The Bible is the grandest book for Socialists. The Jews served the Egyptians without receiving a single day's wages. And what did God do? He said, "You are going out of Egypt, but you are not going empty-handed. The Egyptians must pay you for the work you have done." God simply made the Egyptians pay wages for the generations of hard labour. For countless centuries Christians robbed the Jews. God is practically using the same language as of old. "You shall not go back empty-handed; you shall spoil your spoilers; you shall go back with plenty of wealth. When you go back you are to become a nation of missionaries, and you will want this money for my work just as the money was wanted when the Israelites left Egypt."

What did they do with the wealth they took from Egypt? When Moses appealed for funds for the building of the Tabernacle and for the various vessels which were needed for God's service they brought money in such vast abundance that Moses had to tell them not to bring any more. I should like to know the society that uses these words to their supporters to-day. The money which the Jews will take back to Palestine will not be used on themselves but for the glory of God.

Compare the manner in which they will spend this wealth to the way in which it is now spent in this Christian country. How much does Christian England throw away on self? Remember that England is the most Christian country in the world. If this is so, what are the other countries like? You spent last year £130,000,000 on drink, £16,000,000 on tobacco, something like £80,000,000 on other luxuries, such as jewellery and other things—£80,000,000 thrown away. So you see that nearly £230,000,000 was spent in this most Christian country in nonsense and rubbish. How much did you spend last year on foreign missions? £1,000,000. Let the Jews accumulate wealth. I see a grand time approaching when they will become believers, and when they will reverse these figures, and when they will spend and be spent in the Master's service. No longer will the Lord's work languish. You will have a nation of missionaries spending their wealth on evangelising the world. Shall we not pray earnestly for the time when all Israel shall be saved?

---

A WITNESS FOR CHRIST.—The visit of Dr. J. G. Paton, of the New Hebrides Mission, to this country, cannot but be of unspeakable benefit to the cause of Christianity. At a time when there is such an outburst of Agnosticism and Theosophy and Atheism, it is a matter of great importance that we should have at the lips of a competent and unimpeachable witness full evidence of the power and success of the Gospel among the heathen in civilising and elevating cannibals; in putting down slavery and polygamy, and murder and robbery; in turning the desert into a fruitful field. He is a blind man who cannot see in these changes the mighty power of a present God and a merciful Redeemer.—Christian Irishman.

LOVE'S MINISTRIES.

I SHOULD like to tell you how it was that my friend, Millicent Grey, was led to devote her life to the ministry of love which she fulfils in the name of Jesus Christ.

She was sitting one day, sorrowfully brooding over her fresh bereavement, the death of her only child of four, seven months after the death of her beloved husband. A friend had written her a comforting letter, headed with these words:—

Thy love
Shall chant itself its own beatitudes,
After its own life working. A child kiss,
Set on thy sighing lips, shall make thee glad;
A poor man, served by thee, shall make thee rich;
A sick man, helped by thee, shall make thee strong;
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou renderest.

Millicent suddenly clasped her hands in thankfulness:—"I thank Thee, O Father, that Thou hast heard my prayer, and that with the desire Thou hast given to serve Thee, Thou wilt send the work—the little child, the poor and the sick—that I may serve Thee in serving them, and myself be served and comforted."

She was ashamed that her own great grief should have absorbed her for two whole weeks, when, perhaps, a little child might be needing her; some lonely little one who knew but buffeting and pain; some loveless little life fast ebbing for want of the love and care, the tenderness and patience she had been so happy in lavishing on her own little one, who needed them now no longer, for he was with the Good Shepherd eternally.

With these thoughts stirring in her breast, she dressed for the street, and was soon standing in the anteroom of her own family doctor. He was glad to see her, and after a few words of kindly sympathy, he awaited the object of her visit.

"I am fortunate in finding you at home," said Millicent. "I take it as a good omen, for I need your help in finding something to do among the sick, the helpless, the suffering." Dr. McAndrew looked surprised. The rich and influential Mrs. Norman Grey looking for work? He did not understand.

"My dear Mrs. Grey," he said, "speaking plainly, I fear I do not altogether grasp your meaning. Will you tell me?" Then Millicent explained that she felt her Master had work for her to do, and if Dr. McAndrew had among his poorer patients any who needed to be ministered to in love, she should be so glad to know and to serve them.

"Thank you," said the doctor, relieved. "But why do you think it is only the poor who need such a minister? Some of my rich patients would soon be well if they could be loved back to health. I have a case now, where my patient, surrounded by every luxury, is dying for want of a mother's love, a friend's sympathy, and tender care."

"I will see your patient, if I may," replied Millicent; "but the luxury by which you say she is surrounded is one of the hindrances. I feel my Lord calls or points me to those who have neither luxury nor love. And it would be far more difficult for me to reach your rich patient's heart, than to gain a speedy entrance into that of some poor child, or weary working woman, where one kiss of sympathy would break down all barriers."

"Have your way, then," said Dr. McAndrew, who saw that the prospect of work was doing Millicent good. "I can give you two names at once," and he proceeded to do so.

That evening Millicent Grey found herself seated by the bedside of a lonely and helpless woman. Three years before, on her wedding-day, she had lost her husband. They had gone to Richmond to spend the day after the marriage, and young George Rayner, seeing a carriage and two horses tearing along at breakneck speed, while the terrified lady occupants of the carriage pressed their faces to the glass in horror, thought only of saving life; so, stepping in front of the frantic horses (whom their driver in vain tried to check), he tried to stop them. But he was under their feet instantly, and was killed on the spot. When she could, his widow found work as a surgical-bandage maker. But she was often out of work, and her health being indifferent, she was sometimes very near starvation.

"The doctor tells me, ma'am, that this stroke is the result of the shock of three years ago, and want of proper food and clothing," said the poor patient.

"Yes, but Dr. McAndrew tells me," said Milly, "that care and comfort may enable you to regain the use of your side; so we are going to do our very best God helping us, to bring that to pass."

Tears were in the invalid's eyes; she was grateful and happy.

"I am sure God will do anything for an angel like you," she said.

"My heavenly Father will do as much for you as for me," was Milly's reply. "I found that when I leaned with all my weight of sorrow and need upon Him, He drew me closer to Himself, and gave me of his own strength—the strength made perfect in weakness."

Emma Rayner listened; there was comfort in the tones of the voice, but she was a stranger to the meaning of the words.

"Ma'am," she said, in a tone of regret, "I do not know God as you do. He could do nothing for me, for I have often denied Him."

"You will do so no more," said her new friend; "He waits to be very gracious to you. He loves you, and He sent me to tell you so."

"Oh, all that you say breaks my heart, ma'am! I have often said there could be no God, else He would not leave me poor and alone to meet all my troubles and to die," sobbed the poor invalid.

Milly soothed her, and reminded her of the poverty and loneliness of Jesus, the Son of God, who went about doing good.

The two women were drawn together by a common bond of sympathy. They were both alone, as far as earthly relations were concerned. As yet they had not the bond of Christian union between them, but Millicent was sure this would come.

"Before we rest for the night," said she, "I will read a few words to you that were spoken by my Lord to all weary-hearted ones, and then we will together ask Him for sleep and safety."

She surprised her patient beyond words when she stated her intention of staying the night—the sufferer had suffered alone.

"Why, I mean to stay with you till you are well in both body and soul, my friend," was Mrs. Grey's decision. "You are in my care." After reading just two verses—Matt. xi. 28, 29—she knelt and commended her sick friend to our Father's tender care, and, saying not another word, pressed her lips to the invalid's forehead and slept.

Three days after this, Doctor McAndrew found his patient able to raise herself in bed, "able to do anything but despair," he said, when he saw the happy face. "And it is doing you good, too," he said, looking at Milly. "Work is the panacea for most ills." Milly assented, adding, "When we have God's peace in the heart."

Four months from this time Emma Rayner was installed in the home of Millicent Grey as her personal helper in her quickly-growing work. Both their hands were full—their hearts fuller. Emma, whole in body and soul, praising God for spiritual and bodily salvation, was only happy when she was ministering to the needs and lightening the burdens of Dr. McAndrew's poor patients.

"I will send Mrs. Rayner to you," was his watchword of hope; or, "Perhaps Mrs. Grey is coming to see you," would be whispered to some peevish child, who would then turn patient, waiting with joy for the advent of the loving face and the gentle hands.

One day a wretchedly poor little child was crushed out of all shape by being run over in the Bow-road. Her screams and cries were so heart-rending that the stoutest-hearted nurses felt they could do nothing with her. It was Dr. McAndrew's day at the hospital. He bethought him of Millicent Grey, and proposed her trying to soothe the child in some way. "I don't know how she will do it, for the child must not be touched, but she will find out a way." The nurses knew her, knew her power, and marvelled at it. When she knelt by the poor little sufferer, she just gazed with all her heart's best love into the wild eyes of the child. "Darling!" she whispered, "how I wish I could bear that pain for you!" The child paused in her screaming. "How Jesus longs to bear it for you, and to give you sweet sleep and rest."

"Oh, why don't He, then? Why don't He take it away?" the poor little thing managed to say. Her legs and four ribs were broken, and her only hope of recovery lay in the anodyne—sleep. All this time Milly smoothed her forehead, gently passing her hand over the pain-wrung brow, and murmuring, in a soothing monotone, crooning words of love all the time. For four hours the little one slept, and when she awoke she was refreshed, and able to take food and sedatives. For days Milly went and soothed her. "Are you God's sister?" asked little Amy, when, three weeks after her accident, Milly sat telling her stories.

"Why do you ask, darling?" was Milly's answer.

"I think you must be," said the little creature, "for you read me about the Good Shepherd who loves his little lambs, and I thought you were his sister, 'cos you does love little Amy so, doesn't you?"

"I do indeed, my little lamb!"

The nurses told one another this little story, and taught Amy to say "Good morning, good shepherdess," when Milly appeared. But she soon corrected the child on this point, and told her to call her Aunt Milly. The child, when nearly recovered, was taken by Milly and Emma, with nine others, to the sea. Here, upon the shore, they gained health and happiness. The loving, personal service and teaching among these little ones had such blessed results in their lives, that the very memory of them is as a benison on the life of her who loves them.

One dear child lost both parents in a week—he had no friends, and the workhouse or the gutter must have been his end—but Mrs. Grey heard of him, loved him, took him from his wretched surroundings, and is bringing him up as she would have brought up her own son had he lived.

Someone said to her one day, thinking to pose her, "This is all very well for a fad, but how about when you're tired of it?"

"Oh, well," she answered brightly, "when I am tired of it, I will go to Jesus for a rest. You know, I have his promise I shall get it!"

Milly never will pretend to understand ill-natured people. I have told you how she was led to begin her work—I shall sometimes tell you something of that work, for I want all who have known bereavement and sorrow to think of Millicent Grey, left childless and a widow at twenty-six, but who has found her dear ones again in those whom she feels God has sent her from among his poor, his sick, his lonely, and his helpless children. Will you let me ask you if you have tried Milly's cure?

M. B. GERDS.

CASUALS AT GRAY'S YARD.

THE annual New Year's Breakfast to casuals was given at Gray's-yard on Sunday morning in the school buildings, James-street, Oxford-street. The exceptional severity of the weather caused a large increase over last year in the number of applicants. Fully an hour before the time fixed the doors were besieged by a crowd of between 700 and 800 half-starved and wretchedly-clad men and women, hailing from all parts of London. At first it was feared that some would have to be sent hungry away, but happily the provisions held out until all were fed. To the inexperienced eye the great stacks of food looked sufficient for double or three times the number; but starving men have big appetites, and it was astonishing with what celerity they consumed the food. There were many in the gathering who had not tasted food for twenty-four hours: and this while the thermometer was registering 10 deg. of frost.

Inside the building the guests were split up into three parties, the chief gathering being in the large hall of the new building, over which Dr. Robert Anderson presided. The proceedings opened with singing and prayer, and then the distribution was commenced, the work being efficiently performed by a body of voluntary helpers. First of all there was supplied coffee, with bread-and-butter, or jam, ad libitum, followed by a hot meat pie, weighing about ¾lb., for every individual, after which there was more coffee, and each person on leaving was presented with 1lb. of cake. Several short addresses were delivered, and a number of hymns were sung. Among others who took part in the proceedings were Lord Bennet, the Hon. G. Waldegrave, Mr. P. Gough, Mr. Habershon, Mr. E. S. Thorpe, and Mr. A. G. Fraser, the secretary.

The work carried on at Gray's-yard begins on Sunday morning with a school for boys and girls, and goes on until eight o'clock at night. Some five or six meetings are held in the course of the day, and there is a morning and afternoon meal for 500 poor men and women. On Monday morning the work is continued, and is kept on throughout the week. There is a lodging-house for men, in connection with which a very comfortable sitting-room is provided, and for the sum of 4d. the men, besides their bed and the use of this room, are supplied with breakfast and supper.

Snowdrops.

In the grey dawn of the year, when winter's icy grasp has been relaxed for a little season by the earliest breath of spring, and the pale January sun looms large through the damp, mild air, warmed by a wave from the south, there peeps up from the brown soil the delicate little flower that all know and love—the snowdrop.

I am so glad that the Lord of heaven and earth has thought proper to make the flower that earliest greets the returning sun white. I am sure that He means something by it. If it had been left to us, I don't think that we should have done so. Mother says, "Children, your winter frocks must be of some dark material that won't show the dirt." Most men and women keep their white and light-coloured clothes for summer use. But God says, "No; my first new year's flower shall be a white flower." A fragile little thing, too, it seems—hardly fitted to withstand the blustering winds and heavy beating showers of early spring, not to speak of the nipping frosts which so often at this season alternate with milder weather.

But the wise Creator has made no mistake about his little lily, for a snowdrop is one of his family of lilies. White it comes up, no matter what may be the colour of the earth in which it grows, and white it glints in the early sunshine, nodding on its slender stem with every breeze, uninjured by storms or frosts that would uproot an oak or destroy all the bright butterfly denizens of our summer gardens in a night.

Did you ever notice a snowdrop bulb in its dormant condition? It is a little brown unattractive thing. No one could call it beautiful, or hardly interesting. But in that bulb so humble is wrapped up the lovely little flower. How did it get there? Once it lived before—there is hidden life there still. The perfected bulb is a sure evidence, not that it flowered before, perhaps, but that it had an existence which permitted it under certain conditions, with the aid of the sun, rain, and air, to store up in itself, through its foliage and roots, the embryo of a perfected plant. Roots, foliage, flower, and seed are all contained within its brown skin, and are only waiting for suitable circumstances to develop each part complete.

Perhaps you have a garden with snowdrops in it. I hope you have. I dare say, too, in April and May, when our little early friend is forgotten, and you want to plant out your geraniums and heliotropes, and make your beds trim for the summer, you have been rather put out by the long strap-shaped leaves of your crocuses and snowdrops; rather rubbishy they look, and very much in the way; you are sorely tempted to cut them all off. Let me advise you. Don't do this; spare them time and room to turn yellow, and wither naturally, or you stand the chance of getting no snowdrops another year. They are doing their life's work, drinking in through their little mouths from the sunshine, dew, and air, supplies for future use, strength for another day; or, to put it into Scriptural language, "Laying up for themselves a good foundation against the time to come."

Oh, the lovely parables our wise Creator has written for us on every side! How full is the earth of his goodness! and how gently and lovingly He is whispering to us of his ways in every tree and flower that decks our earth. One wiser than the sons of men has said, "Consider the lilies how they grow." How dependent upon God! yet how well supplied with all they need, and how beautiful! "Will He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Ah, yes, heaven and earth—the works and the Word of God alike are full of sweet promises concerning that "time to come"—that sweet springtime which will usher in a glad new year such as earth has never yet seen—a time of "restoration of all things" under the bright beams of "the Sun of Righteousness with healing in his wings."

How sweet to be reminded of that day when we see in our gardens, otherwise bare and desolate, that white-robed army of snowdrops, with their nodding helmets, rising out of the earth at the earliest call of nature—that same earth, which contains hidden in its cold embrace as many myriads of God's precious human flowers, who once, indeed, were nothing but weeds, but whom He created anew in Christ, and made plants of his own planting. Once they had sin-stained garments, but they washed them and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Once they were unlovely and useless, but Jesus, God's first Snowdrop, the first born from the dead, loved them, washed them from their sins in his own blood, and made them kings and priests unto his God and Father (Rev. i. 5, 6). Once they belonged to the kingdom of darkness, but they became children of the day. Once they were cumberers of the ground, but they became ornaments in God's gardens and imitators of Christ.

"Rooted and grounded in Christ," the only suitable soil for God's plants, they drew daily supplies of needed grace from Him, growing up and making increase in knowledge and love. They spread forth their leaves in the atmosphere of God's love, and imbibed from the heaven-sent dews, and the warming rays of the Sun of Righteousness, health and strength for the duties of their little life; in the doing of which they laid up store for the future, according to God's wise providence. But, in the course of nature, the green leaf faded and decayed, the brief life ended, the work was finished. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord—that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them" (Rev. xiv. 13). Sown in weakness and dishonour, earth to earth, dust to dust—who would suppose that from that morsel of corruption, God would bring forth a creature of life and perfect beauty? When shall the winter's night be over, and the earliest dawn of that bright New Year with its Morning Star arise? When shall that sweet promise be fulfilled? "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up all together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord," (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17). This is the first resurrection. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; over these the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years" (Rev. xx. 6).

But all this is but the first act of that great day. For there will be stormy days in those times, as there are in earth's springtime. But the Snowdrop Army will be with their great Leader—the Faithful and True One—whose name is called the Word of God. Out of the opened heavens will they come forth—a mighty army—riding on white horses and clothed in fine linen, pure and white. A company of king-priests under the Great King-Priest, on whose garment and thigh is a name written, King of kings and Lord of lords. Alas for those whom he finds among his enemies—whom he will smite with the sword of his mouth and tread under his mailed feet in the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God! God grant that all of my readers may be found among the Snowdrop Army in that great day!

R. W. Beachey.

REV. THOS. COOK IN BELFAST.

This well-known English evangelist has closed a very successful nine days' mission in Duncairn-gardens' new church, Belfast. He commenced on Saturday night, December 30, when he delivered a powerful address on Acts i. 8, "Ye shall receive," etc., and pointed out that the secret of all useful work of God depended on the Pentecostal blessing. On the last day of the old year he preached to large audiences three times, winding up with the watch-night service, and last Sunday he conducted four services. During the intervening week, in addition to a meeting each night, he addressed meetings on "Holiness" on the afternoons of Tuesday and Thursday, which were largely attended by ministers and members of various denominations, and were most impressive.

Although he has conducted missions in Newry and Dublin, Mr. Cook has never before been in Belfast, with which he has been greatly taken, and of which he says no place he has ever been in has responded in the same way to his appeals.

PORT SAID.—Mr. G. A. Eoll writes from this difficult post of service:—"We have had during the past year the most trying experience in connection with want of means; however, the Lord has helped us. I am waiting for an answer to my application to the Minister of Finance for the purchase of ground for building. We will go on with the foundation, so far as means will allow, trusting that the means will be sent for the completing the building. £380 more will enable us to finish the structure."

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.—I.

The disobedience of the prodigal son grieved the spirit of his father, so that it could not go forth to him as it did before. Pity was evoked; grace and patience were called into exercise; love, indeed, became more tender; but a barrier had been interposed between the father and the son which nothing could remove but confession and repentance on the part of the prodigal. Then the father's spirit was outpoured upon his son.

"Your sins have separated between you and your God." Man in Adam rebelled; man in Christ confessed the sin, and put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. This was far more than repentance. The parable was only the shadow of the true. God's Spirit could not be poured out until sin had been expiated and put away. But when the woman's promised Seed had died, and had been glorified, then the promise was fulfilled: "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty and floods upon the dry ground; I will pour my Spirit on thy seed, and my blessing on thine offspring." "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh."

The keynote of this dispensation was struck at Pentecost, when the promised floods of living water were outpoured. The Spirit had been given because Jesus—the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world—had been glorified. The disciples preached the glad tidings of a risen Christ, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and three thousand souls were added to them on the first day of the new era.

Surely the darkest shadow that has yet fallen on human history, the crowning proof as yet of the poisoning and paralysing effect of sin, has been the discord which has succeeded that first symphony of heaven's music, when Jesus, having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, poured forth that which they then saw and heard.

Meditating on that time of love, I cannot write controversially on the outpouring of the Spirit proceeding from the Father and the Son. I offer what follows for the consideration of my dear brothers, Mr. Gall and Mr. Hubert Brooke, and other readers, from any of whom I shall be thankful to receive correction or instruction.

The Holy Spirit was poured out without measure once for all fifty days after the day of Christ's resurrection. And He will never be poured out again unless Jesus die again, and is raised and glorified again.

His glorifying was not only at the hands of God, but of his Church. God glorified Him when He was received up in glory, forty days after his resurrection. But fifty days elapsed before Pentecost; and this period represented the Church's fulness of rest in the crucified, risen, and glorified Christ. For Pentecost is thus defined:—"Seven Sabbaths shall be complete [from the waving of the sheaf of firstfruits], and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the Lord" (Lev. xxiii. 10-21). Seven is a number of perfection, and Sabbath means rest; and the day beyond the Sabbath foreshadowed the Lord's day—the day of the Lord's resurrection.

"According to your faith be it unto you." The hundred and twenty gathered in the upper room, waiting for the promised Spirit, were the representatives of the Christian Church. They were all with one accord in one place—in the upper room, above the turmoil of the earthly city; of one accord, resting believingly in the risen Lord Jesus who had been crucified. These are still the conditions on which the poured-out Spirit must be received.

"God so loved the world, that He gave his only-begotten Son." Likewise God so loved the body, the Church, that He gave his Holy Spirit, that each of its members may drink into that one Spirit, and so be individually and unitedly filled with the Spirit. For "only with all saints can we comprehend the height and length and depth and breadth of his knowledge-surpassing love."

R. C. M.

(To be continued.)

THE RAILWAY MISSION.—The central offices of the Railway Mission have been removed to 1, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C., where a meeting was held on Monday, January 8th, for prayer on behalf of the work of the Mission at home and abroad during the coming year. Praise was offered for much spiritual blessing among railway men and their families during 1893. Mrs. Tottenham gave an address to workers.

The Person of Our Lord.—1.

BY MR. GEORGE PEARSE.

WHEN we meditate on the blessed Lord our Saviour Jesus Christ, his life on earth, his work, his death, his glory, and his coming again, we are arrested at once with the consciousness that our state of heart is an important element in any right spiritual apprehension of so sublime and glorious an individuality. It is only in communion with God and in nearness to Him that we shall view it in its proper light, and "in his light shall we see light." Christ must not only be revealed to us, but in us. God in his infinite love and wisdom knows how to win our sinful and wandering hearts to Himself. He presents to us his Son, and as a mighty magnet Jesus draws all hearts that have been made susceptive to himself; instinctively they feel that drawing and obey it; for "He was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you (says the Apostle Peter) who by Him do believe in God, that raised Him up from the dead and gave Him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God."

From off the throne of the Eternal Majesty the Word descended and was made flesh; the brightness of the Father's glory came into this lower world; the Light shone forth into the moral darkness which tests the character of every man, for as we regard the Sent One of the Father, so the Father regards us. As the light is welcomed by the Spirit's inshining, so we become children of light, children of God. But He came, too, as the Life, the Eternal Life which was with the Father, to communicate that life to the spiritually dead; and when one conscious of his lost condition fixes his eye in spiritual discernment on that crucified, humbled, suffering Son of Man, it lets in the saving light, which becomes saving eternal life to him who believes.

This blessed One came from heaven as the gift of the God of Love to overwhelm us with that love and fold us in its glad embrace; to cause us to know it as that sweet element in which we now live, and in which we shall spend our long eternity. He came as the Comforter.

From the same throne of glory the Spirit of Life has been sent forth by the Father and the Son to be another Comforter, to reveal the completeness of an accomplished redemption and the Father's satisfaction with it; to reveal the glory of the risen Saviour, and how God is glorified in all his attributes; in the obedience and sufferings of his beloved Son, and to open our eyes and hearts and bring down to our joyful experience the element of that divine and heavenly peace which is made in heaven and which reigns in heaven, and the open door made by the rent veil into the holiest.

The Holy Spirit brings us into this present standing, so that we may live a heavenly life on earth, giving us to be engrossed with the person of our adorable Lord in a life of communion with Him. A beloved servant of Christ, whose ministry is full of Him, says:—

"Some have never known the blessed displacing effect of the knowledge of the Person who turns everything besides out of the heart because he possesses it Himself. You may speak about Christ to some; there is no heart to listen, they can talk of service but not of Himself. The reason is, there is so little blessed simple intimacy with Himself, so little delighting in Him as a person, rather than a doctrine about Him, the living Man on the throne of God in heaven. If Christ has every place in my heart, all else must come in under Him. If you have strayed from Him in your affection, return, come back! He is where you have left Him; his love is the same, and He is interceding for you; He has not forgotten you, He loves you.

"We must speak of Him in the sense of a personal acquaintance with Him. We speak to Him when we know and feel his personal love to us individually. It is possible that we may dwell upon his beauty and loveliness to others, and tell them what He is to us, what a spring of joy to our soul; and will it be believed, even Christians may get weary of it, because they may be more absorbed in service for Him, than about Himself. It is such an intimacy, such a personal nearness that obtains a knowledge of his mind, his wishes, his desires, that is to say an acquaintance with his tastes; which makes us familiar with his good pleasure, and prepares us to carry it out as far as it is known."

But we cannot work ourselves up into a love commensurate with his worth. It is true "we love Him because He first loved us," but that love will grow as we become increasingly acquainted with Him, and that blessed Apostle Paul counted all things worthless when compared with the knowledge of Him, and his highest aspirations were that he might know Him better. The Apostles in the lifetime of our Lord with them had first but an instinctive knowledge, but they loved their Master and clung to Him; and so may it be in our day. There is often a feeble acquaintance, an instinctive drawing to Jesus, but when the full Pentecostal blessing and light are realised the believer leaves his feeble rivulet; he is on the brink of the ocean. "We grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord."

The grace of God brings us salvation through the atoning sacrifice of the Cross, by which we are delivered from wrath and condemnation, and from this present evil world, reconciled to God and brought into harmony with Him, and into a new and heavenly sphere and standing. This is as it bears upon us, but another great part of the Saviour's work was to manifest God, to reveal his name and his heart: that God had come down in love and grace to lost and wretched sinners for salvation to them, and was seen in Jesus; and to put them to the test whether they would avail themselves of this wonderful manifestation of love, and find not only acquittal, but heart-rest in acquaintance with Him who represents God in his moral beauty and holiness and love.

But this stoop of all-embracing love and mercy met with no response from God's own elect nation. He was cast out from their midst, back to that bosom from whence He came; and now we have to do with a man-rejected, but God-glorified Man in heaven, who takes his people into association with Himself in that surpassing glory, and now we contemplate Him. He is the great Object the Spirit sets before us, and as we cherish his words the Father and the Son come to dwell in our hearts and give us to feel their presence.

The record of the precious words of Jesus are left us in the Gospels, and by the gracious gift of the Holy Ghost their full Divine meaning is opened to us, and we are attached more and more to Him who uttered them.

But He was not of this world; He evidently lived in and breathed a heavenly moral atmosphere as that which was his own proper sphere—it was the bosom of God. His was a life of dependence and obedience, referring everything to his Father's will, and doing everything to please Him—announcing the Gospel and the advent of the Kingdom of God. That kingdom was amongst them, for the King was there.

He speaks to men with authority; his word is law. He is never anxious to prove what He says, as men are required to do with us. All was in Divine self-assertion. His whole being, his works, his words, are self-evidencing. He is prompt to meet the words and to answer the thoughts unexpressed of those who stood before Him. His themes are sin and deliverance from its guilt and power, death and life eternal, heaven and hell, meekness, love and purity, the judgment to come and eternity; a withering denunciation of pride, hatred, and impurity, of everything false and insincere; the need of a new nature, and living faith and undoubting prayer.

His feet pressed the earth, but his prayers testify that his heart was in heaven, far above the worldly cares and anxieties of men.

How inexpressible his tenderness to the sorrowing; how much He felt the woes of humanity. He wept at the grave of Lazarus, though He was about to raise him from the dead. "He saved others, Himself He could not save," for "He gave his life a ransom for many."

His soul was a moral paradise; in all the circumstances through which He passed He manifested a perfect submission and obedience to law, whilst He moved in perfect liberty, joyous obedience to God, and mercy to man. There was in Him an inexpressible dignity and majesty, a sublime possession of Himself, and an unchangeable calm. He was never discouraged or irritated. His calm in the storm on the lake betokens the heavenly calm of his soul. There a divine serenity and peace as the atmosphere in which He dwelt.

(To be continued.)

HEAVEN BEGUN BELOW.—To wear in your button-hole that little flower called "heart's ease," and to have the jewel of contentment in your bosom—this is heaven begun below.—Spurgeon.

OUR HOMES IN PARIS.

I HAVE returned from another eight days' visit to our Paris Homes, and am sorry to report that in many quarters the bounds of wholesome criticism have been overstepped, and false reports have been circulated. Being a Christian association, the directors have hitherto shrunk from taking any action against the authors, feeling that God Himself would maintain his own cause, and in due time bring retribution upon all who have sought to injure it by statements which have no foundation in fact, and which are hurtful to those whom He has used in building up and maintaining it.

As to the work itself, I find the need for it to be greater than ever. All the Homes are full, some of them overcrowded, and during the many years I have been going there I have never seen the soup kitchen, mothers' meetings, and men's Bible classes so largely attended. The distress amongst the English poor is appalling. Wealthy families go south at this time, leaving their servants quite unprovided for until their return in the spring. During the whole time of my visit I have been kept fully occupied, and were I to give even a short detailed account of my doings it would take up too much of your valuable space.

I found the ladies in charge of the various institutions and their co-workers plodding on in the midst of great difficulties. They are painfully short-handed, and in great need of funds to maintain the work in all its branches. Ordinary mission work in halls, where people are dealt with for a few hours in a day, although most important, is vastly different from carrying on homes where body and soul have to be cared for night and day. In a frivolous city like Paris, where everything seems to say, "There is no God," such work is exceedingly difficult and delicate. Every phase of life has to be dealt with, from the little friendless orphan to the talented and cultured governess and artist. The religious element is not popular, and it is in seeking to maintain this throughout our Institutions that most of our troubles have arisen. God has, however, abundantly blessed the work, which, through good report and evil report, has gone on for nearly a quarter of a century.

My sister's enforced absence in Canada during the greater part of the year has no doubt seriously affected the finances. Many have felt that now the head is away the work cannot be properly carried on, and have therefore withdrawn their support. This to a certain extent is true, but the fact must not be overlooked that it is better for Mrs. Lewis to withdraw gradually during her lifetime than for her complete severance to take place suddenly at death, for these Homes, which she has been privileged to establish, will continue long after she has gone to her reward. God's work can never be upset.

The directors have recently appointed Madame le Breton Simmons to undertake the arduous duty of collecting the funds which at the present time are so sorely needed, and I take this opportunity of commending her to the prayers and sympathy of all who have the welfare of this important work at heart, that her way may be made plain, and that many may respond to her appeals.

God-sent lady workers are urgently needed who will not fear man, will be prepared to face difficulties, and seek to win souls for Christ. The deadening influences by which they will be surrounded must not move them from their purpose. They must realise their need of being constantly in touch with Jesus, that they are even now seated with him in Heavenly places, and be bathed in the spirit of prayer. Bible-loving Christians are absolutely essential for this sphere.

I have often thought that to carry on real spiritual work in Paris for a lengthened period is far more trying than it would be in heathen lands, but the claims of our own kith and kin in a foreign city, which is close at our doors, call loudly for effort. Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C., will receive help towards this work. THOS. A. LEIGH.

19, James-street, Liverpool, Jan. 3.

WEST BRIGHTON.—The annual tea of the Bible-class, in connection with the West Brighton branch of the Y.W.C.A., took place on New Year's Day. This class has for nearly twenty-one years been under the leadership of Miss A. Meyer, whose faithful labours have been blessed of God to many. Some testimonies to the spiritual help here received were given during the evening. After the tea Rev. J. B. Figgis and other speakers gave addresses.—M. J. G.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 14.—PROV. VII.

The Secret of Safety (1-5).—In anticipation of the temptation described at the end of the chapter, the wise man forewarns and forearms the young soul. It is the word of God alone that can so occupy and keep the inner life as that it shall be impervious to temptation.

Lay it up, not on a shelf as needless, not in the memory by rote, but in the heart of life. The apple of the eye is well guarded by eyebrows, eyelids, and eyelashes; so should we guard our obedience. On the fingers with which we do our work should always be written our obligation to God and man. "Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."

The Subtlety of Temptation (6-27).—Again youth is warned against temptation to impurity. Evidently this was a great evil in Solomon's time, probably caused by the introduction of vast wealth, and the customs of foreign peoples. It is the evil which is preying upon modern society (8). The simple youth intended only to go near the house of shame, like a moth around a candle. He who needlessly enters into temptation is sure to fall before it (9). The blackness of night is black indeed to such. Evil is all the more insidious and difficult to resist when it presents itself beneath the guise of religion (14). "She who has made sacrifices and peace-offerings is more likely to carry her point when she suggests temptation. She does not play the harlot with man till she has played the hypocrite with God and stopped the mouth of her conscience with peace-offerings."—Gurnall.

Man sins for his pleasure, but he goes to his doom (22). It is remarkable that many who have been strongest in war and debate and the conduct of great affairs have been enslaved by that deadly sin against which the Bible warns us so constantly. "Many strong men have been slain by her." You may be a Samson and yet a slave to Delilah (26). The best way of resisting evil is by allowing heart and mind to be pre-occupied with good (24).

MONDAY, JANUARY 15.—PROV. VIII.

Wisdom Personified (1—3).—Throughout this chapter the wisdom of God speaks, not merely as an attribute, but as a person who claims wisdom as one of his attributes (14); who loves and can be loved (17); who existed from Eternity (22—24); who was associated with God in the creation of the world (27—29).

To whom can this description apply, except to the Lord Jesus, Who is the personal embodiment of the wisdom of God, and whose chosen name is The Word.

Men will go out of their way to hear the tempter's voice, but they are so loth to hear that of wisdom that she needs to cry, to stand in the public places, and to persist in her entreaty, in public life (2), in business (3), and in the home (3).

Her Appeal (4—21).—There is a progression in her ministration. Hear (6); Receive (10); Love (17). The wealth of the outward life is but a poor emblem of the unsearchable riches of Christ, and of the munificence which is possible to the soul that deals in the gold, silver, and precious stones of character. The rubies of the mine, and the ambitions of the worldling must perish, whilst holiness, faith, purity, and love will pass through the final conflagration, to constitute the imperishable heritage of eternity. This wisdom involves the possession of prudence, the fear of God, counsel, sound knowledge and understanding, qualities that promote a good and useful life.

The Biography of Wisdom (22-31).—"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God." "All things were made by Him." There is not a star in Heaven, or a fountain of the deep, that is not the result of the Divine thought and power which wrought through Jesus Christ. In R.V., 30, the Son, the Word of God, is compared to a Master Workman, who was related by the closest bonds to the Eternal. "Daily his delight," is synonymous with "In the bosom of the Father." Then in expressive words we learn that his delight was not only in creation or in his Father, but in man. There never was a time when the tide of love in Christ's heart did not set in strongly and truly towards the world of men that was to be (31).

The School of Wisdom (32-36).—Wisdom has opened a school for the education of those who will put themselves under her tuition. Blessed are they who graduate there. They find life, and the favour of God. Learn of Me, says the Master Teacher, and ye shall find rest to your souls. But there must be daily watching, waiting, and seeking in order to find.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 16.—PROV. IX.

Wisdom's banquet (1-5).—What a contrast to the temptress (vii.). An anticipation of Matt. xxii. 1-4. Her house is the church of the living God (Matt xvi. 18; 1 Tim. iii. 15). The seven pillars must refer to the sevenfold grace of the Holy Spirit, and to the work of God's servants, when they are possessed by it. (2) The word killed is sacrificial language. No feast in God's house which is not associated with the sacrifice of Calvary. This was absent in vii. 14. This is the distinction between the religion of the world and of God. That without, this with, and arising from, the propitiation of our Lord. (3) The voice of Jesus speaks through his servants, bidding them to the feast. And maidens as well as men may carry the invitation. (4) How marvellous the grace that offers such provisions to the simple and foolish! (5) That is the true bread, his body; and the true wine his precious blood. (6) But those who would come to that banquet must forsake evil ways and companions.

Some made light of it (6-12).—There is always a division. Some refuse, others accept (Matt. xxii. 5-10). After a certain amount of pleading with men in vain, we must leave them, but we may continue to plead with God on their behalf (9). We always shrink from washing the saints' feet, but if they are really saints, they will thank us (10). All true knowledge is founded on the attitude of the soul towards God. To fear Him with the fear born of love, to know Him who is holy and true! Not knowledge only, but the multiplication of days, the fulness of the measure of life, peace and joy come, as we sit at wisdom's banquet.

The rival invitation (13-18).—The foolish woman competes for the capture of the simple. The same place (3, 14) and words (4, 16) are appropriated. But with what awful differences—the one to save, the other to destroy. But the wages of sin is death—the depths of hell!

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17.—PROV. X.

Here begins the second part of this book, and it continues to the end of chapter xxiv. It is especially addressed to men, and is expressed in a brief, compact, business-like form. Two sentences occur in each verse, illustrating or expanding the common meaning. But there is no evident connection in the thoughts. Each verse stands by itself.

1.—The greatest joy and the heaviest sorrow are connected with children. Joseph and Samuel are illustrations of "wise sons"; Cain and Absalom of "the foolish."

3.—If He do not give thee bread, thou shalt have manna.

4.—Be fervent in trust, and diligent in trade.

6.—All pray for good men, but Haman's fate awaits the wicked (Esth. vii. 8).

8.—A wise man hears and says little, a fool will hear no one speak but himself.

9.—There is no safe travelling except on the highway of holiness (Is. xxxv. 8-10). Leave that way, and you will rue it.

11-14.—Words reveal the heart. Have the living spring within (John vi. 38), and the stream will run pure. Lay up knowledge that you may have something to give out.

15.—This is true to an extent of material, but much more of the deeper kinds of wealth and poverty.

16, 17.—Two clues to the secret of life—Labour and listen.

18-21.—Another sin of the tongue contrasted with the opposite blessings that it forfeits. Babbling indicates a shallow brook (20, 21). Silence is golden. Learn to be silent; or, if you speak, let your words feed men.

22-25.—"Sorrow (i.e., care) adds nothing" (R.V.). (Compare Ps. cxxvii. 2, Matt. vi. 25-34). Deliverance from fear, stability, and success, lie within the compass of the godly life.

26.—Have you been such a servant to your Master, Christ?

27-32.—The parable of the two builders has its counterpart here. Oh for the glad and steadfast heart, which shall never be removed, but shall bring out treasures for needy souls.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18.—PROV. XI.

1. God is in the shop. Take care!

2. Be careful whom you admit to the house of the soul.

3-8. Righteousness—a single desire to know and do God's will, saves a man from the perplexity into which the wicked fall. Not only during life, but at death (7), and in the day of wrath (4), transgressors are the losers; whilst the righteous make the best of both worlds.

9-11.—Not to themselves only, but to the community, the wicked are a curse, so that their death is a cause of rejoicing. The saints are "the salt of the earth."

12,13.—We are members one of another. Let us not injure others by word or deed. God is the best custodian of secrets, and He will reward openly.

15.—Had Jesus not become our surety, He had never smarted on the cross (Matt. xxvii. 42).

17.—The merciful obtain mercy.

18-21.—The wages (R.V.) of the devil are deceitful. He either promises and doesn't pay; or pays with whips of scorpions.

22.—Better discretion without beauty, than beauty without discretion. Be beautiful in God's sight!

24-29.—Dig channels for the fount of love,
Where its blessed streams may run;
And know that love has copious streams
To fill them every one.
For only while we share we keep
That blest thing from above;
Ceasing to give, we cease to have:
Such is the law of love.

30.—Oh! to be bread-trees! It is a wise thing to try to win souls, but it needs the wisdom of God to be perfected in our ignorance before we can succeed (Dan. xii. 3).

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19.—PROV. XII.

1.—"Instruction" is discipline. We can only love it because of its results (Heb. xii. 10, 11).

2.—You must forsake your thoughts as well as your ways.

3.—Nothing can establish the wicked, or uproot the righteous (Col. ii. 7).

4.—Ruth was such (Ruth iii. 11). Such a crown is becoming, and sits easily. She who is a shame to herself is rottenness to her husband.

5, 6.—The outward life depends on the thoughts of the heart. As is the fountain so are the streams (iv. 23). Words reveal the heart.

7.—Chaff and the cedar! Sand and rock!

8.—A man is worth what he is in character.

9.—Better comfort without rank, than rank without comfort.

10.—Righteousness weds with tenderness; wickedness with cruelty.

11.—As we sow, we reap. If we royster through the spring, we starve in the autumn.

12.—The wicked seeketh the protection of the wicked, but the righteous man finds it in his righteousness. It springs from it as a root.

13.—Plead and claim this precious promise.

14.—All words and deeds shall return fraught with blessings or curses.

15, 16.—The discreet man takes counsel before he acts, and suppresses his feelings under shameful treatment.

17-20.—Job, David, Jeremiah, and many more felt the piercings of this sword. The tongue may soon become such when it utters deceit, but it is only for a moment. It hurts, but cannot do permanent injury.

21.—Many afflictions, manifold temptations, but no evil.

22.—The abominable and all liars are excluded from the city.

25.—Such a word is the Gospel.

26.—"The righteous is a guide" (R.V.). Not a guide-post that points and stirs not.

27.—The idle man who neglects to roast his game is contrasted with him who is valuable in his diligence.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20.—PROV. XIII.

1.—Let us learn to obey our Father's teaching.

2, 3.—The mouth feeds by what it utters as well as by what it receives. We eat our own words (Matt. xii. 37).

4.—Desire must be mated with diligence.

5, 6.—The righteous man is a truthful man, and his righteousness is his escort.

7.—The miser is rich, but poor; the contented may be poor, but they are rich.

8.—Under the arbitrary governments of the East, rich men are often falsely accused for the sake of exacting their wealth. To this the poor are not exposed. The early Christians used to quote this verse to defend their occasional practice of giving money to restrain the wrath of their persecutors.

9.—The righteous shall shine as the sun, the wicked shall be extinguished, with an unwholesome smell.

10.—All quarrels may be traced back to this. "Pride is the inmost coat, that we put on first, and off last."

11.—Easy come, easy go.

12.—Why tarrieth our Lord so long? When shall we hear his chariot wheels? But, ah, when He cometh . . . !

13, 15.—The Word of God is the law of wisdom and a fountain of life. It were well for us to live beside it: so we should have good understanding.

16.—We are either scattering perfume or poison, flower-pollen or thistle-down.

17.—We are ambassadors for Christ. Let us be faithful to Him.

18, 19.—Correct us, oh Thou who art so jealous for our truest welfare. At the end it will be sweet to the soul.

20-22.—The walk, the company, the recompense, and the inheritance of the righteous man and the sinner.

23.—There was much oppression apparently in those days. The poor tilled more than they inherited.

24. If God is diligent in chastening you (R.V.), be sure He loves you.

25. Only God in men or things can satisfy our soul-hunger.

F. B. M.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21.

CAIN AND ABEL.—Gen. iv. 3-13.

GOLDEN TEXT, Heb. xi. 4.

THE promise concerning "the Seed of the Woman" was fresh in the memory of our first parents when they were driven from Eden. The name given to their first son, "Cain," which means gotten, or acquired, and expresses Eve's joy at his birth (1), gives some countenance to the idea that Eve regarded him as the promised seed. Perhaps Cain had very early begun to show a character which disappointed her hopes; hence the name "Abel," meaning vanity, which was given to his brother. It is impossible to conceive the bitterness of Eve's disappointment when the son concerning whom she had cherished hopes so high became the murderer of his brother.

THE TWO OFFERINGS (3-7).—They were probably presented at some time previously appointed by God. "In process of time" (see margin) suggests either an ordinary Sabbath, or some sacred anniversary. Both brothers appeared equally devout in the observance of the time of worship. The first difference between them is in the kind of offerings they presented. And this difference might appear to result only from the different callings of the two men. The fruits of the earth seemed a fit offering from Cain, who was a tiller of the ground (2); and one of the firstlings of the flock seemed most natural from Abel. But evidently they were not alike to God (4, 5). It is not improbable that fire from heaven was then, as later (Lev. ix. 24), the sign of God's acceptance of an offering. This, or some equally manifest, sign was given to Abel's offering, but not to Cain's.

The Golden Text tells us why. The difference in the two offerings was not the mere accident of their different callings. Abel offered "by faith"; Cain rejected the way of faith, and chose a way of his own (Jude 2). The faith of Abel laid hold on the Divine word, given first to Adam, then handed on to his children. "The bruised heel" of the Woman's Seed would be the text, and the blood-shedding of innocent victims would typify and foreshadow the greater event. The doctrine, "Without shedding of blood is no remission" is as old as the Bible. Abel accepted it, confessed himself a sinner deserving of death, and expressed his faith in the Coming One, to whom his victim pointed. Just this is involved in our acceptance of the Gospel preached to-day.

Cain rejected this. His offering was such as a friend might present to a friend. It implies no acknowledgment of guilt, no recognition that death was deserved, no faith in a Divinely appointed substitute. He rejected all light but that of his own reason. All those who reject the atonement, to whom the mention of blood is distasteful, are followers of Cain.

A wrong creed is associated with a wrong life. He refused to confess guilt in his approach to God, but how soon he showed that he had guilt enough to confess. He became wroth, and full of envy and jealousy toward his brother (5). God's method of dealing with him is full of grace (6, 7). First, He suggests inquiry in order to show the unreasonableness and wickedness of his anger. Next, He remonstrates with him. The way to God is as open for him as for Abel. If he will not accept it he adds to his sin, which lies at his door as a beast of prey ready to spring upon him. Such attempts God makes to interpose between men and their own ruin.

THE MURDER (8-13).—There is nothing wanting to complete the horror of this awful crime. It was committed near to the place where the murderer had just been worshipping. It was his response to God's tender and gracious remonstrance. It was committed against his "brother." (Note how frequently this term is used in these verses). It was entirely unprovoked (see 1 Jno. iii. 12).

Even this crime was met by a message of grace (9, 10). It was God's call to Cain to make confession, and it is proof of his great guilt that he was too hardened to respond to the call. And so silently, but with awful eloquence, the blood of Abel cried to God for vengeance. Contrast the blood of Christ as it speaks to God (Heb. xii. 24). In the word of Cain (13) there is remorse, but no repentance.

Does not every sin cry to God for judgment? Yours and mine? Have we, like Abel, rested in the peace-speaking blood of God's appointed sacrifice? Black despair results from rejection of this.

---

WOODVILLE, EAST PUTNEY, S.W., the Nursing Home recently opened by Miss Pledge, has a threefold purpose. First, to afford, on moderate terms, accommodation in private rooms to gentlewomen suffering from severe illness; secondly, to provide for the care of children of the upper classes suffering from chronic hip, spinal, brain, or other diseases; and thirdly, to send out a limited number of qualified nurses to attend private classes.

For the Young.

MARY'S SACRIFICE.

Dear Children,—Sometimes you wonder what you can do; how you can show your love to your parents and friends, and if you are God's child, how you can show your love to Him. A little child, after welcoming me, "helping to take your bonnet off," as she said, and adding to my comfort, saw she could do nothing more for me, and out of her loving little heart, exclaimed, "Auntie dear, isn't there anyfing I can do?" You have all had this feeling some time in your young lives, and as I cannot answer it, I thought I would tell you a story, which might suggest to you the loving thoughts, kind words, and helpful deeds which shall spring from Christ's love in your heart. And there is a little Prayer which you may truly pray before venturing to do anything, however small the effort—it is the prayer-book version of Psalm cxliii. 10, "Teach me to do the thing that pleaseth Thee," remembering always that even Christ pleased not Himself. This is my little story (or, rather, the Rev. Archibald Brown's).

Some time ago one of God's servants was called to see a girl who was dying. She lived in a very poor street, but the minister knew it well, and when he reached the little girl, he sat down by her side and asked her:

"What do you want, darling?"

"I thought I should like to see you, sir, before I died."

"Would not you like to get well again?"

"Oh, no, sir—I am glad to die."

"Can you tell me why, dear child?"

"Oh, sir, ever since I have known Jesus, I have been trying to bring father to church, but he won't come. And if I die, you will bury me, won't you, sir?"

"Yes, darling," said the minister, in surprise.

"Well, father must come to the funeral, then you will preach to him of Jesus, and I would willingly die six times over for him to hear the Gospel once."

Little Mary died; but the minister was taken ill just before her funeral, and could not attend.

Some time afterwards, a rough-looking man called upon him and, holding out his hand, said:

"Ah, sir, you don't know me?"

"No, I do not," answered the minister.

"I am Mary's father—the father she said she would die for six times if only I could hear the Gospel once. It nearly broke my heart. Now I want to join the inquirers' class."

Mary's father became a real, earnest Christian, and I think you will feel that Mary herself was following in her Saviour's footsteps, because she was willing to give herself—had that been of any use—that her father might be saved from his sins.

We cannot die for our friends—let us try to be like Jesus in living for them, in serving them, in seeking to show that we are God's children, and so want to be like God's dear Son.

I am a little child; so little strength
Have I, that I begin to see at length
How true is that first lesson taught by Thee—
"Ye can do nothing"—nothing without Me.

No time is wasted, and no labour lost,
That teaches our proud hearts, at any cost,
From self escaping—to escape to Thee,
And learn the wisdom of simplicity.

M. BUTLER-GERDS.

LITTLE FOXES.

"Take us the foxes, the little foxes that spoil the vines."

AMONG my tender vines I spy
A little fox, named "By-and-by";
Then set upon him quick, I say,
The swift young hunter, "Right-away!"

Around each tender vine I plant
I find the little fox, "I can't";
Then, fast as ever hunter ran,
Chase him with bold and brave "I can!"

"No use in trying," lags and whines
This fox among my cherished vines;
Then drive him low and drive him high
With this good hunter, named "I'll try!"

Among the vines in my small lot
Creeps in the young fox, "I forgot";
Then hunt him out, and to his den,
With "I will not forget again!"

A little fox lies hidden there
Among my vines, named "I don't care";
Then let "I'm sorry," hunter true,
Fright him afar from vines and you.

Selected.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, York, Jan. 13 to 21; Ruby Burn, Jan. 23 and 24; Stalybridge, Jan. 25 and 26; St. Luke's, Liverpool, Jan. 27 to Feb. 7; Mr. Jas. S. Tyler, Parmiter-street School, Cambridge Heath, Jan. 21 to 28; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Ipswich, Jan. 13 to 21 (with Mr. George Goodman); Mr. E. Hughes, Aldenham Hall, Somers Town, to Jan. 12; Albany-road Institute, Camberwell, Jan. 24; Mr. George Goodman, Sefton Park, Putney, to Jan. 12; Mr. J. M. Wigner, Camden-road Baptist Chapel, to Jan. 13; Mr. G. V. Arrowsmith, St. Philemon's, Liverpool, Jan. 14 to 21; Holiday Services for Young People, Bove Town Hall, by Mr. A. G. Dodderidge and others, to Jan. 15; Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Builth Wells, during January.

MR. NEWTON JONES:—Jan. 13-25, Rushden; Jan. 27 to Feb. 1, Lavender Hill; Feb. 3-8, Dorking; Feb. 10-15, Bedford; Feb. 17 to March 1, Brixton; March 3-8, Norwich; March 10-15, Kettering; March 17-22, Downton; March 25-26, Chesham; March 31 to April 5, Poole.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—S., Jan. 14, 2 Kings vi. 13-25; 15, vii. 1-11; 16, vii. 12-20; 17, xi. 1-10; 18, xi. 11-21; 19, xii. 1-15; 20, xiii. 14-25.

THE LOVE OF JESUS.

DEAR SIR,—Years ago I heard Miss Annie Macpherson's rescued waifs singing, most impressively,

"What can wash away my stain?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

The words and melody long rang in my soul, and the scene was never forgotten. To-day, in my temporary sojourn here for health, I have voiced its counterpart (to the same tune) in the following simple verses, hoping that they may be used by Christian workers to cheer and encourage some weary ones, hard-pressed in the battle of life.—Yours, in his blessed service,

MARIA A. WEST.

Asile Evangélique, Cannes, France, Jan. 6.

What can make me happy here?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.
What can drive away my fear?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.

Chorus to each verse:—
Oh, Jesus is my friend,
He will my soul defend
And love me to the end;
There's nothing like the love of Jesus!

What can cheer when friends forsake?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.
What can heal the hearts that break?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.

What can chase the clouds away?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.
Turn the darkness into day?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.

What can smooth the roughest road?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.
Help to bear a heavy load?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.

What can comfort in distress?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.
What can satisfy and bless?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.

What can make me watch and pray?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.
Love and serve Him every day?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.

What can cause my soul to sing?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.
Make my voice with praises ring?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.

What can give me joy at last?
Nothing like the love of Jesus?
When this earthly life is past?
Nothing like the love of Jesus.

Oh, Jesus is my friend,
He will my soul defend
And love me to the end;
There's nothing like the love of Jesus.

---

REV. W. H. L. BATSTONE, writing from Jagdalpur, Bastar, C.P., India, tells of quiet, persistent efforts, largely of a pioneer character, carried on by the workers of the Pauline Mission, among heathen who "know of no Bethlehem, of no Calvary, of no Resurrection, and of no second coming of Christ." "God's voice," he adds, "is speaking to some now, and we are being encouraged by the questions asked and desires expressed." At the Medical Mission Dispensary there were 2000 attendances between June 22 and the end of November. At the time of writing there were twenty-four patients in the little hospital: with one or two earnest inquirers. Mr. and Mrs. Batstone will be thankful for earnest prayer on behalf of their work.

The Blessed and ONLY Potentate.

The first map in an atlas is that of the world. A child could not be taught geography without first getting an idea of the earth as a whole. The first lesson in prophetic truth should be the entire circle of the Divine dispensations. The first denunciation upon the serpent, "He shall bruise thy head," looked onward to the end, "the lake of fire."

The circle is the symbol of all God's work. The preacher (Ecc. i. 5-7) illustrates this by the sun, the wind, the rain: whence they come thither they return. Ezekiel describes the purposes and works of God by wheels within wheels, so high that they are dreadful. And James refers to the course or circle or wheel of nature. All things come from God and all things return to God. "For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things."

Revelation begins with "In the beginning, God," and ends with "God, all in all." The circle, therefore, is the only figure which truly and adequately describes the course of the purpose, the method, and the work of God.

The subjoined diagram describes human history in its two great divisions—the fall in Adam and the rising again in Christ. But let the fact be emphasised that the chief and all-important consideration is not the ruin and recovery of man, but the slander and the vindication of God; the disobedience of Adam, and the obedience of Jesus, to God; the dishonour and the glorifying of God.

God must be King because He is Creator. "Shall the thing formed say to Him that formed it, 'Why hast Thou made me thus?'"

But the highest (probably, Ezek. xxviii.) of created intelligences disputed God's right to reign. Satan would be like the Most High. The one and all-absorbing question before the universe, therefore, is and the earth is the theatre upon which that problem is being solved.

WHO SHALL REIGN?

It is of the first necessity that it be exhaustively and for ever settled, and therefore God gives the amplest opportunity for the creature-claimant to exhibit his qualification for the throne. The Almighty Creator might have trodden the serpent and his victims out of being before a child of the human race was born; and this would have proved his might, but not his right, to reign.

"God is light." He proves everything; or gives it time and opportunity to prove itself. He therefore stood aside, and does not appear to have interposed governmentally in the affairs of men, from Cain's murder of Abel down to the Flood. During this period two lines of human life were developed; the sons of Cain becoming the beautifiers and improvers of the world, while the sons of Seth—born instead of Abel whom Cain slew—lived, begat children, and died. Cain increased, but Seth decreased; the house of Cain waxed greater and greater, the house of Seth weaker and weaker; until the evil had absorbed the good. The sons of God (angels) saw the fair daughters of men, and (whether they were angels or Sethites) took wives of their own choice, and the progeny of this union was wholly evil—the protest of very ancient history against the generally-accepted but delusive theory that the higher can leaven the lower and raise it to its own quality. Every thought of the imagination of man's heart became evil continually; inward corruption and outward violence made life unlivable; and Satan's unhindered dominance wrought anarchy and destruction. The world needs no new lesson in Anarchy. It has been played out to its last counter, and has proved for ever that the men of violence shall utterly perish in their own corruption.

This first period has proved that Satan cannot rule; that his sway can only bring crime and calamity, disorder and death, under the just judgment of God.

To Noah God commits the sword of government: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed." The dominion which Adam yielded to Satan is to this extent restored to man. But primeval weakness is repeated in Noah, and antediluvian wickedness is brought through the Flood by Ham. The younger but the strongest of Noah's sons so influences the whole world of the new race, that they rebel against God, and design on the plain of Shinar a city and a tower lest they be scattered abroad upon the face of the earth. But the confusion of tongues brought about the very thing they desired to avoid.

Then God takes an individual, a family, a nation, a slip of the vine of the earth, and plants it in a very fruitful hill, looking that it should bring forth grapes, but it brought forth poisonous berries (Isa. v.). They rejected God as their King, and desired a king to rule them like the nations from which God had taken them to be a special treasure to Himself. This Shemite people, which God would have made a kingdom of priests and a holy nation, mingled themselves with the children of Ham in Canaan, rebelled as they had done, and Israel and their latest kings were sent into captivity to the Gentiles.

"From Everlasting to Everlasting Thou art God."

These were chiefly descendants of Japheth, and because their kings ruled oppressively, and not in the fear of God, the royal prerogative slipped through their fingers, degenerated from gold to iron, until the chosen people groaned under the heel of the kingdom, dreadful, terrible, and strong exceedingly, which devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with its feet.

Thus Satan, and then man in the three families descended from Noah, have, by an exhaustive series of experiments, been proved incapable of wise and righteous and beneficent rule. Now comes the herald of the King, the messenger and forerunner of the incarnate God, saying, "The time is fulfilled and the Kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the glad tidings." Jesus Himself follows with the same declaration. He is the express image of Him whose meekness multiplies us, and whose gentleness makes us great. Will they acknowledge his right to reign? No: "We have no king but Cæsar." What will they do with Jesus the Christ? With every indignity and contumely and expression of Satanic hatred they kill Him, they crucify their King. Jew and Gentile were gathered together against the Lord and against his Christ. But

GOD RAISED HIM FROM THE DEAD.

Now the King of men has passed out of the sphere and region in which the race of Adam lives. It is proved that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. "Ye must be born again" to enter there, and birth from above comes only by faith in the crucified and risen Christ. M.

(To be continued.)

Aggressive Work.—4.

I lately entered a railway carriage where there was, amongst others, a Roman Catholic priest. He quickly rose, saying to the porter, "Let me out if this gentleman is getting in here," and he hurried off. We had evidently met before, and he remembered it, although I did not. Why should not such public men be challenged at times as to their standing in the sight of God? If they are true men they will welcome it, but if they are mere hirelings they need it. During my summer holidays I had been preaching in the open-air every afternoon, and heard that a gentleman had found the Saviour at one of the meetings. I looked him up, and asked under what address it was. Ah! how apt we are to fancy we must have spoken so well at such a time! He said, "It was not the address at all, but you came to me after the meeting and asked whether I loved the Saviour. That was it." "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts" (Zech. iv. 6).

One evening I spoke to a young man on the landing-stage here, and then crossed with him in the steamer to New Brighton. He was interested in the Truth, and we talked freely about it. He gave me his address, and we arranged to correspond upon the subject. After several letters had passed between us he wrote saying that he had been enabled savingly to trust Jesus and find rest and satisfaction. As far as I was able to judge, it appeared an undoubted case of conversion. To God be the glory!

A few men were sheltering in a gateway from the rain. I stopped and said, "I fancy there won't be any rain when we reach heaven, will there?" "Well," one replied, "I suppose the Lord will reign there." Then came the opportunity for preaching Jesus, to which they listened with great attention, and afterwards remarked, "You ought to have been a parson." We were having a meeting near there that evening, and they came. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper either this or that" (Eccles. xi. 6).

A word can be spoken to the thirty or fifty people in the elevator at the Mersey Tunnel Railway, as it rises and falls, and I have frequently availed myself of it, and wondered occasionally why the elevator travelled so slowly, giving one so much time to speak. I found the conductor was interested and friendly, and slowed the car intentionally. The Lord has much people about.

Walking behind an elderly but good-looking working man in a quiet street, I noticed he was whistling. Whilst passing him I said, "It's grand to be able to afford to whistle, is it not?" He looked at me and replied, "Yes, I am as happy as a king, and I try to make somebody else happy every day I live; and if I fail, I tickle the cat until it scratches me; and if I thought you were happier than I, I would swallow you." All this was rattled out without a pause, and I then asked, "What is the meaning of all this?" "Why," he said, "I am nearly eighty years of age, and I have known the Lord for fifty years." What an untold blessing is a long life in the service of the Saviour, and how some of us regret not having served Him longer than we have. Undoubtedly the greatest blessing is conversion, but the next greatest is an early conversion, and I think the third greatest is total abstinence. Won't some begin to-day to serve Him? "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace" (Prov. iii. 17).

Liverpool. D. M. Drysdale.

MRS. TONJOROFF,

MEDICAL MISSIONARY AT PHILIPPOPOLIS.

WHEN in 1872 Miss Elizabeth Bevan left England to become governess in the family of a wealthy merchant in Bulgaria, she probably had no thought of the vast field of Christian work which would open out for her in that country; but in the brave and faithful fulfilment of her duties in relation to the training of the children committed to her care, she was being fitted for the onerous work and heavy responsibilities which hereafter awaited her.

It was a great joy to her at a time when isolated from the means of grace and the spiritual blessings which we in England so richly enjoy, to find in Philippopolis, where she was then residing, a few men gathered together in a small upper room to study God's Word, having no preacher or leader among them. Gradually acquiring the language, she became a valued adherent and helper, spending all her spare time in work in their homes.

At that time Pastor Tonjoroff was working in Bansko, and twice visited Philippopolis, where he met Miss Bevan. In 1875 they were married, and took up residence at Bansko, in the district of Raslog, a mountainous region in the Macedonian highlands. Bansko became their headquarters, from whence they worked a district comprising thirteen towns and villages.

In her new home the womanly sympathies of Mrs. Tonjoroff were aroused by the distress and destitution of the people around her. She says: "The sad condition of these people deeply touched my heart; looking for strength and guidance from on high, I decided to consecrate myself for their welfare. Having an early inclination to serve the sick, and having a supply of medicines, I endeavoured to help them, and not only by giving them medicine and advice, but by doing for them little household services. My simple efforts found grace in the sight of the Great Physician, and He blessed my work for their good."

Thus was commenced the medical work which proved at Philippopolis, as elsewhere, a powerful auxiliary to the Gospel. The fear of the "foreigner," which at first actuated the people, soon gave way to confidence, and the work grew rapidly. The dwellers in the surrounding villages began to come in for help, and they found not only physical succour, but spiritual teaching which in some cases—who shall say how many?—resulted in conversion. A lad who was one of the first patients is now in a missionary school preparing for evangelistic work among his countrymen.

In 1876, war desolated the country round, and Mrs. Tonjoroff had her hands fuller than ever. By the generosity of English people, she was enabled greatly to relieve the poor Macedonians among whom she was labouring. Also she got a supply of medicines from Lady Strangford, which was a great help to her. At this time, her husband was arrested as a rebel, and thrown into prison, and, under the strain of personal sorrow, of the suffering and misery which surrounded her, and of the turmoil of strife and insurrection, her health gave way, and she had to give up for a time. She went to Philippopolis at the beginning of the Russo-Turkish war. The sick and wounded soon filled the city, and she was compelled to resume again her work. This, together with the sight of burning towns and villages, also the execution of the chief Bulgarians, which was going on daily in the streets of Philippopolis, and the fear of her husband sharing the same fate, caused her to break down altogether. By the help of the English consul, Mrs. Tonjoroff and her husband (who had been released from prison) were enabled to leave the country for England.

Returning after a period of rest in this country, Mrs. Tonjoroff again took up her residence in Philippopolis, and was there soon after the Russo-Turkish War was brought to a close. Poor refugees flocked back to their desolated or demolished homes, and crowded the streets of Philippopolis, half naked and starving. Here was more work for Mrs. Tonjoroff, and soon she was busily engaged in distributing clothing, and administering medicine and other relief. Sir H. Drummond Wolff, who was then at Philippopolis as a member of the European Commission, saw the good which was being done, and set on foot a fund, largely contributed from England; and Mrs. Tonjoroff and her helpers were enabled to feed from three to five thousand poor people every day during the winter of 1878-9.

In the early summer of 1879, in response to a "cry from Macedonia," Mrs. Tonjoroff with her husband left Philippopolis, and after three days' hard journeying over mountains on horseback arrived at Bansko. Space does not permit us to detail the work which they accomplished there in alleviating the sufferings of the people, whose houses in many cases had been burned to the ground. She cared for their bodily necessities, telling them at the same time of the Divine Healer, and in many a heart the way was opened for the reception of the Gospel.

Besides her regular work, Mrs. Tonjoroff was alive to all the special evils consequent on the late war, and was constant in her efforts to ameliorate the condition of those around her. One instance must suffice. A regiment of Turkish soldiers stationed at Bansko, poorly clad and badly fed, made their privations an excuse for plundering the inhabitants. Mrs. Tonjoroff undertook a journey of some distance to represent matters personally to the Pasha, and volunteered, if it would put an end to the depredations of the soldiers, to get cloth herself and make them some suits of clothing. The Pasha declined the offer, and was shamed into making better provision for the soldiers at Bansko, who were soon after altogether withdrawn, largely through the exertions of Mrs. Tonjoroff, who had followed up her first success by further representations to those in authority.

When in Philippopolis she regularly visited the prisons and National Hospital, supplying Bibles in the native languages, cheering and helping the prisoners and patients, and inspiring the officials (who certainly needed it) with kinder ideas and better methods of treatment.

Later on Mrs. Tonjoroff was led to open a small Cottage Hospital, where cases could be nursed and cared for free from the jealous interference of the Greek clergy. There are sixteen beds, and during one year 188 in-patients experienced the benefits of this institution, for the support of which Mrs. Tonjoroff must look to friends in England. It is truly missionary work; to quote her own words: "In the hospital we have many opportunities for closer spiritual dealing than is possible in the dispensary or in a public address. Many of the patients remain long enough with us to know the object of our mission, and when they leave they take with them in very many cases an intelligent knowledge of the truth. We can speak of several in this city who were converted as the direct fruit of the hospital work, and are now united with us as members of our Christian Union, besides those who have gone to their homes in different parts of the country." The dispensary is an adjunct to the hospital, and nearly five thousand out-patients are cared for annually.

The general evangelistic work in Philippopolis has been much helped by the erection of a new hall, and this was the centre of a specially vigorous effort during the Bulgarian Exhibition in the autumn of 1892, when thousands from all parts of the country were attracted to the city, and much seed was sown, which in God's own time and way will assuredly yield an abundant harvest.

Mrs. Tonjoroff, after a brief sojourn in this country, on account of her health, has now returned to Philippopolis, and we earnestly bespeak for her and her husband the prayers of our readers that the Divine blessing may increasingly rest on all their labours.

Those who wish for further information about Mrs. Tonjoroff's work may obtain it by applying to Mr. Bevan Braithwaite, 312, Camden-road, N.W.; Mrs. Barclay, The Briars, Reigate; or Mrs. Chas. Gillett, Wood Green, Banbury; or communications may be made through the office of The Christian.

SANCTIFIED SORROW.

Saints sing their sweetest songs
'Mid sorrow sanctified;
A mingled cup to each belongs,
Till all are glorified.

Called out of Egypt's land,
Redeemed by precious blood,
The Red Sea, parted by God's hand,
As solid walls it stood.

Triumphantly we've passed
Safe to the other side,
And thence we see of foes the last
O'erwhelmed by surging tide.

We sing redemption's song
With gladsome heart and voice;
And loud and clear the notes prolong,
As we in Christ rejoice.

But Marah's reached full soon
With all its bitterness;
Now hearts are sad, harps out of tune,
All's dreary joylessness.

And then we, murm'ring, ask,
"What, what are we to drink?"
To cure such waters were a task
T' attempt we would not think!

The bitter God makes sweet
(He'll yet "make all things new");
"A tree" and bitter waters meet,
Now these are fresh as dew,

Oh, for a harp well-tuned!
He sorrow sanctifies;
Jesus comes in to heal the wound!
To soothe and sympathise.

To wells of Elim led,
Where fruitful palm-trees grow,
Our thirst is quenched, our souls are fed,
Our hearts with praise o'erflow!

Weston-super-Mare. Douglas Russell.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The next autumn meeting of the British branch of the Alliance is to be held at Tunbridge Wells.

[26]

The Evangelist.

FULL ASSURANCE OF SALVATION.*

BY THE LATE T. SHULDHAM HENRY

How many quickened souls are hindered by Satan from accepting Christ by looking in at themselves for feelings! They want to feel saved—to feel their sins forgiven, feel joy and peace before they believe. Many are looking at the work of the Spirit in them, instead of the work of Christ for them. I have known many in this state for months and years, never seeming to get any comfort. You cannot disabuse their minds about doing something or feeling something, before they can possibly rest on Christ's finished work. You put the Word of God before them; they say they see it or believe it; but they don't feel happy; they don't feel different; they won't be comforted; they go away as they came.

Their condition is just as if some of you owed me £100, of which I could not get the payment. After waiting a long time I put you in prison. A friend of yours, hearing of your sad condition, comes to me, and gives me a cheque for the amount. I give him a receipt, with which he goes to the prison, and says to you, "Cheer up! I have good news for you; I have paid your debt, and got a receipt from your creditor for the amount. Come away with me now. You are free; the prison doors are open." "Thank you," you say. "It is very kind of you to take all this trouble, but really I must stay where I am. I don't feel the debt is paid; when I do I will gladly go out." What would you think of a case like that? Could it happen? Would you not rather say, "How can I ever thank you enough for your great and unmerited kindness towards me? You are truly my friend and benefactor, and with my latest breath I will thank you." Out of the prison you would walk into liberty and peace.

You believed your friend's word, you were satisfied with the receipt, and you had no further anxiety about the matter. On your way home from the prison I happen to meet you in the street, and say to you, "How is it you are out of prison? You have never paid me that money; you must go back again." "Oh no, sir!" you say. "My friend has paid my debt, and here is your receipt. You have no claim on me now; you cannot demand payment twice." It is not now a question of feeling. You feel happy because, having believed your friend's word about the payment of the debt, and being satisfied with the receipt, you stepped out of a state of thraldom into liberty.

I come to you now, and tell you that all your life you have been contracting debts with God. Your sins are the debts. He is the great Creditor. You must answer for your liabilities; you must have a settlement with your Creditor. How can you compound with Him? What can you pay—twenty shillings in the pound? No. Well, five shillings? No. Well, a farthing? No. Alas! what a condition! You are bankrupt, unable to pay anything. Jesus describes your condition in Revelation iii. 17, "miserable and wretched and poor" (a pauper), "and blind and naked." What do you deserve? To be cast into prison, to remain there till you have paid the uttermost farthing.

The good news I have for you is this, that God—your great Creator—seeing your hopeless and ruined condition, that nothing you have done or could do could satisfy his claims, sends his Son to meet your deep need upon the cross. By his mighty, wondrous death, He does so to God's infinite satisfaction, and the proof is that He raised Him from the dead on the third day. Will you be satisfied? Will you accept the death of Christ as that which met all your liabilities to God? Do you say, "I would like to do so, but I don't feel the debt is paid, and that I am free?" You are not asked to feel; in fact, you never can feel your debt is paid.

Do you say, "I mean to stay in bondage and misery, uncertainty and doubt, until I feel the debt is paid"? Oh, I see, you don't believe God's Word! He says to you, poor, bankrupt pauper, "You can pay nothing"; but the moment you believe that Jesus has paid it for you, "I frankly forgive you everything." The whole settlement was gone into between a holy and just God and Jesus Christ on the cross, and God accepted his dying as the payment in full. The resurrection of Christ is the receipt to you. If you accept it as such you will be free, out of debt and out of danger, and then God could not demand payment twice.

Now you rejoice, you have peace, you feel happy, because on the authority of God's Word you know you are out of debt; you are free, and you can live to thank your great Benefactor all the days of your life. Your evidences are not now in your feelings, but in the Word of God.

* Extracted from Now and For Ever, or Never. Seven addresses by T. Shuldham Henry, M.A., LL.B. (1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., according to binding. J. E. Hawkins & Co.)

A TECHNIC TRAINING HOME

FOR MISSION CANDIDATES IN INDIA.

Such a home is specially needed in India, for the following reasons and objects:—

1. To exemplify and promote self-supporting work among native preachers and congregations.

2. To show forth the humility and simplicity of Christ's spirit and life.

3. To promote personal humility and meekness among Christian workers, where there is such a tendency to ecclesiastic parade and Christian Brahminism.

4. To prepare and send out devoted workers who, by earning at least partial support, will so far relieve the Mission funds.

5. To illustrate and prompt the work of "laymen," and a plain, hardworking Gospel ministry.

6. As we require heathen converts to "break caste" with heathenism, so it is necessary for all true disciples of Christ to break caste with the carnal world. As this worldliness rules in European society in India, the faithful worker for souls will not seek society reputation. By taking the place of a plain working-man, the mission worker "breaks caste" with worldly European society, and makes himself of no reputation, like his Master.

7. Apostolic evangelism started out largely on this line. See the many places where Paul laboured with his own hands, and the special importance he attached to it. Acts xx. 34, 35; xviii. 3; 1 Cor. iv. 12; ix. 18, 19, 22; 1 Thess. ii. 9; 2 Thess. iii. 8, 10; etc. The prophets in the Old Testament were mostly labouring men.

8. This plan co-operates with other methods of support. Some may be supported partly by handwork, and in part by contributions. The "Faith Plan" of asking nothing from man, but only from God, is consistent with working for support, when God so leads.

The Lord has used our labours to introduce many to mission work, and this "Faith and Works" plan may prove a "great and effectual door" for many more to enter into this vast and ripe harvest field. India's 290,000,000 souls are a prize for which we should "love not our lives unto death" in seeking to win them for Him who died for us. In this ocean of fallen humanity there is already a plenty of pride, selfishness, lust, anger, and all other forms of carnality; so we do not need any more imported from abroad. Hence we ask those to come who have been cleansed from these works of the devil by the precious blood of Christ. We shall be glad to correspond with any such disciples upon whom the Lord is putting his burden for poor old India's salvation.

Wallace J. Gladwin.

"India Watchman" Office,
Bombay, India.

SUNDAY OPENING. — At their meeting on January 1, the Bristol Town Council decided by thirty-eight votes to nineteen not to open the City Museum and free libraries on Sundays.

GENERAL NEAL DOW.

By Miss FRANCES E. WILLARD.

THE United Kingdom Alliance and the British Women's Temperance Association of England have taken up the suggestion made by the World's and National W.C.T.U. for a general observance in the interest of temperance reform of March 20, 1894, the ninetieth birthday of General Neal Dow, the father of prohibitory law. It is hoped by those who have combined to bring forward this proposition that temperance societies in all parts of the world will give it their endorsement, each conducting the celebration according to his own judgment and opportunity, and all sending congratulations to our "Grand Old Man." It is needless to say that this would be done not only for the purpose of honouring this heroic leader in the temperance reform, but with the expectation that the principles of abstinence for the individual, and prohibition for the State, would thereby be brought before the public in a great many localities and a variety of ways, the outcome of the effort being the advancement of the principles to which we are all alike devoted.

It is proposed to publish in all the temperance periodicals the picture of General Neal Dow as he appeared in 1851, when he was Mayor of Portland, Maine, and the prohibitory law was adopted, and another as he looks now in his hale and honoured age. With these pictures will doubtless be published a sketch of his life, and some account of the success of prohibitory law in Maine, where it has been longest tried. Some of the wise and pungent sayings of General Dow, one of the most incisive speakers and writers that the reform has produced, will be collated, and odes in his honour, and hymns commemorative of "Prohibition Day," as we might well name the birthday of prohibition's father, will be written—we may well believe, by our best pens in all parts of Christendom. I have long wished that we had a temperance "Auld Lang Syne" song, and one has recently been furnished for the W.C.T.U.; but here is a grand opportunity for our writers to give us a song of universal adaptation that shall signalise the birthday of our noble chief.

I have recently heard from General Dow that he is in splendid health, that he rises at 5 o'clock in the morning, as has been his life-long custom, walks three miles a day, and in pleasant weather rides fifteen to twenty.

It seems to me it would be well if, the week previous to March 20, 1894, the religious and temperance papers would bring out an issue in which our ninety-year-old leader was made a central figure. The pictures of him that we need can be had by writing to Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president of the W.C.T.U., Portland, Maine; also a collection of his best and most pointed utterances. Such an issue should contain articles on the different phases of the temperance movement, so that the paper would be widely sought and largely quoted from in the temperance meeting of the 20th March, which is to be held irrespective of sect, sex, or membership in any particular temperance society, and has been suggested in the interest of no "ism," but simply to advance the broad lines of the temperance movement.

In this view I feel sure that all good people will do all they can to help forward the proposed celebration and to send their congratulations to General Neal Dow, of Portland, Maine.

ZANZIBAR STRANGERS' REST.

MRS. AGNEW says in a recent letter: The Rest is open from morning till night, that sailors and others may come into the cool, pleasant reading-room. Not unfrequently do we see at our meetings the dark faces of one or two natives who have learned English at the C.M.S. mission at Mombasa, and are now earning their living in Zanzibar.

Our work is principally among the bluejackets, many of whom look upon the place as a home. Many more merchant vessels have been visiting Zanzibar lately, especially American and Norwegian sailing ships, and although, as a rule, the men are only allowed on shore on Sundays, yet we can visit the ships and distribute tracts, which are very gladly received. Sometimes, in addition to speaking to the men, we are permitted to hold a short meeting.

The great need of the Rest at present is a caretaker, who could meet the sailors and superintend their teas. It is a great privilege to be allowed to proclaim the good news to those who have never heard.

CARRUBBERS CLOSE MISSION.

THE success and interest attending the New Year's meetings in connection with this mission have exceeded those of any previous year, and the hearts of the large number of workers in this large home mission agency are greatly cheered with the manifested presence of the Master at the gatherings.

The Gospel Temperance Association held its Hogmanay reunion in the Hall, High-street, Edinburgh. There was a crowded attendance, some 1500 persons being present, and great numbers failed to gain admission. In opening the proceedings, Professor A. R. SIMPSON, who presided, spoke of the year's work in connection with the mission, he remarked that in the wonderful success which attended it they had much cause for thankfulness. It was not only in temperance work that the country was making progress, for the Government had instituted a Commission which was at present going into the whole opium question—a question which was of much interest to missions such as theirs. Those in authority at their own local municipal chambers in Edinburgh were getting more and more alive to the necessity of dealing with a traffic which, like that connected with drink, was a source of danger to the community.

Mr. G. A. BARCLAY having referred to the pan-denominational character of the Mission, Principal RAINY, in the course of a short address, said he was quite sure that all the Evangelical churches rejoiced to have representatives among the Carrubbers Close workers. He did not mean to say that sobriety was Christianity; and certainly there was a great deal more in Christianity than sobriety. In this country intemperance had risen up to the proportions of one of the most formidable enemies of the souls of men and to the welfare of the people that they met with, and he regarded the Churches as called upon to recognise, and as thoroughly justified in recognising, that as a conspicuous and most fatal enemy of the Gospel and of human welfare.

Mr. DAVID LEWIS said that at the present day one of the greatest disturbing forces in this country was connected with the question of labour, and he made bold to say that were the drink traffic swept away and the immense sums which were devoted to it thrown into the legitimate channels of industry a very speedy termination would be put to the dull trade from which the country suffered. Colonel Woodford (Chicago), Rev. Rowland Ellis, Mr. James Guthrie (Brechin), and Rev. J. G. Cunningham also spoke.

The New Year was brought in at Carrubbers Close with the usual watch-night service. The hall was packed to overflowing. Professor Orr exhorted the audience to begin the New Year in a religious spirit. Their streets were thronged that night with crowds who meant to rush madly into the New Year; many others were acting in a light-hearted manner. He urged them to enter on the New Year as rational beings. Rev. Mr. Tait (Leith) asked the workers of the Mission to do their utmost to get the churches put right with reference to the drink question. Rev. Mr. Scott (Leith) also spoke.

On the evening of Monday, January 1, a meeting of the workers and friends was held in the large hall of the Mission. Upwards of 1200 Christian workers and their friends sat down to tea. Mr. Wm. Robertson presided. Thrilling testimonies by those converted during the past year and previous years were given, and reports of times of rich blessing were given by the superintendents and the workers.

A recital of sacred music, in connection with the Gospel Temperance Society, was given in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh, on January 2. The hall was crowded, some 3000 people being present, and many hundreds were turned from the door. Rev. Dr. James MacGregor presided. Dr. Moxey gave three readings in the course of the evening, and the musical part of the entertainment was of a superior order.

On the evening of Thursday, January 4, the large hall of the Mission was crowded by the poorest people from the Edinburgh slums. Great impression was made by the stirring testimonies, and many waited to be spoken with.

Never since the Mission was launched, upwards of thirty-five years ago, has so great blessing attended the work as during the recent Christmas and New Year's season. The first Gospel Temperance meeting of the New Year, held on Saturday, January 6, was one of the most impressive ever held in this place, which has been so signalised as a centre of blessing.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

TUESDAY, January 3, was a happy time at the Central Hall, Philpot-street, Whitechapel. It was the new year's tea, a red-letter day in the year's annals. At 5 p.m. the doors were opened, and from the biting east wind and snow-covered street streamed in our Jewish guests, to the number of 300. Many women had brought their babies, which certainly gave variety, if not harmony, to the evening's enjoyment.

We must not linger over the tea, but pass on to the meeting which followed. Rev. J. Wilkinson had left his sick room to come and meet these Jews and Jewesses at their annual gathering. After a hymn, Mr. Wilkinson gave the opening address. His subject was the man lame from his birth, laid at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple—the power of the Name of Jesus to heal. He urged the spiritually lame to trust in the "One Name," that they might "walk straight" that night.

Rev. J. Adler, Dr. Dixon, Dr. Roberts, and Mr. S. Wilkinson subsequently addressed the gathering; between each speech sacred solos were sung by the lady workers. When all the guests had departed the workers gathered together and thanked the Lord for another opportunity of ministering to his beloved and afflicted people Israel.

The following evening, January 4, over 260 Jewish children responded to an invitation to tea in the same place, and a merry company it was. After tea was cleared, Rev. J. Wilkinson again took the chair, and gave the little ones a sermon to carry home—taking his watch for his text, and speaking to them with it in his hand. Lessons were taught from hands which go wrong if all is not right inside. The children were instructed to whom to take it to be set right. Very sweetly the children sang during the evening a number of hymns. They recited from memory the first chapter of John's Gospel, and repeated with great accuracy, giving chapter and verse, passages from Scripture showing parallels in the life of Moses and our Lord Jesus. The prizes for attendance, neatness, etc., were given at the close by Mr. W. Campbell, who also spoke a few kind words to the children. A WORKER.

Rev. J. Wilkinson writes: "I am, praise God, fairly well again, and at work, though I have to be careful about my tender throat. My wife, who was just recovering from a nine weeks' illness, has had a relapse. I shall be thankful for prayer on her behalf."

L.C.M. EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.

A NUMBER of London City Missionaries turn their musical gifts to account in connection with this choir, which is ever ready for aggressive evangelistic operations. In the past year the choir has sung on 241 occasions at 316 Gospel meetings, outdoor or indoor. This has included all kinds of mission rooms, etc., as also fairs, the Derby, on Epsom course, and such gatherings.

Many instances are given in the new report of blessing on this effort. For example, we read:—"One woman on Thursday received such blessing that she now desires to present us with a clock as a thank-offering."

"One man, a backslider, was by God's grace led to attend a meeting held by the choir. He went home so miserable he could not sleep, and though he had sworn to his wife that he would never become a Christian again, yet so utterly broken down was he that he cried for mercy; he sought and found peace in believing, and at length stood up and publicly testified for Jesus."

The L.C.M. Choir came and took our Annual Gospel Temperance Meeting. We first held big outdoor meetings, where some cried to God for mercy. This filled us with joy, some almost dancing with delight at sinners coming home to God. The secretary is Mr. A. Williams, Carlyle Villa, Upcerne-road, Chelsea.

PROGRESS IN GERMANY.—When Mr. Stöcker left his post as Court Chaplain, his friends started a collection for building a large hall in Berlin, in which he could preach. This hall, with places for about 2000 persons, has just been opened, and henceforth Mr. Stöcker will preach there every Sunday. When we look, writes the Berlin correspondent of Evangelical Christendom, on the large number of Sunday-schools in Germany, and in our metropolis, we wonder how it was possible that thirty years ago only four children's services existed here. Some of these have since adopted the Sunday-school system, by adding the class teaching of voluntary helpers.

DR. A. BONAR'S DIARY.*

HIS CONVERSION.

Aug. 21, 1828.—It was this week that I resolved to enter upon the study of divinity. My chief motive was the indistinct hope and belief that thereby I should be more likely to find salvation, being much taken up, as I thought I must be, with the pursuit of Divine things. For I felt myself unsaved, and had a secret expectation that in the course of my studies in divinity I might be brought to the truth.

Sunday, Nov. 2.—A most impressive sermon in the evening upon John ix. 4. I came home in deep anxiety to be saved, and I was, I trust, enabled to choose Christ Jesus for my Saviour, depending upon the Holy Spirit's assistance to keep me. But still I fear and tremble lest all be not well.

Tuesday, Nov. 4.—I soon grow cold. I grieve that I do not sorrow more for sin.

Jan. 1, 1829.—God is helping me to feel more love to Jesus.

March 31.—Mr. —— took me into his study, and after a short conversation asked me to be his sons' teacher during summer, at his summer residence, to teach them Latin and Greek. I declined instantly, thinking what my soul would do in such company.

Sunday, May 3.—Great sorrow, because I am still out of Christ.

Thursday, 7, Fast Day. — It has been much impressed upon me that if convinced of sin at all I must be so by the view of it in Christ's love.

Tuesday, 12.—I sometimes think God is thus dealing with me that I may afterwards be better fitted to teach others.

Sunday, 31.—My birthday is past and I am not born again. It often comes to my mind, "My friends will be for ever lost to me, if they should be taken and I should be left."

Sunday, June 28.—I long to know Jesus, the Beloved One, but my love of praise, and fondness for some friends are my snare.

Saturday, July 5.—God has let me seek salvation by trying to perform duties that would please Him, and are a satisfaction to my own mind, and especially this last year I have been trying to do this by keeping before me motives drawn from thoughts of heaven and hell. But now He seems leading me away to the love of Christ as what is to do this. I was struck with the Moravians having no success till they preached Christ's love.

Sunday, 12.—Sacrament day in church. I have not received Christ into my heart. I felt the deepest grief. I wept when I got home just from feeling the misery of not being in Christ.

Friday, Dec. 4.—Thoughts of delaying my going to the Divinity Hall for another year, because I feel still so far from Christ.

Sunday, May 30, 1830.—Yesterday was my birthday; I am not born again.

Sunday, Aug. 8.—All appearance of grace in me is only desire after Christ, and no more. I am still without Christ, and without hope. I have no hatred of sin. I seek Christ with little ardour, rather because not happy with the world than because of anything else.

Sunday, Sept. 5.—I mean to delay entering the Divinity Hall this year, because I am not yet brought to the knowledge of God.

Sunday, Oct. 17.—In reading Guthrie's "Saving Interest" I have been led to hope that I may be in Christ, though I have never yet known it. All the marks of faith in a man which he gives are to be found in me, I think, although very feeble. This is the first beam of joy, perhaps, that I have yet found in regard to my state, and yet it is scarcely more than a hope.

Nov. 3.—I have much more light and expectation. It will be right in me, and would be so in all students, to devote these few "fast days" entirely to prayer and seeking after God, as a preparation for the winter session.

Sunday, 7.—For about two weeks past, ever since I read a passage in Guthrie's "Saving Interest," I have had a secret joyful hope that I really have believed on the Lord Jesus. I think that next Communion I may go forward to the Lord's Table as one that has received Him. If now I have reached a place of safety it is solely through divine grace. I did nothing but receive. Nearly twenty years of my life have been spent without Christ, and even yet I am not free from fear and sorrow.

Sunday, Dec. 26.—Last Sunday, Dr. —— examined me in his own house, and admitted me a communicant. . . I see that when I dwell any time upon myself, and think on my attainments, my heart is not profited; but whenever I get a sight of Christ's love it is full of life then.

* Hodder and Stoughton. 6s.

DR. STEPHENSON'S HOMES.

AN EXETER HALL FESTIVAL.

Exeter Hall looked its very best in spite of blackness and fog without. Every available inch of ground was occupied by an interested and enthusiastic audience, largely composed of young people. For was not the meeting to be held specially convened for the young friends interested in the Children's Home and its work of rescuing their less favoured brothers and sisters from the miseries and perils of destitute orphanhood, neglect, and poverty.

It was a fair and even picturesque sight towards which the eyes of all were directed. The large orchestra was filled with three hundred boys and girls, ranging from small children in arms to young men and maidens. Behind them hung various flags, bearing the initials of the houses of the Home to which the children belonged. The children of each house, numbering from twenty-five to thirty, wore caps and sashes of the same colour; the purpose, as explained by Dr. Stephenson, the Founder and Principal, being to impress the audience with the fact of the family principle underlying the work of the institution. Down below, on the large, green-carpeted platform, a dozen or more tiny children disported themselves on the floor, and their utter unconsciousness of the prominence of their position resulted in some charmingly naive and unstudied grouping as the evening passed. So like the happy, well-cared-for little ones of ordinary homes, and yet from what an abyss of misery and vice had some of those same bonny bairns been plucked like brands from the burning.

The chair was taken by Mr. John Hutton, Chairman of the London County Council, and speeches were delivered by Archdeacon Sinclair, Dr. Waller, Secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, and Dr. Stephenson. To the adult portion of the audience these speeches proved both interesting and instructive, but it is scarcely to be wondered at if the young people found more interest in the entertainment provided for them by the children of the Home in songs, recitations, and gymnastic diplays. The hall rang again and again to the shouts of delighted applause as little ones in their childish grace repeated with appropriate gesture their serious or humorous pieces.

But somehow, we who live behind the scenes were persistently haunted by the black shadows of the children's past on that bright festive evening. Knowing the heart of the audience, we also knew that if, for one brief moment, there could have been flashed side by side with each dear child who performed her little part, a vision of herself in her former vicious, pathetic, or destitute surroundings, the tumultuous cheers would have died away and given place to sighs and tears wrung from the hearts of pitiful fathers and mothers, and happy little ones. Did the audience know that each one of those fine manly boys of the Certified Industrial Branch of the Home, whose gymnastic displays brought down the house, had once stood before the magistrate charged with a first offence, for which in most cases the guilt of the parents' neglect or crime was wholly responsible.

Janie and Beatie and Gertie recited with vigorous action, but no one knew that two years ago Janie's drunken father climaxed his long course of cruelty and starvation by locking the seven-year-old child out into the pitiless streets of a northern town in mid-winter. No one could have guessed that Beatie, with her soft fair face and refined air, used to watch in the days that are past with terror for the step of her drunken father late at night, and when she heard it crept from her trundle bed to cower on the boards beneath, lest the heavy hand should deal out its unsparing blows upon the motherless child. Beatie is seven years old now, and four years have passed since that cruel reign of terror, which has almost faded from her mind.

And dark-eyed, dark-haired Gertie! What tragedies her short life had held! Mother in a lunatic asylum, baby sister and three other children left to shift for themselves while the hard-working father was away earning bread for the little family, till one day he was brought home fatally injured. But baby and Gertie and Nellie are safe under the protecting wing of the Children's Home, and remember only as an idle tale the dark story of their past.

But that bright little one of five years who stood on the table to repeat her few lines, and did it with inimitable gesture, surely around this motherless child and her two older sisters, but recently admitted, the darkest shadows which child-life can know had fallen. Not destitution, nor neglect, nor the cruelty of harsh words and harsher blows had driven these children to the refuge of the Home. Alas! amidst decent surroundings and the comforts of a superior working-man's home, these children's sweet childish innocence had been destroyed in a father's unnatural passion. Rescued with difficulty by the ever-watchful S.P.C.C., they have been passed into the safe keeping of the Home, while the wretched father is reaping the richly-merited reward of his crime in one of Her Majesty's prisons.

That shy little creature with the large blue eyes whom the kindly Archdeacon took on his knee—was her story whispered to him by the Principal who sat beside him? Its pathos and interest rendered it worth the telling. She, too, is one of three sisters admitted to the Home. The father fell down a flight of stairs in a drunken fit and was killed, and the much-wronged mother, hitherto respectable and well conducted, worked hard to maintain herself and her large family. Under the stress of circumstances she ultimately drifted into sin, and was lost sight of in a Continental town. Grandparents, themselves hard pressed with work and care, took the children, and finally made application to the Home on behalf of the promising younger ones.

But that nine-year-old child who stood beside the Archdeacon's knee answering his questions so demurely—how could he, how could anyone, guess from what depths of despair she had been rescued by the Society above referred to? "Blackleaded and then polished." Such was the brief description her personal appearance merited before she underwent various cleansing processes; for Ann had never remembered being washed in her life. Her half-witted mother never washed herself; why should she wash her child? The brutal father never provided food or clothing for the girl; why should the mother? Under the blighting influence of such logic, Ann dragged out the first seven years of her life, starved, beaten, and more than half naked. But nous avons changé tout cela, and so it came to pass that Ann made her début at Exeter Hall with dignity and propriety befitting the occasion.

Sister Frances.

In the twenty-fourth annual report of the Children's Home and Orphanage, Dr. T. B. Stephenson gives a good account of his varied and interesting work. He says: "Never before was the moral training of our children in better or more competent hands. It is a little thing that I have confidence in the officers and sisters. It is a great thing that they deserve both my confidence and that of everyone throughout the world who wishes well to our work. The ordinary income does not yet meet the ordinary expenditure. If it were not for 'windfalls,' and unexpected items of income, which cannot be depended on, our present rate of expenditure could not be maintained. But it ought not only to be maintained but increased. The number of applicants for our aid was never so large. We might add 200 to our numbers, and the cost per head would be even less than it is. Surely our friends will not allow us to lack the few hundreds a year extra which would make the current income equal to the current expenditure."

The family of the late Mr. James Barlow have presented to the institution a small farm known as Belmont, near Bolton; and it is suggested that a Holiday Home might be built thereon for poor children from the crowded centres of population in Lancashire. The hospital in Waterloo-road, E., is said to be at once the saddest and the brightest place in all our system. The saddest, for therein are gathered many forms and degrees of child-suffering. Some of them are wonderful, and almost appalling in their severity and continuance. The Princess Alice Orphanage, at New Oscott, Birmingham, has been quietly but safely growing. Communications to Dr. Stephenson should be addressed, The Children's Home, Bonner-road, London, E.

AFRICAN MISSIONS VISITED.—17.*

BY MR. D. A. HUNTER.

LEAVING Morija (Basutoland) I travelled northwards, visiting the mission stations en route. At Berea I found Mr. and Mrs. Jeanmairet, who formerly worked along with Mr. and Mrs. Colliard on the Zambesi. They had to leave the Barotsé Valley on account of severe sickness, and the doctor will not sanction their return.

I rode with Mr. Jeanmairet across the mountains to Thaba Bossion, another station, the centre of extensive work, and where a boarding school for girls is successfully carried on.

One feels more and more how necessary it is that the girls of Basutoland should not only be converted, but also educated and trained, in order that they may be fitted to fulfil the duties of Christian wives and mothers.

From Berea to Cana was a drive of some five hours, and, after passing the night there, I pushed on across the Chlotsé River and over Chlotsé Heights to Leribé.

Leribé was formerly in charge of Mr. Colliard before he went to the Zambesi. Mr. Ernest Mabille, the eldest son of Mr. Mabille, of Morija, is now stationed there.

A new out-station was about to be inaugurated at the village of Chief Khabo, in the Maluti Mountains, and Mr. Mabille invited me to join the party who were going for the occasion.

We started early on Wednesday morning, intending to camp near the site of the new out-station over Sunday, and to return on Monday. The party formed quite a caravan, with the missionary family in a wagon drawn by fourteen oxen, a Scotch cart drawn by six oxen, and loaded with the necessary tents, bedding, provisions, etc., Dr. Casalis and his family, who were also of the party, in their spider, and my buggy bringing up the rear.

Khabo welcomed us at his village, and pointed out a suitable spot where to pitch our camp. I wish I could give you some idea of the beauty of our surroundings. A grassy knoll, overlooking the Chlotsé River, and surrounded on three sides by the magnificent panorama of the Maluti Mountains; our camp, with the white tents and wagon cover, brought into lively contrast with the vivid green of the grass by the brilliant afternoon sunshine; the picturesque native huts clustering in groups on the hillsides. Could anything be more perfectly lovely? And yet there was the one sad thought that all those people, living amidst these beautiful surroundings, were living in gross superstition and sin, without God and without hope in the world? Only one single man, of all the subjects of this chief, is a Christian. Whose fault is it? "How can they hear without a preacher?" Many and many a village amidst these lovely mountains of Basutoland has not even its one Christian. Oh, when will Christians awake and obey Christ's command to "Seek first God's kingdom," and to "Preach the Gospel to every creature"?

The fine weather with which we started did not last. Thursday afternoon brought us a sharp thunderstorm, with wind and rain; Friday was worse, and Saturday worse still. Camp life under these circumstances began to grow decidedly uncomfortable. Sunday morning dawned wet and lowering, but fortunately it cleared up in the forenoon long enough for us to have the service. There is neither church, school-house, nor large building of any sort, so of course the meeting must needs be in the open. It was a truly interesting sight to watch the faces of that heathen congregation, numbering some hundred and fifty, as many of them listened, probably for the first time in their lives, to the good news. The chief was there with his great wife, the headmen with their wives, and of bright-faced boys and girls there were not a few.

Scarcely was the service concluded, and the congregation dispersed, than the rain came down with redoubled energy, and did not cease during the remainder of the day, nor all night. When we looked out next morning the Chlotsé was a roaring torrent, quite impassable, and effectually shutting us off from any chance of returning that day to the weather-proof mission-house. Our tents were saturated, and muddy pools had formed themselves inside, besides which it was almost impossible to light a fire and cook any food.

We took refuge in a little iron store, some mile or so from our camp, of which the storekeeper allowed us to take possession, and did everything he could for our comfort.

Here we waited two whole days for the Chlotsé to go down, and at last crossed on Wednesday morning, without misadventure, what proved to be still a strong and deep stream.

Khabo himself came down to assist our crossing, which was effected amid considerable excitement. One of the wagons stuck in the mud, and even twenty oxen could not move it until the wheels were dug out. I kept my camera busy, in order to preserve a record of the scene.

Once across the Chlotsé I pushed on my way northwards as far as Kabo, hoping to cross the Caledon into the Free State. Here, too, the water was too high, and it was only after waiting four days that I managed to cross; not, however, without an accident, which left me rather severely bruised, and caused considerable damage to my buggy.

* We have received from our correspondent accounts of the Wellington Holiness Convention and of the Basutoland Mission generally, but they are forestalled by articles that have already appeared.

BETHEL.

BY REV. DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

WHAT sweeter dream than this could be,
As day closed down its stately bars,
And sealed them with the midnight stars,
Where slept the Patriarch, and he Looked up through gates that opened wide,
And all the night seemed glorified—
A radiant canopy.

And wings in rapture of descent
Swept from the portals crowned with light;
And One who stood above the height
Spake down the void, as came and went
The angels in a ladder set,
That touched the high-domed coronet
That o'er the sleeper bent.

And such a voice, and such a theme;
He lay enchanted till the light
Dispelled the vision of the night,
And he awoke with awe supreme;
So near the gate of heaven, thought he,
With floods of glory like a sea—
Majestic in his dream.

Hard was the pillow, chill the dew,
That gathered on the cold grey stone;
But in the brightness as it shone
A long, long vista opened through;
To years beyond, and words of gold,
Great prophecies of love foretold:
And more the transport grew.

And as the sunrise glory came,
He made a pillow of the stone,
And poured out costly oil thereon;
And gave the place a fragrant name,
In long remembrance of the night
When he beheld the King of Light,
And angels winged with flame.

Cazenovia, N.Y., U.S.A.

MRS. MEREDITH'S INSTITUTIONS.—Two meetings were held in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, on Tuesday last week, for the purpose of praising God for the blessing vouchsafed during the past year in connection with Mrs. Meredith's Institutions and various other missions. A good number of workers and friends assembled. The chairmen were Rev. C. H. Sturdy, M.A., of Dorking, and Mr. Reader Harris; and Dr. T. J. Barnardo was one of the speakers. The meetings were deeply interesting throughout, and encouraging testimonies were given by various workers.

THE ROSS BIBLE CARRIAGES are doing an evangelistic work in association with several allied agencies, including a Gospel tent. In the twelfth annual report, Mr. John Coates states that during last year he visited thirteen towns and twenty-three villages, either for Bible carriage work, mission meetings, or house-to-house visitation. This involved travelling upwards of 2100 miles by road and rail. Mr. Coates says:—"We have no regular paid agents; it is our privilege, as far as the Lord enables us, to meet the need of brethren who have devoted their time in coming to our help at some of the large pleasure fairs during the months of May and June; and we trust the living God to meet our need. We now stand in need of funds for the furtherance of the work in the free distribution of Gospel literature, ground rents, horse hire, and mission work in dark villages of this county." Communications to Mr. Coates should be addressed Landseer House, Ross, Herefordshire.

SIGNS OF PROMISE IN CHINA.

BY REV. W. T. HOBART, PEKING.

THE Shan-tung district of the North China Mission is farthest from Peking, but in some respects the most interesting of our Methodist Episcopal fields. Though seven hundred miles away, we were providentially led there many years ago. Here at T'ai-shan, the Mecca of China, the humble Methodist itinerant preaches the glorious Gospel of the blessed God.

Rev. Frederick Brown, the presiding elder of the district, with his corps of native assistants, has invented or adapted a Gospel Wheelbarrow to be used in the sale of Scriptures and tracts. It is decorated with various Scripture texts, and thus preaches to the eye of every passer-by. This barrow the peripatetic bookseller can trundle all over the district, and he has only to stop and open the lids, when he is ready to supply all comers. Mr. Brown writes: "Thousands of pilgrims from all quarters come to worship at this 'sacred pile of rock,' and we are delighted to believe that many have heard the Gospel and have carried away many of our tracts and books to their distant homes. Our district tract wheelbarrow stood at the base of the mountain, and, as the weary, foot-sore pilgrims passed, thousands of volumes were sold."

Within the bounds of the district is a large city called Chi-ning-chou. We have been trying to gain a foothold there for years, but the literati have been very hostile. Some years ago, as an entering wedge, we opened a little bookstore on a quiet street, where we sold scientific works as well as Scriptures and tracts. But two years ago we were driven out of the city, and our shop was sealed up. Last fall, after the imperial edict tolerating Christianity had been issued, Mr. H. H. Lowry and Mr. Brown went to the city and called on the new official. They were well received. The magistrate himself procured the key and reopened our bookstore. After their return a good piece of property inside the East Gate was bought at a low figure, because it was "haunted." It was bought by telegraph. Think of that for conservative China! It was once an official residence. The "haunted" portion we have made into a native parsonage.

At An-chia-chuang, the oldest circuit on the district, we have taken an advance step. A friend offered them thirty dollars a year if they would open a girls' boarding school. A committee of five church members, including the pastor, chosen by the members on the circuit, were to have entire charge of the school. They wrote an agreement, pledging the churches on the circuit to provide the schoolroom and furniture, food and fuel, and to keep at least ten girls in school for ten months. The wife of the pastor gave her services as teacher. When Mr. Brown visited the school six months after its opening, he found twelve girls had been enrolled, and eight then present passed good examinations in their studies. Besides this, several girls, without urging, have unbound their feet. The church-members contributed thirteen hundredweight of grain, seven hundredweight of vegetables, and a like quantity of fuel. One member gave a room for the school, and others loan tables and benches. So the cause of God advances—a step here and another there. While it may seem slow to impatient minds, we glory in the fact that "our God is marching on" in China.

[Mr. Brown is personally responsible for the Bible and Tract Wheelbarrow, and would be glad of help. Ten pounds annually will support a teacher and barrow. His present address is 77, St. Peter's-road, Leicester.]

FRIENDLY FEMALE SOCIETY.—The half-yearly election and general meeting of this Society was held at the Cannon-street Hotel a few days ago, when the report presented showed the good work that was being done. The Society was inaugurated as far back as 1802, the Queen being now the patroness. It has for its object the relief of aged women of good character. During the past year 68 women have had homes to shelter them, free of rent, supplemented by a small annuity, 31 women upwards of 80 years of age have received six guineas, 53 women upwards of 70 years of age four guineas, and 154 cases have had casual relief granted them, making a total of 306 who have been helped and comforted. It is felt that many would be willing to cheer the declining days of their poorer sisters, if they knew of the existence of this charity. The Secretary, Mrs. Cordeaux, Woodford Green, Essex, would gladly afford any information. The treasurer is Miss Charlotte Spicer, Woodford Green, Essex.

A NEW YEAR'S SUPPER.

Nearly five thousand children, big and little, are catered for every day at Dr. Barnardo's Homes. It is, therefore, but a small thing to Dr. Barnardo to hold a New Year party at which the guests number two thousand. Yet the sight of such a crowd, packed row after row under the bright electric lamps of the Edinburgh Castle Mission Hall in Limehouse, is by no means unimpressive to an outsider. Last Thursday night, on which this New Year's party for 1894 was held, the proceedings went like clockwork—not, perhaps surprising when it is explained that it was the nineteenth time in annual succession on which Dr. Barnardo has acted as host to a similar gathering.

It was a merry New Year party, one of the merriest and happiest, probably, that could have been pitched upon in all London throughout the whole of last week's many festivities; but it suggested not a few sad and sombre reflections. For it was also known as a "Waifs' Supper," and not a single guest was present who did not wear a ragged "wedding garment." As we entered the hall we encountered two lads with flushed cheeks, who explained that they had been rejected because they were too respectable! "And," added one of them, with an injured air, "I've got a big hole in my boot, too!" But there were few, if any, of the 1800 boys and 200 girls inside the hall who were in danger of being considered "too respectable." As compared with even ten years ago, indeed, the appearance of the young people was decidedly improved; but it was painful to notice that in these days of schoolboards and social economy how many, how very many, little folks could be gathered in who had obviously not yet "come into their rights." Rags there were in plenty, and of bare feet not a few, even in that bitter night of east wind and snow-covered streets. And the wild licence, begotten of a street life and of lodging house conditions, only wanted opportunity to display itself in general uproar. "If I were to lose my hold of them," said Dr. Barnardo in a confidential aside, "for even five minutes, it would be all up!" But authority held sway, and the little people behaved themselves admirably till the very close of the proceedings.

The Hall was mapped out into numbered benches with a wide gangway up the centre, flanked on both sides by badged stewards. The rush at the doors by the ticketed crowd was tremendous, and the building seemed to fill in an instant after the doors were opened. Several candidates presented themselves with sham tickets, which had been printed surreptitiously in rough imitation of the original. Not a few had bare feet, red and chilblained from the icy slush. One little maid of perhaps thirteen years of age, with torn shawl over her otherwise bare head, and with the thinnest of frocks on, had walked wet-shod from Swingland-street, Holloway, and one lad had tramped actually six miles to partake of the feast provided. It was clear beyond possibility of doubt that the tickets had gone to the right addresses, and that Dr. Barnardo's agents had reached the lower stratum. Though excitement had lent a colour to their usually pallid cheeks, and imparted a lustre to their eyes, they presented a strong contrast to the healthy-looking lads, inmates of the Youths' Labour Home, who, attired in sailor suits, lined the hall ready to act as waiters.

Little time was lost in preliminaries. The Stepney Boys' Band played the guests in, and then, all standing, grace was sung in an orderly and reverent fashion, the shrill voices seeming to pierce the roof. The waiters retired at the double, and presently, amidst a din of cheering, reappeared with tray-loads of bags, in which were placed an abundant supply of bread-and-butter and cake. These bags were quickly distributed to the eager youngsters; mugs followed, and were filled from cans of hot tea. It was a slow, luxurious meal, enjoyed in a fashion which dyspeptics might well envy. A pleasant little entertainment followed, in which a wonderful conjuror and a remarkable dog troupe held the children's attention riveted.

But Dr. Barnardo is nothing if not practical. The supper was practical enough to these hungry waifs. Yet there was a deeper purpose still. Mr. George Nokes had ten minutes in which to tell the little people of Christ's love, and of his great invitation to the poor and wretched. The children listened quietly, and were prompt in replying to the little catechism with which Mr. Nokes emphasised his various points. And then Dr. Barnardo had a message for the life that now is. "Which among you will volunteer for admission to the Homes? The doors are open to the destitute." For an hour or more the sifting of the candidates who responded went on, and it was nearly midnight before the final result was attained: the immediate capture of some forty or fifty of the worst cases. Others were held over for future investigation. Many of the temporary guests had thus become permanent inmates, and this little New Year's party will have an abiding influence on the lives of not a few. Every guest, it may be added, was presented with a bright sixpence and a couple of oranges on departing. The hall was emptied amidst cordial shouts of "A Happy New Year," which might be taken as a vote of thanks from one of the most interesting parties that this festive season has witnessed.

Letters to the Editor.

GOSPEL DISTRIBUTION ABROAD.

Dear Sir,—Permit me to urge upon those of your readers who have the leisure and means to visit Italy, the importance of taking advantage of the unparalleled facilities that now exist for distributing tracts and Gospels in Italian towns. This may be done by anyone quite as freely as in England. The need of it is apparent from the fact that very few Italians have either a Testament or a Bible, but, although Catholics, nearly all readily accept any Gospel or tract offered to them. Separate Gospels in Italian are sold at prices varying from one halfpenny to three farthings each at the Bible depôts in Carlo Alberto-street in Milan, and Capo la Case-street in Rome, and also in Genoa, Venice, Turin, Florence, and Naples, where likewise there are tract depôts. Italian Gospels can also be got at one halfpenny each at the Trinitarian Bible Society in St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Milan, Turin, and Genoa can be reached from London by two days' and one night's travelling at a cost of £11 5s. for a first-class return ticket.

I have just spent five days in distributing 10,000 Gospels in various streets of Milan (population 400,000), and five days in giving away 9500 in different streets of Rome (population 400,000) to people walking in the thoroughfares. A good pedestrian might give them away quite as effectively by putting one into the letter-box or in the door of every house in the numerous streets. "Bradshaw's Continental Guide" (price 2s.) gives particulars of forty other Italian towns where probably very few inhabitants ever received a Gospel or a tract.

For some years past I have frequently gone from Saturday to Monday from London to some French or Belgian town with 2000 or 3000 French Gospels, and distributed them to people walking about, and from house to house. Either a porter or a vehicle can be obtained at a moderate price to follow the distributor with a heavy parcel of gospels about the town, from which he fills his pockets with them from time to time.—Yours faithfully,

Hôtel de Rome. A Londoner.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Sir,—I see in The Christian a notice of open-air work in Cork. I should like much to take counsel upon this all-important subject, with Christian brethren at this time, as to the true course that ought to be pursued in such circumstances. Should the Lord's children, as evangelists or preachers of the Gospel, "when persecuted in one city, flee to another"? or should they persevere? and how far?

The Society that I have the honour of representing has gone on from the very first on the principle of "No controversy;" but, if "a more excellent way" can be proved I have no doubt the president and committee would gladly be instructed in so important a subject, especially considering the present readiness of the Irish to hear the Word of God.

May I call your attention to the following weighty words of our late president, the Right Honourable the Earl of Shaftesbury:—

The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland deserves the special notice of open-air preachers, and other Christian workers amongst the masses. Although the agents of the society have been actively engaged in evangelistic work for seventy years, so humble and Christ-like has been their demeanour, that the aid of the police has never been called in for their protection. When it is considered how inflammable is the material with which they have had to deal, this is certainly a remarkable fact. The men are doing a noble work, but you make no boast. The report which Captain Kearney White has given is of an encouraging character. It shows a decline in the power of the priesthood, and taking this into consideration I, for one, should not be surprised that by-and-by we should be having Ireland establishing a society for the circulation of the Scriptures amongst ourselves; for, when they see sacerdotalism declining amongst them everywhere, but increasing in England, they might well think that we stood in need of such a society, and I for one should be happy to become a patron of it. The method you adopt is admirable: I have read the instructions laid down for the guidance of your agents, and nothing can be more judicious than your plan; you shut them out from controversy, and very wisely: for you thus teach people to trust more and more to the Bible itself, and believe that it is capable of doing its own work. Be certain that if you circulate the Bible, and that if it is read, it can be trusted to accomplish its own ends.

I take the liberty of asking, through your widely-read paper, the candid and dispassionate counsel of men of experience and grace.—Yours faithfully,

J. Kearney White.

27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, Jan. 4.

"THE COMING REVOLUTION."

Sir,—The interesting letter in your last issue by Mr. Bazett on the above subject calls for friendly criticism, which I should like to offer in a humble way, more with a view to gaining practical instruction than anything else.

In the first place, all will, I am sure, agree with him in saying that "the varieties of Socialists are as pronounced as the varieties of Christians." And not only so, but the varieties of Socialism are as numerous as its supporters. And the same thing applies to Christianity in real life. But at the same time there is one ideal Christianity, refined and perfected, yet to be realised, and one ideal Christian Socialism to be attained only in the "Kingdom of heaven," when He shall reign whose right it is.

My own limited experience of Christian Socialists is that the element of Socialism in their profession is far greater than that of Christianity. I hope I do not misjudge them, but certain it is that such will never succeed under the Gospel dispensation.

With regard to the last sentence of Mr. Bazett's letter, in which he suggests Christians being as good Socialists as our Lord and his Apostles, I would only remind him of the very inadequate result of the tremendous power in the life and preaching of Christ and his followers in their own generation, and so on all down the ages to the present day, when the same thing exists. The natural inquiry of astonishment is "Why is it so?" The solution to this unnatural state of things is to be found entirely and to be found alone in one little word—little, and yet encasing and pervading the whole world—SIN; and "This is the condemnation, that Light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than Light because their deeds are evil." The same is the cause of all the social evils of the nineteenth century. The world's great threefold need is Gospel preaching, Gospel reception, and Gospel living, and when these great claims are satisfied, and then only, we shall see the ideal Christianity manifested in the lives of its subjects.

It may be, and unquestionably is, unjust to lay the blame of the crimes of Anarchism upon Socialism and Socialists as a whole; but at the same time it is not to be denied that there are many individuals, either Christian professors of Socialism, or Socialistic professors of Christianity, whose words and actions before those who, no more than themselves, are un-Christian Anarchists, do much to extend the unholy principles and further the Satanic deeds which are to-day the outcome of the prevalent revolutionary spirit of the age; and these in the light of Gospel teaching are most entirely blameworthy.

I am sorry that Mr. Bazett refrained from saying more than he did, as he only said enough to make it appear to me, and doubtless to other readers, that he is, with the greater number of Socialists, utterly at sea as to what should be looked for as the ideal medium of Christian Socialism, or the Socialism of Christianity, but not enough to show what are his views thereupon.—Yours truly, Cantab.

GEORGE-STREET MISSION, LAMBETH WALK.—It has been resolved to alter the name of this mission to "Lambeth Walk" Mission.

THE OLD WELCOME YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.—Mrs. E. Fisher writes: Our anniversary meeting will be held January 24 at 4 p.m. in the Lecture Hall, 186, Aldersgate-street, when a number of ladies will give some account of their happy service during the past year amongst the City young women. Sympathisers will be cordially welcomed.

BAROTSE MISSIONS.—Rev. J. Travis, secretary of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society, writes that communication with the Barotse Valley, South Central Africa, is again open. It has been interrupted, first by the small-pox epidemic, which swept the upper part of the valley, and next by the Matabele war. It is probable that no letter written in the valley between March and October has reached this country. Two missionaries of the society have been in the valley for over three years trying to obtain the King's permission to establish a mission in his kingdom, and hearing nothing of them for months, there was grave anxiety. The painful suspense is now at an end, for a letter, written at Kazangula in October has just arrived, and in it is the statement that they expected to reach Mashuhulombwe land by Christmas.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A WELL-ATTENDED New Year's reception was given in connection with the Leamington Y.M.C.A.

The Leipzig Association has received from the King an expression of his best wishes for the prosperity of its work.

The North German work has sustained a very severe loss by the death of its president, Baron J. von Oertzen.

Railroad Y.M.C.A. work in the far North-west (Idaho) is reported as prosperous, and in a measure acts as a pioneer Christian agency.

The Buckholz Association has received from a member of the Municipal Council the sum of 5,000 marks for its building fund.

The Associations of Denmark have recently formally adopted what is known as the Paris Basis, which renders them an integral part of the International Federation.

The State Convention of the Missouri Association shows thirty-three branches, all reporting vigorous work. At an evangelistic meeting held in connection with the convention many young men professed conversion.

The Derby Association on Wednesday week gave a tea and entertainment to 500 poor children. The New Year's soirée in connection with the Association was a splendid success, the place being crowded throughout the whole evening.

The Y.M.C.A. at Yale University is now laying particular stress on Bible study, and over two hundred students regularly attend the classes. One of the features of the Bible instruction is a series of addresses by Gen. O. O. Howard, Revs. John Hall, D.D., and Henry Van Dyck, D.D.

At the New Year's Breakfast of the Edinburgh Association there was an excellent gathering, over a hundred sitting down to breakfast. The chairman welcomed his guests, and wished them a good new year in the highest and best sense in a few well-chosen hearty words. Bright, earnest words followed by various speakers.

The Tower Hamlets Y.M.C.A. Mission engages in open-air work in leading thoroughfares, etc., of East London and in Victoria Park. It gives entertainments and Gospel services in chapels and mission-rooms of every denomination. It provides also a reading-room, library, Bible-class, shorthand-class, cricket, and cycling clubs for young men.

The work in Austria is carried on under very adverse conditions. The secretary at Nosislav reports that the Association there is strenuously opposed. In Norway, on the other hand, the work flourishes, and one after another the Associations are entering into suitably equipped premises. Good news comes also from Switzerland, where much good work is being done amongst soldiers.

Mr. George Williams delivered his annual address at Aldersgate-street on Sunday, when a large number of young men were present. The previous Thursday the president held his New Year's reception at the same Association. A time of great blessing was experienced, no fewer than twenty young men signifying decision for Christ at the close of an address by Mr. W. R. Lane, evangelist.

The Association of West Newton, Pa., feeling the need of awakening, called the ministers of the different denominations together to consult with them in regard to an evangelist. The result was an arrangement with Major George A. Hilton for an eight days' series of meetings. God has wonderfully blessed the mission. Many souls came to Christ, and Christians were awakened and made more zealous.

The monthly meeting of the National Executive was held on Friday afternoon. Reports were received from the travelling secretary of good work in various parts of the country. Mr. Black, of Belfast, wrote:—"We have to thank God for many tokens of blessing throughout Ulster during the past month. In Belfast district the work was never so hopeful or so fruitful. During the past month over twenty young men have made profession of accepting Christ in our own Belfast Association."

Mr. Albert W. Clark, president of the Association at Prague, Bohemia, describes the work in that city as follows:—"When our organisation secured legal recognition in 1887 there were few to welcome it. 'What do we want of such an English institution?' was a question on many lips. All such prejudice has disappeared, and now in Bohemia and Moravia there are twelve similar Associations. Our rooms in Prague, open every evening, are a centre of most important influence."

THE SCOVELL-ROAD MISSION, S.E.—The thirty-first annual report of this mission states that the past twelve months have been very encouraging. Over thirty persons have professed conversion, while forty-four pledges have been taken. The report is worth reading, and may be had of Robt. H. Parsons, 82, Great Bland-street, Great Dover-street, S.E.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE statistics of the Established Church for the past year show 1348 parishes, and 605,000 communicants.

A public committee has been appointed in Dundee to test the efficacy of Dr. Tyson's cure for intemperance. Seventeen "subjects" have been selected for experiment.

During the first week of the year, the daily prayer meeting in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, lasted for two hours each day, and the proceedings were unusually interesting and stimulating.

Selkirk has lost one of its best citizens by the death of Ex-Bailie Johnstone, who was eighty-eight years of age, and an elder of the West United Presbyterian Church for the long period of fifty-one years.

The Roman Catholics in Scotland are stated in their directory to number 363,000, and are thus distributed: Glasgow diocese, 240,000; Edinburgh, 52,000; Dunkeld, 30,000; Galloway, 17,000; and Aberdeen and Argyle 12,000.

The Association for Improving the Condition of the People has resolved to start a labour colony on a farm in Ayrshire, which is to be bought and stocked. A start could be made by employing about 50 men, and a capital of £20,000 is asked for.

Mr. Sims, of America, whose success as an evangelist in Glasgow has been so phenomenal, began last week a new course of lectures on the Book of Revelation, which are to be given on Thursday evenings in the Christian Institute.

Mr. Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, intimates receipt of a cheque for £1000 from a Glasgow friend by way of memorial of a dear mother now deceased. The money now on hand will put up the executive buildings, and one of the consumptive homes.

From every quarter there comes the declaration that the closing of public-houses on New Year's Day was a great social boon. Magistrates have taken occasion to thank "the trade" for so generally complying with the request, which was made in the best interests of the community.

Montrose has recently lost one of its best and most prominent men by the death of Mr. Andrew Cobb, who, a few years ago, on the attainment of his jubilee as a teetotaller, was presented with an illuminated address and a purse of sovereigns. He dead suddenly on his way to church, at the age of eighty-nine.

Rev. Mr. Pirie, of Guthrie Memorial Free Church, Edinburgh, died very suddenly last week. He gathered together a congregation in the Cowgate, and was ordained over them in 1859. He went to Norwich for a short time, but returned to Edinburgh, where, by earnest aggressive work, he built up another congregation.

The able and energetic pastor of Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, Rev. J. J. Mackay, has entered on the onerous duties of editorship. He has started a vigorous monthly called The Christian Voice, the first number of which shows plenty of vitality and actuality. We wish Mr. Mackay all success; we feel sure he will never drop his pen into gall instead of honest ink.

The East-end of Glasgow has suffered a heavy loss by the death of Rev. Robert Hood, of Muslin-street E.U. Church. He was a preacher who had the ear of the masses, and so fruitful had his ministry been that a new church had to be built for his congregation a few years ago. He was also an accomplished writer, and was president of the Evangelical Union in 1886. He died at the age of fifty-five, and in the thirty-first year of his ministry.

Here is Rev. John Robertson's account of his experience of Presbyterian ordination, as given in his monthly paper, The Christian Scotsman:—"We were ordained to the holy ministry by the Presbytery in an unholy public-house, amid the clinking of unholy glasses and the popping of unholy corks from unholy bottles of unholy champagne, gifted by an unholy sinner, who lay dead drunk in his room upstairs! We have always had the feeling that we were not properly ordained in this wine-bibbing, Presbyterial orgie at Stonehaven, and have had serious thoughts of applying over again for ordination to—the Salvation Army!"

The Glasgow licensing magistrates are considering the advisability of putting in force certain legal powers they possess to close drink-shops at 9 p.m. in a selected district of the city. Speaking at Hawick Professor Orr, of the U.P. College, Edinburgh, said that notwithstanding many obstacles, total abstinence was making headway. It was becoming more and more a power in the country, more and more influential in political and social matters and in the churches than it used to be. Over 90 per cent. of the students of the U.P. Church were total abstainers, and he believed that in a few years it would be a very rare thing to find a minister of the U.P. Church, the Free Church and, he hoped, the Established Church, too, who were not total abstainers.

IRISH NOTES.

A PRESBYTERIAN New College has been opened in Stephen's Green, Dublin, under hopeful auspices.

Mr. John Beattie has been conducting Gospel meetings at Cromac-square Mission, Belfast, with many tokens of blessing.

A conference for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in Larne under the presidency of Rev. E. Gilfillan, when papers were read and addresses deliverded on several important subjects.

Evangelistic meetings have been held in the Methodist Church, Holywood, co. Down, by Rev. Henry Ball, and in Roscrea by Rev. James Kirkwood. In each case souls professed to have decided for Christ.

A successful meeting to bid farewell to Rev. Mr. Wilson, who is going out as a Presbyterian missionary to India, has just been held in Waterside Presbyterian Church, Derry. Rev. Drs. Stuart and Rodgers took part in the proceedings.

During the past month the agents of the Belfast Female Mission, who are doing an excellent work, visited 1,264 families, spoke to 1,817 persons, held 60 prayer meetings, paid 183 visits to 62 sick persons, and relieved 222 poor people.

Watchnight services were held in many Episcopalian and Presbyterian Churches, as well as in nearly all those belonging to the Methodists. They have not for many years been as largely attended or as impressive. In several cases hundreds were turned away for want of room.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

WENDOVER BAPTIST C.E. SOCIETY has been formed with fourteen new members.

The Leeds C.E. Union has grown in twelve months from three to eighteen societies.

The South Wales and Monmouthshire C.E. Union, which only numbered twenty-nine societies last July, now reports over sixty.

The Calder Vale Union have formed a Look-out Committee to arrange that each society should visit some other society once every quarter, in order to form a mutual acquaintance between them.

The Brighton-road, Dublin, Society lately conducted the week-night service. Miss Mattie Rogers (vice-president) conducted the meeting. Christmas carols were sung, and the president dwelt briefly on "The second coming of our Lord." Tea was provided by the Social Committee.

Out of a total of ninety-three active members of Albion Congregational Society, Ashton-under-Lyne, seventy-three are members of the church, forty-three having been received into fellowship since the formation of the Society, two years ago. Forty-five of the Sunday-school teachers are active members, and thirty-four have become teachers since the Society commenced. Eleven of the young men are now on the preachers' plan.

THE CEYLON AND INDIAN GENERAL MISSION has issued the first number of a monthly organ entitled Darkness and Light. (1d. Marlborough & Co.) It contains extracts from the letters of workers, and other articles, all spiritual in tone and character. Mr. Gracie writes that the party of which he formed one was met at Colombo by V. D. David, the Tamil evangelist. He says:—"Some of us who knew David in England and had been much blessed through him, were made to praise the Lord, when we got a glimpse of his ever-beaming face." Mr. Mallis reports attending an open-air meeting held by David:—"A crowd soon gathered round us of about two hundred. They listened very attentively, in fact far better than the people do at home. David seems to be greatly loved among his own people. I had the privilege of giving my first message to the heathen through a Singalese interpreter."

FRANCE AND THE GOSPEL.—The Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christendom writes:—"There is an undoubted readiness to hear and to approve what is true, just, and good among our population of all classes, but the grand point is to bring them to decision for God. It is the personal pressing of this point that is distasteful, and requires dauntless personal conviction that it is the way appointed of God. All have not yet arrived at this conviction, and so the prey escapes. Rough treatment is imminent where Gospel work is genuine and souls are saved. Some few years back, when evangelists met with brickbats and noisy opposition, extinguishers were immediately put upon their zeal by their various committees. But now things are improving, though caution and prudence are impressed on daring evangelists as the better part of valour. The erroneous idea is not yet obsolete, that the arousing of the enemy to action is destructive to the work. Better let the strong man armed keep his goods in peace."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Moody is conducting an evangelistic campaign in Providence. The first mass meeting was held on December 17th, but work had been carried on for some time previous under the care of Messrs. E. W. Bliss and F. H. Jacobs, Major Whittle, and Mr. and Mrs. Wilson.

Mr. William Nobbs commenced a month's mission at the Great Assembly Hall, London, on the last Sunday of the year. He also took the watch-night service a few hours later. Invitations were given to sign the temperance pledge, and 160 came forward to sign. Many anxious ones remained to be spoken to about their souls. Edwin Philbrick.

Ashton-under-Lyne.—Rev. F. Hart hopes to conduct a ten days' mission in St. James's Church, January 16 to 25. Great efforts are being made to reach the people, including house-to-house visitation and open-air work. This is a very poor parish of some 8000 souls, and gifts of tracts and Gospel papers would be welcome. These may be sent to Mr. J. Bennett, Eaton-terrace, Ashton-under-Lyne.

Messrs. Munhall and Birch have completed a very successful series of Evangelical services at Lima, O. Eight of the churches united in the movement. The meetings were held in the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, with additional services in the Presbyterian church on Sundays. Over four hundred persons professed conversion. One of the greatest benefits resulting was the stimulus given on every hand to the careful study of the Bible.

Rev. B. Fay Mills has had a grand work at Ann Arbour, in connection with the Students' Christian Association at the University of Michigan. The secretary writes:—"We have just closed a very profitable series of meetings with Mr. B. Fay Mills, whose presence is an inspiration in itself, and when we add to his power as a preacher the irresistible generalship he is endowed with, we have such a combination as is seldom seen. Numbers, of course, can express only a part of the results—there have been several hundred conversions, many of them students. The attendance at young men's meetings has run from fifteen hundred to thirty-five hundred, while at some of the day meetings there have been over twelve hundred. The spiritual impulse given our workers has been of the greatest value, but by no means least do we consider the lessons of promptness and decision that Mr. Mills's every act teaches." Mr. Fay Mills has recently closed a series of Gospel services in Rahway, N.J., lasting for two weeks. All the Protestant churches, with one exception, united in the work; and on the last day many of the stores were closed, and business men with their employés were present.

Mr. J. J. Sims has been holding special meetings in the City Hall, Glasgow. The City Hall becoming uncomfortably crowded for the evening meetings, Mr. Sims removed the Sunday night meeting to St. Andrew's Hall, which seats 4000 to 4500, and this hall was filled, in spite of a heavy rain and gale of wind. There have been many cases of conversion. On the last night in the City Hall, at the close of a very solemn meeting, where about 3500 were present, amongst others, two young men were spoken to, and found trembling. They both accepted Christ. A gentleman came to the Sunday meetings and was deeply convicted. He came the following Thursday evening, and, at the close of the meeting, came into the anteroom to Mr. Sims, utterly broken down, weeping like a child. He accepted Christ, and of his own accord, for conscience' sake, sent in his resignation as manager of a wine and spirit store. An infidel was coming to one of the Sunday afternoon meetings, and got drunk on the road. Next Sunday he came, and was seen the week after "clothed and in his right mind," distributing the notices of the meeting. A man of sixty-five followed Mr. Sims on the street, and broke down and accepted Christ like a child. One Christian lady testified at a parlour Bible-reading that she knew personally of four and five conversions from each meeting; another met six who had accepted Christ through the address on Heaven. Others give similar testimony. Mr. Sims has also been holding week-night meetings in Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, with an attendance of 1000 to 1200 and testimony of real blessing.

RESCUE WORK.—On Wednesday, Jan. 3, late at night, during the time that a blinding blizzard was blowing, a little group of our fallen sisters were sitting round a great fire at Sermon-lane, Islington, at a meeting convened by the committee of the Midnight Meeting Movement. The friends present joined the young women; saw to their physical needs first, and then Mr. Henry Dawe, the superintendent of the Mission, talked to them in a most suitable manner from our Lord's words, "A place for you." Although it was all very informal, a truly devotional spirit pervaded the whole, and some very difficult cases were dealt with at the time.

PERSONALIA.

Lady Henry Somerset recently addressed nine mass meetings and conferences in North Wales within ten days.

Mr. Spencer Walton has lately conducted missions in New York and Brooklyn. He and Mrs. Walton hope to return to England in March.

Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, well known for his work as hon. sec. of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, is lying seriously ill. He is suffering from rheumatic fever, but incessant prayer on his behalf is being made by many who know and esteem him. His medical adviser says that, should he recover, he will have to take a sea voyage or make a prolonged stay by the sea.

Miss Isabel M. Angus, who was summoned home owing to the illness of her mother, who expired before her arrival, has now set sail on her return to India, intending to resume her service in Bhiwani, where with Miss Theobald and Miss Farrer, M.B., B.S., she is engaged in Zenana and other work.

Bishop Pelham is, we regret to hear, growing weaker. He can no longer take nourishment, and the gravest apprehension is felt by the family. His illness has been marked by a peculiarly pathetic incident. Soon after the Bishop was seized with influenza his wife died. Mrs. Pelham was buried on Thursday.

Mr. Isaac Skidmore, who has fulfilled a lengthened evangelistic engagement at Enfield, is now open to take Gospel services, with or without the aid of the limelight lantern; or to give lantern lectures. He is well recommended as an earnest and effective speaker. His address is 103, Percival-road, Bush Hill Park, Enfield.

Mr. John Boulderson Barkworth, late of South Leigh, Hampshire, has left to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution £1000, for a lifeboat and boat-house on the east coast not less than 100 miles from the mouth of the Humber; £500 to the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street; and £500 for the poor of Humbledon.

Rev. W. E. Rice, of Adelaide, South Australia, who recently came to England on a visit, has decided to remain in the old country, his wife's health having much improved since she has been in her native land. Mr. Rice has, therefore, cabled his resignation of the pastorate of the North Adelaide Baptist Church, which he has held for the past nine years.

Mrs. G. S. Reaney.—After a break in her "Sunday afternoon services for the people" of nearly three years, owing to enfeebled health, Mrs. G. S. Reaney is about to resume her meetings for men and women, the first being announced for Sunday next, January 14, at "The Good Duke Humphrey Hall" (near the Naval College), East Greenwich. The meeting will begin at 3.30. There will be a special choir, assisted by violins, to lead the singing.

Mr. Josiah Flynt, a young American of first-rate antecedents and education, has become an enthusiastic student of sociology, and devoted his special attention to the causes, career, and cure of the tramp. His articles have appeared in The Contemporary Review and The Century Magazine, and he is at present writing a book which will be, if possible, even more interesting and instructive, for the book will deal with individual instances of tramp life.

Mr. James Atkinson, of the Christian Community, will attain on Monday, January 22, the jubilee of his signing the temperance pledge. A meeting is to be called on that date in the Memorial Hall, London-street, Bethnal Green. All abstainers over fifty years' standing are specially invited; if they will communicate with Mr. Atkinson, 28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, tickets will be sent to them. Such a gathering of experienced abstainers is sure to do good.

Mr. James Jardine, a well-known Manchester merchant, who died in September last, has left £348,669. Amongst the charitable bequests are Ardwick and Ancoats Hospital and Dispensary, £1000; Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes and Children's Aid Society, £1000; Manchester Warehousemen and Clerks' Orphan Schools, £1000; Northern Counties Hospital for Incurables, £1000; General Hospital and Dispensary for Sick Children, Pendlebury, £500; Royal Eye Hospital, Manchester, £500; St. Mary's Hospital and Dispensary, Manchester, £500; and Clinical Hospital for Women and Children, Manchester, £500.

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—In accordance with custom, the sailors in port were invited to participate on New Year's night in a social evening at the New Institute of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, Ratcliff Highway. Upwards of 400 were present during the evening, the majority of whom sat down to tea. Mr. John McCall presided over the meeting. Stirring addresses were given by various friends. Mr. Hill announced that at the close of the watch-night service thirteen signed the pledge, and some professed faith in the Saviour.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Young Abstainer will now appear quarterly instead of monthly; it has, however, been enlarged and improved.

"If we could abolish strong drink," says Mr. Price Hughes, "we should cut at the very roots of pauperism, gambling, debauchery, and crime."

"Wings," the organ of the Women's Total Abstinence Union (Simpkin, Marshall), contains, with other good matter, a portrait and sketch of Mrs. Stewart, of Enfield.

The Independent Order of Rechabites has made another record year in the United Kingdom, having opened no less than 205 new Tents—115 being for adults and ninety for juveniles.

President Cleveland, in his recent message to the United States Congress, recommended that an Act should be passed "prohibiting the sale of arms and intoxicants" by American citizens in Africa.

The expectation that Ireland will be regenerated by politics—come from what quarter they may—is stupid to the last degree, says The Christian Irishman, in face of the appalling rage for strong drink among the people.

The Band of Hope Chronicle for January devotes several columns to the proposed renewal of their school lecture scheme, and announces that £6,000 has already been subscribed towards the £10,000 required for the next five years.

The friends in connection with the Preston branch of the British Women's Temperance Association are doing a noble work in a variety of ways. Their latest proposal is to build in the town a memorial hall in honour of the seven men of Preston.

The sobriety of the soldiers at Aldershot during the Christmas festivities is noteworthy. There was an entire absence of drunkenness, while on Christmas night only one man of the whole division was put in the guardroom by the military police.

In her New Year's message Lady H. Somerset alludes to the alarming increase of inebriety among women. She feels sure that the Government will soon recognise the principle that the treatment of inebriates must be transferred from the prison to the hospital.

We are more attracted by the contents of Lady Henry Somerset's new paper, The Woman's Signal, than by its outward appearance. The paper is poor, and the single illustration is a smudge. Experience will no doubt rectify this. There is plenty of strong writing in it, and we cannot doubt its success.

Rev. J. J. Mackay, of Glasgow, thinks that "teetotallers do not get well served yet at railway refreshment rooms." He and a travelling companion tried to get some soup at Inverness Station, "but the young ladies were so busy supplying strong drink and smiling at the drinkers that we had to start again fasting."

A man named Scrivener, thirty-five years of age, went last week into the Milton Arms, Sheffield, a beerhouse, and, boasting of his capabilities as a beer-drinker, backed himself to drink a dozen glasses of beer in an hour. The wager was made, and Scrivener drank nine glasses of beer in half an hour. He then exclaimed, "I've had enough," and fell dead.

This is the jubilee year of the Scottish Temperance League, which was formed on Nov. 5, 1844. The new register just issued states that its membership now consists of 9072 adult members, with 2436 juveniles, and 417 affiliated societies and lodges. Scotsmen at the Antipodes anticipated the jubilee demonstrations to be held this year in Scotland by holding a meeting at Sydney on Nov. 6 last, when enthusiastic speeches were delivered.

Mr. Matthew Burnett, who last year conducted successful evangelistic and Gospel temperance missions in various parts of the kingdom, is now drawing up his programme for 1894. His address is still 10, Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, N.W. Since Mr. Burnett resumed work upwards of 12,000 persons have signed the temperance pledge, and many of them have also accepted Christ. This labourer asks for a continuance of the prayers of God's people that much richer blessing may be given during his forthcoming missions.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a ten days' Mission to be held by Rev. F. Hart, of Kimberley, in St. James's Church, Ashton-under-Lyne, Jan. 16 to 25.—For a ten days' Mission, Jan. 6 to 15, at Bournin Chapel, Kingswood, by Messrs. Bray and Harding.—For a Mission at Sowerby Bridge, by S. Peacock, to commence Jan. 13.—For Missions to be held at Ninfield, Sussex, from Jan. 14 to 21 by James White.—For a mission to men, conducted by Mr. J. Crofton Rainey, at Oxford Y.M.C.A., from Sunday, January 14, to Sunday, 21st.—For a mission to be held by Mr. H. Lakin, at St. Philip's Church, Manchester, commencing January 13, until the 28th,

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

AT HOXTON HALL.

Nearly a hundred poor people were gathered together on Christmas evening to a social tea. A very substantial repast was partaken of, and the evening devoted to social converse and homely games.

On New Year's Day the usual children's dinner was given to 300 poor children in the district. Kind friends had supplied the provisions—meat, baked potatoes, and puddings. Mr. Wm. Noble gave some selections on the concertina. Choruses were also sung by the teachers of the Sunday-school. The workers feel that some little has been done in this way of which their Master will approve, and trust many other ways and means may be afforded to relieve much of the oppression from circumstances which now exists.

A CITY MISSION TEA.

A very pleasant gathering took place on Wednesday week at the Lecture Hall of the City Temple, on the occasion of the annual tea given to the poor folk of the Holborn, Fleet-street, Temple, and Eagle-street districts. A public meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. Justice Bruce. The report showed that there are two mission-rooms—one in Dean-street, Fetter-lane; and the other at Eagle-street, Red Lion-square. At these rooms four services are held weekly. In addition to house-to-house visitation, the casual wards in Robin Hood-court, and the lodging-houses, workshops, and factories, are also visited. The Chairman referred to his unabated interest in the work of the mission. It was impossible, he declared, to calculate the good the missionaries were doing. But for such agencies crime would be much more rife. It was this quiet and unobtrusive labour—labour that was often overlooked—that was not only solacing the poor in their difficulties, but directing them in the paths of truth and honesty.

THE PONTYMOILE MISSION.

New Year's Day was celebrated by a meat-tea for the unemployed. The Mission has been giving dinners to the children six days a week and a breakfast on Sunday, and as the men have been regularly given one meal a week and the women three meals, it is no new thing to have the hall crowded with hungry folk; but on New Year's Day it was felt that it would be a good thing to have the fathers and mothers together for once. They wanted cheering up, for hope deferred makes the heart sick, and they had bad news on Saturday. They had hoped—indeed, they had been half led to suppose—that part of the works would be re-started this week; but they were informed on Saturday that there was less chance than ever of resumption. Mr. T. M. Wintle states that a fortnight ago the Mission had provided 35,250 meals to the unemployed; but since then they had been so busy that they had not had time to make up the returns. They had, however, sent 600 Christmas dinners into the homes of the people; and 200 people had tea in the hall on New Year's Night. For this, tickets had been distributed; and Mr. Wintle mentioned that he had visited every home, as an effort to cheer them up. In consequence of the prevalent distress the Pontypool Chamber of Trade have voted a sum of money towards a relief fund, adopting the wise course of having this administered by experienced workers, instead of setting new and untried men to work. The local Press states the facts thus:—The secretary (Mr. W. G. Farr) suggested that as Mr. T. M. Wintle, of the Mission Hall, Pontymoile, was already giving relief, and as he was more acquainted with each individual case than anybody else that the money should be handed to him rather than have a relief committee independently of him, and that a committee be appointed to canvass the tradespeople for subscriptions. This was agreed to.

POOR CHILDREN AT THE GUILDHALL.

The ancient Guildhall has witnessed many stirring scenes, but seldom have such guests enjoyed its banquets as those who on Tuesday week were entertained therein. Hosts of the children of the poor were the invites. They had been brought there by the Ragged School Union; for this was a banquet for children, children from the slums of every part of London. There were 1500 of them; poor, ill-clad, half-starved, wretched-looking children for the most part, who hardly know what a good "square" meal is, much less a banquet. They were all under fourteen years of age, and there was an equal number of boys and girls. They marched from their several districts, with a banner distinguishing each school, and attended by their teachers. They came trooping into the Guildhall soon after five o'clock. Tables were ready laid, and the expectant children were soon seated around them, anxiously awaiting six o'clock, the hour at which the dinner was to commence. Poor little wizened mites, some of them minus any headgear, and with the stamp of destitution upon them; it was a sight which would have gladdened the heart of their first president, the late Lord Shaftesbury. His successor in office, Lord Compton, was prevented from being present. Archdeacon Sinclair, who was also unavoidably absent, had written wishing "A Happy New Year" to all the children, and expressing the opinion that the idea of a New Year's banquet for 1500 poor children at the Guildhall was "admirable." The youngsters came from 17 different districts in the metropolis, including Clerkenwell, Hoxton, Spitalfields, Holborn, Smithfield, St. Luke's Kent-street, Aldgate, Southwark, Bethnal-green, City-road, Haggerston, Hackney, Borough, Lambeth, and Bow-common. The funds for the entertainment had been raised by the editors of The Young Man and The Young Woman. After a hearty and plentiful dinner, addresses were delivered by Mr. Orsman, Alderman Treloar, the Lord Mayor, and others, and a pleasing entertainment followed, in which the Stockwell Orphanage choir and Dr. Barnardo's boys' band took part.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES MITCHELL.

Mr. Mitchell, of Austin, Texas, was suddenly called to his reward on November 21, 1893. He was married to Ann Stephen at Lewisham, Kent, in 1866, and came to Texas from London in 1870. He was a valiant soldier for the Lord; he esteemed it a privilege to speak to saint and sinner of his Master.

Austin, Texas. E. S. MITCHELL.

LIEUT.-COL. MINCHIN, WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

After a consistent walk of seventy-two years in the enjoyment of his Saviour's love, Lieut.-Col. Minchin died on December 16, at Weston-super-Mare, at the advanced age of ninety-one years. He first received his commission at sixteen years of age, and shortly after went out to India. At nineteen a serious illness brought him near death. There was no one at hand who could point him to Jesus; but the early teachings of a godly father and a devoted minister led him to his Bible; and he rose from his sick-bed rejoicing in the forgiveness of sins, and determined to live as a soldier of Christ. He was well known and much beloved by the European residents in the different Indian stations where he had command. He retired from the service in 1858, and since then has resided mostly at Weston-super-Mare. It may be worthy of note that one Sunday in September 1892, four venerable servants of Christ were together at a meeting in Weston-super-Mare — Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple, George Müller, Thomas Newberry, and Col. Minchin, their united ages being over 340 years.

MR. R. J. CURTIS, RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

Many earnest workers in all parts of London will feel they have lost a true friend and experienced counsellor in the death of Mr. Curtis, who for thirty years was closely associated with the Ragged School Union, and whose face and voice were familiar in every one of the 200 schools and missions scattered over the Metropolis. This veteran of service passed away at his residence in Lewisham on New Year's Day, after a brief illness, at the age of seventy-seven. Converted in early years, he began to teach in the Sunday school at the age of seventeen. A little later he took up work in Deptford, and, after a brief training, was put in charge of a very rough school in Tothill Fields, Westminster. After twenty years labour in day schools, he entered the service of the R.S.U. as visitor, and his reports, in these early years, supply graphic descriptions of the difficulties of pioneer work in the ragged schools. Until his retirement in 1890 he continued, as organising secretary, to visit incessantly from mission to mission, and his appearance, followed as it was by genial and helpful words, was always hailed with delight. So great was his love for this work that even after his retirement he frequently appeared in one or other of the ragged schools, doing in a voluntary way just that useful service he had so long rendered. His funeral took place on Saturday at Lewisham Cemetery, where in 1888 he had laid the body of his wife.

REV. JOHN GREEN, BROCKLEY.

The death of Rev. John Green, of Brockley, is news which will sadden many hearts all the world over. Leaving the Pastors' College as a young man, he made proof of a useful ministry at Stogumber in Somerset, and Broughton in Hampshire, but although he was greatly beloved as a pastor, his exertions were confined to a comparatively narrow circle. In the course of a few years an affection of the heart laid Mr. Green low, and death was expected to supervene without much delay. The Lord, however, added fifteen years to his servant's life, in order that he might organise and carry out a scheme for the evangelisation of a class of people than whom none could possibly lead a more solitary life.

While occupying the invalid's couch, Mr. Green thought of lonely lighthouse keepers and occupants of lightships round our coasts, and he determined to send parcels of Christian literature for their instruction and comfort. His kindness was highly appreciated, and with characteristic devotion he added colonial and foreign waters to his "sphere." The work involved much anxiety, but it invested his life with fresh interest; and from the study of maps and charts, and the promotion of correspondence, Mr. Green acquired an acquaintance with lighthouses and their inmates such as perhaps no one else enjoys. He received many testimonies of spiritual good resulting from his endeavours. The recent cold weather accelerated his death, at the age of fifty-five, acutely mourned by a loving wife and three children.

MR. T. SHULDHAM HENRY.

At a time when the claims of the Gospel field are many, and the labourers are still few, it would seem to us that men like Shuldham Henry could ill be spared. But God, who knows better, has seen fit to take him from amongst us. Of late years his health had been far from good, and he had suffered from repeated attacks of influenza and gout. His death occurred on New Year's Day somewhat unexpectedly, after a short but severe attack, and he passed away soon after, saying that "this vile body shall be changed, and this mortal shall put on immortality."

The son of Rev. Shuldham Henry, D.D., the President of Queen's College, Belfast, educated for the bar, an LL.B. of Queen's University, Ireland, and for some time rector of a parish in the South of Ireland, Mr. Shuldham Henry possessed qualities of mind and character above the ordinary, and which gave him a foremost position amongst his fellow men.

Since his conversion in about the year 1860, he has continuously served his Master, preaching in England and Ireland to large audiences. He was especially associated with the late Mr. Denham Smith in work in London and Dublin; and many of our readers will hear with sorrow that his well-known voice is now silent.

Possessed of much mental ability, well taught in Scriptural knowledge, a forcible public speaker, holding fast to essentials, but by no means narrow minded in things non-essential, he, through a long course of years kept the Faith, and was a succourer of many who now will mourn his loss, and remember him with affection.

In an early issue we hope to give a portrait and a more detailed sketch of Mr. Henry's life.

BISHOP J. S. HILL AND MRS. HILL.

The sadness with which we record the death of Dr. J. S. Hill and his devoted wife, will be keenly shared by all those of our readers who know him or are acquainted with the history of the Niger Mission. Few particulars of the event have as yet been received, the telegram from the secretary of the Mission at Lagos being in these simple words:—"Bishop Hill and Mrs. Hill at rest." The Church Missionary Society at once telegraphed for further information, and received the reply:—"Fever — Tugwell." Further details of this mournful news are awaited with great anxiety.

It will be remembered that Bishop Hill was consecrated at St. Paul's Cathedral, together with two African clergymen, Revs. J. Oluwole and C. Phillips, on June 29, 1893. The Bishop and Mrs. Hill left England on November 22 last. Letters just received from Sierra Leone indicate that they were to have left that place on December 8, and were therefore due at Lagos on the 12th. Bishop Hill received his training for ordination at the Church Missionary College, Islington, and was sent out with Mrs. Hill to Lagos in 1876. He was invalided home after a few months' residence, and was then transferred to New Zealand, where he subsequently took up evangelistic work, and acquired in that land, in his experience of Colonial life, many qualifications which made him eminently fitted for the responsible duties of the episcopal supervision of the Yoruba and Niger Missions. When he went out to the Niger in September, 1892, as an accepted missionary of the Society and Bishop designate, he was invited by the Archbishop of Canterbury to occupy the position of his Commissary, and returned to report to his Grace in April, 1893. His removal at this crisis in the history of the Church in West Africa is a very serious loss. The Bishop leaves two young daughters.

We hope shortly to outline at greater length the story of the Bishop's career, and to give a portrait of him.

REV. H. B. MACARTNEY started on Wednesday morning, with his wife and daughter, on his return to Melbourne. At the Tuesday morning meeting of the C.M.S. committee Mr. Macartney was present by invitation, special reference being made to the remarkable work he had done for the C.M.S. and for missions generally at the Antipodes.

The Book World.

JANUARY MAGAZINES.

Garden Work, issued by Mr. E. H. May, 171, Fleet-street (1d.), is a comprehensive and altogether excellent companion for the housekeeper and the amateur gardener. This number begins a new and enlarged series.

Evangelical Christendom begins the year with an interesting number, the foreign intelligence being given in bolder form. We should be glad to know that this excellent monthly was appreciated by a wider circle of readers. (6d. J. S. Phillips, 121, Fleet-street.)

Living Waters, an illustrated magazine of Gospel truth, edited by Rev. Ernest Boys, M.A. (1d. Partridge.) A companion monthly is Christian Progress, under the same editorial care. (1d. Bemrose.) Each paper is the organ of a prayer union, and gives brief notes on Scripture readings.

All the World (Office of the Salvation Army. 6d.) is thoroughly worthy of a great organisation and a credit to its editors and publishers. Both literary and art departments are ably managed. The frontispiece is a fine reproduction of Doré's picture of the Christian Martyrs; it illustrates an article by the General.

The Preachers' Magazine, edited by Revs. Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory, opens the year with the first part of an address on "Faith and Duty," by Professor Findlay. The homiletical department is specially rich, and the general contents of the periodical such as to make it of real service to preachers, teachers, and Bible students. (4d. monthly. C. H. Kelly.)

Messrs. Cassell and Co.'s serial magazines maintain their ground, notwithstanding a growing host of competitors. Those who subscribe for the most representative of them enjoy a liberal education in current general literature. Cassell's Family Magazine (7d.) has an abundant—perhaps a super-abundant—supply of fiction, but there are some excellent articles, one of the most interesting being on "Modern Manchester." Little Folks (6d.) is unsurpassed among British serials as a children's storehouse of entertainment. In the current issue Mrs. Haycraft has a charming narrative talk about "Our Feathery Folk." As a supplement is given a painting book and a game. The Saturday Journal (1d. weekly) is an extraordinary combination of the humorous and the instructive, not to mention the £1000 railway insurance. The Magazine of Art (1s.) has several full-page reproductions of artistic gems, besides much to inform and interest those who wield the brush. The Quiver (6d.) is one of the best of the magazines, providing something for all manner of healthy tastes. Work (6d.) pursues admirably its useful career as an illustrated journal of practice and theory for workmen, professional and amateur. Chums (6d.) opens with a coloured picture, while the contents promise a sufficiency of exciting story and incident. Cottage Gardening (3d.) is a very useful serial for the household, the January issue being the second of a new volume.

---

Parkington's Pantry, by Mrs. E. Lysaght, is a very readable tale, affording a glimpse of a smuggler's life. (1s. 6d. Church of England Temperance Society.)

The Transfigured Life. By J. R. Miller, D.D. This booklet gives "some hints for making shining lives." The name of the author is a guarantee for the soundness and excellence of the teaching conveyed. (6d. Sunday School Union.)

The King's Table of Blessing; or, Thoughts for Communicants. By Rev. Alfred Leedes Hunt, M.A., of Maldon, Essex. A little book that will be specially prized by Evangelical members of the Church of England. (Hunt & Co.)

Old Greta's Patchwork Dress (1s.), by Mrs. Carey Hobson, relates some of the tales of an old Mozambique slave woman. The King's Sword (2s.), by Helen H. Watson, is a capital story, suited for all who love boys. (Religious Tract Society.)

The Little Swedish Baron. By the author of the Swedish Twins. (T. Nelson & Sons.) The writer has an intimate knowledge of Swedish life, and considerable insight into character. A weak lad may be strengthened, a promising lad guided, by the wholesome lessons so pleasantly imparted.

Penshurst Castle, Mrs. Marshall's new story, illustrates the times of Sir Philip Sidney, some of the incidents of whose life are presented in an imaginary setting of a very pleasant character. Queen Elizabeth, and Sir Philip's sister and friends, also figure in interesting relations. (5s. Seeley & Co.)

Stories from Mother's Note-book, by Lucy I. Tonge, is likely to promote a living interest in missions in the East. It has been compiled from notebooks, written by a lady travelling in India and Ceylon, for her children in their English home. (1s. 6d. Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, 9, Salisbury-square, E.C.)

The King's Highway, a Journal of Scriptural Holiness. The issues for last year of this well-known monthly form a goodly volume, which is reckoned the first of a new series. The writers include Revs. I. E. Page, J. Stephenson, and C. W. L. Christien. The articles, whether original or selected, are in a high degree stimulating and practical. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

Stories of Noble Lives. By Lucy Taylor. (T. Nelson & Co.) As to the nobility of such lives as those of Havelock, Nasmyth, Carey, Hedley Vicars, Sir H. Lawrence, and Josiah Mason, all are agreed, but it needs a skilful pen to narrate such life-stories in a way that will captivate the young. The present author has succeeded admirably, and a good portrait of each hero renders the series more attractive.

From Malachi to Matthew: Outlines of the History of Judea from 440 to 4 B.C. By Professor R. Waddy Moss, Didsbury College, Manchester. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) This compact little work will serve as an introduction to the study of an important chapter of history. It presents with admirable succinctness the results of careful investigations, and will be useful to many students as a comprehensive connection between the Old and New Testaments.

Holy Men of God. By Dr. J. Elder Cumming. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) We have here a series of brief sketches of saints whose spiritual experiences made them eminent among their fellows. There are seventeen in Dr. Cumming's roll of honour, extending from Augustine down to McCheyne and Canon Battersby. We hope that in any future edition Dr. Andrew Bonar will be added. Some poems are added which prove that the author can court the muse as well as write vigorous prose.

The Key of the Grave. By Dr. Robertson Nicoll. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) These chapters on the future life and the sure hopes that Christianity reveals are very consoling to the mourner and the bereaved. Dr. Nicoll has collated many choice sayings on this theme by seers and poets, and has interwoven them into his argument, which is marked by great freshness of style. We heartily commend the book to all sorrowing ones, and to those who are troubled with doubts about the great future.

How Readest Thou? is the title given by Mr. James Van Sommer to a collection of thoughtful articles on Christian doctrine, ordinances, and practice in apostolic days, and other subjects. Several of these papers have appeared in the columns of The Christian. The author is a devout exponent of Scripture; and even in a few cases where we cannot follow him, we recognise his reverence and the helpfulness of his exposition. (2s. 6d., post free, from The Author, Cuffnells, Wimbledon Common.)

The Bible by Modern Light. The second volume of this new edition, largely re-written, of the well-known "Hours with the Bible," by Dr. Cunningham Geikie, is devoted to an important period of the Old Testament, and bears the secondary title, Moses to the Judges. (6s. Nisbet.) It is a goodly volume, and every page contributes to the elucidation of Bible history. The monumental inscriptions and archæological research are brought to the aid of careful interpretation of the sacred text. The work has been executed in a manner which fully justifies the title, and will add to the reputation of its erudite author.

Now and For Ever, or Never: Seven addresses by T. Shuldham Henry, M.A., LL.B. (1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., according to binding. J. E. Hawkins & Co.) This is a little volume of addresses, instructive as to Scripture teaching, and evangelistic as to their immediate purpose, delivered at different times in the Iron Room and Clapton Hall, Upper Clapton. The addresses have already been published in the form of booklets, and this collection of them is appropriately dedicated to Mr. and Mrs. John Morley, of Upper Clapton, with whom, wrote the lamented author, "I have been associated in the work of the Lord there for more than twenty-five years."

Books on the Lord's Day.—We are glad to call attention to the publications of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association. Encroachments on the Day of Rest is a useful penny booklet. Sunday: Its Influence on Health and National Prosperity; and Continental Sunday Labour: A Warning to the English Nation are serviceable shilling manuals. The Pearl of Days for 1886-90 (2s. 6d.) is an illustrated repertory of facts and narratives on the Sabbath. The Lost Daughter (2s.) is a story enforcing the duty of Lord's Day observance. These works have been written and edited by Mr. Charles Hill, secretary of the Society, and may be had from the office, 13, Bedford-row, W.C.

Suwarta and other Sketches of Indian Life. By Annie H. Small. (Nelson & Sons.) Under this remarkable name is issued a remarkably interesting book. Life-like pictures of "our sisters" in India are drawn with much skill and true sympathy. The writer's lot was cast among Mussulman ladies, and while God gave her crosses and disciplines, He graciously used her to lead many broken hearts to Jesus. "A Moslem Revival" shows in a graphic manner how religious excitement may for a moment seem to undo Gospel work and then fade away as stars vanish at sunrise. For reading at working parties, for gifts to intending missionary sisters, and to stand in Y.W.C.A. libraries, we strongly recommend "Suwarta."

The Hebrew Twins: A Vindication of God's Ways with Jacob and Esau. By the late Samuel Cox, D.D. With Portrait of the Author and Prefatory Memoir, by his Wife. (6s. T. Fisher Unwin.) The brief memoir is full of interest, and the exposition lucid and very profitable reading. Two governing ideas of the study are: (1) As God dealt with Jacob and Esau, so also He will deal with us; and (2) As God deals with us so also ought we to deal with one another. The lessons of the story are admirably indicated, and only occasionally is there any disclosure of the author's well-known eschatological views. Every page of this attractive volume is rich in suggestion, and characterised by a strong application of Scripture to the practical issues of life.

The Comprehensive Scripture Lesson Scheme, of which Rev. Charles Neil, M.A., of Poplar, is general editor, has already been commended to teachers of the young, as presenting in its several departments useful analyses of Scripture, and valuable expository material. When complete, the work will comprise seven goodly volumes, but in the meantime it is coming out in convenient parts. The most recent of these contains The Teacher's Classified Lesson Material: The Book of Genesis (2s. 6d.), prepared by Rev. W. J. Deane, M.A., Mr. J. Dickenson, B.A., and others. The first book of Moses is divided up and explained in a most helpful manner, and the volume gives some idea of the excellent service which the scheme is calculated to render to teachers. (Nisbet & Co.)

---

A New Year Poem, by Miss Charlotte Murray, entitled "Let us Remember," is published on neat card, by Mr. Henry Randle, of Hastings. It is well suited for enclosing in letters.

"If It Die" is the title of the first booklet of the "Corn and Wheat" series. The author, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, is a thoughtful exponent of Scripture teaching on sanctification. We trust many will read these pages. (1d. Marshall Brothers.)

The Friends' Temperance Union series of booklets deserve a wide circulation. Three have already been issued, from the pen of Frederick Sessions, entitled Good Creatures of God, Health and Strength, and Masters and Men. (Partridge & Co.)

Two instructive booklets by G. Soltau are: Clean Every Whit (2d.), and The Bible Portrait of the Foreign Missionary (1d.). The latter contains the substance of a Bible reading given last year at Geelong Convention. (Bible and Tract Depôt, Collins-street, Melbourne.)

As the seasons come and go, Mrs. Gorges sends forth a poetical word of comfort to Christians far and near. This year she has published two leaflets, printed on tinted paper, entitled Thoughts of Peace for the New Year, and Words of Cheer for the New Year. The verses present Scriptural ideas in beautiful language. (100 copies, 1s. 6d. post free. C. Cansell, Edmund-street, Birmingham.)

The Hearts-Ease series of leaflets, by Edith G. Cheery, will cheer and stimulate many readers. The subjects indicate in a measure the spirituality of the beautiful verses: God's Hearts-Ease, Yet will I not Forget Thee, Come up Hither, Listening Heavenwards, and The Master's Touch. The leaflets are artistically printed on tinted paper (3d. per dozen, 9d. for fifty copies. Morgan & Scott.)

---

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From The Sunday School Union.—The Lifting of the Shadow, by K. M. Eady. (2s.).

From Edward Hicks, jun.—Verses for My Friends, by William Kitching; Six Generations of Friends in Ireland, by J. M. R.; Quaker Pictures, second series, by Wilfred Whitten; The Friends: Who They Are, What They Have Done, by William Beck (1s.); Peter Bedford, by William Tallack (1s.).

---

HOUSE OF REST, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—On Friday, Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a New Year's address. He pointed out from Deut. viii. that upon obedience depended the possession of the full spiritual life, which God was ready and willing to bestow upon every believer. In the evening, Mr. Reader Harris continued the convention of holiness, to which several evenings of the monthly meetings have been devoted.

STANLEY PARISH CHURCH was burnt down in the severe gale of November last. Some readers may be disposed to help in rebuilding a church wherein the teaching is thoroughly Evangelical. The parish is large, and the population wholly mining. The church had been built for seventeen years, chiefly by the efforts of the working-class parishioners, who during the last year have been striving to clear a debt of £320 off the Parish Hall, and to provide a mission church in a needy part of the district. The insurance was six or seven hundred pounds less than the original cost. Gifts towards rebuilding would be welcome, also gifts of useful and fancy articles for a sale of work with the same object.

Vicar of Stanley, Crook. W. Loney.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

WARNING TO ADVERTISERS.—The greatest care should be taken in writing the address at the end of Advertisements. We also beg to call the special attention of Advertisers to the following Notice which appears in The Postal Guide:—"Letters addressed to initials or to fictitious names at any Post Office are not taken in, but are at once sent back to the writers."

LETTERS ADDRESSED TO THE OFFICE.—Advertisers who require their letters to be addressed to the office of this Journal will be charged an additional Sixpence for each Advertisement, and another Sixpence extra if letters are to be forwarded to their private address.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

| | |
|---|---|
| For Great Britain and Ireland .. | 6s. 7d. per annum |
| For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. .. .. .. | 8s. 10d. " " |
| For United States and Canada .. Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY .. .. | 2¼ dols. " " 2½ dols. " " |

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

| | |
|---|---|
| 4 Copies monthly .. .. .. .. | 2s. per annum. |
| 8 " " .. .. .. .. | 4s. " " |
| 12 " " .. .. .. .. | 6s. " " |
| 24 " " .. .. .. .. | 12s. " " |

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

WE purpose next week to give a portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. VAN DYCK, of Beyrout, translator of the Scriptures into Arabic.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if those who have not yet remitted will kindly do so at once.

The letter by Mr. Forrow, published in our issue of the 4th inst., on "The Spiritual Condition of the Churches" has very naturally elicited denials of its accuracy. The measure of the evil to which Mr. Forrow specially alluded, viz., the discrediting of the Scriptures by a tone of doubt and criticism running through the preaching of several conspicuous Congregationalists, cannot be accurately determined by anyone. That such a mode of handling the Bible, wherever practised, tends to disturb the minds of hearers and to keep some of them away from their Saviour, is proved by facts.

On the other hand, those who handle the Bible in this free manner affirm that they do so for the purpose of dealing with doubts which they have not created, but which they know exist. And the passionate devotion of some of these ministers to the glory of Christ cannot for a moment be questioned. We have given room for the complaint which some have to make; we have mentioned the denial of the sufficiency of the reason for that complaint which others have to advance. Our own mind turns rather to the feeling and desire which we know largely prevails for a revival of pure godliness. The paragraph, "A Quiet Day," which appeared in the same issue as Mr. Forrow's letter, was a striking evidence of what we say. Other evidence could be given. We have no doubt that an enormous work for Christ is being done by the Congregational Churches, and we believe that a spirit of prayer is moving in them which will make them still more efficient.

Two lads saw two men enter a shop in the south of London, and after remaining there for a few minutes come out with a cash-box and run away. On the evidence of the lads the thieves were convicted and sentenced to hard labour. For being absent to give evidence the master discharged them! One wonders why. His reasons are not evident. A lesson in honesty and public spirit may become a lesson in roguery, and in that indifference which allows any villainy to go on rather than put out a hand to stop it. Suppose the master's office had been robbed, what then?

A happy idea has occurred to the managers of the Samuel Morley Memorial College for Working Men and Women, Waterloo Bridge-road, S.E., who have arranged with Professor Pritchard to give a course of ten lectures on Saturday evenings at 8 o'clock on "The Care of Horses and Other Animals." The men who love their horses and want to do right by them, may now learn how. Is there not in this idea a hint for all humane persons? Can we imagine any subject more interesting to a country audience than a wise, bright talk on animals and the right uses and management of them? Questions and remarks might be invited. The boys and girls, at any rate, would be enlisted on the right side, if the fathers and mothers were too conservative to be moved. A lecture of great interest might be given on the humane teachings of the Scriptures.

We learn from the final report of the house-to-house visitation in Birmingham that while it is believed some questions were answered without their meaning being understood, the visitation has been productive of much good to visitors and visited. Many ministers and their congregations have been brought into closer touch; many children have been brought into the Sunday-school, cases of sickness and destitution have been discovered; "but, above all, there has been shown the great and imperative need for united evangelistic effort to reach certain districts and people in the city, at present but with little religious life." It seems that the visitors have not been able either to confirm or confute the statement that as many as 300,000 persons who might have attended a place of worship on a certain day were absent. The council which is managing this movement are careful to say that their one great object is to get those who have hitherto been unattached to any place of worship into association with the Church of Christ. It seems to us that such movements cannot but produce much good in many directions, and we wish they were more general.

The Independent has published a paper of remarkable ability and value on the "Faith of Culture and the Culture of Faith," by Rev. P. T. Forsyth, of Leicester, an address to the Young People's Guilds. The distinction and vital difference between the two things are set forth with great clearness and power. "The grand school for the culture of faith is the Church"—in these particulars, work, worship, and wisdom. Concerning worship, Mr. Forsyth says very truly:—

A great source of our weakness lies in the fact that we are leaving the culture of worship almost entirely to the minister, and killing thereby both the man and the thing. Our prayer-meetings are often failures—first, because Christians will not pray; second, because those who will often cannot for lack of Christian experience, self-examination, wisdom, and therefore spiritual sympathy. Our fathers had a great devotional text-book. They fed their faith at the Bible. But Bible reading and study as a private pursuit has largely ceased. And outside the Bible we Protestants are poor in devotional literature.

There is much food for painful reflection here. "Bible reading and study as a private pursuit has largely ceased." We ourselves have long been persuaded it was so, and as an evidence we take the prayers of many who do pray. They are not full of Bible words, Bible sentences, or even Bible thoughts. Prayer and Bible study go together, the one fostering the other.

Mr. Forsyth has become, in later years, firm and strong on the old Evangelical positions. With a firm grip of the objective side of our Saviour's work, he affirms:—

What has made us is not simply the beauty and majesty of Christ's character, but the capture, mastery, and release of us by Christ's work. It is not sentimental attachment to the individual Jesus, but moral surrender to Christ, the Kingdom's eternal Redeemer and King. We do not stand for truth and righteousness as such, but as Christ's will and command. The Church is something more, a world more, than an ethical movement. We stand for an authoritative, nay an imperious, Christ, sometimes even more than for the Christ who is winning, pitiful, and kind.

The closing word of the address is an antidote to the pessimism of the age, which is largely the result of the worship of culture. He presses on the young "the recuperative power of faith. Culture has much to say, and says it well, about the modern return to nature. It is offered as the key of the present age, but it will not unlock the age to come. The exigencies of that age will press upon us another return, the return to faith and grace, the return to our eternal principle for which Protestantism will stand when itself has been reformed, and its soul has been extracted for perennial use from its historic variations.'

The magazines and papers are brightened with stories about Sir Andrew Clark. One of the best, in the Strand Magazine, illustrates his firmness, his enmity to intoxicants, and his faith in God:—

A clergyman complained to him of feeling low and depressed, unable to face his work, and tempted to rely on stimulants. Sir Andrew saw that the position was a perilous one, and that it was a crisis in the man's life. He dealt with the case, and forbade resort to stimulants, when the patient declared that he would be unequal to his work and ready to sink. "Then," said Sir Andrew, "sink like a man!"

We happen to know a case in which he was even plainer than that with a ministerial patient, and the facts of it gave us such a profound impression of the simplicity of his own faith in God and of his answering obedience to the Divine will, that we cannot but express an earnest hope that his biography may be written by a Christian believer, and may give a fair presentation of the Christian side of his character.

Principal C. H. Waller has contributed a valuable article to The Thinker on "The Prayers of David, the Son of Jesse," in which he seeks "to make sense of the titles to the Psalms as they stand, not to tear them up and construct a new theory." He is of opinion that these prayers have been put together for public, not private, use; that they were so used for the morning and evening, or the evening and morning, of the same day; and that they were sung by two choirs, one at Zion, before the ark at the tabernacle of David, under the presidency of Asaph, and another at Gibeon, before the tabernacle under Heman the Kohathite and Korahite, who was a direct descendant of Korah the rebel. Dr. Waller adds:—

Notwithstanding the rebellion, the "children of Korah died not," and their being brought near to God in a new kind of service, from and after the time of the prophet Samuel, has always seemed to me a singularly beautiful compensation for the denial of their mistaken aspirations in the wilderness, and for the severity of their punishment there.

A correspondent writes to The Church Review to express his fear that, notwithstanding all that has been done, and done successfully, to make England Romish, a great deal has still to be accomplished. He says:—

It is a sad fact, but no less a true one, to see so many people in this Christian country with no reverence for sacred things. A procession may be making its way through the streets of any of our large towns headed by a cross or perhaps a crucifix (that most sacred of all sacred things). Watch the conduct of the crowds who pass by it. Instead of removing their hats from their heads and crossing their breasts like pious Catholics would do, they stand still and stare with their mouths wide open, or push rudely by, or perhaps laugh and jeer.

Would he like these irreverent persons' heads cut off because they do not bow down before the absurd mummery which some so-called priests practise in the streets? That was the punishment in the days of Philip and Mary. But we have travelled a long way since then, and although England is too much Romanised, we hope the people will never change so much as to gratify the wish of this correspondent.

Referring to a recent article in which we expressed our sense of the necessity for a re-enunciation of foundation truths, one whom we esteem very highly in love for his work's sake, writes the following earnest and burning words:—

I weep bitterly before the Lord over the wilfulness and lawlessness of many of his people. Not a few of his truths are to-day reserved or superseded. Many of them call urgently for re-affirmation. The foundation of all foundation truths—the unique, undivided, supreme authority of his blessed Word must be maintained against all inward lights and dreaming.

Not only is the partial preaching of foundation truth marked by astounding complacency, but the truth of all is thrust back by those accounted intelligent believers. This truth of all truths is the cross of God's Son. The Cross not only abolished death and cancelled sin, but it gauges the deeps of the love that is in God, and the endless mystery of our Lord Jesus' existence.

Men of God in the last century, under a profound sense, not of attainments in holiness, but of abject sinfulness, magnified the Cross; wept over the love of God shown in it; and, under its impulsive consecrating attraction, gave away their lives to publish the grace of their Lord who endured it. Society was convulsed, and heaven taken by storm. Saints, now, do not study the Cross sufficiently. They want more aptitude for it. They need to be driven to it! They are not cast in the dust before the Lord, under conviction of its necessity; or with every pulse of the heart beating its grateful overpowering amazement at its grace.

And then, does one in fifty of those who say they are the Lord's, grasp firmly the Cross as the necessity of God? That by it alone He is just in justifying those who believe in Jesus? The gates of hell are mighty motors, both in the world and in the Church of God, to efface the Cross as the subject of eternal consecrating study. The Cross is the key to the character of God; the window into his heart. The deeper our insight into it, the more we see in it his own espousal love. Foundation truths are ignored. In the name of God, for the day of Christ, go on; and speak out!

When our Lord had a weary hungry multitude before Him, and his disciples had nothing but seven loaves and a few small fishes to meet their own wants, He first of all gave thanks, then He brake, and gave to the disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. Life would everywhere be brighter and sweeter if thanksgiving and self-denying effort were practised even where the means are small. Who knows but they might grow even while we were giving them away? "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth."

The Opium Crisis.

We would direct special attention to an important document in our present issue (page 19), which is officially signed by representatives of the several organisations for the suppression of our Indian opium trade. The importance of the opium question has been repeatedly urged in our pages, but it is possible that only a very few of our readers have any adequate conception of the great gravity of that question in its relation to our own country, to our Indian empire, and to the many millions of the people of India and China. It is not a mere question of money, whether of a few pounds or of many millions. It is unspeakably more than that.

We have at last been brought face to face with this great question; we cannot longer ignore it. Our Indian opium trade must now be dealt with in one way or another; the appointment of the Opium Commission necessitates that. It may be, as some solemnly believe, that upon our manner of dealing with it will depend our future relation to our Indian empire. The Opium Commission may report that the Government of India cannot give up the opium revenue; the British Government may deliberately determine that because of this revenue the opium trade must be maintained; and the people of this country, who have in the past sadly failed to realise the evil done in their name, may supinely acquiesce in the continuance of the trade.

And so it may be that this great and wealthy nation may for the sake of money go on ministering to a vice which degrades and ruins millions of human beings, until by the retributive justice of God our pride of wealth and power is suddenly laid low, and our Imperium shattered for ever.

"It will not do," said Mr. Hudson Taylor, four years ago, "to say we do not understand the question. It will not do to say we have not much interest in the question. We shall find we have interest in it in one way, if we do not take it in another. For when the anger of God brings national judgment on our land, we cannot escape. Should there be a great European war permitted to avenge this evil, our brothers, our relatives, and our friends will be cut off, and we shall not be able to escape the sorrow. If God should send pestilence or some other great calamity on some of our widespread Colonial domains, or upon our own home country, we shall not be able to escape."

These words were spoken four years ago. What has happened since then? The most careless observer can hardly fail to be impressed by the extent of our commercial disasters. We have had severe agricultural depression, the Baring crash, the collapse of banks in Australia, and the coal strike. These alone, not to mention other things, have involved a loss to the country that a hundred millions of money would not cover. It is not for us to attempt to connect any special visitation with the sin which might have caused it, but it is safe to say broadly that national chastisement certainly follows national wrong-doing.

The signatories to the document which we publish clearly state that the appointment of the Opium Commission was not desired by any of the organisations they represent. They knew well enough already that the use of opium, other than medicinal, was physically and morally deleterious in the highest degree, and they would as soon have asked for a commission of inquiry into the validity of the moral law, as for one on the lines of the Commission now sitting in India. They point, and not without cause, to a "new and serious danger," of which we have need to beware.

We earnestly trust the appeal may have the attention it deserves, and that many will not only do what they can to supply at once the funds asked for, but that they will by prayer seek the speedy deliverance of our country from continued connection with the iniquitous opium trade.

The Three Jewish Festivals

CONSIDERED IN CONNECTION WITH THE GREAT EVANGELICAL FACTS CORRESPONDING THERETO.

By REV. G. LIVINGSTONE FENTON.

II.—Pentecost.

Counting the days after the original Passover, we find that fifty days elapsed before the Theocracy was founded by the voice of God Himself upon Mount Sinai. Hence the Feast of Pentecost. It was, too, a festival of thanksgiving for the firstfruits of harvest, and so was called the "Feast of Weeks," or the "Feast of the Firstfruits." There is no doubt of what great evangelical facts this feast was the prophetic symbol. The prophet Jeremiah foretold that while the Sinaitic covenant—"the law of the commandments contained in ordinances"—had been proclaimed with circumstances of accumulated terror, and written by the finger of God upon tables of stone, the days were coming when God would "put his law in men's inward parts and write it in their hearts"; or, as Ezekiel twenty years later expounds it, "I will put my Spirit within you."

Now, when we read the first chapter of our Christian Church History (Acts ii.), and find that exactly fifty days after the Resurrection of Jesus, and on the anniversary of the ancient Pentecost, the Holy Spirit descended into our world for the garnering-in of the firstfruits of the spiritual harvest, and to be an abiding presence, as the Giver of law and life, in the Church of the Redeemed, we cannot fail to be struck with the profound symbolism of the two dispensations.*

The Holy Spirit "abides in the Church for ever." The Church, and every member of the Church, is "His temple." We are not praying with strict propriety when we pray (as often) for the "down-pouring" or "out-pouring" of the Holy Ghost.

If we are Christ's, we "have the Spirit of Christ" within us. We "resist," we "grieve," we do our best to "quench" his sacred influences, but He never leaves us utterly. We have need to pray that He, who is the very life of the incorruptible seed that abideth for ever, will revive our souls and the souls of our people. Let us thank God that a more lively sense of the presence and power of the indwelling Spirit is being widely diffused. It is this, and the prayer for this, that God is now so visibly blessing in the meetings on holiness throughout Christendom. It is this, and the prayer for this, that is giving at this hour so great a stimulus to Christian missions. It is this, that—emphasising the contrast betwixt light and darkness—foreshows the near approach of Him who comes to "discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not."

(To be concluded.)

* The Pentecostal gift was not confined to the Apostles. We cannot limit the "all with one accord" of ch. ii. to fewer than the "all with one accord" of ch. i. These were 120 souls; and to these all was given authority to "prophesy," and to exercise other charismata in the Spirit. To my mind, this single passage sweeps away the proud inanities of "Apostolical succession" and a priestly caste.

The Person of Our Lord.—II.

By Mr. GEORGE PEARSE.

CHRIST'S life was a continual service to the temporal and spiritual wants of men, his miracles of healing were exercised on every applicant—not one was refused. Then the eyes of the blind were opened, and the ears of the deaf were unstopped, then did the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb did sing. How rich in narratives of such healing mercies are the Gospels. The crowds outside the house at Capernaum, the multitudes following Him out of the cities bringing their sick, all Syria moved, and the sick and demoniacal brought to Him for healing; multitudes pressing on Him, if but to touch the hem of his garment. If we seek to bring home to our hearts the facts of his tenderness and sympathy with human life and human sorrow, regard Him taking up little children in his arms, putting his hands on them, and blessing them, his arresting the bier on which lay the widow's only son and restoring him to her, as also the ruler's little daughter restored to her parents, and the afflicted daughter of the Syro-Phenician woman whose persistent claim for the exercise of his grace obtained the delayed answer, for great faith honoured Him and was ever commended and answered.

What memorable scenes, and what teachings on the shores and the bosom of the lake! What lessons on the mountains, or in temple courts and synagogues, as a guest at the wedding feast, with the despised publicans, or in Pharisees' houses! If we seek to bring home to our hearts the scenes and events of our Lord's earthly life, let us go to the green basin of Nazareth, from whose hills the view was presented of the blue waters of the Mediterranean and the snowy heights of Hermon; let us journey with our beloved Master over the lonely mountains, or beside the still lake, or sit with Him on its quiet shores, or follow Him to remote Gentile cities, or hang on his lips as He delivers his Sermon on the Mount, in the courts of God's house, or in synagogues, or with the crowds accompanying the meek King seated on the colt, as He entered in that character his metropolis, or asleep in the boat on the stormy lake quieting its waves and the fears of the disciples. Teaching everywhere, in houses, fields, and by the roadside, teaching and healing, dispossessing Satan and his hosts of their prey.

With fishermen, soldiers, rulers, tax-gatherers, women and children, Pharisees, and Sadducees, in very various scenes and circumstances, how our hearts flow out to Him as the Son of God trod our earth, spoke with human lips to listening ears, or looked with those eyes beaming with love and pity on all around Him. How He avoided the functions of a judge, for "grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." One is not surprised to see poor sinful men and women at his feet; but O infinite condescension! see Him girded with a towel, and at his disciples' feet, and washing them. He could company with sinners, and even eat with them, and his blessed hand could touch the leper and impart instantaneous healing without being defiled. He was the giver of the water of life, and that even to a disreputable woman. He did not refuse invitations to partake of the tables of men, but how capable to supply richly a table in the desert to the thousands whom He had taught and healed!

On approaching to the close of his earthly life, at the Passover feast, just before the agonising scene at Gethsemane and the bitter sufferings of the Cross, He forgets himself, and has only consolation for his soon-to-be-forsaken followers. What majesty, mingled with tenderness, those sublime discourses narrated in John's Gospel! He afforded to his three disciples a view of his proper glory at the Mount of Transfiguration, his countenance, his garments radiant in that glory. Heaven came down into manifestation. The Son of Man came in his Kingdom. The Father's voice, that awful voice, was heard, and in the glory-cloud the representatives of the Law and the Prophets, Moses and Elias, were enveloped and spoke, their theme not the glory in which they shone, but the sufferings their Lord and ours was about to endure on the cross.

How ineffably glorious his manifestations in Resurrection those forty days! How tender still his love! He utters the name "Mary" in those well-known tones which thrill her heart, and reassures the recently unfaithful Peter by sending a message to him of the assurance of his enduring love. On his visits in the upper room, coming in such mystery, and in his new-conditioned circumstances He breathes on them peace and the Holy Ghost, the power of a new and risen life, and unfolding the riches of Old Testament teaching about Himself, the sufferings, and the glory. They see Him now no longer in humiliation, but invested with all power in heaven and earth, and giving his kingly commission to go forth into all the world and proclaim his accomplished salvation, promising them his continual presence.

Finally, He leads the disciples out to that favoured village Bethany, and, stretching out his hands in blessing, with that attitude leaves them and ascends to his native glory.

Not many days after He sends the promised Comforter to open minds, hearts, and lips, and endue them with power, who comes to stamp the image of the glorified Saviour upon them, and cause them to see in a fresh and divine light His finished work and its acceptance by the Father, and Himself seated at his right hand, and the living link that binds the Saviour to the members of his body on earth is his spirit indwelling each believer.

Now, then, they know Him as the second Adam, the Head of a new creation, and they enter into it as a world of their own into which He introduces them. He is with them everywhere; He is their all; they see Him and follow his leadings anywhere and everywhere, serving and waiting, looking for the blessed hope of his appearing.

Many of his dear people realise much—a peculiarly lively sense—of his presence. Dr. Aikman said of George Bowen, so long an honorary missionary in Bombay, that in his early career "he came under the power of a mental habit—not peculiar to him indeed, except as to its completeness and permanence—he made a distinct effort to realise the actual and personal presence of the Saviour with him, to become intimately and at all times conscious of the nearness of Jesus, as one to be spoken to and walked with."

In presence of some of his college companions, he said, "I have at this moment a more vivid sense that Jesus is in the room here than I have that either of you three are."

Professor Schaff says, "The person of Christ is for me the greatest, most certain of all facts—as certain and even more than that of my own existence; for Christ lives in me, and He is the portion, the only worthy one, of my being. I am nothing without my Saviour; with Him I am all. I would not change Him for ten thousand worlds."

It is most interesting to see how the person and character of our Lord impressed the mind and heart of one of our noblest men. His biographer says of Arnold of Rugby, "Above all, it was necessary for a right understanding, not only of his religious opinions, but of his whole character, to enter into the peculiar feeling of love and admiration which he entertained towards our Lord Jesus Christ, peculiar in the distinctness and intensity which, as it characterised almost all his common impressions, so in this case gave additional strength and meaning to those feelings with which he regarded, not only the work of redemption, but Himself as a living friend and Master, in that unknown world in which our thoughts become instantly lost." It was his real support and delight to remember that "still there is one object on which our thoughts and imaginations may fasten, no less than our affections, that amidst the light, dark from excess of brilliance, which surrounds the throne of God, we may yet discern the gracious form of the Son of Man" (Sermons, vol. iii., 90).

In that consciousness which pressed upon him, at times even heavily, of the difficulty of considering God in his own nature—believing, as he did, that "Providence, the Supreme Being, the Deity," and other such terms, repel us towards infinite distance, and that the revelation of the Father, in Himself unapproachable, is to be looked upon rather as the promise of another life than as the support of this life—it was to him a thought of perhaps more than usual comfort to feel that "Our God is Jesus Christ our Lord, the image of the invisible God," and that in Him is represented all the fulness of the Godhead, until we know even as we are known (vol. v., 222), and with this full conviction, both of his conscience and understanding, that He of whom he spoke is "still the very same Jesus in all human affections and divine excellencies." There was a vividness and tenderness in his conception of Him in which, if one may so say, all his feelings of human friendship and affection seemed to fasten as on their natural object, "bringing before him his actions, and imagining to himself his very look and voice." There was to him, so to speak, a greatness in the image thus formed of Him, on which all his natural instincts of reverence, all his range of historical interest, all his admiration of truth and goodness, at once centred.

"Where can we find a name so holy as that we may surrender our whole souls to it—before which obedience, reverence without measure, intense humility, most unreserved adoration, may be all duly rendered?" was the earnest inquiry of his whole nature—intellectual and moral, no less than religious. And the answer to it in like manner expressed what he endeavoured to make the rule of his own personal conduct, and the centre of all his moral and religious convictions, "One name there is, and one alone, in heaven and earth—not truth, not justice, not benevolence, not Christ's mother, not his blessed sacraments, not his very mystical body the Church, but Himself only, one who died for us and rose again, Jesus Christ, both God and man" (Sermon, vol. iv., 210).

Algiers.

CHILDREN IN ONTARIO.

IT is easier to do work than to write about it, and while to us each day is full of living interest in thinking, planning, and caring for the children, it is difficult to make these days live again, so as to interest others. Life at Marchmont is one of constant change and variety, coming and going, meeting and parting, reminding us continually that this is not our rest, that here we have no continuing city.

This year the number of little plants, transplanted from the overstocked fields of the Old World to the boundless acres of the New Land of Promise, was 240. These have all been carefully trained and prepared for us; our part is to bring them across the ocean, and place each in a position in which they will have the best chance of developing a character and future that will be a blessing to themselves and a credit to all who have helped them. As a gardener does not leave his young plants to shift for themselves after they are put out, but tends and waters them daily, so we visit our young charges, to see that they are properly trained and tended by those to whom we have entrusted them.

Our visitors, Mr. Gandier and Mr. McPhail, have traversed the whole of Ontario, from Lake Huron to the borders of Quebec, travelling hundreds of miles by road, rail, and river, and have brought back on the whole most encouraging reports of the well-being and well-doing of the boys and girls.

It was a great joy to us while at the Chicago Exposition, to stay with one of the old boys, who is now a successful business man in that great but godless city. When he commenced business in his present store, all the shops in the neighbourhood opened on Sunday the same as other days, and some customers insisted that he should do the same, and came clamouring to be served on Sunday morning. He let it be known, however, that whatever others might do, he was going to keep the Sabbath. The result was, that his business increased with the best customers, and he is now one of the most respected traders in the district, and best of all, some others have been encouraged by his example to close their places of business also. A devoted sister keeps house for him, and they have taken a boy this year to bring up to the business, and we know by pleasant experience that he has a happy, comfort table, Christian home.

As we have reviewed the events of the past year, and traced the guiding and providing grace of our God, our feelings have been similar to those of the disciples when our Lord asked them, "Lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing." Temporal and spiritual blessings have abounded, we have had much joy in our service, and felt through all the days of the year that "our labour has not been in vain in the Lord." ROBERT AND ELLEN WALLACE.

Marchmont, Bellcville, Ont.

GERMANS IN THE WEST END.—The London City Mission has added a new branch for Germans in the West of London; the East End has had several for some years. This new branch lately held its first Christmas tree fêtes in Aberdeen's Schoolrooms West-street, W. After refreshments a short service was held by the missionary, assisted by several of his colleagues of the L.C.M., and a well known City merchant.

THE WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER.

SOME ADDRESSES IN LONDON.

TUESDAY, Jan. 9.

CORNHILL Y.M.C.A.

On Tuesday at the Cornhill Y.M.C.A., the subject being "The Church Universal," an address was delivered by Prebendary Webb-Peploe. Taking as his text the words, "This honour have all his saints" (Ps. cxlix. 9), he observed that this is the last statement of fact in the book of Psalms, that wonderful book opening with the Divine side of blessing to the creature, and ending with the human side of blessing to the Almighty Creator. The honour thus prescribed for God's saints is not simply "to execute judgment," but to give forth praise, and so, appropriately, the book closes with a psalm of praise. Glory and honour are due to the Lord from the whole of his creation. At present, however, we see that a spirit of evil prevails—in fact, seems to hold the mastery. Yet in his own time, and by his own means, God will subdue all adversaries, and make his dominion manifest.

God has from the very first put privileges and opportunities before his creatures, who yet have, all along, refused to benefit by them. In Eden, in the days of Noah, and at Sinai, this was done. Finally, He showed his own character: what the Law, with promises, and threats, and warnings could not do; what the innocency of man, although allied to his God as his Maker and Friend, could not do—God, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, and provided a righteousness for his creatures. Thus God waits for the day when He shall govern men of their own free will and determination, and by the power of love instead of wrath. In Jesus Christ a perfect provision is made for all the needs of the guilty, and sin is practically swept from the world by virtue of what the Lord Jesus has done.

When we proceed to see that Christ is to be the Restorer of things in this world, we find that it is not because He is Son of God, and one with the Father; but He restores things as Man. God's purpose is to obtain the true government of the world. He apparently lost it in Adam, but He gets it back with Himself in Man—the Man Christ Jesus. Study Jesus as THE MAN—the model Man, the representative Man, the atoning Man, the exhibited Man, and the perfected Man. In Christ, a pattern has been shown to the universe of what man should be, and now the Holy Ghost proceeds to effect the new creation—the true spiritual creation—in which God is to have his great purposes accomplished in and through man. The Holy Ghost claims the manhood of each of us, in order to make us saints in the true sense of the word, that we may live to the praise and glory of God. As man after man yields to the Spirit of God's dear Son, the Kingdom of God is spread through the world. There is no giving glory to God except through the act and fact of obedience—obedience unto death, claiming nothing except to be emptied, and to be the servant of all men—to know no rights but those of absolute submission to the will of our God, and to the saving of our fellow-men. "This honour have all his saints."

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 10.

On Wednesday the appointed subjects of prayer for the day were—

Nations and their Rulers.—Prayer: That all earthly rulers may acknowledge their responsibility to the King of Kings, and seek the promotion of righteousness and the maintenance of peace; that all religious persecutions may be stayed; that national discontent and strife, anarchy and oppression may cease; that drunkenness, impurity, and gambling may be put away; that slavery and all sinful traffic may be speedily abolished; and that God's Day may be nationally honoured.

PORTMAN ROOMS, W.

Mr. John Paton presided, and, having read 2 Sam. xxiii., called on various brethren to lead in prayer in regard to national affairs. Amongst those who took part were Revs. Marmaduke Washington and G. D. Matthews, D.D.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said that as he was quietly reading over the enumeration of topics which were to-day to be laid before God in prayer, it occurred to him that the enumeration was a very sad confession as to the condition of mankind. We are reminded that throughout the earth there are thousands who are suffering religious persecution; that at home there are discontent, strife, anarchy, and oppression, while drunkenness, impurity, and gambling are sadly rife; that abroad slavery and a sinful traffic are asserting themselves, while everywhere God's Day is openly violated. What an enumeration of sins! Yet we must go further, and associate with these the human pain and suffering seething round our world as the result of sin. How urgent it is that the Church of Christ should take this opportunity of pleading with God in regard to these things.

But I would have you observe that while our prayers are sorrowful confessions, they are also a confession of faith in God that He did not make the world as it is, that it is not now as He meant it to be. We believe that these evils are contrary to his mind, and that the whole thought of the Divine nature is working steadfastly and strongly against these wrongs, which are infinitely more abhorrent to God than they can be to us. He who wept over Jerusalem is weeping over our city. We all believe that our Saviour has entered into his rest, but we make a mistake if we suppose that rest to mean quiescent apathy with regard to this world, or to be combined merely with priestly work on behalf of his Church. His activity against wrong and evil was not limited to the days of his sojourn on earth. Still the Son of God goes forth to war. Have you observed that the Gospel of Mark (the Gospel of the Great Worker) closes thus, "They went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them"? There we have a picture of Christ as the Great Worker, working in his Church, through his Church, and alas! sometimes, in spite of his Church. Thus, as we confront such evils as the opium traffic, the drink trade, the vices of gambling and impurity, our first thought is that Jesus Christ is their sworn foe, and that He will not rest nor be discouraged till He has set judgment in the earth. Hence I regard this great concert of prayer as a reflection of the heart of God Himself; not that we are attempting to sway the mind of God, but that the mind of God is influencing our thoughts and stirring us to pray. The desires we utter in true prayer emanate from God Almighty, and emanate as the expression of the accord between Him and his redeemed people in waging undying war against the forces of sin.

But, further, this gathering together in prayer indicates our belief that these evils have another than merely earthly or human origin. We invoke the celestial because we dread the infernal. We invoke Divine aid because we see the enemy of mankind seeking to ruin men. We see in the evil and misery around us the malignity and influence of the great foe. We anticipate the time (may it not be far off!) when by his coming the Son of God will consume the enemy with the spirit of his mouth, and when the brightness of his coming shall banish the shades of night.

But surely while we thus pray and expect, there is more yet. He who prays well, works well. Prayer is a lever, but it is also a girdle to bind our loins for fresh activity, Therefore, while it is right to pray, we must do what we can to arouse the public conscience as to the enormity of the evils we deplore. This is not so easy as it is to sit in a praying circle. We must protest by example. Those who pray against drunkenness should not touch strong drink. Those who pray against impurity must discourage the introduction of men leading impure lives into their social circle. Those who pray against gambling must have no part in raffles at a bazaar or sweepstakes on board ship. That is, our influence must be on the side of our prayers. We must ourselves be clear in order to awaken others to see the evil. Moreover, we must remember the world cannot be converted by communities, but by individuals. Therefore, we must seek to win the drunkard, or gambler, or profligate next to us. In all this we are apt to be discouraged; but in the picture of the Perfect Servant, given in Isa. xli., we see He will not fail nor be discouraged; so, knowing that victory is sure, let us labour on as those who shall yet be more than conquerors.

ALDERSGATE-STREET.

The address was given here to-day by Rev. James Douglas, of Brixton, from Rom. xiii., which refers to the Christian's relation to the civil powers. There is in this passage, he said, a manifest appeal to the Christian to show sympathy towards earthly rulers. This is not the only passage which sets before us the same duty. We are called upon to pray that they may feel their responsibility to the King of kings. We should pray for the men themselves, as Paul exhorts in 1 Tim. ii.: "Pray for kings and for all that are in authority over us." I am not sure that this duty has the weight with Christian men and women that it ought to have. Unless this sympathetic feeling for those in power be maintained, I fear that, instead of beseeching the Throne of Grace, we shall ally ourselves with the disaffected classes, and embitter the feelings of antagonism so widespread in these days.

The powers that be, we are told, are ordained of God; and there is no power or authority but from God. The admonition is precise—"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers." These authorities were in themselves very bad at the time when the words were written; perhaps a thousandfold worse than in the present day. They were in violent opposition to the Church of God and the ambassadors of peace. Yet those holy men and women did not confederate in order to show opposition or resistance; they were in subjection to the civil authorities. In those days the only arms of the Church were the arms of prayer and peace. I think it should be so still. Our part is to enter into harmony with God's Word, and as those redeemed by grace to believe that God, in whose hands the hearts of men are as the rivers of water, will deal with those in places of power. We must obey man for God's sake. We must not disobey God for man's sake. That, I think, is the comprehensive law of Christian life and action in this connection.

Those men of God of the Old and New Testament times obeyed God rather than man, and so should we. At the same time that does not mean resistance. Daniel did not resist Darius, though he disobeyed him. He went into the lions' den, raising no clamour against the King's decree. The Lord's hand was with him, and wrought wondrously on his behalf. So with the three Hebrew children; so with the Apostles in New Testament times; they did not resist the powers ordained of God.

We have much need to pray at this time that earthly rulers may acknowledge their responsibility to God, and seek the promotion of righteousness and the maintenance of peace. The social and financial condition of the nations of Europe at the present time is exceedingly grave. This is the case even with our own nation, and especially so with such nations as France, Germany, Italy, and Russia. What is the cause of all this financial depression? It may be summed up in one word—that men and nations are seeking to be strong in themselves. Those who are strong in themselves, whether individuals or peoples, are necessarily made to feel their weakness. It is those who are weak in themselves who are strong towards God. I do not attach importance to our having a superior navy and a multitudinous army; what I do attach importance to is that those in authority should rule in the fear of God. Then in a crisis God can appear on their behalf, so that a remnant shall become a mighty host. God is not necessarily on the side of the strong battalions; but He is on the side of those who espouse his cause. England was very weak at the time of the Spanish Armada; yet how invincible she was, because there was so much of the salting property in the nation.

Let us pray, too, that all religious persecutions may be stayed; there is still need for this prayer as to Russia and other parts of the earth. Remember that prayer is the slender nerve that moves the muscle of omnipotence. Let us in all these matters pray with faith, so that we may be mighty in God and may prevail.

THURSDAY, Jan. 11.

The subjects for prayer on Thursday were:

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Praise to God: For the great success which has attended missionary enterprise in recent years and for the revived interest of the Church in the work. Prayer: For missionary Churches and societies, and for all efforts for disseminating the Word of God and extending Christ's kingdom in the Heathen and Mohammedan world; for native churches and their pastors; for secret disciples; for all missionaries and their helpers; and for the removal of all hindrances to the progress of Christianity.

PORTMAN ROOMS, W.

After a few opening words by the chairman and prayer by Rev. H. G. Thwaites and Mr. Rawlings,

Rev. B. BARING-GOULD, speaking on foreign missions, dwelt on the vast mass of human beings—a thousand millions—who have never heard of the Father's love, the Saviour's blood, or the Holy Spirit's grace. What, he asked, is Christendom doing for these? All the churches put together send out a little band of about 7000 men and women, but what are these? There must be some hindrances; what are these? First, that the Church of Christ, and the members of the Church, do not recognise their personal responsibility in the matter. In Acts xiii. 47, we read that the Lord commanded Paul, "I have set thee to be a light to the Gentiles." Was that meant for Paul only? No, it is for every individual believer to the end of time. Jesus is the Light of the world, and all who believe in Him are intended to be lights in the world. Alas! we often put our light under a bushel: it may be that of selfishness—contentment with the fact that we ourselves are saved; or paralysing modesty; or sheer apathy or indifference as to error and its consequences. Did every true child of God realise that he or she personally had been set for a light, that a tremendous responsibility rests on those who do not shine for God, surely we would have a revival of interest in missions to the heathen, and many would pray in the words we sing:—

O use me, Lord, use even me,
Just as Thou wilt, and when, and where,
Until thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, thy joy, thy glory share.

EXETER HALL.

A very appropriate and stimulating address was given at the meeting here to-day by the Rev. J. G. TRAIN, of Upper Norwood, the subject for the day being Missions. Mr. Train chose for his text the words of Christ to his disciples, in John iv. 35, "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold I say unto you, Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest." In these words the Lord clearly wished to draw a contrast between what his disciples said and saw, and what He said and saw. They did not occupy the same standpoint as the Master; and how often that is true of his disciples still. They were laying great stress on the physical side of things, when they discussed what He had got to eat; forgetting that with Him a still more important thing was the doing of his Father's will. It was right enough to think of the earthly; but they should not have left out of view the heavenly. So now it is right enough and necessary for us, as Christians, to discuss such matters as crops, and stocks, and markets, and so forth; but let us not forget the supremely important matters—the doing of the will of God, and the finishing of his work. May the Lord bring us more into sympathy with Himself in this respect.

The processes of nature and of mundane affairs are important, but let us look at the processes of God's working in the great harvest fields of the world. What a wonderful work He has accomplished in these fields even during the last ten years. Look away to Africa; see how He has opened up that vast continent, and what possibilities of usefulness there are in it. Look at the zenanas of India, and have regard to the work being done there. So with China, Mongolia, and the islands of the South Seas. These things are not reported on the Stock Exchange, but as Christians we must be quick to recognise them if we would be brought into true sympathy with our Lord.

This passage suggests another way in which we may limit the horizon of our vision. These disciples were very narrow and sectarian in their ideas; they marvelled that Christ spoke with a Samaritan woman. They might have been prepared to see some great work in Judea, but scarcely in Samaria. The woman herself said the Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans. They put up this national hedge and made it so high that really they could not see over it. We come across now some good folks who seem to think that England is God's chosen nation; that somehow we have a monopoly of the Gospel, and were meant to have it. Nay; God wants us to lift our eyes above these national distinctions. His purpose is that all his creatures equally should hear his Gospel, and He would have us look on the world-wide fields white unto harvest. Do we not make too much also of the denominational hedge, which prevents so many from seeing as far as they should? We are apt to have regard only to our own little bit of the vineyard. Jesus would have us think of and care for the welfare of all.

Note this thought also. The disciples were surprised that Christ "talked with a woman." They could understand his talking to men, but that a Rabbi should discourse with a woman! Have we not here a strong hint of the degraded position that woman occupied at that time? Christ would have all know that his salvation is for woman as much as man, and that in Him there is neither male nor female. He wants us to get above all such distinctions; to know that there is no portion of the race so degraded but the Gospel may prove to them the power of God. So let us pray for mission workers in all the great white harvest fields of the world.

ALDERSGATE-STREET.

Rev. J. Wardlaw Thompson was prevented fulfilling his engagement, and in his place Rev. MAURICE PHILLIPS, of the London Missionary Society, gave an interesting address on Foreign Missions. He has laboured for thirty-two years in India. In that portion of the British Empire there are 300,000,000 to evangelise. There are more missionaries in that country to-day than ever; yet there is now only one to every 400,000 of the population; or, counting all native assistants, one to every 100,000. It is only during seventy years that India has been evangelised, yet during this period the Bible has been translated into all the languages of the country; and in addition numerous commentaries and many tracts have been published. There is a Christian community of 750,000, composed of all classes. Speaking generally, the native Christians are an educated community.

When Mr. Phillips first went out native Christians were regarded as scum; landlords refused to rent them a house because they would defile it. All this is now overcome. The Gospel is influencing the masses. There are tens of thousands of secret Christians. When a Hindoo is baptized he has to give up wife, children, parents, possessions, everything. He himself becomes an outcast.

Mr. Phillips narrated an instance in illustration—a young Brahmin applied to him for baptism. He was urged to count the cost, and was put back to test his sincerity. On presenting himself again he was urged to communicate his intentions to his parents. He did so, and was most earnestly besought by them not to disgrace the family. He told them he must, greatly as it pained him to resist their desire, obey God. After his baptism his home was closed against him. After a while his parents came to see him; by-and-by they built him a room in their grounds, and sent him his food, always holding communication with him from a distance to avoid defilement. On the morning on which he proposed to return to the mission premises his mother sent him his morning meal as usual. Soon after his arrival he was seized with illness; violent convulsions ensued; the English doctor who was called in, and who was the means of saving his life, traced the poison to the morning meal. His mother, who tenderly loved him, had poisoned her own son to prevent him from any longer degrading the family.

FRIDAY, Jan. 12.

The appointed subjects on Friday were as follows:—

HOME MISSIONS AND THE JEWS.—Praise: For past blessing in connection with evangelistic work and missions to the Jews. Prayer: For all Christian agencies, and for all individual efforts to win souls for Christ; for the masses who live without God; and for Christian work among special classes, such as soldiers and sailors. Prayer for God's Ancient People Israel: That the veil upon their hearts may be removed; that all persecutions of the Jews may cease; that Christians may more fully understand God's purposes concerning Israel, and so live as to commend the Gospel to their Jewish neighbours.

PORTMAN ROOMS, W.

The Chairman dwelt on some points in this rehearsal of themes for prayer, rejoicing especially in the work among the Jews, mentioning particularly that of Joseph Rabinowitch and Mr. Warszawiak. Prayer followed by Rev. Dr. Gritton, Gen Touche, and others, after which Rev. E. Theodore Hitchens (appearing in place of his father, who had met with an accident) spoke on the Reasonableness of Prayer.

ALDERSGATE-STREET.

The address was by Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE, who spoke from Luke xvii. 5, 6, the request of the disciples to Jesus that He would increase their faith, and Christ's response.

In this passage, he said, we have a magnificent picture, not only of the supernatural, but of the impossible. It is, of course, an impossibility, naturally speaking, that a sycamine tree should be taken out of its position, and planted in the sea, and there begin to bear fruit. But I like to feel that we stand face to face with an unbelieving world, and say, "Smile if you must; we, too, can smile, and can say, that we have on our side Omnipotence, Love, and Spiritual Power; we are prepared to expect the great things that God has said He will do." Putting aside, however, the merely natural, physical, and material idea of the matter, let us ask what is meant by the spiritual interpretation. I am very bold in what I am about to say, because I am aware that it will contradict the ideas of a large number of Christians; but I believe that the prayer of the disciples, "Lord, increase our faith," was absolutely monstrous folly. No man ought ever to make such a prayer. I want to make quite plain to you why, after having studied the Bible for years, I have come to the conclusion that to ask the Lord to increase my faith is to be guilty of folly, and also of contradicting spiritual common sense. My reason is that the Lord Jesus never once, when faith was mentioned, pitied those who deplored their lack of it. If we look into the spiritual constitution of things, we must see that faith is a property with which man has been endowed, as much as in the physical domain he has received the blood that courses through his body or the brain which he is called upon to exercise. I say that God has endowed every single creature called human with the property or principle of faith, and it is to be exercised as you exercise your limbs, your reason, or your senses. When it is exercised it will come then to be a power. Those who say they have faith and cannot use it, contradict the very facts that concern their own existence.

It is not a question of whether you can trust, but whether the One whom you trust is trustworthy; whether the great God to whom you look is such an One that you dare not say you doubt Him. When the soul has come up to that condition that it has no more doubt of God than of its own existence, then there will be plenty of faith. And that is why the Lord Jesus Christ said to the disciples when they exhibited lack of faith, "Oh ye of little faith." Once see God, and recognise Christ as the Son of God, omnipotent in his power, and the Holy Ghost as supreme in the spiritual sphere, then the whole matter is settled.

I might remind you here of the passage in Eph. ii. 8, where we read, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." You may say that if faith is the gift of God we can pray that it may be increased. Of course every property that I have is the gift of God, but that is not the sense of this passage. I would say for those who do not read the Greek that the word "faith" is a feminine noun. The latter part of this expression is in the neuter, and therefore it cannot be referred to faith. It must refer to the whole sentence, "By grace are ye saved through faith." This salvation, which is through faith, is the gift of God. I do not know another passage in God's Word in which the idea of faith being an extra gift, beyond the properties with which we are endowed, can be traced. Therefore, when men say "Increase our faith," they are only making an excuse for their own idleness or sin.

Mr. Webb-Peploe next referred to the three special passages in which Jesus Christ on separate occasions brought forward this test of faith. In the passage in Matt. xvii. Christ had come down from the Mount of Transfiguration and found a boy possessed with a devil. The disciples could not cast the devil out, as He said, because of their unbelief. He told them that if they had had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, they would have said to the mountain, "Remove hence to yonder place." The next occasion is that recorded alike in Matt. xxi. and Mark xi. and refers to the barren fig-tree. That was at a very different crisis in our Lord's career, and near the very end of his life. In answer to the remarks of the disciples, Christ said: "Have faith in God;" or, more literally, "Have the faith of God." He does not mention the grain of mustard-seed, but simply says that if they had faith they could remove the mountain. The third instance is that before us in Luke xvii., and refers to another point altogether in his life. He is speaking of offences and difficulties in the spiritual life, and how they are to be removed. If they had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, they would say to the sycamine tree, "Be thou plucked up by the roots and be thou planted in the sea."

So there are three special spheres to which our Lord refers when he demands of them faith. And He is not sympathetic when He thinks of the necessities of their condition, but He rather reprobates their lack of faith. There is possession by the devil, there is unfruitfulness, and there is the erecting of a stumbling-block through some offence. Are not these three special kinds of hindrance which as workers we have to meet, whether in our home mission work or work among the Jews? We come to God with a sort of mock humility, and we say that we have laboured in this or that sphere for so long, but we have not seen a single soul saved; we are afraid there is something wrong, but we are sure it is not our want of faith.

Whose faith, then, is it? I admit that there is a point beyond which even faith cannot bring the Gospel, in the case of unwilling or wilfully-resisting souls. I cannot tell where that barrier arises. But I want to impress on you as workers, and on myself, that we are to expect that God will bless our efforts. It is because of our unbelief that the devils are not cast out, and that there is so much empty profession. Do not let us look at our neighbours in this matter of unfruitfulness, but at ourselves; how much of profession, and how little of reality; how much name, and how little fruit, because we have not had faith in God.

A word as to this mustard-seed faith. What do you suppose it means? You say it means the smallest degree of faith, and the Master took it as an illustration to give encouragement to the feeblest. There is more in it than that. The mustard-tree grows ten feet high, and when the wind comes, at the very time of the year when the fruit is ripe, the seeds are blown and carried away. They are cast into certain lodging-places where they drop into the ground and die, and bear fruit upwards. We are not willing to be blown upon by God—to be put where the Holy Ghost wants us to be; so we cling on and will not let go. The Holy Ghost calls us to go somewhere, and we say "Yes, but just wait a little—a few weeks or months." So we cling to our comfortable places. We shrink from the death of self to which God calls us. But it is only through death that life and power come. We must be willing to be blown away and put in the place of death, that we may be raised in the resurrection power of Christ, and bear fruit to the glory of God.

Let us expect results in our work for God. Do not say it is presumptuous to look for fruit in our churches and in our missions. Let us take courage, from this consideration of our Lord's words, to expect great things from God Almighty.

CORNHILL Y.M.C.A.

Rev. J. G. Train, who conducted the meeting at the Y.M.C.A., Cornhill, on Friday, made it a very real season of waiting on God, devoting the larger portion of the hour to prayer, and only adding at the close a few pointed words. He had been much impressed with the fact that the Lord Jesus in sending out the first band of workers selected these men almost exclusively from one calling—that of fishermen. Having spent the first years of his ministry among fishermen, Mr. Train said he was convinced that the Lord had good reason for his choice. Have you noticed that the New Testament idea seems to be that of a fisherman, as the Old Testament is that of a shepherd? The motto of the Old Testament is "keep"; that of the New Testament is "get." In Old Testament days God's people were kept and guarded, but there was little aggressive work; and you know how in such an instance as that of Jonah there was great hesitation. David was taken from keeping his flock to keep God's people Israel; and as king he had to carry out the characteristics which had made him a good shepherd. So it is in the Old Testament to a large extent.

But, in coming to the New Testament dispensation we see at once that its character is changed. Among the first Apostles there was not a shepherd, a farmer, or a city man; they were for the most part fishermen. Moreover, they were called under circumstances which indicate that the qualities fitting them for successful fishers were to be utilised in the new business; only whereas they had formerly caught fish, now they were to catch men. The fisherman stands as a representative servant, for his whole business is to get, to catch. He casts his net into the sea; he sees not the fish; but he believes they are there. The truth is there are many details (had we time to enlarge on them) which show the fisherman to be a good type of the Christian evangelist. There are fish to be got; we must fling in the net in faith, and God will give the catch. There are fish everywhere, in all waters; in the slums as well as in the suburbs. There are no enclosed waters; the Christian worker is free of all waters: "Go ye therefore" in the power God has promised to bestow.

Thus we see the supreme idea of the New Testament is to "Go and save," or in the fisherman's phrase to "catch the fish." Of course there is pastoral work. When the fish are caught and hauled in, they, strange as the figure seems, become sheep and need shepherds. But this does not alter the fact that the supreme and primary idea is that of fishermen. God helps us to follow Him, and He says: "I will make you fishers of men."

The speaker added a few sentences on the second subject for the day—the Jews—showing that salvation is of the Jew, to the Jew, and for the Jew.

SATURDAY, Jan. 13.

Families and Schools.—Prayer: That our sons and daughters may be truly converted; that they may be trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and be enabled to overcome the temptations of the age; for all special efforts on behalf of the young; for universities, colleges, and schools; for much blessing upon Christian Associations of young men and of young women; for grace to parents to lead their children to the Lord, both by word and example.

PORTMAN ROOMS, W.

Mr. George Williams, who presided at the West End meeting, briefly dwelt on the importance of the theme, indicating his belief that the temptations to which the children even of Christian parents are exposed are alike insidious and deadly; while these moral snares are increasing on all hands. As to the Y.M.C.A., which this year will celebrate its jubilee, he believed that last year alone over a thousand young men were added to the Church through this agency. The Y.W.C.A., he had cause to know, is also doing a noble work. These associations are in no way opposed to the churches, but ought really to be regarded as the best helpers of the churches.

After prayer by Rev. Marmaduke Washington and Gen. Sir R. Phayre,

Rev. John Bond gave a brief address, in which he enlarged on the importance of the subject, seeing that the children and young people of to-day will be the leaders and rulers of to-morrow. The effect on the future, if these be brought to the faith and acceptance of Jesus Christ, would be most wonderful. This being so, we do well to pray for them; but, in order that our prayers may be effectual, we must do our part. God has laid serious responsibilities upon us, and unless we seek to fulfil these we have no right to expect our prayers to be answered. By precept, example, and the due exercise of parental authority we are bound to use our best efforts, in dependence on God, to lead our children to the Saviour. When we have carried out our duty, let us pray—pray that the blessing of Providence may shadow and cover them; pray that the blessing of grace may rest on them, renewing and causing the young lives to bring forth bud and blossom to his glory.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

Whilst we think of children and care for them collectively in large numbers, we must beware lest we lose in the collective dealing one grip of the individual characteristics of each child.—J. R. Diggle.

What we do for little children is pleasant toil. The light of God's morning plays about the faces of little children and makes them beautiful: the song of the first creation echoes in their voices and makes them glad.

There is a girl we love to think of; she comes in late when there is company and wears a pretty air of mingled responsibility and anxiety which some cannot understand. Sweet soul, she is the girl that helps mother.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.—II.

The Book of Acts contains besides the narrative of the outpouring of the Spirit on the Day of Pentecost, three incidents subsequent and supplementary and subsidiary thereto, the significance of which must be discerned if we would understand this vital subject.

1. The Samaritans who had believed Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and who had been baptized, received the Spirit through the prayer and laying on of hands of the Apostles (ch. viii.).
2. The Spirit fell on all them who heard the word in Cornelius's house, and they were afterwards baptized, on Peter's motion to that effect (ch. x. xi.).
3. Twelve disciples who had been baptized into John's baptism received the Spirit when Paul had instructed, baptized, and laid his hands on them (ch. xix.).

Why is the reception of the Spirit mentioned in these three cases and not in other cases? And how is it that the order is different in cases one and two? and why is there a re-baptism in the third? which certainly does not appear to have always taken place under similar circumstances.

I suggest the following answer to these questions, as a contribution to a subject always of first importance, and peculiarly so at the present time.

THE SAMARITANS.

1. "The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans." "Thou art a Samaritan, and hast a demon." "Shall we call down fire from heaven and consume them, as Elias did?" These passages show the estimation in which the Samaritans were held by the Jews, and suggest that nothing less than a great persecution would have led to the evangelisation of Samaria by the Jerusalem Jews. Even then it was the evangelist Philip, of Cesarea, who carried the glad tidings to Samaria. We may well conclude that there would have been a very strong Jewish prejudice against receiving the Samaritans as brethren beloved, partakers of the benefit of the outpoured Spirit. Therefore the wise grace of God so ordered it that Peter and John, the two chief Apostles, should be sent by the rest of the apostles to Samaria, and that that mongrel people, hitherto so bitterly despised, should receive the Spirit in answer to the prayer and by means of the laying on of hands of the apostolic deputation from Jerusalem itself.

This, I think, sufficiently shows that the falling of the Spirit on the baptized believers at Samaria was delayed for a special purpose, so that He might be received in such wise that Samaria's share in the fulfilled promise might never afterwards be called in question.

THE GENTILES.

2. "And He said unto me, Depart, for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles. And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that he should live." "Not so, Lord, for I have never eaten anything that is common or unclean. . . . Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons." "Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life." These passages indicate the intense and deeply-rooted exclusiveness with which the Jews regarded the Gentiles. Therefore Peter's trance and Cornelius's vision. Therefore spontaneously and unexpectedly "the Holy Ghost fell on them (says Peter) as on us at the beginning."

That God should have dealings with the despised Samaritans on the same terms as with the Jews themselves was a sufficient shock to ancestral and educational pride; but that the middle wall of partition should be broken down, and Gentile dogs enter the garden of God, would seem a superfluity of naughtiness to the inhabitants of Jerusalem and men of Judah. "For the vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant."

How gradually this weed of Judaism was rooted out of Peter himself, his blameworthy trimming at Antioch bears witness; and how it troubled the early Church is abundantly evident in the Acts and the Epistles.

While, therefore, it was in answer to the Apostles' prayer that the Samaritans received the Holy Ghost, it was by God's own act and deed from first to last, and in marked contravention of all precedent, without their waiting, without their praying for it, without baptism, without laying on of hands, while Peter spake, yea, while he began to speak, suddenly the Holy Ghost fell on the Gentiles in Cæsar's city, as on the Jewish disciples on the Day of Pentecost; in the presence of the six brethren from Joppa, with the Apostle—not two or three, but seven Jewish witnesses.

If the inclusion of the Samaritans is placed beyond question, still more emphatically is it declared from heaven that the Spirit is given without measure for all men who believe, seeing that as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so has the Son of Man been lifted up; and lifted up not only in shame upon the cross, but in glory to the right hand of the Majesty on high. R. C. M.

(To be concluded.)

The Evangelist.

BESIDE HIMSELF.

For seven years we had been praying that F—— J—— might be led to seek Christ as his Saviour. He knew quite well that mother, sisters, friends, longed for his conversion to God; but he merely laughed at, sometimes he ridiculed, what he called our "extremely bad taste in pushing on a fellow what he did not want."

"I am not going to say anything against religion for women; it keeps them in order, and does them good, I daresay. But, if you want to make me believe it will do me any good to embrace a set of new beliefs just for the luxury of feeling I am a sinner, why, you will have to do it when I'm beside myself, that is all."

That is how he would talk to us; not because he was ever asked or advised to "embrace" anything, because he never was. We always abstained from "talking goody" to him, as he called it, believing that, in his case, "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

He married. A good, kind, simple little woman his wife was, but she made no pretence of caring for "things that accompany salvation" any more than her husband did. To some of us it seemed, then, as if our praying could not be of "the effectual, fervent" kind, since, as yet, it had availed nothing, and we resolved to give ourselves more earnestly, definitely, and constantly to prayer on his behalf than hitherto. This we did, but we never spoke of it outside our own praying circle. One of our number said, one day, "I don't feel as if I can pray any longer. Here is F—— worse than ever he was; he now boasts openly of doing things he was once ashamed of, and A—— (his wife) says that he has begun to ill-treat her, and he bets away all the money he can earn. Some people elect to go to the devil, and F—— is one of them. I can't pray for him." We were sorry for this, but we resolved to pray more ardently than ever, for, we argued, it is all very well for a man to "elect to go to the devil," but God is stronger than the devil, and if He will save a man, not all the devils in hell or out can prevent it. So we continued praying. Then we heard some very bad things about F—— J——. He certainly seemed to have a faculty for taking the downward road in everything he did. Finally, we knew he had left his home, deserted his wife and little child, leaving no word behind him.

Two of us went to see the poor little wife. She was overcome with sorrow; the world seemed a very black, lonely place to her. She said:

"I don't know which way to turn—all seems dark."

"Turn to God, dear," we said. "You will find He will never fail you. Just cast all your care upon Him."

"How you talk!" she said. "As if I'm going to do a shabby thing like that—run to Him when I'm in trouble, when I've not given Him a thought in my happiness! No."

"Poor child!" we said, drawing her to us, "don't you know that God is our refuge and strength—a very present help in trouble? It will be more shabby to keep away from Him." We left her a little comforted—for had we not pointed her to the Comforter—and we went home to pray for F—— and her. We said, as the clock was striking nine:

"Let us spend the night in prayer. F—— must be needing help more than ever, and who knows if he may not be tired of himself to-night, and longing for help and comfort?"

So we prayed. At half-past eleven we felt we could pray no longer—a wonderful uplifting of heart filled us; it was as if sunshine had come into the room, and we felt that we must praise God for F——'s sake. This we did, and with a happy sense of liberty and light, and an outspoken belief that F—— had got blessing, we retired for the night.

At about seven the next evening, F—— and his wife came. It seemed as if we had expected them, for we greeted them with the words, "We were not quite sure what time to expect you!" They looked at one another.

"Why, how did you know?" they asked. "Do you know?"

"We felt you were happy," we said, "and we have been thanking and praising God for you. But we know nothing." They looked surprised, but as if they perfectly understood, and then F—— told us how it was. I will give it in his own words: "I had had a wretched day; something seemed to dog my steps, and make me more hopeless and wretched than usual, and at last I thought the best thing I could do for myself and others would be to quietly end it all in the river. I went down to the dock and hung about, but there were so many people about, and one or two watching me, that I resolved to waste no more time there, but to go to one of the bridges and fling myself over in a pause in the foot traffic.

"I started to do this, but as I stalked along in the pouring rain I saw a very bright lamp hanging over a doorway, and a cosy shelter just inside the outer door. It seemed a queer thing to do for a man who was going into the river just to stand up from the rain, but I felt obliged to do. Presently there was a shuffling of many feet, and some strong, rough voices began to sing. I opened the inner door just the least bit, and saw (though they could not see me) two or three hundred people standing and singing. I caught the words of the song, too; they struck me as being more appropriate than elegant—

Come to the Saviour, make no delay.

But I think differently about them already. Then a man began to speak to the people, and he spoke from the words, 'The foolishness of God is wiser than men.'

"I listened with all my might, and as time went on it became a matter of life or death to me. I squeezed myself silently into the room, and on a seat by the door I listened unnoticed. By the time the man had finished I was beside myself" (here we exchanged glances, for he had said he must be "beside himself" before he could believe!), "longing for pardon, cleansing, and peace. It was now nine o'clock" (we remembered that hour—it was then we were moved to special prayer), "but I felt I must speak to that man or I should go mad. I waited till all had left, and told the preacher how I felt. He was a good fellow, and though it was getting late, he said he would not leave me.

"He took me home with him, prayed with me, read to me, but all the time I felt as if I must be lost—there could be no hope for me. Suddenly, while he was praying for me, my lips were unlocked, and I burst into thanksgiving—every burden of past sin rolled away, and I in the light! It was now half-past eleven" (again we noted the time), "and I longed, yet feared to go home to poor A——. I ran all the way, and outside the house I paused. Perhaps A—— would regard me as a madman. I saw a light in the window, and peered through the blinds. I saw at a glance that A—— had been reading the Bible—she saw that something had come to me, and that I was not the same man who had run away from her.

"She had found pardon; owing to the words you had spoken to her, she had gone to God for comfort, but found she wanted to get rid of the load of sin before even she could be comforted. And she cast it all on the Lord, and found peace. But then she was afraid of me. If I came back, as she hoped, she dreaded my opposition.

"When I knew I was pardoned, my first thought was of her. 'How she will ridicule me, after all my holding out!' I said to myself. But here we were, both of one mind, both of one faith; I could scarce believe it."

"You said you would have to be beside yourself before you could know yourself to be a sinner," we reminded him.

"It was quite true," he said, "only not in the way I meant. I can only praise God for leading me to where I am, and for giving you all such a real grasp of the power of prayer."

G.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH NOAH.—Gen. ix. 8-17.

GOLDEN TEXT, ver. 13.

NOAH is one of the elders who "obtained a good report" through faith (Heb. xi. 2, 7). His faith separated him from all the people who lived in his day. Note their character as described by God (vi. 5-7), and as contrasted with that of Noah (vi. 8, 9). The root difference between him and them was that he believed God, and they did not. His faith made him fear and obey; their unbelief made them reckless and disobedient. His fidelity to God in the midst of such ungodly surroundings presents an example worthy of imitation. Can you be faithful among the faithless?

His faith, not only affected his conduct, but it was the condition of his salvation. One man and his family were all God could find willing to believe Him. For those eight persons He provided so costly a salvation, and took them safely through the judgment into the new earth. The story is not only history, but type. In the judgment yet to fall upon a guilty world, God provides a sure salvation for those who believe. Our Ark is Christ. To be outside of Him is to share the common doom (Luke xvii. 26, 27).

Noah's first act when he came forth from the Ark was to build an altar, and to present burnt offerings to God (viii. 20, 21). It was a grateful recognition of God's grace toward him, and a believing acceptance of the new earth which God had given. God answered with the covenant which He still keeps, and will keep while the earth remaineth (viii. 21, 22). Every recurring season, every harvest in-gathered, should remind us of God's promise to Noah. The closing part of this covenant forms our lesson.

THE COVENANT (8-11).—A covenant is an agreement between two parties, in which one binds himself by promise to do something for the other. It is evidence of God's condescending grace and favour that He is willing to enter into such an agreement with man. The man of faith becomes a "friend of God." Note, that the covenant was made over the altar of sacrifice (viii. 20). God's people are described as those who have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice (Psa. l. 5). The new covenant is in the blood of Christ (Matt. xxvi. 28). Why should sacrifice be the basis of God's covenant with man? Because the covenant of works said that death was the penalty of sin (Gen. ii. 17). Apart from the death of Christ as our substitute, which Noah's offerings represented in type, God can enter into no agreement with guilty men. Have we accepted Jesus's death as the payment of our debt?

The blessings of this Covenant are chiefly providential. The Covenant which it dimly foreshadows, and the blessings of which are secured to us by a greater sacrifice, goes beyond this. Read Heb. viii. 10-12. It is the spiritual blessings which are made more prominent in that; yet it is no small encouragement to know that providential mercies are made sure to us by covenant too. The greater does not nullify, but includes, the less. It is in such promises as Rom. viii. 28, 32 that these blessings are ensured to us; and not to us alone but the animal creation is included (10). All creatures have shared in the consequences of sin, and are to share in the blessings of redemption (Rom. viii. 19-22). The covenant with Noah does not go so far as this; but it suggests how thoughtful God is for all the creatures He has made.

THE TOKEN (12-16).—The rainbow was, no doubt, a common object before this event, but it never had such meaning as God gave it now. It became, and is still, a constant testimony to God's faithfulness. How eloquently it speaks, if we had but ears to hear.

It serves three purposes:—(1) It was a token of remembrance. It would remind men of God's promise, and assure them that God would not forget them. "I will look upon it and remember." Not that God can forget through any defect of memory, but our weak hearts can easily think that He forgets (Psa. lxxvii. 9; Isa. xlix. 14-16). This distressing doubt the rainbow should drive away.

(2) It was a picture of God's method of dealing with his people. Clouds are suggestive of trouble and distress; but in every such cloud faith can see the rainbow of promise. Two things are necessary to produce a rainbow, the rain cloud and the bright sunshine. When we see the sun of God's love shining upon the cloud of our distress, the bow of promise appears. In every trouble, little or great, look for the bow.

(3) It became a prophetic symbol. Ezekiel saw it (Ezek. i. 28). John saw it (Rev. iv. 3; x. 1). The throne of God's providential government is overarched with the sign of the covenant of grace. Its message enforced by this Old Testament story is that of Rom. v. 20, 21.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21.—PROV. XIV.

1.—What the house-mother is, that the family will be. "A fortune in a wife is better than a fortune with a wife."

2, 3.—True piety produces correct and holy living, and betrays itself through lip and life.

4.—A little inconvenience is not counted if the advantage is great. 5.—The false or true words betray the heart that utters them.

6.—Sincerity and humility are the key to true wisdom.

7-9.—Fools mock at sin, and are lost through the sin at which they mock. Avoid such "sin offering" (R.V. marg.).

10.—"No stranger Thou to all our wanderings wild." 11, 12.—Permanent success and blessing are only possible in the way of righteousness, but we must live by faith, for generally the best is not that which seems the best.

13.—Breaking hearts hide under the mask of laughter, but, after a while, the mask must be cast aside. 14.—To be good is to have good. To turn from God is to sow seeds of a bitter harvest.

15, 16.—Prove all things, hold fast that which is good. 17-21.—Control yourself. Seek the knowledge of God. Be rich in the best wealth. Be merciful; so will you be blessed.

22.—The thought of helpfulness to others returns in blessing.

23.—Work without talk, but do not talk without work. 24.—Life consists less in what we have than in what we are. 25.—Let us live to deliver souls.

26, 27.—God's care is our castle-keep, in which the spring of water rises ever.

28.—The prosperity of a kingdom is tested by the multitudes of its population. What must Christ's glory be (Rev. vii. 9, 10)?

29-31.—Slow to wrath; sound in heart; free from envy; honouring God; pitying the poor. These are secrets of heart ease.

32.—The death-bed of the sinner and the saint.

33-35.—Wisdom and righteousness bless, not the individual alone, but the kingdom. Is the King's favour towards us, or do we cause Him shame?

MONDAY, JANUARY 22.—PROV. XV.

1, 2.—This is a noble art of self-defence. The soft word is like oil to a wound; the grievous word like a bellows fanning flame. But we must not cast pearls before swine. In the fourth verse, we are told that the tongue heals like the leaves of the tree of life (4). 3.—Thy Father seeth in secret; thy Heavenly Father knoweth.

5.—Despise not thou the chastening of the Lord.

6.—This may not appear to sight, but it is so essentially and really. The righteous has indestructible treasures in his possession.

7.—Because wisdom is in him, it speaks through his lips, and his words are scattered like good seed.

8, 9.—The sacrifice and the way of the wicked are intimately connected. A wicked man may be very religious in outward forms, but his religiousness is as abominable as his way to the holy eye of God. You must be right with God before you can properly worship Him (John iv. 23, 24).

10.—Correction, though grievous, is better than eternal death. Heed it, and get back into the way! 11.—Sheol and Abaddon, the grave and destruction (R.V.), are unseen by man, but naked to God. Thus are the evils of the heart also open to Him with whom we have to do.

13, 14, 15.—A merry, an understanding, and a cheerful heart is described in these words; but these blessed dispositions are only to be had through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. A continual marriage-feast, the counterpart of that at which Jesus gave the best last!

16, 17.—"Riches and poverty are more in the heart than in the hand. He is wealthy who is contented, he is poor that wanteth more."—Leighton.

18-20.—Be slow to anger, take the path of uprightness, honour your parents, and get the understanding which the Holy Spirit gives.

21-22.—Get the best wisdom in your heart, go straight, take counsel with those who are older and wiser than yourself.

23.—A word in season gives joy to him who utters it, and does good to those who hear. 24.—On our dead selves as stepping-stones to higher things.

25-26.—The proud removes the widow's landmark, but God will replace it, and his house shall fall.

28-29.—Think twice before you answer; and speak more to God than to man.

31-33.—The ear must hearken, the soul must accept correction, the proud knee must stoop, there is no other way to an honourable and blessed life.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 23.—PROV. XVI.

1.—See R.V. Man proposes plans, but God disposes events. Don't neglect prudent planning, but don't trust it. See verse 9.

2.—We may be perfect in our own eyes, but very faulty in God's. We judge by appearances, but He weighs us (1 Sam. ii. 13).

3.—The Psalmist told us to roll our way on God. We are here bidden to roll our works. God becomes responsible for the designs which are first submitted to Him. 4.—See R.V. God does not make men wicked, but He makes their wickedness show forth his praise (Rom. ix. 22).

5-7.—If you live in proud antagonism with God you shall rue it, though you join hands with all mankind; if you are right with God you may face a world in arms.

8.—Better for the inner peace, for present enjoyment, and for the life hereafter.

10-15.—Royalty, not less than the scales of a tradesman's shop, is accountable to God. Here we have described the delight, wrath, and smile of a true king; but how much more of our blessed Lord and King.

18-19.—The world's history has furnished many illustrations of the truth of these words:—Pharaoh (Ex. ix. 16, 17), Haman (Est. v. 2, vii. 10), David (2 Sam. xxiv. 1), Peter (Matt. xxvi. 33). Our only safety is in self-distrust (1 Cor. x. 12).

20-24.—Again we have the connection between heart and speech. "The pen of the tongue writes in the ink of the heart."

25.—See xiv. 12. But here is a different connection. All that seems right is not so; but what seems wrong is the best, if it be God's will.

26.—The desire of the labourer for food urges him to work; oh, that we were ever urged to Christian service by appetite for Christ's glory.

27-30.—The diligence of the wicked in doing evil is a reproof to the lethargy of the saint (Micah vii. 3). Yet what mischief he does to others, and what a fire of remorse he lights for himself! Let us be as eager for righteousness as he for sin (Rom. vi. 19).

32.—This is a difficult battle. The Czar Peter said, "I can govern people, but how can I govern myself?" Christ must overcome in us, or we can never overcome.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 24.—PROV. XVII.

1.—Many who feast are starving, whilst the starving have meat to eat that the world knows not.

2.—Character carries the privileges of birthright with it. 3.—God reserves the refining process for Himself. He will not lose one particle of precious ore (Is. xlviii. 10).

4.—You betray yourself by the talk you listen to.

5.—God identifies Himself with his poor (xiv. 31). Rejoicing at calamity was the sin of Shimei (2 Sam. xvi. 5-8). 6.—A reciprocal ornament. What fathers are to children, that children will be to fathers.

7.—Let there be no incongruity between your words and your standing. 8.—We ought to do as much for love of Christ as others do for reward.

9-12.—Let us bury causes of enmity and misunderstanding as far as possible; but where rebukes are needed let us not refrain from administering them. But it is useless to expend ourselves on senseless and sinful souls.

14.—"The mother of mischief is no bigger than a midge's wing." If there is ever so small a hole in a dyke, through which the water slowly percolates, there will presently be an ever-increasing volume, before which the dam will be swept away.

18.—If you become surety for another, you must be prepared to suffer for it.

19.—"I will suffer many wrongs ere I will complain of one, and endeavour to right it by contending. To strive with my superior is furious: with my equal, doubtful; with my inferior sordid and base; with any, full of unquietness."—Bishop Hall.

22.—Quiet, diet, and cheerfulness, flowing from a good conscience, are the best medicines (xv. 15; iii. 7, 8; iv. 22). 24.—The Word is nigh thee, in thy lips and heart. 25.—The mother suffers most.

27-28.—"He cannot be known for a fool that says nothing. Even concealed folly is wisdom." A cool spirit (R.V.) is an excellent possession.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25.—PROV XVIII.

1.—There is the separation of the Pharisee and of the true Nazarite. It is the former that is mentioned here as leading to quarrelling with true wisdom.

2.—To refuse to understand others and to talk incessantly of your own thoughts is the sign of folly.

3.—Contempt and reproach are the portion of the righteous from the wicked (Ps. lxix. 20).

4.—What an ideal for our speech—deep waters, a flowing brook, a well-spring of wisdom! (R.V.)

5.—Compare 2 Sam. xxiii. 3. The absolute justice of Christ (Luke xx. 21; Acts xvii. 31).

6-8.—Four evil results on the conduct of the fool contention, strokes, destruction, wounds. All resulting from his words (Jas. iii. 6).

9.—"Idleness is the mother of want, the sister of theft." 10-11.—The two towers—God and wealth. But the latter is only so in the imagination of its possessor. 12.—Haughtiness and humility are the shadows cast by coming events.

13.—Hear the case on both sides before you pronounce judgment.

14.—Heaviness of spirit was experienced by the Lord (Matt. xxvi. 37-38). He binds up broken hearts (Heb. iv. 15-16). 15.—Let heart and ear be ever on the alert to acquire and store.

16.—It is wonderful that the reverse holds good with Christ. Our need commends us to Him.

17.—You may think yourself never so good, but the adversary can find out plenty of blots on your robes. You are like a man selling his goods by gaslight, but let the day come round. . .

18.—We do not use the lot, because we believe in the direct guidance of the Spirit, as the special gift of this dispensation. 19.—"Have but one enemy—the devil; with him never be reconciled. With thy brother never fall out."—Chrys. 20-21.—When we break the bread for others, we are fed ourselves. 22.—A good wife is one of God's best gifts. 23.—If you refuse, do it gently. 24.—"I," said our Lord, "have called you friends."

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26.—PROV. XIX.

1.—Better poverty than perversity.

2.—The spring of action is the soul, the instruments of action are the feet. Do not act without knowledge, forethought, and patience.

3.—They are fullest of complaints against God who have most reason to complain against themselves.

4-7.—These words are true of most friendships, but that which is in Jesus partakes of the nature of his own, and is attracted by want and need. Oh! make friends with this Friend, who gives gifts so bountifully. 9.—The God of truth will adjust all these things in that day, if not before.

11.—Justin Martyr accounted our Saviour's patience his greatest miracle. "It is easier not to admit the passion than, when admitted, to govern it."

12.—Jesus is as the Lion of Judah to his foes, as rain on the mown grass to his friends.

13.—"He who hath a smoky house, a dropping roof, and a contentious wife, hath no need to go abroad for war." 14.—Love is a greater gift than wealth.

15.—Let us guard against slothfulness in the matter of our soul, and in keeping watch with Christ. See also 24. 16.—Compare verse 8. On selfish ground, religion is the best.

17.—Notice R.V. "His good deed will He pay him again." God will never be long in our debt.

18.—God dealeth with us as with sons. It would be a good exercise for chastened souls to discover from this book God's reasons.

19-21.—The impulsive man is always getting into scrapes. Do not worry about the many plans that suggest themselves. Wait on God, and learn his way. 23.—He always wins that sides with God. He always gets his way, who takes God's.

25.—Make an example of one for the instruction of all. 27.—Beware of instruction that makes people err in life. 28, 29.—What a quartette: the worthless witness, the wicked mouth, the scorner, and the fool. If thou art only as the last, thou art in bad company, and wilt incur their doom.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27.—PROV. XX.

1.—This warning is still required. Not only the ungodly, but the professed people of God have been deceived by this fatal snare.

2.—True of the Great King (Ps. xc. 11). Kiss the Son! 3.—It is easier to get into a quarrel than out of it. Beware! 4.—Note his neglect, his excuse (cold), the real reason (sluggard), and the inevitable result (shall beg).

5.—Get what you can from others by letting the pitcher deep down into the secret thoughts of God, truth, heaven. 6.—Beware of ostentatious righteousness (Matt. vi. 1). 7.—Character is the best legacy.

8.—Yield your heart to be the throne of the King. Let Him judge and scatter the evil, which is too strong for you (26).

9.—The perfect man could not say this (Job i. 1; ix. 30-31). The more we know of God, the more quickly we detect sin where we once saw none.

10.—Comp. 23. God watches every transaction in shops and counting-house.

11.—As the twig is bent, the tree will grow. Seek the conversion of children. 12.—Shall He not hear and see?

14.—We have no right to take advantage of another's ignorance. 15.—To know is better than to have, but to be is better than either.

16.—The man who goes surety for any, and especially for those he does not know, may be stripped even to his clothes. 17.—If this be so, a good many mouths must be full of grit and dust.

18.—Take counsel with man if you will, but especially with the Counsellor.

19.—The man who tells tales to you about others will tell tales about you.

21-22.—If you are always doing for yourself, you will be less successful than if you will let God do for you. 24.—You cannot understand your way, but you can trust your guide.

25.—Let your consecration be deliberate, that there be nothing to repent of afterwards.

27.—Search us, O God! conscience is his light set in the secret heart. 30.—Welcome chastisement with such results.

For the Young.

"CHRISTMAS ROMPS" AT THE ALBERT HALL.

A LETTER FROM ETHEL TO DOROTHY.

Norwood, London, January 15, 1894.

MY DEAR DOROTHY,—I must write and tell you about what we saw one day last week. Uncle said he was sure that father and mother would not like us to go to see a "pantomine." He says they are just a lot of silly nonsense, and why such things are run after, especially at Christmas time, he can't imagine. So he promised to take us to a real Christmas treat. It was last Thursday, just two weeks after dear grandma died. You remember Gracie wrote by last mail, and told you how we spent Christmas Day at grandma's, and although she was very sick we did not think she would be taken from us so soon. But two weeks ago to-morrow, just as the snow began to fall, we saw them take her poor, thin, cold body, away and they laid it in grandpa's grave at Norwood Cemetery, not very far from the spot where Mr. Spurgeon is buried, whose sermons father is so fond of reading on Sundays. We miss dear grandma so much, but uncle says she is now free from all pains and troubles, and she has gone to be where Jesus is.

Well, as I was saying, it was on Thursday that we went up to London. Next day was Gracie's birthday, and auntie said this would do instead of a birthday party. She said she had often read in the papers that they kept the Queen's birthday on a different day, and that was a good excuse for us doing it too.

So we asked Florrie to be sure and feed uncle's collie doggie, Goblin, and then we started off by the train as soon as we had dinner. There were Auntie Jeannie, and Gracie, and George, and cousin Annabelia and myself. I must tell you now that we were going to a place called the Albert Hall, where Dr. Barnardo was to meet a great many boys and girls who try to help him in his work. He calls them his "Young Helpers' League"; mother will tell you just what it means if you ask her, as I cannot explain these hard words very well.

Cousin Annabella is one of the "Young Helpers"; so, of course, she was very anxious to go, and she was glad to come with us. She says that Dr. Barnardo is such a good, kind man. He is always looking out for the poor hungry boys and girls that nobody cares about; and he takes them into his family and give them plenty to eat, and nice clothes, and sends them to school, and make them so smart and clever that people are glad to have the girls for serving maids; and lots of the boys go over the sea to a fine country called Canada, where they work on farms and grow quite rich and happy.

Until I was told this I did not know there were such kind people in the world as Dr. Barnardo. But uncle says there are a good many of the same sort, though not so many as there ought to be. I am afraid you will hardly believe it, but they say that Dr. Barnardo has about five thousand children in his family. You know that father and mother sometimes used to think they had enough to do taking care of six of us. I wonder very much how anyone could have a house and a heart big enough to hold five thousand.

I think Dr. Barnardo must be as rich as King Solomon was. Uncle says he gets his money just where Solomon got his. In the first chapter of 2 Chronicles it is written down that because Solomon asked only for wisdom and not for wealth, God said He would also give him "riches and wealth and honour." Uncle says that God puts it into the hearts of people all over the world to send Dr. Barnardo the money he needs for such a great family, and so it comes from God really. Dear Dorothy, don't you think it is very wonderful? I do.

Auntie has just read what I have written, and she says that she likes it, but if I don't begin at once and tell you about the "treat" in the Albert Hall, the letter will be so heavy she will not be able to pay the postage to Ceylon. So now I must commence. We got to the hall very early, before the doors were opened. Opposite the hall, in a pretty park called Kensington Gardens, we saw a very grand picture, carved in gold it seemed, of the Queen's husband, who died ever so long ago. It would take me a whole day to describe it, so you must go and see it yourself the next time you come to England. But his name was Prince Albert, and the Queen and her people were so sorry when he died that they put up this fine monument, and also the hall across the road; and that he might not be forgotten they called it the Albert Hall.

There were crowds of people round the doors, and heaps of boys and girls just about the age of Gracie and George and me. We soon got inside and found beautiful seats—a cushioned chair to each of us. We were hardly seated when uncle, who had been to work in the City, came and sat down beside us. You never saw such a fine place as the Albert Hall. It was almost like gazing up to the sky to look at the roof, and I do believe it would hold all the people in the town of Badulla, where father used to take us. There were ever so many ladies and gentlemen and boys and girls all through the hall—thousands of them, uncle said. It was all so splendid I hardly knew where to look first.

But at one end we saw a crowd of girls and boys sitting down. The girls had white pinafores, and the boys had white blouses, and they sat in long rows one above another. They looked just like a whole gardenful of white lilies planted on the steep hillside that leads up to father's top bungalow. They were some of the children whom Dr. Barnardo had found starving and forsaken, and now they were as pretty and nice as could ever be. And what sweet, merry songs they sang. And how they waved their tiny flags, and held up their handkerchiefs, folded three-corner ways, so that they looked just like the white sails of hundreds of ships, "Sailing, sailing across the sunlit bay," as the song said.

But I am sure I shall get mixed up if I don't look at uncle's programme; there was so much to remember. The first thing was the arrival of a Royal lady, the Duchess of Teck. Auntie says she is a great friend of the Queen's. She walked along the floor of the hall, leaning on the arm of a grey-haired gentleman, right up to where the children were, and they gave her a grand chair in the front seat. Ninety little boys ranged in a double row, dressed in smart sailor suits, were a "guard of honour," and the Duchess walked between, with a lot of nice gentlemen following close after. Somebody said that the Royal lady's husband, the Duke of Teck, and one of her sons, who is a real prince, were there. Gracie and I wanted very much to see Dr. Barnardo. We thought that he must be a very old gentleman, and we were quite surprised when he was pointed out to us, and he looked quite young—much younger-looking than father. Uncle said he was "master of the ceremonies"; at any rate, he seemed very busy all the time, and very happy too.

Oh, I forgot to say that when the Duchess came, everybody stood up, and the Boys' Band, and the organ—such a big, big organ—and all the children, joined in the National Anthem. The sound of the organ was like thunder, and it made me feel creepy and strange. Then the children sang such a pretty Christmas carol, and between the verses we heard the tinkle-tinkle of lovely bells, played by some nicely-dressed boys; it was even prettier than the church chimes that we heard so often when we lived in Aberdeen. After that the ninety little boys marched up and down, and across, and in and out, and all sorts of ways, and went through their drill. They seemed to do it all off by heart, except that every time they changed, a small boy in uniform blew a bugle, so they knew exactly what to do. This bugler-boy must be wonderfully clever; I heard somebody say his pet name was "Bunnie." Don't you think, Dorothy, that is a queer name for a boy?

Well, the next thing was "musical drill" by nearly ninety little girls. Some were dressed in white, and some in blue, and some in pink, and they looked so pretty. You never saw anything more lovely in your life, Dorothy, than that musical drill was; I just wish you had been with us. Then there was a real game of football by boys in blue-and-white jerseys. Even uncle got a little excited at this; perhaps he was wishing he was young again. But nobody won the game, and nobody was hurt, though one boy lost his shoe. Another very funny game was "Blindman's Buff," only they were girls who were blindfolded, and they had to try and catch two gentlemen, who kept ringing bells. The gentlemen jumped about like crickets, but at last the girls caught them; it was so funny.

And now I must hurry on, or you will be tired reading this long letter; but you would not have felt a bit tired if you had been there to see it all. About this time a number of young girls and boys walked along in front of the Duchess; they handed to her purses with money collected by their friends. One of the boys, auntie said, was a "Bluecoat" boy. The money was for the poor sick and cripple children in Dr. Barnardo's hospital. The girls curtseyed, and the boys bowed, to the Duchess, and she smiled on them as they passed. They looked very pleased, and I should think they will remember it a very long time.

Very soon after this there was a "fire-escape." A lot of boys, dressed in their white "pyjamas," came tumbling down a long canvas bag that stretched from a high, high window (where a house was supposed to be on fire) right to the ground. Everybody seemed to think this was fine fun. George was too delighted to speak; he could only stare and stare. I kept wondering how the boys liked it; but of course it was better to come rushing down in the middle of a big sack than stay in the house and be burnt to death. Some men at the bottom caught them and pulled each boy out, before the next one came plump after him. I will never forget that fire-escape.

There was a collection just then, and we all put some money in the box. George found a sixpence in the road on the way to the hall, and so he could afford to be quite generous.

I think the thing that was most cheered the whole time was the playing of ten little boys on bagpipes. The programme called it "skirling to the wind." Perhaps you will remember how we used to hear the bagpipes up on the hills at Ballater, near the Queen's lovely home at Balmoral, that summer when we were all at home, and father caught cold, fishing, and was so ill. Then you will know what it was like, only I think it sounded prettier among the high hills.

I have not time to tell you of the "gymnastic exercises," and how some of the boys went head over heels over the wooden horse so neatly, while others stuck halfway. I was so sorry for one little chap who failed, because I was afraid the other boys would nag him for it. But perhaps Dr. Barnardo's boys are not so naughty as some other boys who have fathers and mothers of their own—and nice sisters too.

Then the last thing was the showing on a great white screen (with the gas all put out) by the lime-light, of pictures of the poor boys and girls as they were found in rags, and when they had grown quite fat and pretty, and also of the tiny babies at "Babies' Castle," of the workshops, of the homes where the children live, of the Queen, and of the kind Duchess, with her daughter Princess May, who is also a great friend of the poor children. Everybody clapped their hands when the Queen and the Duchess, and the Princess were put on the screen. For the very last thing of all there was "Good night," and then we came away to escape the crowd. I do wish you had been there, Dorothy; you would have been as pleased and happy as we were.

Now, dear Dorothy, don't you think that was a capital Christmas treat, and a beautiful birthday party? If father, and mother, and you, and Wilfrid, and baby Joseph had only been with us. I am quite interested now in Dr. Barnardo and his family of five thousand boys and girls. Perhaps I shall join the Young Helpers' League. I wonder if there is a branch of the League in Ceylon. You might ask mother to inquire about it.

With much love, and wishing you a very happy New Year, I am, my dear Dorothy,

Your loving sister,

ETHEL.

---

THE CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, York, to Jan. 21; Huby Burn Jan. 23 and 24; Stalybridge, Jan. 25 and 26; St. Luke's, Liverpool, Jan. 27 to Feb. 7; Mr. Jas. S. Tyler, Parmiter-street School, Cambridge Heath, Jan. 21 to 28; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Ipswich, to Jan. 21 (with Mr. George Goodman); Harrow, Jan. 27 to 30; Mr. E. Hughes, Albany-road Institute, Camberwell, Jan. 24; Mr. G. V. Arrowsmith, St. Philemon's, Liverpool, to Jan. 21; Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Builth Wells, during January.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—S., Jan. 21, 2 Kings xvii. 6-18; 22, xvii. 24-36; 23, xviii. 1-16; 24, xix. 5-20; 25, xx. 1-17; 26, xxi. 1-16; 27, xxii. 1-10.

MR. NEWTON-JONES' MISSIONS.

To Jan. 25, Rushden; Jan. 27 to Feb. 1, Lavender Hill, Feb. 3-8, Dorking; Feb. 10-15, Bedford; Feb. 17 to March 1, Brixton; March 3-8, Norwich; March 10-15, Kettering; March 17-22, Downton; March 25-26, Chesham; March 31 to April 5, Poole.

---

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE UNION proposes to hold its annual gathering on April 30, in the New Queen's Hall, Regent Street.

The Blessed and ONLY Potentate.

II.

"In the day that thou eatest thereof, dying thou shalt die" (Gen. ii. 17 mar.). "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. vi. 23). The former is the Old Testament formula, the latter is the New. Both contain the same profound and far-reaching truth, that sin has no issue but death: death is the irretrievable consequence of sin. Not penal death only, but the death in which corruption inevitably ends. When the poison of disobedience entered into the creature there was no removing it. Just as when a deadly snake bites a man the poison rapidly infects the whole system, and we say at once, "He's a dead man," so when Adam sinned he was a dead man; dead judicially and penally—"condemned already"; dead morally and spiritually—"alienated from the life of God." The rot in an apple cannot be cured; it must rot until quite decayed. The only way it can become new is by returning to the dust, and being born again through the apple-tree. Fallen Adam could not be mended. The purport of our previous article was to show that in the antediluvian race, and in the world descended from Noah and his sons, God permitted sin to develop itself to the bitter end. When the creature crucified his Creator; when, with every expression of scorn and hate, universal man, Jew and Gentile, priests, princes, and people, put their God-manifested-in-flesh to death: the poisoned and corrupted condition into which sin had brought humanity was demonstratively proved.

"Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out." When a judge condemns the innocent he condemns himself. Judge Jeffreys is a curse and a hissing and an execration in English history, because from the throne of justice he condemned the just. When the world, controlled by its prince, judicially murdered God's Holy One, it pronounced its own doom. But in the merciful wisdom of "Jehovah, King, Creator," the act that sealed his doom to death, abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light. "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction." "Which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory."

Remember that the question, the controversy, was,

WHO SHALL REIGN?

Man under the tutelage of Satan, having saturated the earth with brothers' blood in vain attempts to rule, killed the Prince of Life. But

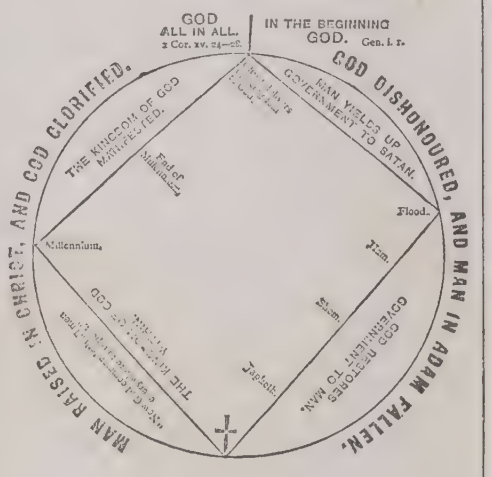
"GOD RAISED HIM FROM THE DEAD."

Where the King is the Kingdom is, and they who would enter that Kingdom must enter it as Jesus did, by death and resurrection. For "know ye not that as many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."

Man as related to Adam by blood—i.e., flesh and blood—cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. In order to inherit it he must be united by faith to the crucified, risen, glorified Christ, the Head of the New Creation. Therefore now the Kingdom of God is within. "God commandeth all men everywhere to repent," and those who do repent toward God and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ are in the Kingdom and the Kingdom is in them—that Kingdom which is not eating and drinking (i.e., sustaining the life of the disinherited flesh-and-blood), but "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." God is laying the foundations of his Kingdom in the hearts of his children; where, in the nature of things, the foundations of every kingdom must be laid. And when the number of his foreknown and predestinated people is complete, the seventh angel will sound, and the vision of the seer of Patmos be fulfilled, "And there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever."

Then Christ will come in his glory; Satan will be cast into the bottomless pit, that he may deceive the nations no more for a thousand years. The blessed and holy dead will be raised in the first resurrection, to live and reign with Christ during those thousand years. This will be a period of outward righteousness and peace. But sin will be latent in millions of human hearts. And when the thousand years have expired, and Satan is loosed out of his prison—an unreformed and unconverted devil still—he will go forth to deceive the nations as of old, and will gather a multitude like the sand of the sea, who will surround the camp of the saints and the beloved city; fire from God will devour them,

"From Everlasting to Everlasting Thou art God."



GOD ALL IN ALL. 1 Cor. xv. 24—28.
IN THE BEGINNING GOD. Gen. i. 1.
MAN YIELDS UP GOVERNMENT TO SATAN.
GOD DISHONOURED, AND MAN IN ADAM FALLEN.
GOD DESTROYS GOVERNMENT TO MAN.
MAN RAISED IN CHRIST, AND GOD GLORIFIED.
THE KINGDOM OF GOD MANIFESTED.
End of Millennium.
Flood.
Millennium.
Sodom.
Jaboth.

and the devil will be cast into the lake of fire.

Then, as I suppose, the earth and all things that are therein will be burned up, and over a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, Christ and his saints will reign, until, God having put all things in subjection under his feet, not only powers on earth but powers in heaven, He will deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father,

THAT GOD MAY BE ALL IN ALL.

Thus, man in Adam, having at the first, by disobedience dishonoured God, the Man Christ Jesus, by obedience unto death, has made atonement for sin, magnified the law and made it honourable, giving glory to the Father by his dying testament, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." And the Father, true to his trust, has glorified his Son by raising Him from the dead, that the Son also may glorify God by restoring to Him the Kingdom which He took not away, but which He has redeemed from the hand of the enemy. M.

N.B.—Many important particulars are not touched upon in the above diagram, and only the principal dispensational periods are mentioned. One point, however, must be noticed—the delivering up of the Kingdom to God is not here represented as taking place immediately at the close of the millennium. I think there must be a period during which Christ reigns over a perfectly reconciled world, so that He renders it back to God, not immediately on its emergence from the throes of the last great conflict, but in a condition of settled righteousness and peace. God committed to Adam rule over a creation which, in every particular, was very good, and I think that Jesus will render back to Him a Kingdom in which everything utters his glory. My impression is that the period of Christ's reign over the new heaven and earth answers to the morrow after the Sabbath of Lev. xxiii. 11, which is the Lord's Day. This subject was treated in a very interesting way by Mr. George Trench in Word and Work in 1888, which I am sorry to find is out of print. Probably it will be referred to again in these columns, but I am not able to prove the above suggestion, and therefore do not insist upon it.

HELP FOR 1894.

I am glad to say that the Bible Institute, Chicago, enters upon 1894 free from debt, and I want to thank the readers of The Christian who have helped us. The past year has been by far the most useful it has seen since its foundation in 1889.

It is my aim now to get three hundred friends who shall each give one hundred dollars (or £20) towards the support of a student. This amount does not cover his cost for a year, since no fees whatever are demanded of students for attendance at lectures or music lessons; but it will help largely to relieve the trustees of the burden of the current expenses

There are many who cannot engage in Christian work themselves on account of family, or health, or qualifications, but who could help some one else in their stead. I know of a few cases where two or more unite on behalf of a student. Men and women who intend to engage in the Master's service in home churches and missions, or in the foreign field, get actual training in the Institute which will be invaluable to them when they leave.

Is there any better way of doing good or of using your money in the present year than to devote it to the support of poorer students who want to prepare for Christian work? Are there not three hundred friends who will each stand behind a student, and thus help to meet expenses? I would be glad to correspond with anyone who can assist.

Letters addressed to E. Northfield, Mass., U.S.A., will always find me. D. L. Moody.

THE BITTER CRY OF MONMOUTHSHIRE.

Dear Sir,—Permit me to thank your readers for the liberal help they have given me in my efforts these twenty weeks past to mitigate the sufferings of the unemployed iron and tin plate workers in these valleys. It has been said, and I believe correctly too, that "in no county in England is the number of workless workers so large in proportion to the industrial population as it is in Monmouthshire. Through no act of their own, thousands of men, women, and children are, and have long been, on the verge of actual starvation."

It is a horrible commentary on the reality of our Christianity that poor unemployed factory girls should be found appeasing the pangs of hunger at the cost of their virtue; that men should be driven to suicide by the stress of poverty; while a little generosity, a little self-denial, would provide a speedy if only temporary remedy for this severe and widespread suffering.

We are giving one meal each day to the children at our Pontymoile and Pontnewydd Halls, and four meals per week to parents; but so pitiful are the needs that I make this urgent appeal for additional help to give both parents and children one good substantial meal every day. Gifts in money or kind will be most acceptable.—Yours sincerely,

Thomas M. Wintle.

Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon.

[I find my friend Mr. Wintle and his helpers doing a most beneficent work, but almost overdone by it.—R. C. Morgan.

Pontymoile, January 18, 1894.]

THE FREE EVENING CLASSES for Christian workers, held at the Pastors' College, Temple-street, Newington, S.E., will be resumed on Tuesday, 23rd inst. Those wishing to join can obtain all particulars of the secretary, Mr. G. Hall, enclosing stamped envelope for reply.

THE LATE MR. THOMAS BAILEY,

OF MUSSOORIE, INDIA.

THIS venerable man of God quietly passed into his heavenly home, at Mussoorie, on May 2, 1893. A long life of some sixty years devoted to the Lord, in the midst of a heathen country, is worthy of record, and may prove a blessing to those who read of it.

Though our beloved brother was neither a missionary nor a minister in any official sense, yet he was both in a real sense; for his kind, humble, and holy life was such as to bring glory to God, and do good to those who knew him. Few, if any, came into close contact with Mr. Bailey who did not, in some degree, derive spiritual profit from him. There are many believers in India who have been lifted up to a higher plane of spiritual life by fellowship and sweet communion with the bright and beautiful character of this man of God

Our brother was the son of "poor but pious parents," as he writes in a sketch of his life, printed by himself some time ago. He was born on November 3, 1806, in Whickham, in the county of Durham, England, so that at the time of his departure he was over eighty-six years of age. Of his early conversion to God he writes:—

> In February, 1832, I came under serious impressions of religion, and for about six weeks my experiences were of a usual kind, consisting of alternate depressions and elevations of spirit, but in the early morning of April 5, while yet in bed, I received the Holy Spirit in a remarkable manner. . . . I felt myself a "new creature"; everything in nature, the green grass of the field and the trees, I viewed in a new light, and with a pleasure never before experienced. I felt great love to God and to all my fellow-creatures, and a desire that all would give themselves to Christ and be saved.

One result of this change of heart was his feeling that he could no longer follow his occupation with a clear conscience. He found that unless he was prepared to act as "the trade" did he could not succeed, and as the trade had "tricks" which he could no longer practise, he resolved to try some profession which he could carry on without violating his conscience.

Not seeing an immediate opening in England, he resolved that he would emigrate to a foreign country, and as he thought that India presented a good field of honest labour to a man of fair education and steady habits, he set his mind on a journey to the East.

But to reach that far-off land at a time when no "interlopers" were allowed to settle in the rich "preserve" of the Hon. East India Company was difficult, to say nothing of the funds needed for the passage. The only chance was to go out in the service of the Company; so Mr. Bailey resorted to this expedient and acted on it. In August, 1833, he embarked with sixty-five others, who had enlisted to serve in the Bengal Artillery. They arrived in Calcutta in February, after some six months voyage round the Cape.

At a station near Calcutta, called Dum-Dum, there was a Baptist chapel, and there, Mr. Bailey tells us, he met several religious people and associated with them in worship. The Revs. John Mack and Dr. Leechman, of Serampore, as well as William Symes, a pious soldier, used to preach in the Dum-Dum chapel to the soldiers, and did much good.

In 1837 Mr. Bailey was in Cawnpore, and there became a schoolmaster in the artillery school; but his good parts and good conduct soon secured for him a place better suited to his position and abilities. In 1838 he was recommended to a clerkship in the Agra Bank. From a subordinate office in that institution he rose steadily step by step till he became manager, which position he held with honour to himself and profit to the bank for some forty years.

When at last, on account of advanced age, he felt it his duty to resign his onerous post, such was the high esteem in which he was held by the directors, and the estimate they had of the noble service he had rendered, that they voted him a pension of two-thirds of his pay, namely, £640 per annum, payable in London at the exchange of the day, or Rs.533.5.4 monthly, payable in India. This generous and handsome pension he continued to receive for sixteen years, till his death in May last.

In the life of our deceased friend we see how an upright and God-fearing man, of humble origin, and of limited advantages, can rise to a position of social respectability, though he be a person of strict religious habits. Some good Christians suppose that in order to get on they must in some measure compromise their principles, and shape their social course in accord with the habits of so-called Society. This Thomas Bailey never did to please anybody. He had higher and nobler society, by keeping in constant communion with his God. That did not lower, but rather raised, him in the estimation even of men of the world, who are ever keen enough to put a right value on consistency of conduct, though their own way may be quite different.

One striking feature of Mr. Bailey's religion was its brightness. No doubt he had many trials and some sore troubles during his active career, but though such earthly surges may have at times ruffled his joy, it was but a passing ripple on the surface of that "peace of God" which ever "ruled his heart and mind." He always met his Christian friends with a face beaming with celestial love, and an outburst of a real "God bless you," which shone forth as a sun-beam through the cloud. He was one of the happiest Christians that I have met with, and his joy "no one took from him."

One grand secret of his constant peace was his continual perusal of God's Word, and his frequent communion by prayer with his Father in heaven. When through old age he could no longer trust his memory to conduct family worship, he kept the holy fire burning brightly on the family altar by reading the prayers he had composed for morning and evening worship. One thing he told me he never omitted, and that was to pray twice a day for all his relatives by name. Though he died without seeing all his requests answered, yet he died in faith that those still undecided would be gathered into the refuge, and that both he and his beloved wife (gone before), would at last meet an unbroken family in the land of life for evermore.

With many others I sadly miss this man of God. As I was one of the few, outside his own family, who had a share in his prayers for still richer measures of the blessing of God, I feel that while heaven has gained a loved citizen, we on earth have lost a brother beloved, and a bright example.

After some fourteen days of a gentle gliding down to the river he passed over in peace, saying that "to depart and to be with Christ is far better." Thomas Evans.

An Apostolic Story.

Leaving England on July 28, 1892, we reached Nass River on September 1, after a fairly prosperous journey, and by the 15th found ourselves at Aiyansh. The Mission, which had been left in charge of old Chief Abraham, was in good order. The heathen had, however, been playing at Sanballat and Tobiah with the Christians, in which they came off second best, but revenged themselves a little by sending away our native evangelist from their town. In October we were able, by God's blessing, to resume preaching there.

The trail from our Mission station to the heathen village of Git-lak-Damin had always been a bad one—so bad indeed that a visit to the latter place furnished a good deal of gymnastic exercise. We therefore conceived and carried out the idea of making a good straight road instead. This was accomplished by the voluntary labour of the native Christians, extending over a period of three weeks, and amounting in money value to £100! It is called "The Gospel Road," and has been, both in making and using, a real means of grace to many. Thenceforth, until the end of the year, I was able to preach the Gospel acceptably in from four to seven heathen houses every Sunday between morning and evening services, accompanied by ten or twelve native Christians.

On the evening of New Year's Day I gave a magic-lantern lecture in Kahru-uk-shan's house, at which about 250 heathen were present. This house is a roofed enclosure, sixty feet long and forty wide, thus affording ample accommodation for the audience, our brass band, and the lantern equipment. The lecture was on the Life and Death of Christ, and produced a profound impression upon the people. Two subsequent conversions had their origin, humanly speaking, at that lecture, and we believe there are more to follow.

A CANNIBAL DANCE.

But, alas! the great attraction among the heathen during the winter was the Ulala, or cannibal dance, at which human flesh was rated at £1, £2, £3 per bite, many regarding it as a profitable business to offer their flesh (generally their arms) to the dancers. A £1 biter merely made a deep bruised impression with his teeth; but a £2 gentleman was allowed to lacerate flesh and imbibe a little blood; while an optimus had the full privilege of tearing a piece away, and eating it. Old Gwin-Giau reached the summit of his ambition (public notoriety and fame) by being able to take ten bites at £3! Picture to yourselves such scenes, enacted by naked savages, besmeared with ochre and bedecked with feathers, howling and writhing through the fiendish contortions peculiar to this mysterious rite, in the lurid glare of blazing logs, and encircled by an audience drawn from the various Nishga tribes, and you will see the heathen at home—perfectly at home in darkness such as this.

After the advent of the New Year we laid prayerful and determined siege to this citadel of heathenism. Every day until March 10, when the tribes left for their spring fishing, a party of forty or fifty started for Aiyansh, marching along the Gospel-road with banner aloft, singing and praying, straight into the heathen village, where they spent from three to four hours holding outdoor and indoor meetings. Never before in my experience have I been privileged to witness such soul-stirring evangelistic effort. Our people were filled with the Spirit, and gave themselves up, with perfect abandonment, to the work of winning the heathen for Christ. Frequently I have done twenty-five houses in one day—that is, given a short Gospel address in each, concluding with prayer; while in other parts of the village open-air work was carried on vigorously.

During a period of nearly three weeks the thermometer ranged between 30 and 40 degrees below zero! The heathen were hugging their firesides wrapped in blankets and furs, but our people were out in it all. One day the Ulala dancers failed to meet according to appointment. Why? They were ashamed to come out in costume before the Christians! All those Indians who had private whisky "stills" broke up their appliances before witnesses. To rightly estimate the importance of this work, it must be understood that all the heathen on Nass River were there as guests a great part of the time. The net result, up to the present, is seventeen souls reclaimed from the darkness of heathenism.

But how shall I describe the work that went on among the Christians themselves? Every night and morning there were meetings for prayer, Scripture instruction, and exposition of texts for preaching purposes. There was, in the heart of one and all, an acute sense of contrition for sin, negligence and unfaithfulness, which found expression in many bitter cries and tears; while the supervening joy showed that Christ's finished work was fully realised. The Lord's table was besieged, and forty-two admitted to communion. Women (squaws, so-called) drew off their bracelets, finger-rings, and ear-drops for the offertory! One young man, a half-breed, gave himself, and is now (together with a younger one) living with us in the mission-house as pupil. The elder is named Chas. Morven, and the younger, Gai-giat, which means in English, "Still a man." Let me ask your prayers on behalf of these youths.

AMONG THE FISHERS.

Near the end of March I went down to the spring-fishing camp, fifty miles distant, to visit the Indians assembled from all quarters, travelling part of the way by water and part by ice. The ice was in a bad condition, some of our party went through, including myself, but got nothing worse than a wetting. I had ten men with me, and as we approached the village called Gitlakwilshkildhdumwilwilgit (pray do not hesitate, it only means, "The people of the place whereon lieth a skull"), we raised our banner, and drew up in front singing. The whole camp gathered round us, to whom we preached, and then pursued our journey, reaching the fishing camp about six o'clock. Here I had the pleasure of meeting and camping with Archdeacon Collison and Dr. Ardagh. It was Saturday evening, and here and there throughout the camp were to be seen parties of native Christians holding open-air services. There was also a well-attended prayer-meeting in the church. On the following day (the Sunday next before Easter) there were crowded congregations at all the services, and in the evening we finished up with an after-meeting.

On Monday we set out on our return, taking a canoe in order to reach the ice, which was fast breaking up. The tide was rushing in rapidly, sweeping huge pieces of broken ice along between the cliffs on our left and the stationary ice on our right, and the narrower this channel became the swifter sped onward our canoe, and the ice together. Presently we observed an opening in the ice to our right, into which we managed to scramble with poles and paddles, thinking that from this point we might be able to commence our walk back. But we found the ice too treacherous, so we had to desist, and make our way back into the current; a feat I have no desire to try again. We then shelved the canoe and its owner by the cliff, there to await the ebb of the tide, while we went waltzing along with the current on pieces of broken ice until we got jammed. Compelled therefore to take to the "bush" we reached by noon the place with a long name, where we waited some hours, watching with pleasure the ebbing tide take all the ice away. What a mercy we did not succeed in effecting a landing thereon when we tried! It would have been rather awkward to have been carried down the channel on floating ice. Late in the afternoon we regained our own canoe, and made fifteen miles before evening. We camped that night in the forest, the Indians spreading cedar boughs on the hard snow, while I stretched my hammock between two small trees, delightfully snug! The next evening we reached Aiyansh.

A LANTERN LECTURE.

On Easter Eve I was again present at the camp, and gave a lantern lecture to a crowded audience, the effect of which I shall not soon forget. While the scenes depicting our Lord's passover were being shown there was solemn silence, emphasised by many a half-stifled sob. At last, when the final slide had been described and the call to prayer given, the pent-up feeling of the meeting broke forth in such wailing cries of repentance and appeals for mercy as I never heard before. Close to me there sat a man, whom I knew well, who was in sore distress. "Master, Master, I am Peter; I have denied Thee, I have denied Thee," and so on, while tears as bitter as Peter's ran down his cheeks. On Easter morning seventy-two gathered round the Lord's Table to commemorate his dying love. During the services of the day many hearts were reached and touched. The offertory amounted to nearly 40 dols.—a church bell for the camp.

Yesterday I spent in camp also, and I believe the Lord was pleased to bless the various efforts put forth by one and all for the extension of his kingdom. To-day I am enjoying the dolce far niente of a canoe voyage from the camp to Nass Harbour; the weather is delightful, and I am enhancing the pleasure by scribbling copy for this letter.

I must now give you a little information about the more material part of our work. The erection of our sawmills is nearing completion, and they will, I hope, be cutting lumber before the despatch of this epistle. Several parties are now away "logging," who, when finished, will bring their logs to be sawn, paying to the mill about five-eighths of the lumber realised. Of the five-eighths thus paid, three-eighths go to the Aiyansh Saw Mills Company (four of my best Indians), which they sell for their own remuneration, while the remainder falls to me for building purposes. Thus, if friends continue to remember Aiyansh in the future as they have in the past, I hope to see in a few years, by God's blessing, the following buildings completed:—

| Aiyansh. | Gittak Damise. |
|---|---|
| Church and planked road. | School and Mission Hall. |
| School House. | Spring Fishing Camp. |
| Hospital and Guest House. | Church finished. |
| Nass Harbour. | Echo Cove. |
| Church enlarged. | Cabin for boarders. |

In conclusion, I would ask you to render one essential help—namely, that of pleading prayer. The Indian Christians' kind greeting, "Grace be with you all." Amen.

James B. McCullagh.

Aiyansh Mission, Nass River, B.C., April, 1893.

MY TIMES ARE IN THY HAND.

In the hand of the Lord I lay the year
That is dawning now for me,
Contented to trust to his love my fear
Of the days I cannot see.

I do not know if thro' paths of peace
He will choose to lead my feet,
Or if He will bid the bird-songs cease
And shadow my sunlight sweet.

He may bid me wander some weary plain,
Where the springs of joy run dry,
Or set me to garner the yellowing grain
For his harvest of by-and-by.

Whatever his love has laid up in store,
My way must be calm and sweet,
If I gladly welcome for ever more
The gifts that He deemeth meet.

Eva Travers Evered Poole.

THE WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION issues a Monthly Paper, which is now in its third volume. The January number contains items that are sure to interest all members of the Union. Mrs. M. H. Arbuthnot, president, states that efforts are in progress to organise, in May next, a missionary conference in London of Christian workers among Roman Catholics, at which speakers from different parts of the world are expected. The monthly prayer meetings and discussions will, during this year, be made more general among the branches of the Union. There are already over 4000 members. Persons desiring to join, or to procure the Monthly Paper, should send their names and addresses to Mrs. Arbuthnot, Plaw-Hatch, East Grinstead.

The Opium Commission.

In connection with the subject of the Opium Commission, the undersigned, representing the several organisations for the suppression of the opium trade, desire to offer an explanation of their position relative to the Commission; and also to make an appeal, not only to friends who have hitherto supported them, but to all their fellow-countrymen, in view of a new and serious danger that threatens the community at home, if the truth on this important question should fail to be brought out. This danger is shown in the statement appended to this appeal.

They wish it to be universally understood that the appointment of that Commission was not desired by any of the Anti-Opium Organisations represented by the undersigned. Most of them regard the use of the drug in India as but a comparatively small though important portion of the moral iniquity, as it does not form one-twelfth part of the Indian opium trade. It is the fact that the revenues of a nominally Christian Government are raised by the direct participation in a manufacture and commerce detrimental to the inhabitants of China and the Straits Settlements, which has always been put in the very forefront of the Anti-Opium Movement for chief condemnation.

The immorality of our Indian opium trade, especially as instrumental in the demoralisation of China, they regarded as beyond doubt, and the House of Commons in 1891 practically declared that it was "morally indefensible." In 1847 the Select Committee of the House of Commons reported that the usual demoralising influences of the opium trade were, they feared, "incontestable and inseparable from its existence."

The Commission that some of them desired was one simply to inquire how the financial difficulty involved by the loss of the opium revenue could be best dealt with; but some of their number strongly deprecated a Commission of any kind, believing that if the people of England, represented by the House of Commons, desired a morally indefensible revenue to be given up, it only remained for the Indian Government to deal with the question accordingly; but on no account were the people of India to be subjected to increased taxation; if economies were not available, it was desired that temporary help should be given by this country.

The funds at the disposal of the Anti-Opium Societies are insufficient for expensive telegrams in correction of the one-sided reports from India day by day; nor have they the resources at their command which in other ways are available by the Indian Government, the upholders of the opium traffic. They feel the imperative necessity for placing before the people of this country the evidence which amply proves the deleterious effects of the use of opium and the immorality of the trade. For this they have not at their disposal the necessary funds, and money is even more urgently needed to support Mr. Alexander, the secretary of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, now in India, in his work in connection with the Commission.

It is well known that he has gone to India to render such assistance as his long and intimate acquaintance with the subject may enable him to give, but his expenses are not chargeable to the Commission. Mr. Alexander has found it impossible for him, alone and unaided, to combat the Indian Government with all its resources, and he has most wisely secured the aid of the Rev. Thomas Evans, a missionary who has had thirty-eight years' experience in India. He has also very wisely arranged for a report of the evidence before the Commission, and this alone involves a considerable daily expense; and for the printing of this report he will need help. He has also had to obtain the services of a native clerk.

At a joint meeting of members of the several Anti-Opium Organisations, it has been decided to ask those who are interested in the cause of national righteousness and morality, to provide for immediate necessities at least £2000—one thousand to be at once available for the inevitable expenses in India in connection with the Opium Commission and Mr. Alexander, and the remainder to be entrusted to the "Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade," the "Urgency Committee," and the "Women's Urgency Committee" in the proportions that have been mutually agreed upon, in order still to diffuse information.

In the interests of humanity, and on behalf of the cause of truth and righteousness, and morality, the undersigned urgently request that the amount they now ask for may be promptly placed at their disposal.

It will be a grievous thing if at this critical moment, this needful help should be withheld.

On behalf of "The Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade,"

JOSEPH W. PEASE, President.
44, Grosvenor-gardens, London, S.W.
DONALD MATHESON, Chairman.
46, Harcourt-terrace, London, S.W.

On behalf of "The Urgency Committee,"

JAMES E. MATHIESON,
47, Phillimore-gardens, Kensington.
BENJAMIN BROOMHALL,
2, Pyrland-road, London, N.

On behalf of "The Christian Union."

J. BEVAN BRAITHWAITE,
312, Camden-road, London, N.
JAMES L. MAXWELL,
49, Highbury-park, London, N.

On behalf of the "Women's Urgency Committee."

H. E. GILLETT,
314, Camden-road, London, N.
RACHEL B. BRAITHWAITE,
312, Camden-road, London, N.

The signatories to the foregoing appeal beg to ask earnest attention to the following:—

The appointment of the Royal Commission on Opium has directed attention to the opium question in a manner hitherto unknown. The Commission, as now appointed, is raising questions of vast and far-reaching importance, not only to the millions of India and China, but to the people of this country. They regard with profound concern the action of an important section of the British Press in giving undue prominence to the evidence of those who declare the use of opium, other than medicinally, to be harmless, and even beneficial to health, without publishing the strong evidence given against the illegitimate use of the drug.

Some journals are accepting this evidence as though it were true, and commenting upon it with amazing recklessness. As an example they give the following from The Newcastle Daily Chronicle:—

> We shall be very much surprised if the upshot of the inquiry conducted by the Commission appointed to satisfy the amiable agitators known as the "Anti-Opium Party" be not to increase the consumption of the drug in the Western world, where it has hitherto been used very little, if at all. All the credible evidence tends to show that those who do not use opium are losers by their abstinence. Take, for example, the testimony of Dr. Ferris, who, after a practice of thirty-eight years, declares that he has never found opium to be deleterious to health, but, on the contrary, considers that it increases longevity. Opium eaters, says Dr. Ferris, are generally healthy men, and contrast favourably with non-opium eaters. Dr. Ferris's view is backed up by his professional brethren with practical unanimity. The authors of the Commission would be rightly served if they were made, not only to pay the cost of investigation, but likewise to eat every day a moderate quantity of opium to strengthen their mental faculties.

It is appalling to think of the possible results of such comments, and the many one-sided statements that are being made and copied into papers which have a wide circulation in this country, in the colonies, and in America. Abundant evidence of a contrary kind will appear in the full report of the proceedings before the Commission; but the ponderous Blue-book containing that evidence will be seen by very few of the millions who are now having set before them day by day statements which tempt to the vicious use of opium, and multitudes, to their own destruction, may be brought under the terrible slavery of the evil habit. The judgments of God often come in the direct line of the offence, and some are fearing lest the people of this country, who are chiefly responsible for the opium scourge of China, should be visited by an opium scourge themselves. The bare possibility of this is a solemn call to prayerful effort to avert such a calamity.

Of the baneful and often awful effects of the use of opium there is overwhelming proof. One thousand missionaries in India have declared:

> We are unalterably opposed to the participation by the Government in the demoralising traffic in opium; and we record our conviction that it is a sin against God and a wrong to humanity.

One thousand five hundred missionaries in China:

> And the entire body of native Christians are unanimous in refusing to admit to Church membership those who smoke opium, thus testifying to their sense of the degrading effects of the habit.

Five thousand medical men in this country have signed a declaration:

> That the habit of opium smoking and of opium eating is morally and physically debasing; and
> That the drug opium ought, in India as in England, to be classed and sold as a poison, and be purchasable from chemists only.

These are impartial witnesses who have no direct or indirect interest in upholding an iniquitous revenue, and it is important that their evidence should be kept in view; it cannot be of less value than that of those who have more or less personal interest in upholding the opium traffic.

In conclusion, they would point to that which has been accomplished, and to the present state of feeling in the civilised world:—

1. In Burma, public attention having been called to Sir Charles Aitchison's report, the Government of India has issued stringent regulations for the purpose of putting down opium consumption in both Upper and Lower Burma.
2. The iniquitous minimum vend clause has been struck out of the Bombay licence.
3. Consumption on the premises is prohibited in India.
4. The Home Government responsible for the rule of India has declared its policy of a gradual diminution of the acreage devoted to poppy cultivations.
5. In California prohibitory laws have been enacted.
6. In Australia (Victoria), by a large majority, a prohibition bill has already been passed by the Lower House.
7. China, by her treaties with Russia and America, prohibits those countries importing the drugs, whilst Japan entirely prohibits its introduction.

[Contributions to be sent to Mr. Morton P. Betts, Secretary pro tem., of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, 6, Broadway-chambers, Westminster, S.W.]

EVIDENCE IN BURMAH.

DEAR SIR,—Four members of the Opium Commission have been paying a short visit to Burma, taking evidence in that most interesting country. British rule has brought many blessings of good government to Burmah since the three successive annexations, in 1826, 1852, and 1886, which have made this land of Buddhism part of the British Empire. But there has been shade as well as light. Too many sad examples of immoral lives amongst British officials and merchants have tended to counteract the teaching of the missionaries; and the introduction of opium and drink under the Indian excise administration has brought temptations to a careless, pleasure-loving people which they have been unable to resist, and which have led to the ruin of many homes. Three Christian men who have filled the high office of Chief Commissioner, Sir Charles Aitchison, Sir Charles Bernard, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie, have successively called the attention of the Supreme Government of India to the evils resulting from the opium traffic; various expedients have been resorted to, which have had, at least, a partial effect, for putting a stop to these evils, and now at last new regulations have been sanctioned, which are to come into force on the 1st of January, 1894, forbidding the possession and sale of opium to Burmans, in which term is comprised the interesting Karen race amongst whom the Gospel has had so great and blessed an influence.

Even this welcome measure, grudgingly assented to by the Government at Simla, in deference to the representations of its subordinates in Burmah and the pressure of public opinion at home, falls short of the wishes of Sir A. Mackenzie, who desired to extend the prohibition to the Chinese and to the hill tribes of Northern Burmah. Whether, with the loophole for evasion left by the permission of free sale to these races, this edict can be made effectual is a question that time alone can solve. The officials in Burmah hope to avoid illicit sales by establishing a maximum amount of opium to be issued to the licensed vendors month by month, based on the ascertained number of opium consumers; but if their opinions had been allowed to prevail, opium would be sold only as a medicine at Government dispensaries and by druggists, instead of by licensees, generally Chinamen, who are accustomed to eke out their profits by illicit sales.

The principal missionary body at work in Burmah is the American Baptist Mission, with which the name of Judson is inseparably associated. It has 130 missionaries, men and women, and it has been a privilege to meet with several of these, including some recent recruits on their way into the mission field. The Rev. Dr. Cushing, now head of the Rangoon College, who worked for many years amongst the Shan tribes in the north-east of the province, and Dr. Kirkpatrick, a gifted physician, from Philadelphia, who labours as medical missionary amongst the same people, gave evidence strongly in favour of the extension to them of the new prohibitory measures against opium. One morning I had the happiness of sharing in family worship in the house of the Rev. D. L. Brayton, now over eighty-five years of age, who has been in Burma nearly fifty-six years, and was for, I think, fourteen years associated with Dr. Judson. I happened to come in whilst the morning devotions were proceeding. This venerable missionary is still able to help in the work of Bible revision, and is calmly waiting for the call home, having lost his wife only three years ago. In the Baptist church at Rangoon, too, I found an earnest church and a faithful pastor. The Church of England is represented in Burma by the S.P.G., and is active educationally; there is one evangelical clergyman in Rangoon, of whom I heard much good, and who takes great interest in the total abstinence movement. At Mandalay I received much kindness from Rev. W. R. Winston, of the Wesleyan Mission, whose book, "Five Years in Upper Burma," gives much interesting information about this young province of the British Empire.

Buddhism is the religion of the Burmans and of the Shans; though entirely wanting, as an intelligent Burman Buddhist admitted to me, in all recognition of a personal God, it sets forth so much of beauty and truth as regards the duty of man to his fellow-man, as to satisfy in great measure the cravings of the human heart for something beyond the things of earth; and its adherents are very hard to convince of the higher and purer ideals of Christianity. The moral beauty, attributed by their legends to Buddha, "the Light of Asia," hides from them the infinitely higher beauty that is to be found in the Light of the World. The Karens, on the other hand, a race despised and down-trodden by the Burmans, never accepted Buddhism; they early recognised in the Bible teaching of the American missionaries the fulfilment of their remarkable tradition that a white teacher would some day come from across the western waters and bring back to them the long-lost oracles of God. Out of 30,000 members of the Baptist Church in Burma, 27,000 are Karens, only 1,000 are Burmans, and the remainder belong to the various other races of which Burma contains so many. Joseph G. Alexander.

Ss. Ethiopia, Bay of Bengal, Dec. 22.

THE FREEDMEN OF THE SOUTH.

Mr. James Wharton, who has returned to his loved work among the coloured people of the Southern States of America, sends the following description of a "Sunrise" meeting amongst these simple-hearted people:—

Christmas Day passed off quietly at Dudley, N.C., which is a coloured settlement, and was free from the revelry so common at this time of the year. At an early hour at the break of day the bell rang summoning us to the Congregational church, for one of the "old time" sunrise meetings which were so popular in the days of slavery. Quite a number of negroes gathered to start the day, as one quaintly said, "before the devil was about." After a half-hour's address on the birth and death of Christ, the meeting was thrown open for testimony. Many and varied were the experiences of those who took part, how they had to fight against sin and Satan, and "struggle to lib for God;" but they were in "no way" tired in the fight. These and many other such-like expressions were vented in language peculiar to themselves. One said he had been a Sunday-school superintendent, but suddenly found out "dat he was dressed in goat skins; but now, since his conversion, which took place in de woods where he was felling lumber, he had been dressed in sheepskins, and was by-and-by going to wear a starry crown in hebben." Another said "he was filled wid de glory ob de Lord ebber sen de good Lord sabed him; he too felt in no way tired, and it was his 'termination to go on serbing de Lord to de best 'ob his 'bility down here as long as life should last." Such like utterances come from the simple yet honest hearts of these dusky sons of Africa, and show the yearning desire of their souls to live for God who hath saved them for his Son's sake.

Mr. Wharton has been much cheered in finding so many of them still standing as bright witnesses for God, the fruit of a former visit. This evangelist may be addressed, care of Rev. J. W. Freeman, Dudley, N.C., U.S.A.

[66]

OPIUM IN CEYLON.

On December 9, a unique assembly met in the Public Hall, Colombo, Ceylon. On the platform were representatives of the various races, classes, and religions of the island. The yellow-robed Buddhist priests sat side by side with Hindu barristers, Mohammedan leaders, and Christian ministers and laymen.

The meeting was convened in order to take united action on the opium question. Facts have recently been brought to light, chiefly through the instrumentality of the Misses Leitch, two lady missionaries, showing that the habit of opium-smoking, and the use of bhang, a most pernicious drug, have been insidiously growing in Ceylon. Great license is allowed in the sale and use of these drugs, and the vice is creeping secretly into the life of the various races of the island. It is seen by those who have the truest welfare of the people at heart that it is at once desirable to restrict the traffic in these drugs, as is already done in the United Kingdom.

There is no excuse for the unrestrained introduction of these drugs into this land, for the natives of the island have never been accustomed either to grow or use them.

The chair was occupied by Mr. John Ferguson, editor of The Ceylon Observer, whose name has been connected with the progress of the colony for many years past. Various missionary societies were represented:—Rev. A. E. Dibben appeared for the Church Mission; Rev. T. C. Helland for the Wesleyan Mission; Revs. F. D. Waldock and Walter D. Hankinson for the Baptist Mission; and Major Jaya Vera for the Salvation Army.

For the Buddhist community there appeared on the platform six priests, including High Priest Sumangala, High Priest W. Subuthi, and High Priest Wehgama. Side by side with these were three leading Mohammedans, whose tall conical hats marked them out from the Buddhist and Christian representatives. Side by side with these again were leading Hindu barristers, and also learned representatives of the Eurasian community.

Resolutions were unanimously adopted emphasising the necessity of dealing with this matter in its earliest stage, and expressing the desire of the various classes represented that the trade should be placed under the same restrictions as it is in the United Kingdom, or at least that the same regulations as have been recently applied to Burma should be applied to Ceylon.

An influential committee was appointed to promote a petition adopted at that meeting expressing the wishes of the people upon this matter. That petition is now being signed by large numbers throughout the island, and will be presented to the Legislative Council about the end of January. The petition is couched in terms of the greatest reasonableness and common sense, and in the light of the sad history of the opium trade in India and China cannot fail to influence the governing powers of the colony. Should this petition, however, fail to procure the regulations desirable, the influential committee appointed will lay the matter before the House of Commons, and will not rest till the spread of this dangerous vice is prevented. W. D. H.

AFFAIRS IN BRAZIL.

Dear Sir,—The revolution continues, and is making matters worse every day. Suffering prevails all over the southern states of Brazil, and if things are not brought to a standstill before long, life in Brazil will be unbearable.

However, the cause of Jesus moves forward. In this city especially, the work has been abundantly blessed; twenty-five have made a profession of their faith during this month (December), ten have been baptized, and the others are awaiting this ordinance, which will be administered to them the last day in the year.

During this year (1893) there were added to this church fifty persons. The members, though poor, are working hard to build a chapel where they can assemble and worship the Lord until He comes.

Please inform my friends and brethren that my address for the future is as under.—Yours,

Solomon L. Ginsburg.

Campos, State of Rio, Brazil, Caixa 57, Dec. 23.

FAITH has no commerce in the small market of explanations. Faith has infinite ventures on the seas and continents of mystery. It is the substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen.—Dr. Parker.

CHINESE SEARCHINGS OF HEART

Dear Sir,—You and your praying friends will be glad to know that on Sunday last, in the English Union Church here, the Rev. T. E. Sandeman gave the result of much thought and concern in a spiritually strong discourse, based on the call of Jeremiah. The object was to insist on simple and straightforward obedience to God, no matter how naturally unfit we may seem to be for his service, and no matter what personal, family, or public reasons may seem to rise up against us. God does not tell us we are great, good, able; He just wishes us to do as we are told, and He does not argue with us.

Applying the truth to ourselves, the preacher pleaded for reality in religion, especially amongst Christians; also for testimony meetings and every form of mutual help; also for that healthy joy in God which would make us at least as attractive as is the atmosphere of the better class of non-professing Christians. All this was pressed home, so that there might not be formality in God's service, a dull routine, and stale statistics.

We are asking that this utterance, evidently prompted by God's Spirit, may be blessed in helping forward that which has been long desired of the greater blessing. To this end the sermon is being prepared in readable Chinese.

Following the above, there was special consideration of the signal grace granted of late years through Conventions, and extra means for receiving the promised power. It has been shown to our Chinese friends, how such blessing results in greater value set on the Scriptures; more active faith in God: room given for the working of the Spirit; great power in prayer; a sense of personal nothingness; a willingness to confess Christ, fear of grieving God as much as hope in Him; a joy which means strength and winsomeness; self-abandonment, also. Two points on which the above discourse dwelt, were: that now all God's people are blessed with the Spirit, and should witness for Him; and that the salvation of hundreds, or even thousands, may depend on our welcoming the new life and power open to us.

A Chinese tutor of high standing took up two of these subjects spoken of as to "Conventions." He said it was a grave matter of fact that some Chinese literary Christians allowed themselves to drift into a positive aversion to the sacred Scriptures. This may be through the overpowering conceit of the mind of this vast people concerning the classics, and thus the prestige which native scholarship gains; it may be that native learning pays better; or it may be through decline of piety, and through the extraordinary pride there is in style of writing, quite apart from the thought. Whatever the cause, the fact is perilous, and the confession must lead on to repentance.

Another confession he made was, that in contrast to Jeremiah's humility, there is a fearful temptation even to Christian workers (natural to the life around them) to depend on their position or natural and acquired attainments, rather than on God.

These searchings of heart are not over. One student has prayed for the right heart above all things, and not to be satisfied with appearances. One man, after years of study of the mysteries of regeneration and the Holy Spirit, says he now perceives the practical nature of godliness. In native religion there is no concern to let theory and practice agree. We, alas! may have too much of this spirit, but as the Spirit of God moves there is reformation, as in the time of Josiah and Jeremiah. It is often said Chinamen can only be won by actual goodness. Let us pray for the fuller joyous working of the Spirit of holiness.—Yours,

Amoy, December 6. J. Sadler.

DURING THE CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS meetings for schoolboys were conducted at Edinburgh by students from Oxford, Cambridge, and Edinburgh. The Lord has blessed the effort. The workers have received great blessing, owing in no small degree to the testimonies of the Christian boys.

THE GIRLS' LETTER GUILD starts the year with a monthly organ, called The Letter Guild Journal. A subscription of 2s. 6d., sent to Miss Kenward, 280, Hagley-road, Birmingham, secures it for twelve months. The January issue contains many items calculated to interest and instruct members of the Guild, by whom the Journal may be had at the cost of one penny monthly.

The Kanaka Traffic.

MEMORIAL TO THE MARQUIS OF RIPON, COLONIAL SECRETARY.

By Rev. Dr. J. G. PATON.

My Lord Marquis,

On November 23 your lordship was good enough to grant me an interview, to place before you my views and those of my colleagues labouring in the New Hebrides, on the subject of the Kanaka labour traffic between those islands and Queensland. At the interview there were present with your lordship Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P., Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies; and the following Members of Parliament kindly accompanied me, viz., Mr. Samuel Smith, Sir Mark J. Stewart, Bart., and Sir John Kennaway, Bart. I would take this first opportunity of expressing to your lordship and to Mr. Sydney Buxton my sincere gratitude for the opportunity thus afforded me of advocating the cause of the natives of our Islands, in regard to a traffic that all admit is rapidly depopulating the group.

But your Lordship was good enough to request at the close of the interview that I would draw up, and place before you in writing, a memorandum fully setting forth what I consider to be the present aspects of the traffic—omitting all reference to the traffic as conducted previously to 1885, when it was proved, before the Supreme Court and the Royal Commission, to be a system of fraud, kidnapping, and murder.

PRELIMINARY.

1. I will endeavour to keep within the scope indicated in your lordship's request; but I must ask to be allowed, as an essential to a right understanding of the case, to refer to a fact often lost sight of, viz., that, except for a few months in 1891, the traffic has never been stopped. The revelations of frightful atrocities, through the Royal Commission of 1885, caused a resolution to be passed condemning the traffic, and ordering that after a lapse of five years it should be totally abolished, i.e., at the end of 1890. But labour vessels, with licences to recruit, were allowed to leave Queensland up to the close of 1890, and kept returning with their loads of recruits until far into 1891; and as 1892 dawned Sir Samuel Griffiths revived the traffic "for a further term of ten years." So that the only outcome of the Royal Commission, horrible as were the revelations brought to light, was a resolution, the effect of which was to throw dust in the eyes of the British nation, and under cover of "Revised Regulations" a traffic admittedly immoral and fraudulent was revived immediately after its lease of existence, by the unanimous consent of the nation, had expired. And more: so strong was the slave interest in Queensland, that the very murderers whose bloodthirsty deeds the Supreme Court and the Commission revealed were reprieved, after a brief imprisonment, at the instance of 80,000 memorialists, and for the reason that "these atrocities had been common, and it was hard to make these men the first victims."

2. I would only add:—(a) That the very same vessels and captains are largely engaged in the traffic now that were engaged in it up to the time of its condemnation in 1885, and until its temporary cessation in 1891; (b) that stringent regulations existed previously to 1885, under which the horrors alluded to were perpetrated, showing that they failed utterly in practice; and (c) that the very recruiting vessels, proved by the Commission to have been most guilty, had on their kidnapping trips been visited by men-of-war, and got a clean bill, as fulfilling all the regulations.

I beg your lordship to bear the foregoing facts in mind, in considering what I now wish to place before you, necessarily at some length, and I plead for a patient hearing.

FIRST MAIN CONTENTION.

I hold, and almost every man thoroughly acquainted with the traffic, from long residence in the recruiting grounds, holds that the regulations are impracticable. Let me quote a few opinions of Her Majesty's officers and others who thoroughly know the traffic by experience, and whose words must, therefore, carry weight.

(a) Vice-Admiral Erskine, writing to The Times, May 25, 1892, says: "Three years' experience, in command of the Australian station, impressed upon me that, under the most stringent regulations, wrongs and abuses occurred in connection with the labour traffic which invariably led to bloodshed and accompanying complications and reprisals"; and he adds: "The most carefully-devised regulations for the conduct of the labour traffic will not prevent wrongs and evils from being committed."

(b) Captain Davis, of H.M. ship Royalist, agrees with this view.

(c) Sir Arthur Gordon says, in a letter to The Times, June 7, 1892: "I fear it must be confessed that the danger, and even the probability, of abuse is enormous," adding, in regard to the recruiting, that while Governor of Fiji, "notwithstanding all our vigilance and all our exertions, illegal things were done which escaped our knowledge altogether; while, as a rule, those things with which we did become acquainted were only made known to us too late for redress or punishment to be possible."

(d) Sir John B. Thurston, H.M. High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, agrees with Sir A. Gordon, and adds: "I am of opinion that if the regulations, which I have carefully perused, are properly enforced the number of labourers recruited will be wholly inadequate to meet the demand for them. If, on the other hand, the supply should even approximately meet the demand, the regulations will have been in a large measure ignored."—(Blue Book C. 7000. April, 1893, pp. 24 and 25.)

(e) This is the opinion also, many times repeated, of the Mission Synod of the New Hebrides, as likewise of the agents of the London Missionary Society in the Western Pacific—than whom none are better acquainted with the traffic at the recruiting grounds.

(f) The London Missionary Society at home endorse the same opinion, in their letter to Sir Samuel Griffiths, saying: "Its knowledge of the conditions of life in the Pacific convinces the Board that no regulations, however honestly and skilfully framed, will avail to prevent gross abuse and wrong."

(g) The Anti-Slavery Society follow with the same declaration; and also Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson and many others; but I forbear to quote further and similar opinions.

May I now refer to one or two of the regulations to show the impracticability of working them?

1. Regulation XI. requires that "every return passenger is duly landed, along with his property, not only on his own island, but at his own village or district, and on no account must any islander be landed at any island, village, or district other than the one from which he came originally, unless he expressly wishes it, in which case a full explanation of the circumstances must be entered in the log.

Now it is well known that the islands are isolated, difficult to navigate, subject to sudden hurricanes, deficient in harbour accommodation, and that the recruiting is done along the shore, as opportunities of calm or a lee shore present themselves. I entreat your lordship to consider the unlikelihood, nay, the impossibility, that the same conditions will be experienced at the various places on the return of these recruits after three years' service. Suppose a lee shore, from which a recruit was taken, is on his return subject to the full fury of a gale, how can he be landed "at his own village or district"? Or, suppose that, spite of a high sea, the expert recruit by swimming (as all the islanders can) could reach the boat to recruit to Queensland, on his return he must be duly landed "along with his property,"—an impossibility, even under the same conditions of sea in which he was taken away. The smallest experience will cause any one to see how easily the condition "unless he expressly wishes it" may be made a way out of the difficulty. The poor returned Kanaka is forced to decide ("to expressly wish") either to be landed at some place other than his own village or district; or at some adjacent island; or to return to Queensland for a further term of service. If he elects the first alternative, he will certainly lose "his property" by theft or violence, and probably his life also. If the second (he will not agree to the second condition unless the adjacent island is Christianised, because otherwise it would be certain death to do so) he becomes a charge and a burden on the Christian natives until they can send him home. And if he is shut up to the last condition, the captain of the labour vessel has secured an easy and profitable recruit.

[Here follow detailed proofs for which we have not space.]

SECOND MAIN CONTENTION.

I assert further that the traffic is unprincipled, and, as such, is unworthy of an enlightened and Christian colony; and I submit a summary of the grounds for that conviction:—

(1) Though the Islanders of the New Hebrides have no settled government, there are communal obligations which are entirely annulled by the removal of the able-bodied islander from his home. (2) The islands are, by the traffic, deprived of their best manhood, causing rapid depopulation, while the strength and protection of husbands and fathers are withdrawn. (3) The death-rate of the picked healthy men, whose ages vary from sixteen to forty, on the plantations, is a perpetual condemnation of the traffic. In 1891 the average over Queensland was sixty per 1000. (4) Further, depopulation of the islands is caused by the introduction of foreign disease through the labour vessels. (5) Immorality is fostered on the Islands by the withdrawal of the husbands; constant feuds and bloodshedding arise from this source. (6) Immorality is equally fostered on the Queensland plantations by the presence of perhaps not more than one woman to every twenty native healthy men. (7) So liable are the regulations to abuse, that, even in Queensland, where all is said to be fair and righteous, both in the treatment of the Kanakas and the faithful discharge of the obligations for their return at the end of their period, grave abuses arise.

[Other reasons are given, which space compels us to omit.]

(13) In Queensland the Kanakas have no rights of citizenship. They are not free to take employment other than on the plantations. They are collected, selected, and retained by the planter, and are, to all intents and purposes, absolutely his bondmen for three years. (14) The best authorities agree that Papuans are incapable of continued exertion such as is required on the plantations. The work amongst sugarcane in the tropics is very unhealthy, leading to consumption, and the high death-rate I have already referred to. (15) White labourers are paid highly for work that endangers life; but, with regard to the poor Kanakas, life is reckoned cheaply, and they are considered sufficiently well paid by 4d. a day with rations—for work that would otherwise cost from 5s. to 8s. a day, the profit going to the planter.

(16) I have abstained from putting forward, in a far more painful light than that indicated by the Bishop of Tasmania on page 19 of Blue-book C 7000 (clause C, paragraph 2) the disastrous effect of the traffic on our Christian Mission. In this connection, however, I would place on record our deliberate judgment that after 35 years' self-sacrificing labour to elevate these savage peoples, during which seven British missionaries have been martyred on our own islands and some £250,000 of British money has been spent, it is but just that we should receive protection from Britain in our labours. (1) As a duty to us as British men and women; (2) as a duty to civilisation; and (3) I think I may add, as the only method of showing gratitude for the preservation of hundreds of British lives from what, had these islands been left alone, would have been a horrible fate through cannibalism.

[Dr. Paton here indicates a few of the difficulties brought upon missionaries in their self-denying work by this selfish and unholy traffic in human beings.]

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion let me point out how frequently Sir James Garrick and others, in replying to accusations against the traffic, have assured the public that, so long as Sir Samuel Griffiths was Premier of Queensland, there was no room to doubt that all abuses would carefully be inquired into, and the regulations duly enforced. I have pointed out the impossibility of enforcing the regulations; but I would add that, almost immediately after the last declaration of the Queensland Agent-General to the above effect, Sir S. Griffiths resigned the Premiership, and is no longer officially responsible.

I do not refer to the Bishop of Tasmania's letter favouring the traffic except to say in one word that the Bishop judges by hearsay evidence obtained on a flying visit, whereas my colleagues and I, the naval officers, the High Commissioner, and the missionary societies, whose opinions I have quoted, judge from long residence on the islands, and from an intimate (and painful) daily acquaintance with the traffic as it came before us at our posts of duty.

I do solemnly assure your lordship, without bias or prejudice against planters, agents, or crews, that the system of securing Polynesian labour for the Queensland plantations is a relic of the bygone and barbarous past, a veiled system of slavery—robbed to some extent of its bloodshed and murder—but carried on by deceit and allurement, by bribes and plausibility, through the agency of trained native decoys, under cover of armed boats' crews, captains, and Government agents, in regions far from the vigilant eye of the law. While humanity is at a very low ebb in the South Sea labour collectors, and while deeds can be perpetrated on speechless natives, whose dark bodies alone are desired for the energy that can be forced out of them to fill the coffers of white men; while the planters own labour ships and hire captains and crews; and while a handsome premium is given all round for Kanaka recruits, the traffic is bound to be a curse and a degradation to all engaged in it, a disgrace to the colony that legalises it, and a blot on the fair name of Britain.

I entreat your lordship to hear the heart-felt plea of an old man, burdened with the evils that are heaped upon his defenceless people, just as they are emerging from the long black midnight of gross heathenism and cannibalism. Oh, that my beloved country would rise and stamp out this foul system; that the land of Wilberforce and Clarkson; that the Britain whose blood and treasure has been freely sacrificed to enable her to assume the proud honour of a nation that never owns a slave, a nation that prefers death to bondage; that my own beloved home-land would add to its roll of glorious triumphs this, that her children must not and shall not disgrace her name by playing with a deadly system that has in the past, and must in the future, lead to abuse, bloodshed, and God-dishonouring cruelty, little short of that accursed thing called slavery!

2, Park-quadrant, Glasgow.

ENGLISHWOMEN IN INDIA.

While the call for "Winter Missions to India" has been heard by some who have gone out to preach to the English and English-speaking male population, there is another call which comes to English and American women to go out to that great country to evangelise among the English-speaking women and girls. Two workers of the Young Women's Christian Association have heard the call and are now on the field holding missions, and doing other work in connection with Y.W.C.A. branches in India. The work already done through the Y.W.C.A. proves it to be adaptable to the needs of the English and Eurasian population out there, and makes the home Association anxious to send out other ladies, successful home workers, to this field.

A letter has been received, among others, begging for a lady to be sent to Bombay, but the Association have no funds at their disposal for this work; therefore they must appeal to those who can go at their own charges.

In addition to the work in large towns, such as Calcutta and Bombay, there are large railway centres, entirely English-speaking, and a Y.W.C.A. worker would have a large field for evangelistic and other work. If a leader were found, the Association would like to start a Home to which workers could be sent, and which would become a centre of evangelistic spiritual work. This might be situated in a healthy station, and offers of help might be given to chaplains, who often appeal to the missionaries for help in this line of work, which, however, they cannot overtake.

One advantage of Y.W.C.A. work is that the workers move to the hills in the hot weather, so that the danger of "hot weather in the plains" need not be faced.

The Hon. Miss Kinnaird will be glad to give particulars of the qualifications required for the work, from personal observation. The central office of the Y.W.C.A. is 316, Regent-street, W.

THE PHŒNIX HOME FOR BLIND WOMEN, 44, Alma-square, Hill-road, St. John's Wood, N.W., is a small institution doing a good work. The Home is conducted as a private family, under a superintendent and a committee of ladies. Only seven or eight women are received at a time and made as comfortable and happy as circumstances will permit. They pay £20 per annum each; but this, of course, does not nearly cover the expenses of the Home. A modest subscription list helps on the work, but new friends and supporters would be welcome. The hon. treasurer and secretary is Miss Alice Bostock, Northcote, Wallington, Surrey.

[68]

AFRICAN MISSIONS VISITED.—18.

By Mr. D. A. HUNTER.

The last Sunday I spent in Basutoland will be remembered by two little incidents. In the morning, before service, a son of Joel, the powerful chief of the district, came to see me. He had been to school at Morija, and could speak fairly good English.

After I had satisfied his curiosity about myself—these Africans are adepts at asking questions—I turned the conversation upon himself and his attitude towards Christianity, silently praying for the right words to speak. He readily admitted Christianity to be the true religion, and declared his intentions of becoming a Christian. When pressed to carry his intention into effect there and then, he pleaded ignorance as to which church he should join, there being the French Mission, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and the Roman Catholics, all working in Basutoland. (The heathen themselves liken the French Mission, which is the largest and was first in the field, to the great wife; the others, they say, are only small wives.)

I saw his difficulty was not a real one to him, but only an excuse. His real difficulty, it transpired afterwards, is polygamy. Although still a youth, and a regular church-goer, he is already the husband of two wives. In a country where many wives mean riches, it is not easy for a man to renounce the prospect of wealth, and forsake all to follow Christ.

My next visitor, Isopané by name, was a man of middle age, tall and handsome, with strong lines of character in his face. He is one of Joel's principal indunas, and although a tenacious supporter of all heathen rites and superstitions, he has sufficient acumen to perceive the worldly advantage which accrues from a good education. For this reason he has sent his son to Lovedale, and came to ask me many questions about the school and about his boy. God grant that Isopané the younger may learn the beginning of wisdom while at Lovedale, and return to Kalo a messenger of light to his father and to his people.

The Caledon once crossed, to reach Bethlehem was plain sailing, and we arrived there about five o'clock on Monday evening. It is a bonny little town, with a somewhat monotonous outlook over undulating, but treeless, country.

Rev. Andrew Murray had telegraphed to his daughter, who is at the head of the Bethlehem Huguenot Seminary, announcing my coming. Consequently I found myself expected, and two small meetings of young people were arranged, one in the afternoon in the Wesleyan Church, and one in the evening in the seminary. It was both cheering and refreshing to find kindred spirits working diligently in this corner of the vineyard. I met two student missionary volunteers, also two young fellows preparing for missionary work, and I look for more missionary volunteers as an outcome of our meeting.

The drive from Bethlehem to Harrismith I was unable to accomplish in one day. A heavy rain came on while I was still some eighteen miles from Harrismith, and my horses being tired out by the heavy pulling through mud, I was compelled to seek shelter in a little wayside store, where I was hospitably received, and got a shakedown for the night.

Next day I entrained with my horses and buggy at Harrismith, booking through to Pietermaritzburg. The train started amidst a terrific thunder-rain, and we had only run about three miles when we came on a wash-out on the line. This caused such a detention that we only reached our destination the next day, some sixteen hours late.

I drove on Saturday afternoon to Edendale, a Wesleyan station about seven miles out of Pietermaritzburg, and there spent Sunday. It is a picturesquely-situated village, where the natives have built themselves really capital houses, and most of them have their own plots of land. Edendale is the centre of some twenty-four preaching places, which are occupied from Sunday to Sunday by a band of native evangelists and local preachers. Mr. Baker, the superintendent of the circuit, was away preaching at an out-station nearly thirty miles distant, where the work was commenced in an interesting manner. A native from this place went to Ladysmith to find work, and found what was better—Jesus Christ. After a time he returned home, and although very ignorant and unlearned, he so effectually told what the Lord had done for him, that he soon had twenty-seven converts.

The boys' boarding-school at Edendale is doing effectual service in training what one hopes will be a band of native ministers, evangelists, and school teachers. There are about forty boys now in residence, and Mr. Fraser, under whose charge they are, tells me they are much easier to manage than would be the same number of European boys.

I was pressed into work in the Edendale Church, for both morning and afternoon services, and was greatly helped by an able interpreter. The congregations were large and attentive, and the singing exceedingly good. It was led by several who were members of the Zulu Choir, which not long ago visited England.

The boys sent a request that they might have an address to themselves in their schoolroom during the evening. I was only too glad to have the opportunity of a straight talk with them, and at the close seven professed conversion, among them my own servant. One of the older boys signed the Student Volunteer pledge.

THE GOSPEL AND ITS MINISTRY *

This is a new edition of a well-known book, which has already more than once been favourably noticed in our columns. We therefore confine our remarks to the additional Note which forms the distinctive feature of this new edition, and which is on a most important subject, that of Atonement.

Dr. Anderson has done good service to the cause of truth, especially in view of the errors of the present day, in calling attention to the Scriptural meaning of the word atonement, which is apt to escape the ordinary reader from the fact that "the English word 'atonement' has gradually changed its meaning." It originally meant at-one-ment, or reconciliation, in which sense it occurs in the only passage in the New Testament where it is found—Rom. v. 11. In the Old Testament, it is used as the ordinary rendering for a Hebrew word, "Kapher," which originally means, and sounds like, our word "cover." This was the fundamental idea at the root of the word, and is found in its first occurrence in its literal meaning in Gen. vi. 14, of the covering the Ark with pitch.

Its metaphorical meaning is well illustrated in the second passage where it occurs (Gen. xxxii. 20), where Jacob, fearing the approach of Esau on account of the cause of offence he had been to him, says, "I will appease him with the present that goeth before me" (literally, "I will cover his face"). Henceforth it becomes the common word for the action of the priest in so dealing with the blood of the sacrifice as the law might in each case require, so as to propitiate or cover the cause of offence from God's sight. Dr. Anderson well says, "In Leviticus the atonement was not the sin-offering, neither was it accomplished by killing the sacrifice; it depended upon the fulfilment of the prescribed ritual by which persons and things were brought within the benefits of the death already accomplished."

This distinction between the sacrifice itself and the application of its results is most important. It bears upon a vital point in our controversy with Rome and ritualism. According to their teaching, Christ is still offering his sacrifice in heaven; according to Scripture, the sacrifice has been offered once for all, and it is the results alone which are now being applied. Dr. Anderson makes this distinction in the words, "The blood carried within the veil was not the completion of the sin-offering, but the memorial of a sin-offering completed." Again, speaking of the entrance of Christ into heaven, "It is not the priest going in to finish an unfinished work, but the Mediator going in on the ground of a work finished and complete."

The author also bears faithful testimony against the view, which of late has been supported by great names, that the blood of the sacrifice, when sprinkled or applied, typified life rather than the death of which it was a memorial. He well shows that this view rests upon a mistaken apprehension of what is meant in Lev. xvii. 11, "The life of the flesh is in the blood"—"that is, in the warm and living blood which animates it. Therefore it is that when the organism is destroyed by the pouring out of that which energised it, the blood now cold and still represents life laid down and lost. In a word, it represents death."

* The Gospel and its Ministry. By Robert Anderson, LL.D. Sixth Edition, with additional Note upon Atonement. Jas. Nisbet & Co.

We hope that this valuable addition to a work hitherto so appreciated will increase its usefulness and extend its circulation.

We must, however, add that Dr. Anderson is a forcible writer, and sometimes puts things more strongly than there may be any warrant for doing; so that we at times meet with expressions and sometimes positions which appear questionable. For example, we wish that in discussing the question, "Does faith mean trust or belief of testimony?" he had combined both meanings, instead of setting them one against the other, and saying, "Faith in its simplest character is not trust, nor even faith in a person, but belief of a record." In the many passages where our Lord commends faith—such as, "O woman, great is thy faith," or reproves the lack of it, as, "How is it ye have no faith?"—it seems impossible to deny that trust or faith in a person is the leading idea. Of course, where testimony is the subject, faith is belief in that testimony; but where a person or a work is spoken of, faith most naturally means trust in that person or work. It is the combination of these two meanings that gives us the full Scriptural conception of faith. We are but losers if we set one against the other.

TRAMWAY MEN IN TUNIS.

"WHAT can we do for the tramway men?" was a question which came before us here about Christmas time. We had already made acquaintance with some of these men, and were known among them as people who carried tracts. One old man keeps some of those he has received safely folded in his breast pocket, and says the words are "precious."

The answer to our question was not easy. Many of the men work late. But at last we decided to give up four hours to them, i.e., from 8 to 12 p.m., on January 3, in the specially Arab room of our Arab house. We made this known, but had many speculations as to how many, if any, would avail themselves of our invitation. However, precisely at eight, three men arrived, and others came later on, the last party at 11 p.m.; there were thirty in all. We gave them coffee, sandwiches, and cakes, and, after a little, one of the lady missionaries took off the Arab-speaking portion (Arabs, Jews, and Maltese) into another room, where they gathered round her like a Sunday-school class as she expounded to them in Arabic the way of life.

The rest of us did our best with the others, whose language is Italian—singing, reading, speaking, the latter partly by the aid of an interpreter. We need many languages here really to reach the people. The men listened well; the three who arrived first remained right on to the end, and one of them especially was so eager he seemed scarcely able to take his eyes off the Testament he held in his hand, and repeated over and over the words which urged to present decision for Christ. All things divine are absolutely new to most of these poor men. On leaving, they each received a large print New Testament, and some have asked to come again and learn more. We are so glad they know where to come, and to feel we have a link with them and their families. The Lord use it for his glory.

F. E. BERNARD.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

NOTWITHSTANDING the severity of the weather, which affected the attendance at evening meetings, the New Year has opened with encouraging tokens of God's grace in the conversion of souls under the preaching of the Word. The workers have again and again been detained to late hours dealing with inquirers.

The enormous amount of distress in various districts has, however, severely taxed the resources both as to men and means. Free and liberal distributions of soup, bread, tea, etc., have been made, for which the recipients have appeared unfeignedly thankful, though the workers were unequal to meet the need to the full extent they could have desired, and it is feared, notwithstanding the break up of the frost, there will continue to be much poverty and suffering throughout the winter, both in London and the rural districts.

I shall be grateful if your readers would continue to remember this mission in prayer and practical sympathy. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH.

"FEAR NOT" runs like a golden thread through the whole of Scripture.

THE Y.M.C.A.

PRIZE-GIVING IN THE CITY.

ALDERSGATE-STREET has been the scene of many interesting functions. Royalty, on more than one occasion, has graced the Association Hall in connection with former presentations of prizes. On no former occasion did the proceedings go off with more éclat than last week, when not only did the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress attend and distribute the beautiful prizes (provided by the generosity of Mr. George Williams and Captain Cundy), but both the Sheriffs were present to support them. These dignitaries were accompanied by Mrs. Dimsdale and other ladies.

After devotional exercises, the General Secretary reported to the meeting some interesting statistics concerning the work. There were more than 2,000 young men on the roll; 1,876 entries in the educational classes last year; and a weekly attendance in the rooms of 5,000, or an average of one man per minute coming into the Association during each of the fourteen hours a day in which the doors stand open. Mr. Burn drew attention to the fact that this is the jubilee year of the Association, and that Aldersgate-street is the original Association, founded fifty years ago on June 6, in St. Paul's Churchyard. It was pointed out that in addition to the educational work much interest was also manifested in the social, physical, and, above all, in the spiritual welfare of the young men of the city.

The prizes for success in the classes were handed to the fortunate competitors by the Lord Mayor. Those won by the members of the athletic clubs were presented by the Lady Mayoress.

Excellent addresses were then delivered; first, by Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Moore, and, next, by Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Dimsdale. The former remembered the benefits derived as a member of the Association forty years ago, in the days when Mr. Tarlton was secretary, and Mr. Alford (subsequently Dean Alford) undertook the Greek Testament class. Both the Sheriffs supported the Association without qualification, and both rejoiced in its Christian basis; holding unanimously that the excellent objects and the valuable work accomplished rendered the institution second in importance to none in the City of London.

A cordial acknowledgment of the value of this endorsement, and of the honours done to the Association by the presence of so many distinguished guests, was happily rendered by Mr. George Williams, founder and president. Mr. Alderman Vaughan Morgan, treasurer of Christ's Hospital, heartily supported Mr. Williams in acknowledging the kindness of the favour shown.

"RADLEY'S MEETING."

This yearly meeting of the members of London Y.M.C.A. Committees took place on Wednesday evening, Jan. 10, at Exeter Hall. Mr. George Williams, with radiant face and evident joy of heart, presided. There was a good attendance of old friends and new; the latter in strong force—a good augury for the future of the work.

After prayer by Mr. Edward Trotter and Mr. M. H. Hodder, and reading of the Scripture by Mr. Howard Williams, the Chairman spoke some cheery words on the subject of the approaching jubilee—a topic which was continually reverted to with pleasure throughout the evening. Probably by a happy coincidence all the Associations called upon to report were able to give an encouraging account of the past year's proceedings. This could not have been because there were no trials and difficulties. Perhaps, in a happy unconsciousness, these were forgotten in the midst of the general joy.

The first matter that occupied attention was the provision of hospitality for the two thousand delegates who are expected to attend the Jubilee Conference in the first week of June next. Mr. J. H. Putterill, to whom has been deputed the charge of the jubilee executive business, explained the requirements of the situation. During the evening encouraging responses were given by the Westbourne Grove and the Croydon Associations, each of whom had already arranged to receive fifty guests, and by Wimbledon, which had arranged for twenty. Similar co-operation on the part of each association will result in the allotment of visitors being easily accomplished.

Mr. W. H. MILLS, Secretary of the National Council, reported that tidings were reaching him that told of deep interest and great expectations that were aroused regarding the Jubilee Conference in the minds of Association workers in the various countries.

Then followed interesting reports from the representatives of various metropolitan Associations called upon by the president:—Mr. Wild (Westbourne Grove), Mr. John White (Camden Town), who rather surprised the meeting by condemning the social, physical, and intellectual accessories of the work at Camden Town as positively useless in the effort to win young men to Christ. Mr. Stavridi reported for the French Y.M.C.A., and Mr. Natorp for the German. Professor Gladstone, F.R.S., President of the North-West Association, reported favourably of the prospects of the work at Stafford Rooms. He also spoke with hearty congratulation on the development of Y.M.C.A. work, and of the influence the Association had exerted in the starting and vitalising similar societies in connection with churches, etc. Mr. Morris (Croydon) reported good progress towards the erection of new premises.

Mr. John Hayward (Clapham), a veteran worker, encouraged his brethren not to be daunted in their efforts by the overshadowing neighbourhood of well endowed polytechnics. Their object was diverse. He (as a lawyer) did not mind how many auctioneers settled in his district. Then followed good tidings from Tower Hamlets. Mr. Walter Hitchcock (Aldersgate-street) spoke of his happy Association experiences in his travels round the world. He had been greatly encouraged by visiting the Associations in India, Ceylon, Sandwich Islands, Fiji, New Zealand, Australia, and America. The Wimbledon secretary spoke of revival and blessing which had greatly encouraged the friends in that important centre. With a final word from Mr. Gilbert, the first Association travelling secretary, the proceedings closed with a hymn of praise and prayer.

BRIEF NOTES.

In Western Australia, the Perth Association is developing greatly and doing a grand work.

The Birkenhead Association's magazine reports recent interest in the evangelistic meetings, and in the Foreign Missionary Parliament.

Our Herald, the organ of the Adelaide Association, reports that the evangelistic work, and especially the theatre service, have been greatly blessed.

The Chesham (Bucks) Association has closed its first year well. Membership and interest in the work are increasing; but much need is felt for a few good reference books for the library.

The Belfast Y.M.C.A. has secured a most eligible site for a new building. The recently elected president of this Association is Mr. R. Cambridge Grubb, brother of the Rev. Geo. Grubb, M.A., whose evangelistic labours have been so greatly blessed.

The Manchester Y.M.C.A. has resolved to signalise this jubilee year by endeavouring to secure, through the kindness of friends, the sum of ten thousand pounds to provide for certain special items of annual expenditure, such as chief rent, poor rates, and repairs.

The annual report of the Glasgow Association is out, and contains an interesting record of work. The president and Mrs. Connal gave a reception to the visitors last month, when Mr. Andrew Sloan read a paper on "The Ideal Visitor," and an interesting conversation followed.

The annual conversazione of the Leeds Association has just been held. It was the first under the régime of the new Secretary, Mr. Thos. Moffett, and was a pronounced success. The Mayor delivered an address, and distributed the prizes gained during the past year. The Association has now a membership of 400.

At Croydon, a reception was held by Mr. and Mrs. J. Compton Rickett at the Public Hall. After the distribution of prizes, plans were presented of the new "Jubilee" building which is to be at once erected for the Association. This is to cost £6,000, towards which amount Mr. Rickett has made the very handsome contribution of £2,000.

A successful sub-district conference, comprising representatives of the Southwark, Camberwell, Kennington, Brixton, and Peckham Associations, was held at Southwark on the 11th inst. Useful suggestions were tendered by delegates for the furtherance of the work, which, while carried on under circumstances of difficulty in some instances, had nevertheless been the means of considerable good to young men during the past twelve months.

YOUNG WOMEN'S WORK.

THE Y.W.C.A. has taken thorough hold in Perth, West Australia.

The annual meeting of the Adelaide Y.W.C.A. was held in the end of November, and showed steady progress and much real work for the past year.

The Cloudesley Institute goes on well. God is blessing and owning the work very graciously. During the past year many clear conversions have been observed amongst the business girls. The secretary, Mrs. Paton, 22, Highbury-terrace, N., is much in need of extra and additional funds to carry on the work.

AT MR. COAD'S RECENT MISSION in Luton many signed the temperance pledge.

BIBLE SOCIETY NOTES.

One of the new versions printed by the Bible Society has been for the use of a tribe in Western Africa within the sphere of French influence—the Fang—a people inhabiting a large territory extending several degrees north and south of the equator, just inland from the west coast. They are one of the largest tribes in that region, and are remarkably intelligent, though morally degraded. The greater part of the Book of Genesis has been translated, and St. Matthew is now being printed.

The Gospel of St. Luke in Kwagutl is passing through the press. Kwagutl is the language spoken on the north of Vancouver Island. The Canadian Indians of this region were once considered the most barbarous and depraved of their countrymen, but there has been a great change for the better. Two C.M.S. missionaries have been at work. They are now everywhere welcome. The Gospels have been explained round the family fire, and there is good hope that soon all will embrace the Christian faith.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The first anniversary of the Victoria-street Society, Derby, was of a most helpful and impressive character.

The Endeavourers at Burlington-street, Aston, Birmingham, lately gave a poor children's treat, when about two hundred children were present.

The Ossett Congregational Society held a sunrise prayer-meeting on Christmas morning, when seventy-seven were present. The meeting was thoroughly enjoyed. This society is flourishing and doing good work.

The C.E. Society, Herbert-road, Plumstead, held its usual monthly consecration meeting on the first day of the New Year, marking its progress by giving a free tea to the members, and entertaining also over one hundred poor children and parents of the immediate locality.

Said Bishop Arnett recently:—"A brother asked me if I thought the churches could stand the Christian Endeavour movement. I answered that if the church could not stand a movement whose main purpose is to get the young people to hold prayer-meetings in their own church, it needs praying for."

The London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian says:—"I find I was within the mark in anticipating that one thousand British branches of the Christian Endeavour Society would be formed before 1894 began. The exact number was 1004. Number 1000 falls to a Stockport school. Other recently formed branches include Grosvenor-street, Manchester; Latchford, Warrington and Handbridge, and Chester. The International Convention of 1895 is to be held in San Francisco, and already the religious papers published on the Pacific coast outline the reception that is to be given to the thousands of young 'Endeavourers' who thus will make their first visit to California."

IRISH NOTES.

St. Enoch's Presbyterian Church, Belfast, of which Rev. Chas. Davey is the pastor, is in a flourishing condition; it has 900 families connected with it.

Rev. T. O. Park is at present delivering a series of special sermons to young men and others on such themes as "What are we to believe?" in French Church, Cork.

We hear with regret that Rev. R. Montgomery, jun., pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Portrush, has found it needful to seek a year's leave of absence on account of ill-health.

At present five new Presbyterian churches are in course of erection at Belfast, while during the last ten years six new Presbyterian congregations have been organised in the city.

A united communion service was held in Wesley Chapel, Cork, last Sunday in connection with the Cork Ministers' Union, representing all the Evangelical denominations in the city.

Meetings in connection with the universal week of prayer under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance were held last week in Dublin, Cork, Newry, Belfast, and other cities and towns in Ireland, and were well attended.

The Society for Home Mission Work among the Blind continues to do an excellent work in Belfast. During the past year the lady missionary paid 2000 visits, while two weekly prayer-meetings were kept up, and the Home was kept quite full.

Gospel mission services have been held during the past week in Fall's-road Church, Belfast, by Revs. Jas. Robertson, Geo. W. Thompson, and others. Similar services have been held in Ballynafeigh Methodist Church by Rev. Henry Ball. In each case several professed to have decided for Christ.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Mr. William Forbes began on Thursday a mission at Leven, Fife.

Rev. David Sutherland, of Renton U.P. Church, has demitted his charge to begin mission work in Edinburgh.

Two thousand elderly men and women of the deserving poor in Glasgow, were last week entertained at supper in the City Hall by some city gentlemen.

A class for young men, with an average attendance of 500 or 600, is conducted by Mr. Wm. Stewart in a hall built on ground adjoining Bonnet-hill Free Church.

The closing of public-houses in Dundee on New Year's day, on the recommendation of the magistrates, had a very happy effect in promoting sobriety at the holiday season.

Rev. John Kirkwood, who has been the minister of the Troon Church, Ayrshire, for forty years, is to be nominated as the next moderator of the Synod of the United Presbyterian Church.

An old Scotchwoman, living in a room and kitchen house on the south side of Glasgow, has presented Mr. Quarrier with £500—"saved by pennies"—for his Farm or Aged Workers' Home.

Some time ago a workmen's club was formed in connection with Rothesay Episcopal Church. It has proved such a success that it is to be removed to premises where greater accommodation will be had.

The fourth of the illustrated missionary lectures to schoolboys in Edinburgh was given last week in the F.C. Assembly Hall, by the Rev. R. Wright Hay, on mission work in West Africa and at Dacca in India.

In the Free Church Divinity Hall, Edinburgh, presided over by Principal Rainy, there are students from Ireland, Wales, Canada, New Zealand, United States, West Indies, Switzerland, France, Holland, Italy, Bohemia, and Asia Minor.

A very promising preacher, Rev. Geo. Milligan, of St. Matthew's Church, Edinburgh, has been appointed to the charge of Caputh, where the present Home Mission secretary of the Established Church laboured with much success for many years.

Christian workers in Glasgow have gained an acquisition in the appointment of Rev. Robert Auld, of Wick, to the pastorate of Eglinton-street U.P. Church. Mr. Auld was only five years in Wick, but during that short time he gained the respect of the whole community for his earnest aggressive work.

Dr. Ross Taylor, the Convener of the Free Sustentation Fund, leaves Glasgow early next month on a visit to the Holy Land. He proposes to take a considerable time in passing through Egypt on to Palestine, north as far as Damascus, back through Asia-Minor, and on to Constantinople, Athens, and Rome.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier's festival in the National Halls, Gorbals, last week to the street boys and girls of Glasgow, was a great success. "The Amateur Vagrant" describes it in The Daily Mail as "one of the greatest sights I know, one of the most pleasing and delightful because one of the most thoroughly Christian and humane."

Dr. Marshall Lang, the Moderator of the Established Church Assembly, is delivering a series of lectures on "Pastoral Theology" in Glasgow University, at the request of the Home Mission Committee. They are attracting a good deal of attention, as the lecturer is dealing very frankly with the pulpit. He attaches more importance to the man who preaches than to the sermon preached.

THE TIBETAN MISSION.—In our notice about the leaving of the Tibetan Mission Party on page 30 of last week's issue, a printer's error makes us say that they would be leaving in January. As would have been seen by context, this should be February.

SHRUBBERY-ROAD MISSION, LEWISHAM.—This Mission has during the past year been called upon in God's Providence to suffer the loss of both Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, the practical founders and almost sole supporters of the work. The remaining workers have carried on the Mission. There is in this neighbourhood a splendid field for such a work. Mr. Oscar Owers has concluded a week of special services. His addresses have been blessed to those who were hitherto indifferent, as well as to the workers.

THE STRANGERS' REST.—On Friday last, the Christian workers at the Rest in Ratcliff Highway assembled for the first time in the New Year. An address was given by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, two out-going lady missionaries (Miss Brook and Miss Wallace) also being present, and delivering short farewell speeches. Mr. T. B. Miller, who was in the chair, spoke a few words on Heb. xii. 1, 2. Earnest prayer was made for the hon. sec., Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, whose absence through serious illness was much felt by those present.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Free Methodists at Spalding, to keep working men from the public-house, have, within the last six years, been the means of establishing a number of clubs in the town and district. Each member pays 6d. per week, for which he gets the benefits of a friendly society, and has the balance returned at the end of the year. The movement has been most successful.

The National Temperance League Annual for 1894, has for frontispiece a characteristic portrait of the late Mr. W. I. Palmer. Besides many valuable papers, it gives a useful directory of Temperance organisations and movements, with tables of various statistics and facts important to speakers and workers. It is published (1s., 1s. 6d.,) at the Depot, 33, Paternoster Row, E.C.

"In Scotland," says Lieutenant-Colonel McHardy, one of the Prison Commissioners, "the number of people who have to be dealt with as offenders for drunkenness is enormous. I think the proportion of apprehensions in Scotland is very much greater than in England for crimes that are either pure drunkenness or immediately connected with drunkenness, such as breaches of the peace."

Out of the whole 9542 in-patients received into the Temperance Hospital, alcohol has only been used in any form in seventeen instances. Though the most serious medical and surgical cases have been dealt with, a specially low rate of mortality has been maintained. An additional £1500 a year is urgently needed to maintain the present work, and to open two large wards, which though furnished, it has been impossible to use for want of funds.

A new inebriate home for men has been opened at Ranelagh-road, Ealing, by the London Diocesan Branch of the C.E.T.S., 4, Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W. The Institution has been established to meet the wants of middle-class inebriates who cannot afford to pay the large sums asked by existing Homes; and while the best medical attention will be given, recreation and occupation will form a part of the treatment. Patients are received at 3s. 6d. per week, and communications should be addressed to the Rev. Dennis Hird.

A united temperance mission has been conducted by the Newcastle Temperance Society in Nelson-street Hall. Ministers of various denominations in the city, and some medical men, have taken part in the meetings, music also being rendered by several church and mission choirs. At one of the meetings the following resolution was submitted by Rev. D. Ross (Presbyterian), and seconded by Rev. F. Lamb (United Methodist Free Churches):—"It is the opinion of this meeting that the £2000 spent every day in Newcastle in intoxicants would be amply sufficient to give work to all the unemployed."

Our Odessa correspondent states that it has now been definitely decided to introduce the sale of strong drink by the State in the important provinces of Orenburg, Samara, Perm, and Ufa. These are probably the most drunken provinces in Eastern Russia. Simultaneously with the introduction of this reform "curatoriums" will be instituted, the members of which will be the leading officials of the province, whose duties it will be to take measures for the extirpation of drunkenness among the people, and maintain a sharp supervision over the officials connected with the sale of drink.—Daily Chronicle.

Archdeacon Farrar begins in The British Workman a series of papers on "Drink and the Working Man." "Working men have before them the example of great tribunes of the people, like Richard Cobden and John Bright, who were abstainers when it was far more difficult to be so than now it is; and of living leaders whom they trust, whose abilities and energy have raised them to a high position, such as John Burns, Ben Tillett, and others of their foremost representatives, who are, I believe, ardent total abstainers." Touching the habit of indulgence, the Archdeacon points out that there are 20,000 prisoners in England who, so far from suffering from total abstinence, improve in health during their incarceration.

American liquor legislation, says The Hospital, is occupying a great deal of public attention at the present time. Strong repressive measures have been an undoubted failure, and Brook's Licensing Act passed in 1886 was found a necessary modification. This provided that the licensing should be left in the hands of the Courts of Quarter Sessions, and that a heavy licensing fee should in all cases be demanded. Although in Pennsylvania, where the new scheme first started, the result was excellent, the number of cases of drunkenness being reduced 72 per cent., in Pittsburg, where it was also tried, the effect was not markedly good, but retrograde. In Pennsylvania, it is stated, public opinion and the police strenuously upheld the regulations imposed, whilst in Pittsburg this was not the case, showing that legislation alone cannot be depended upon apart from public opinion.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Northampton.—Mr. F. H. Hutchins conducted Gospel services in the Mission Hall on Sunday last. At the close of the evening service large numbers remained to the after-meeting.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is conducting a twenty-two days' mission in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Chester-road, Sunderland. He is being owned and blessed of God, especially among young men.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has held a seven days' mission at Wimborne, Dorset (Rev. L. J. Bailey, pastor). His next mission will be at the Presbyterian Church, Waterloo, near Liverpool, commencing on the 20th inst.

Mr. W. R. Lane closed on Sunday a deeply interesting mission at Basingstoke. The Drill Hall has been quite full several nights, the interest and attendance growing day by day. The work seems to have taken deep and solemn hold, and to have resulted in precious reaping.

Mr. Richard Weaver had on Sunday good meetings at the Farwig Mission, near Bromley. In the evening, the hall was crowded out, and souls were saved. Next Lord's Day this veteran evangelist hopes to begin a ten-days' mission at Woolwichl arranged by Rev. John Wilson. Prayer is desired for much blessing.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman has been conducting evangelistic meetings at Detroit, which have filled a hall holding 7,000 persons. At his request, on one afternoon, not only the principal stores, but even the saloons, were closed. "The astonishing spectacle was presented of saloons with closed doors and the proprietors at a religious meeting." Contributions for the poor at the meetings in one day exceeded £1000.

Mr. Henry Smith has completed his fourth mission at Nawton, Yorks. Church and chapel goers, with people who scarcely ever attend any place of worship, crowded the building every night. Some have professed conversion and believers have been quickened. Mr. Smith commenced a fortnight's mission at the Congregational Chapel, Felling, on January 14, and will enter upon a month's mission at the Imperial Hall, Hanley, on February 4.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. John Walton, a Wesleyan ex-President, has been more seriously ill than was generally known, but is now better.

Dr. Norman Kerr, the well-known temperance reformer, was married last week to Miss E. J. Henderson, of Newry, co. Down.

Miss Lucy Greeves, daughter of Rev. J. W. Greeves, of the Wesleyan Mission House, has just left England for a lengthened stay in India.

Mrs. Bishop, the well-known traveller, left Liverpool on Jan. 11 by the Allan steamer Mongolian, en route for Korea, viâ Halifax, Vancouver, and Japan.

Miss Gedge, sister of Mr. Sydney Gedge, is to go out immediately to Lagos to take charge of the training institution which Mrs. Hill, the wife of Bishop Hill, intended to make her special care.

Mr. Wm. Hampson, who died last week in Manchester, at the age of 115, claimed to be "the Queen's oldest subject." When a boy he heard John Wesley preach in Trinity Church, Salford.

Mrs. Amanda Smith, whose former visits are so happily remembered, is again among us. She effectively addressed a drawing-room meeting in connection with the B.W.T.A. at Tulse Hill last week.

Bishop Taylor intends to visit in turn each of the missionary stations he has established in Liberia, on the Congo, in Angola, and in Zambesia and Mashonaland, and to make a thorough inspection of the entire field.

Rev. George Bell, of Newcastle, the father of the English Presbyterian Church, now in his 90th year, fell, a few days ago, in his own house and sustained a fracture of the leg. His condition was considered serious.

Bishop Pelham, many will be glad to hear, has taken a turn for the better, and is now progressing towards recovery. The loss of his wife has naturally been a severe blow to him, but he has kept calm and peaceful under the great trial.

Rev. John Thomas, M.A., is still unable to resume his ministry at Myrtle-street, Liverpool, He is assured by his medical attendant of a happy issue from his prolonged knee trouble, but the battle with that trouble is still of a tedious kind.

Mr. J. Theo. Isaac is slightly better. His wife reports that the fever is abating, though he feels his weakness more. During his illness Mrs. Isaac is undertaking his correspondence. All communications, therefore, both for the Strangers' Rest and the Zanzibar Sailors' Rest should be addressed, as usual, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, E.

Principal E. Herber Evans, D.D., appears in a biographical sketch in the first issue of The Biographer. The writer says of Dr. Evans: "While he has been a familiar figure in the chief places of work and population, he has never neglected the villagers, and there is hardly a nook or corner of Wales where his voice has not been heard again and again."

Rev. Egerton R. Young, the veteran missionary to the Red Indians of the Far West, is paying another visit to this country. His state of health will not now permit him to face the severe winters of North-western Canada. For about two months he has been preaching and addressing gatherings in different places in advocacy of this mission work. He purposes soon to visit Ireland, and possibly Scotland; afterwards he will spend a little time in Paris. Friends wishing to communicate with him should address, care of Mr. R. N. Helme, Lancaster.

OBITUARY.

MR. FREDERICK PITTS.

THIS faithful servant of Christ, who for nearly forty years has been associated with the work at Ogle Mews Ragged School Mission, Marylebone, passed to be with the Lord on Thursday, 11th, deeply regretted by many who knew his worth. In addition to his labours in connection with this centre of Christian effort, Mr. Pitts took an active part at Trinity Church, Marylebone, and was for many years churchwarden with the late Canon Cadman.

REV. J. F. BLUMENREICH.

This faithful minister passed to be with Christ at his residence in Edinburgh, on Wednesday, 10th inst. Born in Poland, he was brought up strictly as a Jew. When a young man he became interested in Christianity, and in 1843 was baptized in the faith of Christ. He sought to become a missionary to the Jews, but being providentially hindered, was led into work in Scotland, and eventually did good service among Germans in Edinburgh, becoming in 1862 minister of the German Church in that city.

REV. GEORGE TAYLOR BRAINE-HARTNELL.

The devoted vicar of Liskeard, Cornwall, passed from his earthly labours to his eternal rest on the 10th inst., his sixty-first birthday; a severe attack of jaundice, on which supervened pneumonia, being the immediate cause of his death. He leaves his wife and nine children to mourn his loss. Through his three weeks of suffering he ever and anon bore the testimony, "I am on the Rock." He held with tenacity Evangelical principles, honoured God's Word, and fearlessly expressed his convictions publicly and privately. With a single eye to please his Master, he sought to serve and follow in the footprints of Jesus Christ crucified. His labours in former years in the island of Jamaica, and subsequently for nearly eleven years in connection with the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, and for a time at Jerusalem itself, were much blessed of God. Since 1884 he had rendered faithful and fruitful service at Liskeard.

REV. WM. JOHNSTON, D.D., BELFAST.

Dr. Johnston, for many years the pastor of Townsend-street Presbyterian Church, Belfast, has passed away, aged seventy-five years. He was the son of Rev. John Johnston, D.D., of Tullylish, a minister of great piety and missionary fervour. He was educated partly in Belfast and partly in Edinburgh, where he sat as a student at the feet of Dr. Chalmers. He entered the ministry in 1842, and became pastor of Berry-street Congregation, Belfast, and from that he went to Townsend-street in 1847, where he continued till his death. He was an able, earnest, Evangelical preacher. No minister took a deeper interest in the various missions held by Mr. Moody in Belfast. He was twice Moderator of the General Assembly. His name will be longest remembered in connection with the Presbyterian Orphan Society, which he founded, and for which he acted for many years as secretary, and by means of which about 10,000 children have already been rescued from poverty and possibly from crime.

MR. GEORGE LAWRENCE, BARCELONA.

For thirty years this missionary has been engaged in spreading the Gospel in Spain. An old friend writes:—"Mr. Lawrence had been very weak and suffering for months, but the sickness of which he died began by a paralytic stroke, from which he never recovered. He passed away at the age of sixty-three years, at Caldas de Montbuy, on the 9th of January, and was buried in the Civil Cemetery at Caldas on Thursday, 11th."

His daughter and co-worker, in a private letter, says: "Our dear father has gone home. I can scarcely collect my thoughts to write, the shock has been so sudden and sharp. Our great consolation has been the tender sympathy and kindness of our Spanish friends in Caldas."

REV. PREBENDARY GORDON CALTHROP,

We have from time to time lately mentioned the serious and painful illness of the beloved Gordon Calthrop, well known as the vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury, and as a large-hearted and loving helper of Evangelical work of all kinds, very specially in later years of missions to the Jews. From this suffering he has now found relief, having passed away on Saturday night to his rest and reward. We gave in 1890 a sketch of Mr. Calthrop's life, but we may recall that this eloquent and faithful preacher was ordained in 1853, and four years later was select preacher to the University of Cambridge, again filling the position in 1874, and from 1858 to 1864 was perpetual curate at Holy Trinity, Cheltenham, since which time he had held the vicarage of St. Augustine's, Highbury. He was the author of several works, amongst others "The Preacher's Commentary on St. John's Gospel." At Union Chapel, Islington, on Sunday night, Rev. W. H. Harwood said he could not let the service pass without saying with what concern they had heard of the terribly painful illness and finally of the death of their neighbour, Mr. Gordon Calthrop. They recalled with many sacred associations the friendship of the late vicar of St. Augustine's with one whose name would always have the first place in Union Chapel—Dr. Allon. They recognised his splendid service to a truly catholic conception of Christianity in that part of London, and they sincerely sympathised with those who were left—both with his own family and with the church that had profited by his most faithful ministry.

MR. THOMAS BLAMIRE, MARIN, SPAIN.

The Christians in Pontevedra feel they have suffered a sore loss in the death of this faithful worker, who, since the early part of 1882, has laboured with much success in and around Marin. Miss L. B. de Wirtz writes: "On Sunday afternoon (January 7th), devout men carried him to his burial amid the sobs of a weeping multitude of Spanish converts, who constantly uttered heartrending cries that they had lost their father. It was a glorious testimony to the power of the Gospel in this Rome-enslaved land to see their deep affection for him who had brought them the Gospel. How many battles with cruel, persecuting Rome had Mr. Blamire fought for these humble Christians. The Spanish Christians have for weeks taken the meetings themselves, hoping by rest to prolong their pastor's valuable life, but he died in harness, as only seven days before his call higher he dragged himself out of bed, and sitting in a chair at the annual 'Cascarilla' meeting, with the help of Mr. Hoyle gave a word of encouragement and welcome to all. Especially painful to dear Mrs. Blamire are the circumstances of her bereavement, as she was in England caring for her two sons at the time Mr. Blamire became so much worse, and though telegraphed for by the doctor's orders, had not time to arrive before he was called hence. Mr. Thomas Blamire was, with Mr. Wigstone (now labouring in Linares, S. Spain), a student for three years in Mr. Spurgeon's College. Conjointly with Mr. Wigstone he opened up mission work in Corunna, Vigo, Pontevedra, Villagarcia, and Carril, before settling in Marin, having laboured for God in Spain over twenty years.

ALTHOUGH 5000 CHURCHES and an increasing number are now using the safe "fruit of the vine," some of the members of the British Women's Temperance Association spent January 7 in earnest prayer that soon all churches may make the Lord's table a safe place for the young and the reclaimed drunkard.

THE LADS' REST.—This home for East-end waifs which has been carried on at 69, Park-road, West Dulwich, since 1889, has been removed to 56, Gipsy-road, West Norwood, larger premises, capable of receiving an increased number of inmates.

YOUNG ABSTAINERS' UNION.—An invitation to the members and friends of this Union was given by Mr. J. F. Buxton, J.P., and Mrs. Buxton on Friday, January 12. About 250 assembled at the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, to give Mr. Buxton a hearty welcome as the new president of this Union. An interesting address was given by Mr. Kennedy, of the Y.M.C.A.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—One long engaged in Christian service, in great trouble and anxiety, most earnestly requests prayer for Divine help and guidance.—For much blessing to attend a three-weeks' mission by F. S. Ball, at Mevagissey, in February.—For God's blessing to rest upon a permanent mission just commenced at Bethel, Lavina Grove, Wharfdale-road, King's Cross. For a blessing on the visit of Archdeacon Farrar to the Men's Service at St. Peter's, Upper Holloway.

Letters to the Editor.

DID YE RECEIVE THE HOLY GHOST?

Dear Sir,—As a matter of Greek, Mr. Gall is mistaken in writing, "I am quite safe in saying that not once in a hundred times, if ever, are the two events simultaneous," when a past participle is followed by an indicative aorist.

In the common expression "he answered and said" (ho de apokritheis eipe), such as Matt. iv. 4, and about a hundred other places, Mr. Gall will see that the "answering" is not finished before the "speaking" begins, but that the two take place together, and that the person speaks in answer, or answers by speaking.

Hence "R. C. M." is perfectly justified in following the R.V. As a matter of fact and theology, I rather agree with Mr. Gall, but he has founded his belief on a wrong argument.

The same holds good in 1 Cor. i. 13, where there is no proof from the mere Greek that the sealing follows the believing, though true in fact.

W. F. Hathaway.

4, Route des Pieux, Cherbourg.

Sir,—Mr. James Gall's grammatical criticism of the expository note of "R. C. M." is a mistaken one.

The Greek expression of an aorist participle followed by a verb also in the aorist tense ordinarily implies that the two actions refer to the same occasion. This can be easily shown by a few examples, and it is rather remarkable that the chapter, Matt. ii., out of which Mr. Gall endeavours to disprove "R. C. M.'s" interpretation, overwhelmingly proves it to be correct.

For the sake of your readers who may not understand Greek, let me quote instances of this construction occurring in the first few verses of that chapter. I translate literally to make the point clear:—"Herod the king having heard was troubled" (v. 3); "having called the wise men he inquired of them" (v. 7); "having sent them he said to them . . . having gone, search diligently" (v. 8); "they having heard, went . . the star having come stood" (v. 9); "they having seen rejoiced" (v. 10); "and having come they saw . . and having fallen down they worshipped . . and having opened their treasures they offered" (v. 11); "and having been warned they returned" (v. 12). Your readers will see for themselves that in all these instances the participle and the verb both refer to the same occasion. Just so, when it is said in Ephes. i. 12, "Having believed ye were sealed," both the participle and the verb refer to the same occasion, namely, that of conversion. The Revisers, therefore, as might be expected from an accomplished body of scholars, are perfectly correct in rendering Acts xix. 2, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" literally "having believed." The action of the participle in such expressions is regarded as immediately followed by that of the verb, and so the two together belong to one occasion or transaction.

The position, therefore, of "R. C. M." holds good, namely, that the gift, or baptism, or sending of the Holy Spirit takes place at conversion. And I, for one, beg to thank "R. C. M." for his clear exposition on this subject, a right understanding of which is much needed in certain quarters. Oxoniensis.

A QUESTION AS TO CHARITY.

Dear Sir,—I am painfully impressed with the fact that many old, proved, and tried evangelistic missions, which have for years done excellent work for God in the extension of his Kingdom, are, and have been for the last few years, greatly hampered by a serious falling off in their finances.

Being a great admirer, and specially interested in these aggressive agencies, I have been looking through a number of mission reports, hoping to find some cause for this dearth of contributions, and I am struck with the fact that the same subscribers support practically the whole of the missions more or less. I have also examined reports of purely social work, that seek only the temporal welfare of the community, with no pretence to benefit the world spiritually, and I find the same names amongst the supporters of these agencies.

Consequently, when special gifts are made to one or more societies it must be to some extent at the expense of another society, which must suffer to the extent that the other has benefited. Is it not, therefore, incumbent upon all who desire to extend the Kingdom of Christ to see that their gifts do not go into channels where they will be used for purposes for which ample provision has been made by the State? Take, for instance, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The following is taken from the report, 1892, page 42:—"The income of the Society last year was £27,300, being an increase of nearly £8000 upon the income of the previous year. The committee has expended in round figures £13,000 upon investigations and prosecutions, £2000 on extending the Society, £2700 on children's shelters and placing children in institutions, £2200 in publications and statistics, and £3200 on management. . . . To have spent that sum on directly benefiting the children would at first blush have appeared an obviously more reasonable and popular course; but by that expenditure applied as a corrective of bad domestic habits ten times that amount has been spent upon the suffering children by their parents. Our object is neither to provide homes, nor food, nor clothes for destitute children, but to compel the people who make them destitute to do so. And by no other means than the penalties of the law can the most callous be compelled to do it."

Doubtless this is so, but why should the expense of putting the law in motion, and enforcing the penalties of such law, be borne by the Christian public, the majority of whom have to make great sacrifices to enable them to continue their contributions to charitable objects? Besides, since the N.S.P.C.C. have undertaken the investigation and prosecution of these offenders great difficulty is experienced in getting the police to take up cases; they simply content themselves with reporting the matter to the Society, so that the police-rate may be relieved of the expense of prosecution. The same applies to the R.S.P.C. Animals. All persons guilty of wilful neglect and cruelty should be punished, but we do not well to use our energies in securing conviction, and when the wicked father or mother has been committed to prison, feel we have done our part, and allow them to return home at the expiration of their sentences, to be revenged upon their poor unfortunate children.

We think more permanent good would be accomplished if the public insisted upon the laws relating to cruelty to children being strictly enforced by the police, and the money now spent in prosecutions used to help the children and encourage the parents to a higher and nobler life on their release from prison. If this was done we should not hear of so many excellent missions being hindered for want of funds.

A Worker.

REV. J. ROBERTSON AND HIS ORDINATION.

Sir,—Along with many others, I deeply regret that the statement regarding the Free Presbytery of Fordoun, contained in a paragraph said to be extracted from The Christian Scotsman, should have been inserted last week in The Christian. Surely a paragraph making such sweeping and actionable charges on the face of it needed confirmation.

I have little doubt but that the Presbytery will take all due and proper steps to vindicate itself.—Yours, etc., A Member of Presbytery.

"THE COMING REVOLUTION."

Dear Sir,—Mr. Henry Bazett charges me with injustice because in my article on "The Coming Revolution" I did not take into account the varieties in Socialism, and he is much pained by the omission. For the pain I have caused him, or any Christian brother, I am truly sorry. With respect, however, to the main issue, I felt, and still feel, that the picture I have presented, in the very words with which Socialism has supplied me, represents the general drift of the movement, and warranted the prophetic treatment which my article furnishes.

Mr. Bazett argues that the picture drawn, while fitting some Socialists, is not susceptible of a general application. I admit that if Socialists had been generally, or mainly, Christians, I for one would not so apply it. But in dealing with such a subject as "The Coming Revolution," we have to note the main trend of events, and the actual state of the case.

In my judgment, the Socialistic trend among the Continental nations, the United States, and our own country, bodes gravest disaster. The tide in question does not seem to me to flow Christward, nor is the millennium, projected on the lines of Socialistic endeavour, in accordance with the sure word of prophecy. How order is to be established, the reign of peace inaugurated, and man's misrule abolished, God Himself has made known, and the Christian's place is to fall into line with the revelation. The Christian hope centres in the Coming King.

No doubt there are grievous abuses which have given rise to the Socialism of which we write. But these come from an unregenerate stock that is common to the race. Hence the vanity of man's schemes of self-deliverance, the fundamental need of regeneration, and the only possibility of a new beginning under the rule of the Christ yet rejected.

James Douglas.

A QUESTION OF CONSCIENCE.

Dear Sir,—Perhaps some of your readers will help me to decide this important subject. I am a commercial traveller in the provision trade, and my business leads me to call on a few licensed grocers. As a Christian man, am I right in doing this? Light on this will be thankfully received by one who wants to live as a witness for the Saviour.—Yours faithfully,

G.

JEWISH NOTES.

INDIA AND CHINA.

Jews are met with in places where we should perhaps least expect to find them. According to latest information, there are nearly 150 Jews serving as soldiers in the Native Infantry regiments of the Bombay Army. Jews are also to be found in the heart of China, who still retain some vestiges of their ancient worship.

PALESTINE.

A correspondent in Palestine informs us that Raouf Pasha, the Governor-General of Damascus, has opened the renowned Crusading fortress of Kerak, on the mountains to the S.E. of the Dead Sea, and placed a garrison there. This will put an end to the lawless condition of the region, and will bring the Bedouin effectually under control. The last few years have seen great changes in the country east of the Jordan, and this latest measure will tend still further to pacify the district and to develop its resources.

Great changes are also rapidly taking place in Western Palestine. Ancient cities are rising from their ruins, while such towns as Haifa and Jaffa are increasing greatly both in size and population. The Jewish colonies founded by the Rothschilds are in a flourishing condition.

SOUTH AFRICA.

We learn from the January number of the South African Pioneer that Messrs. Day and Malbert have been spending some weeks at Oudtshoorn, the "little Jerusalem" of Cape Colony. Thanks to the kindness of Rev. George Murray, of the Dutch Reformed Church, they received a most encouraging welcome from Christians of all denominations in the town, and they were enabled to address large congregations on behalf of Israel, with marked attention and sympathy. Meetings held for Jews in a public hall were not a success, as the Jews were too shy to enter. The missionaries therefore finally decided to hold open-air meetings in that part of the town chiefly occupied by Jews. These were well attended, and many Jews came within earshot. The Lord was present, and gave power to his word.

A good deal of animosity was manifested by the Jewish community on the first appearance of the missionaries at Oudtshoorn, and on one occasion one of the party (a converted Jew) was in danger of being roughly handled, but managed to escape in time.

The Rabbi persistently refused the missionaries an interview, but he afterwards stated that had he known that one of them was an Englishman he would have seen him. A friendly feeling towards England exists among Jews all over the world.

NEW YORK.

Mr. Warszawiak's work in New York will in future be under the law of the United States, and bear the name of "The American Hebrew-Christian Mission," with a monthly organ entitled The American Hebrew-Christian. This paper will be edited by Mr. Warszawiak, but Miss Douglas, of 1, Rosebery Crescent, Edinburgh, will continue to issue her monthly "Mission News" for the benefit of English readers.

A. D.

MATABELELAND.

Writing from Capetown as to the outcome of the recent conflicts in the Matabele country, a correspondent says:—

A vast field now lies open for missionary enterprise, and if only the brandy can be kept out, Christ's kingdom will be largely extended. The wine and brandy farmers are already rejoicing in the hope of a fresh market. We are very thankful that our most earnest temperance worker, and lover of the natives, Mrs. Stakesby Lewis (who some years ago, when Miss H. R. Schreiner, addressed the Society for the Protection of the Aborigines in Westminster Palace Hotel), is already on her way northwards with her husband and family, and servant, all consecrated to the Lord's service.

No one is better fitted than Mrs. Stakesby Lewis to be a power amongst the remnant of the Matabele, who have been laid on her heart for years, and she will be a mighty influence towards keeping the drink out. The party, at latest reports, had got as far as Taung's Mission Station, Bechuanaland, where they say they are being wonderfully helped in the study of the native language. They hope to move northwards after April, when the rainy season will be over.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA.—Miss Rye's next party of girls for Canada will leave England in March or April, and she will be glad to hear through clergymen, district visitors, city missionaries, or any one interested in the poor, of suitable cases. They must be girls between the ages of 9 and 15, healthy, and Protestant. Applications must be made to the Home, Avenue House, High-street, Peckham, London.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

WARNING TO ADVERTISERS.—The greatest care should be taken in writing the address at the end of Advertisements. We also beg to call the special attention of Advertisers to the following Notice which appears in The Postal Guide:—"Letters addressed to initials or to fictitious names at any Post Office are not taken in, but are at once sent back to the writers."

LETTERS ADDRESSED TO THE OFFICE.—Advertisers who require their letters to be addressed to the office of this Journal will be charged an additional Sixpence for each Advertisement, and another Sixpence extra if letters are to be forwarded to their private address.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For Great Britain and Ireland .. | 6s. 7d. | per annum |
| For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. .. .. .. | 8s. 10d. | " " |
| For United States and Canada .. Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY .. .. | 2¼ dols. | " " |
| | 2½ dols. | " " |

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 4 Copies monthly .. .. .. .. .. | 2s. | per annum. |
| 8 " " .. .. .. .. | 4s. | " " |
| 12 " " .. .. .. .. | 6s. | " " |
| 24 " " .. .. .. .. | 12s. | " " |

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

WE purpose next week to give a portrait and sketch of the late BISHOP HILL, of the Niger Mission.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if those who have not yet remitted will kindly do so at once.

It will be seen from a letter on a subsequent page, by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, that he is about to pay another visit to China, and that a meeting will be held in Exeter Hall on Feb. 2, when he, Miss Guinness, and others will bid farewell for a time to friends in this country. The occasion will be one of much interest, and no doubt many friends will be present to wish the outgoing party God-speed.

A correspondent writes:—"I was at Broad Street Station at about eleven o'clock on that bitterly cold night when the thermometer was twenty degrees below freezing. A pretty little girl, with long curly hair, very scantily clad, without cloak or shawl, was eagerly trying to sell a few boxes of matches. She was pushed aside by travellers hurrying to the platform. I felt sorry for doing the same, and turned back to ask why she was out so late in the cold. 'Because I must not go home till these are sold.' I paid for her store, and away she ran. I felt ashamed that I had not taken her to the refreshment-room and given her some hot coffee and bread-and-butter. Perhaps she went supperless to bed. Perhaps she would have been beaten had she brought back a box or two unsold. If so, are not such parents criminal?"

Rev. Lindsay H. Young, of St. John's, Portsea, was announced to give an address at a united Communion Service at the Presbyterian Church, Portsmouth; but the Bishop of Winchester wrote to him forbidding it as "an infraction of Church law." Mr. Young attended the service notwithstanding, but replied to the Bishop, saying that it was sad he should so promptly interfere with his Christian liberty, though he had not merely "allowed the mass for the dead in Portsmouth," but had also "publicly patronised the promoters of this deadly delusion, which, in common with myself, you have sworn 'to be a blasphemous fable and dangerous deceit.'" Should not all faithful members of the true Church of England condemn such exclusiveness and such sanction of Romish error as a disgrace and a peril? Should not legal opinion be clearly established as to whether such an act as that intended is really an infraction of Church law, and whether the "mass" is really in accordance with it? The law should either be enforced on both sides or repealed.

The London and Provincial Domestic Servants' Union (Male and Female), which will soon come to be known as the Servants' Union, has plenty of work to do in creating a sound opinion with regard to the work and place of servants, "thousands of whom are badly fed, badly housed, badly paid, and subjected to extraordinary exactions of toil and service." It is unreasonable and wicked to work them long hours every day and seven days a week. Archdeacon Farrar denounced at the late meeting of the Union "the practice growing in London of holding balls and parties on Sunday nights"; while the secretary of the Union gave an example of this practice in the case of a Dean, who came to London with his two daughters to spend last season. On Sunday they attended church twice, and at ten o'clock at night had their carriage out to attend a reception. Surely this was neither a work of necessity nor mercy! Christians of every station are bound to see to it that those in their employ are treated as they themselves would like to be treated.

The servants' question is undoubtedly one with two sides to it, and the Servants' Union will do a great service if it can raise the standard of efficiency and the standard of morality among both male and female servants. Let it pour the light of publicity upon certain harmful practices. Let it insist upon fair dealing towards masters and mistresses. Let it set its face against servants taking bribes and gifts from tradesmen, for this will purify trade as well as keep servants faithful to their masters, whom they profess to serve. Let it contend against the shameful waste, which is a sin against God's goodness and a demoralisation of all who are guilty of it. To safeguard the interests of this numerous and important class of persons it is necessary to insist on duty being done as well as on rights being claimed.

At the Miners' Conference the delegates expressed a wish for more inspectors of mines to be appointed, for them to be practical men who will go into every nook and corner, and for their visits of inspection to be more frequent, and unannounced beforehand. It was stated that there are scores of collieries which are never seen by any inspector; hence there is no one to see that the law is carried out. Yet it was certain that "the visits of inspectors had some effect upon colliery managers, because they knew that if they were drawn before courts of justice they were running the risk of losing their certificates." That the wish should have been expressed for the mines to be frequently and unexpectedly visited shows that the Conference was alive to the dangers caused by the carelessness of the men, as well as by the neglect of the masters. A demand so reasonable as that which was made ought to be complied with as quickly as possible for the protection of life and property.

Miss Bulley, writing in The Fortnightly Review, expresses the opinion that if the wives and daughters of manufacturers were as familiar with factories and workers as their husbands and fathers are, a great improvement would result. There is, no doubt, something to be said for this view. The mill-owner's wife or daughter might be expected to see through designing foremen and overlookers who compass the ruin of so many girls. A woman ought to be a shield for another woman. If "Lancashire and Cheshire factories are sanitarily so defective as to foster immorality," we cannot believe that the owners' wives and daughters know how things are. But have the women inspectors not got that far yet? Per contra as to woman's influence, it is not to be forgotten that women, like men, fail to be duly impressed with wrong conditions which they see every day, and also that they do not always reform what they see and know to be wrong.

Our large towns, with their free libraries, are beginning themselves the work of purging the newspapers of betting and gambling news. The congregating together of loafers and gamblers in the libraries has been brought to an end at Leicester, Aston, Wolverhampton, and Sheffield by blotting such news out, just as the Russian censor blots out objectionable political news in foreign newspapers. It is something to get such a practical protest, and some day we may get editors and proprietors who will not think that they have a right to demoralise a public which they professedly seek to raise and purify.

The head-master of Haileybury College always says something on the teaching and training of children worth hearing and pondering. This time he has been telling the good people of Leeds that the father's share in the home education is at least as important as the mother's, although the modern conditions of life are against the father's giving proper attention to his children. This raises the question whether these destructive conditions shall be allowed to remain unquestioned and unresisted. For example, how is a Christian father who goes to business early in the morning, and comes home tired late at night, to keep the wise injunction given to Hebrew fathers, to teach the law diligently to his children, to speak of it by the way, when he goes out and when he comes in? This loss of paternal influence from the home is doing untold harm to the boys, and may be fairly regarded as one cause at least of that disobedience which is often said to be characteristic of the age.

Mr. Lyttelton said also that children were not sufficiently encouraged at home to develop their ideas. Quite so; they are "sat upon" or ridiculed until they lose all modest self-confidence, and are made self-conscious, shy, and useless. The Hebrew plan made boys modest yet manly and self-reliant by putting them with men as well as with boys. Mr. Lyttelton also referred to the deadly effect upon children of parents habitually violating religion in their daily habits. As to the effect of competition, he said that it was to make boys think that solid and unrewarded effort was of no value whatever. Here, again, we require the aid of the Word of God, which plants love as the root of all right-doing. One wonders what would be the intellectual effect upon a generation of boys and girls all of whom acted from love to God alone.

---

It seems that the Bishop of Chester's scheme for a public-house is in practical operation at Hoarcroft, Staffordshire, of which parish Canon Knox-Little is the vicar. The Hon. F. L. Wood holds the licence, and all intoxicating drinks sold at the bar are for his profit. The manager, a different man, deals on his own account in non-intoxicating drinks and food, supplied at another part of the inn. There are good reading and club rooms, good stabling and outhouses, a lawn garden, and a bowling-green. Drunkenness or rowdyism is not allowed. A fancy public-house! But when will England ever be filled with such? A shorter and safer method than that must be adopted if we are to cleanse such places as Wapping, where, in a street of 214 houses, as many as thirty-six are public-houses. The people ought at once to have the power to shut them all up.

---

A politician generally credited with large information and accurate judgment in foreign affairs is reported to have said to an interviewer representing The Sun:—

In my opinion, Germany and Austria-Hungary, on the one hand, and France and Russia on the other, are at the present moment pretty evenly balanced. There is nothing much to choose between them. But an element you have to consider is the possibility of the rise of a military genius. The possession of a great strategist or army captain by any one of the four Powers would be the determining factor. In a moment it would destroy this nicety of balance: it would represent the difference between equality and supremacy.

This "great strategist or army captain," whose rise would destroy the balance of power, can scarcely fail to remind us of the king who shall come, "the beast" to whom the ten kings of Christendom will give their power and strength that the words of God may be fulfilled.

---

The mission of Sir Mortimer Durand to the Ameer of Afghanistan has been carried out in such a wisely pacific manner and with such happy results as cannot but afford true pleasure to all who believe in reason and righteousness rather than in menace and force. Mr. Pyne, an Englishman who has been in the Ameer's employment for eight years, says:—

The wisdom and far-sightedness of the Government of India in sending to the Ameer's capital Sir Mortimer Durand, whose one anxiety was to be absolutely above-board in everything, cannot be too highly commended. The Ameer has been much struck with the clear manner in which all the negotiations have been conducted, and great credit is due to the mission as a body for trusting themselves into the hands of the Afghans absolutely and completely without military escort. This undoubtedly had for its primary foundation absolute confidence in the Ameer's power to control the masses of his fanatical and unscrupulous people. As one of the Ameer's officials, I felt personally pleased that the Government of India had sufficient confidence in Abdul Rahman to allow political officers to embark on a mission which might, when we consider the catastrophes which have taken place in Afghanistan in connection with Government officers and missions, have resulted very differently to that so brilliantly conducted by Sir Mortimer Durand.

---

The full force of these words is only felt when we compare them with a reference to the failure of Lord Roberts to obtain an audience of the Ameer. We are told that

The primary reason that Lord Roberts' mission was abandoned is to be found in the fact that his lordship, as Commander-in-Chief in India, could not have travelled without a large military escort, and as this was rumoured to be larger than the Ameer thought prudent, he, in a perfectly courteous manner, declined to receive it. Naturally, the entry of a large British force into Afghanistan would have lowered his prestige, and would have looked more like a mission of dictation than one of peace. "That this was the Ameer's sole reason," said Mr. Pyne, "has been amply demonstrated by the great success of Sir Mortimer Durand's mission."

Let us hope that so auspicious a commencement of intercourse between the two countries may lead to the best of issues in the evangelisation of the warlike Afghans, who have hitherto withstood our arms.

---

Massachusetts has a Moral Education Association, the programme of which might give a suggestion to workers in some spheres of labour. The Association has a committee on literature and amusements, especially morals; newspapers and the drama, as moral or immoral influences; a committee on oral instruction regarding morals, to old and young, in the home, the school, from the pulpit and the platform; a committee on social purity, how to preserve pure and honourable relations between men and women; and yet another committee on material surroundings as aids to virtue. These committees appear to be the Association taking that form on the several questions named. Whether, and how far, an evangelical element enters into the work we cannot tell, but there is room enough everywhere for evangelical action along the lines indicated. We have to do ours piecemeal and give our teaching in detail.

---

Mr. W. H. Holmes, of the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, is of opinion that "the whole discussion of early man has been so surcharged with misconceptions of fact and errors of interpretation, that all is vitiated as a stream with impurities about its source. Until an exhaustive scientific study of the origin, form, genesis, and meaning of all the handiwork of man made use of in the discussion is completed, the discussion of man and culture is worse than useless, and speculation can but lead to embarrassment and disaster." This is sober, scientific language, for which, unfortunately, there is too much need. Take, for example, a problem now before the eyes of observers, viz., the rate at which the Niagara Falls are cutting the gorge down which they rush. One would suppose if anything could be positively settled, this could; but Desor gives the recession at one foot in a century; Sir Charles Lyell at one foot in a year; Bakewell at two or three feet in a year; and Gilbert and Woodward at five feet in a year. As these guesses have to do with determining the age of the globe—man's home—they have to do with settling the age of man. Light, more light, is what we want.

---

Dr. Bavinck, of the Reformed Church of the Netherlands, has spoken in the columns of The Presbyterian and Reformed Review, a brave true word in defence of Calvinism; well he might, when it is remembered that the religious life of the Netherlands was drawn from the French Huguenots, who were all Calvinists. Dr. Bavinck finds the root principle of Calvinism in the sovereignty of God, "not one special attribute of God—for instance, his love of justice, his holiness or equity—but God Himself, as such in the unity of all his attributes, and the perfection of his entire being." With this faith in them, which is the faith of all who believe in God, whether they are formally known as Calvinists or not, they were too strong for the Spanish Inquisition as directed by Philip, and carried out by the relentless Alva. Nothing but a strong hold of God as King of kings could have enabled the much-tried Dutch people to endure persecution unto death, and nothing but the same hold can support Christians still. We are glad to hear a man say, amid the decrying of a faith which is not understood, that "the Dutch will either be Calvinistic or will cease to be a Christian nation."

---

The Catholic Times contains an account of a three months' missionary tour amongst non-Catholics in the diocese of Detroit by Rev. Walter Elliott, "the Paulist Father, of New York." He is of opinion that the United States can be converted, but only on the condition that "temperance goes hand in hand with promotion of Catholic truth." The Catholic Times thinks that the statement holds good for these islands also, "because the men and women who are likely to become converts to Catholicism are zealous for the advancement of the people." Not, therefore, for the world that lieth in wickedness is all this effort to be put forth, but for those who are under the influence of the Gospel.

---

From The Catholic Times, which is beginning a series of articles "on the progress, the present position, and the immediate outlook of the Catholic body in London," we learn that the Romanist churches in London open to the public are 108, an increase of four in the year. The priests have increased from 377 in 1893 to 390 in 1894. The staff attached to each mission has been increased. Including the borderland of greater London, there are ninety-three converts within the Metropolitan district. Only a few of these belong to the contemplative orders. "Almost all are engaged in active charitable or educational work. It is difficult even for a Catholic to realise the enormous extent of the field covered by these operations." Protestants, therefore, cannot afford to sleep.

---

The Bishop of Oxford says in a preface to a "Handbook to the Psalms," just published:—

We do not shut our eyes to the importance of the critical questions that are raised from day to day about the Psalms, with more or less consideration of the feelings and interests of those who love them. I have no wish to see hurried or transitory theories about them embodied in books intended for practical religious use, and I have no wish to see even such ideas defiantly ignored. But I will just add that I do not believe that any critical or historical analysis, or discussion of this invaluable treasury of spiritual thought (the Psalms) can ever displace it from the position which it holds in the minds and hearts of those who have learned to find, in the truth of experience, the fulfilment of what is written in it, as in the Law of Moses and in the Prophets, concerning Him who has taught us to look in it for such evidences of Himself.

These are wise words, which, we fancy, express the way in which the great bulk of Christian men regard not only the Psalms, but the whole Bible. We heard recently of a minister who was so affected by the assertions made against the Johannine authorship of the fourth Gospel, that he could not announce a chapter in the Gospel according to John, as being by John; yet the genuineness of that book stands abundantly vindicated. We need not ignore anything that can be said on these questions, but neither need we accept a thing simply because it is new.

---

THE MOTHERS OF PERÆA set an example to the mothers of all future ages. They elbowed their way through the group, they suffered patiently opposition from those who might have known better, to lay their babes at Jesus' feet.

The Three Jewish Festivals

CONSIDERED IN CONNECTION WITH THE GREAT EVANGELICAL FACTS CORRESPONDING THERETO.

By REV. G. LIVINGSTONE FENTON.

III.—The Feast of Tabernacles.

And now I have reached the third great Jewish festival—the Feast of Tabernacles. Chronologically, this came second—Succoth before Sinai. But the consideration of it fitly comes last, as its complete fulfilment is still future. This festival was the most joyous of all. It took place in autumn—at the end of the vintage—in all eastern and southern climes the season of rejoicing and merriment. But, unlike the frantic riots of satyrs and bacchanals which accompanied the gathering-in of grapes on the banks of Cephisus, with which Plutarch in his Symposia compares them—the rejoicings among the vineyards of Heshbon and Elcaleh were chastened by solemn religious associations.

Branches of trees were woven together in rude imitation of the Succoth—booths or huts in which the Israelites dwelt in the wilderness—and within these green bowers the whole nation passed the week in festivity.

And now, on tracing the symbolical meaning of this institution, we observe first that the very word "Tabernacle" cannot fail to remind us of HIM who, as St. John saith, "became flesh and tabernacled among us (and we beheld his glory—glory as of the only-begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth."

During the continuance of this feast the people were wont to carry in their hands branches of palms and other trees tied with gold and silver strings, singing by the wayside and in the synagogues—"HOSANNA!" (Save now, or Save, we beseech Thee!")*; and sometimes, while the priests chanted the Great Hallel (Psls. cxiii.—cxviii), the multitude waved their palms, and shouted as they waved them, "Hallelujah, Hosanna!"

Now, in these words, they were understood to pray for the coming of the Messiah. And this is abundantly confirmed in the Gospels. When the believing Jews "cut down branches from the trees and strawed them in the way," as they conducted Jesus Christ into Jerusalem, and when the multitude cried out, "Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the highest!" it is clear that, recognising Jesus as the promised Messiah, they thus expressed their boundless joy at finding in Him the accomplishment of those petitions which they had so often offered to God at the Feast of Tabernacles.

These reasons sufficed to satisfy the learned Lightfoot and Joseph Mede that the great evangelical fact, corresponding with the third great Jewish Festival, is the Incarnation or First Advent of Christ.

I venture to adduce another, which appears to me of considerable force, drawn from the season of our Lord's birth. I refer to Luke i. We know that the four-and-twenty lots or courses of the priests were duly fixed for a fortnight's service each. The eighth fortnight, reckoning from the beginning of Abib, fell to Abia, of which Zacharias was, corresponding with our June. In June, therefore, was the Baptist conceived. It follows that the conception of Christ was in December, and his birth in September following, i.e., in the Feast of Tabernacles. *

"In this feast-time of eight days," says an old writer from whom I take the argument, "Christ pitched the tabernacle of his flesh among us"; and he would have us mark "the sweet harmony between the type and the thing typified, for Christ came not to break the law, but to fulfil it."*

At the Feast of Tabernacles, Moses in his dying words had made provision for the septennial reading of the Law, or the Deuteronomy at least, "before all Israel in their hearing." (a) Irregularly (b) as this injunction was observed, it must have tended to the preservation and incorruptness of that Book which was to be the Saviour's "Manual of Devotion" (c), in which is contained the clearest promise of "that Prophet which should come into the world" (d), and against which, perhaps for this very cause, the assaults of infidelity are specially directed (e). A clear correspondency is thus established between the ancient Feast of Tabernacles and our Lord's First Coming in the flesh.

I proceed, however, in conclusion, to give my reasons for believing that this was only a partial and inchoate fulfilment of the type. These are five in number.

1. That the adumbration was incomplete, we gather from the Lord's own words; for it was subsequently to the triumphant entry into Jerusalem that He declared, "I say unto you, ye shall not see Me henceforth till ye shall say, 'Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!'" That Hosanna is yet to come.

[May I ask here, Are we prepared to sing it? Does the cry go up from our hearts, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"? Are we watching the "signs of the times" which herald his near approach? Does the coming of the Lord occupy that place in our preaching which its importance and "the proportion of the faith" require? How prominent a position this "blessed hope" held in the teaching of the Lord Himself and of the Apostle Paul, my readers have not to learn.]

2. Again: What but this drew from the lips of Peter, on the holy mount, those strange words, when, half bewildered by the majesty of the transfigured Lord, he exclaimed, "Let us build here three tabernacles"—tabernacles which he had always been taught to associate with the "coming in power" of the Messiah?

3. Again: we are familiar with the proverb, "He who has never seen the rejoicing at the pouring out of the water of Siloam knows not what rejoicing is." This solemn libation of water from the stream which flowed under the temple-mountain was no part of the original ordinance, but the words which they sang from Isaiah xii. 3, "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation," suggest a symbolic reference, to which Jesus Himself gave emphatic utterance when "on the last, that great day of the feast, He stood and cried, saying, 'If any man thirst let him come unto Me and drink!' This spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

Now, at first sight, this may seem to belong rather to the Pentecostal feast. How is the image connected with that of tabernacles? Bishop Westcott explains the pouring out of the water as "a commemoration of one conspicuous detail of the life in the wilderness typified by this festival. The water fetched from the rock at Meribah (Num. xx.) supplied an image of future blessings to Ezekiel (xlvii. 1-12), as well as to St. Paul (1 Cor. x. 4). "They drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them, and that Rock was CHRIST."*

But here also the fulness of the blessing as regards God's ancient people is still future. It is reserved for the day when "God shall pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and of supplications, and they shall look upon HIM whom they have pierced. . . In that day there shall be a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness†—for judicial guilt, and for moral corruption—"the water and the blood," alike flowing from the pierced side of Emmanuel.

4. Again: The Feast of Tabernacles synchronizes with the VINTAGE. Now, the vintage is employed, both in the Old Testament and the New, to symbolize the coming of HIM, who shall appear for the deliverance of his people, but to "destroy his enemies by the epiphany of his presence." Thus Isaiah describes Him as "red in his apparel, and his garments like one that treadeth in the wine-vat." And St. John in the Apocalypse "beheld One like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle; and He thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God."

5. Once more: Isaiah (iv. 6), speaking apparently of the conversion and restoration of God's ancient people, says: "The Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud of smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night, for over all the glory shall be spread a canopy. And there thall be a Tabernacle‡ for a shadow, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert." Surely this is the "MAN," who (according to xxxii. 2) "shall be a hiding-place, a covert, and a shadow."§

We need no further testimony to assure us that the Feast of Tabernacles is to find its perfect antitype in the Messiah and his Revelation to the Jews. Then will they realise their three great Festivals completed:—

Christ their Passover sacrificed for them. The Lord of Holiness in their hearts. The Son of David their Prince.§

And now, with a word of application to ourselves, my task is ended. Read by the light of the New Testament, the three great Jewish Festivals are seen to constitute one grand prophetic symbol of the Messiah's work. CHRIST IS ALL AND IN ALL.

Christ in the Passover, redeeming by his Blood; Christ in Pentecost, sanctifying by his Spirit; Christ in Tabernacles, appearing for us, 1st, "To put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself"; 2ndly, "Without sin unto salvation."

It is the special privilege of the members of the Church of England to be reminded of these three great scriptural facts; it is the special duty of us, the ministers of that Church, to remind our people of the same at the three great Christian festivals of Easter, Whitsuntide, and Advent:—

I. "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us."—1 Cor. v. 7.

II. "The Day of Pentecost is fully come."—Acts ii. 1.

---

* Na, "a particle of exciting: as Eng. Up!" (See. Heb. Lexicon). Σωσον δή! (Sept.).

* See Christ's Birth Mis-timed, etc., by R. S., in "The Phœnix," vol. i., A.D. 1707. On Tisri i. (September), A.M. 1657, according to Lightfoot the world's New Year began.

(a) Deut. xxxi. 11. (b) Only, it would appear, by Joshua at the first (viii. 34); when the autograph of Moses was discovered in the days of Josiah (2 Kings xxiii. 1-3); and on the return of the Jews from captivity (Neh. viii. 1-7). (c) Matt. iv. 4-10. (d) Deut. xviii. 15-19; John vi. 14. (e) Colenso, "On the Pentateuch," part 3.

* Alford sees a reference, in v. 16 of this chapter, to the reading of the Law at this festival, to which I have already referred.

† Zech. xii. xiii.

‡ The word is succah, not mishcan or ohel, the Tabernacle of Worship.

§ Since writing this paper, I have met with a monograph on the Feast of Tabernacles, by H. S. Hancock (Nisbet, 1838), in which the antitype is said to be "the millennial restitution of all things to the paradisaical state in Immanuel's land." I only differ from this writer in so far as I believe with Lightfoot that the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ was a prior though imperfect fulfilment of the type.

III. "The Jews' Feast of Tabernacles is at hand."—John vii. 2.

At the same time we insist upon a corresponding trio of Christian obligations:—

I. "Rejoice in Christ Jesus!"—Phil. iii.

II. "Walk in the Spirit."—Rom. viii. 1; Gal. v. 16.

III. "Occupy till I come!"—Luke xix. 13.

A CONFERENCE IN CHINA.

Dear Sir,—The ancient city of Tsing-cheo-fu, which is said to date back earlier than the time of Abraham, and is situated about 240 English miles from Chefoo, in the Province of Shantong, about eight days' journey by mules into the interior, was lately the scene of a most interesting Conference of missionaries of various denominations and nationalities, about forty or more being present, including some wives and single ladies.

Inside its ancient walls has recently been built up a novel building, in Chinese style of architecture externally, beautifully arranged without and within. It is the handsome gift of a Christian gentleman to the English Baptist Mission of that city. It contains a good chapel, rooms for classes, theological and scientific, pretty little dormitories for about sixty students, a missionary house, and, the most novel of all for an inland city, a beautiful museum of stuffed birds, beasts, and fishes, chiefly native; a collection of fossils, shells, and various things of interest and for general instruction in the works of God and in Western science. This, being open to the public free of charge, is greatly appreciated by the more intelligent part of the populace, and is not without its value in helping forward mission work in some lines.

In one of the large rooms used for classes, the Conference met daily on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, November 13 to 15. On the previous Lord's Day the place was opened by a Christian service, conducted in Chinese, by Rev. C. Mateer (American Presbyterian Mission), preaching from the words "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." A good number of native students and others were present, but the greatest work of the Baptist Mission here lies scattered through numerous villages in the surrounding country, where are scattered between two and three thousand Chinese Christians, and where less than twenty years ago, with the exception of a very few odd ones, probably not ten, the whole of this number were in dark idolatry, but now loving and praising the Lord God and our Saviour. God has indeed been working wonders.

In addition to these are nearly four thousand native Christians connected with various branches of the American Presbyterian Mission, having the cities of We-hsien, Teng-cheo-fu, and Chefoo as their headquarters. Very different lines of work were represented by the forty-one missionaries present at the Conference—some occupied in training the young in schools and native Christian colleges; some in medical work, others in evangelistic work, but all able to show that God is willing to use almost any line or plan of work, provided his gracious Gospel be taught in faith and love, whether by schools, evangelists, or medical missionaries.

Papers were read and addresses given, with ample time for discussion, on the following subjects: "The Poverty of Shantong, its Cause and Remedy"; a very clear and important paper by Rev. A. G. Jones, Baptist Mission. He showed beyond doubt that the produce of Shantong is little more than half enough to support its people, and the exports are too insignificant to enable them to import much food. The opening of mines, which would enrich the country, is hindered by official avarice, and dishonesty of the workers taking away all the proceeds.

"The Training of Theological Students" was the topic of a valuable paper by Rev. J. S. Whiteright. "Self Support (of pastors, etc.) by the Native Churches," by Rev. A. Bruce, showed what has already been done and may be done in that line—a large number of the native pastors in the Baptist Mission being partly supported by the converts and partly by their own labours as farmers, etc., after the example of the Apostle Paul, who at times laboured with his own hands for his own support.

The late Dr. Nevius, American Presbyterian Mission, having been suddenly taken in to see the King in glory, only a few days before the Conference, his paper on "The Relation of the Native Christians towards the Government" was read by Rev. Mr. Cornwell, of the same mission. In this he showed the deep importance of great caution before appealing to civil authorities in cases of supposed persecution, there being great danger of the converts leaning too much on the foreign political Powers. In the discussion which followed, there was diversity of opinion as to how far the native Christians should yield to demands for illegal taxes, or money for public idolatry, paying them under protest, or whether they should resist the payment, even though it involved expensive lawsuits and riots, and sometimes death.

Mrs. Calvin Mateer read a paper on "Woman's Work," written by Rev. R. Mateer, and followed it by very practical and wise remarks of her own.

A paper was read by Dr. Watson, of the English Baptist Mission, on "Medical Missions." The only fault with this paper seemed to be that it was too short. It was exceedingly nice in matter and spirit. Dr. Porter, of the A.B.C.F. Missions, gave a very full paper on "Medical Missions as a Means of Grace," with some valuable instances of souls led to Christ in his work. The subject of charge for medicines in medical work was advocated by Dr. H. Randle, of the C.I.M., on the supposed ground that the Chinese would value better what they pay for. But this was strongly opposed by Dr. C. Mateer and several others, on the ground that medical missions are benevolent institutions and not a money-making business. The example of the Lord Jesus as the healer and destroyer of the works of the devil was always without charge. Dr. Watson had beautifully shown that in healing the sick the works of Satan are (in that line) being destroyed.

"Evangelisation" was the subject of a clear and thoughtful paper by Rev. H. Murray, of the A.P. Mission, who showed on what lines the preaching of the Gospel might be done, by the roadside or in street-chapel. An address was given on the same subject by C. H. Judd, with special reference to the power of the Gospel, the training in God's school of his chosen workers, the need of faith, love, and patience, especially love in the heart of the preacher, and the reward at last of those who turn many to righteousness, shining as the stars for ever.

A short time was given as a memorial service, to speak of the late Rev. I. L. Nevius, D.D. His fellow-missionary, Dr. C. Mateer, could not withhold the tears as he spoke of the loss we have sustained; and, with deep feelings of love and sorrow, members of various denominations testified to the love, diligence, and patience of our recently departed brother, during his long service of about forty years in China. God be praised for such men.

Two evening meetings were given to spiritual worship. The first one was addressed by Rev. J. Bostick, on "The Indwelling of Christ," both for our life and power of service. The other evening was taken by C. H. Judd, on "The Blood of Jesus the Means of our Sanctification" (1 John i. 7, and Rev. xvii. 14).

The Conference closed by a social meeting, in which all had good opportunity for getting more closely acquainted with each other, and talking together of the things of the Kingdom. One great fact was evident, that in the face of much difference of religious training and variety of opinion on smaller matters, the one great object was the salvation of souls, and the raising of the Chinese people to a better state, both temporarily and spiritually; and in the greater and weightier matters of life and work there was wonderful unity of heart and soul, and very manifestly did this first Shantong Conference show that these Christians love one another in very deed.

Yours in the Lord's service,

Chas. H. Judd.

Chefoo, China, November 27.

BIBLE STAND, CRYSTAL PALACE.—A letter, just issued by Mr. Hawke and his co-workers, states that: "The work of sowing the good seed, the pure Word of God, without human comment, goes on steadily and increasingly. The importance of this work, in a day when Satan is using his emissaries in attempts to undermine that Word, cannot be overestimated. The funds at our disposal during the last two years have again been substantially augmented through the contributions of one of our number, with his sister; and as the fixed charges show no increase, the circulation of the Scriptures of Truth has hereby been more than proportionally extended."

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.—III.

THE TWELVE DISCIPLES AT EPHESUS.

3. "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear."

"Men and brethren, what shall we do?" "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, into the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

Still another question remained to be solved, not second in importance to either of the former, and the significance of which has always been but imperfectly appreciated, judging by the literature, the hymnology, the praying, and the preaching, on the subject.

The question is, Can the Holy Spirit be received apart from faith in the glorified Christ? and will He ever be withheld from those who believe and obey the Gospel, which, in its briefest form, is "Jesus and the Resurrection"?

A typical and representative case (as were those of the Samaritans and the Gentiles) afforded the Apostle Paul, in the providence of God, the opportunity for the solution of this double question. More than twenty years after Pentecost, Apollos, an Alexandrian Jew, well instructed in the Old Testament Scriptures, and eloquent in the expression of his views, which embraced a knowledge and acceptance of John the Baptist's teachings, came to Ephesus. There he taught and exhorted to confession of sin, repentance toward God, and trust in a Greater than John, One who should baptize in the Holy Ghost as John baptized in water. Apollos presumably baptized as disciples those who accepted his testimony. Aquila and Priscilla took him and expounded to him the way of God more perfectly. Then he left for Achaia.

Meanwhile Paul came to Ephesus while Apollos was at Corinth, and found twelve disciples. The mention of the fact that it was while Apollos was at Corinth that Paul came to Ephesus, seems intended to connect Apollos with the twelve disciples whom Paul found there. Nothing was more natural than that Paul, having learned from his friends Aquila and Priscilla the character of Apollos's teaching and its results, should seek out those disciples who had received his teaching, and discover for himself and make evident to them, by one test question, whether they had received the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

"Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?"* or, "Having believed, did ye receive the Holy Ghost?"

They replied, "We did not so much as hear whether the Holy Ghost was [given],† or, be yet given."‡ (I venture to suggest that the word supplied should be not "given," but "outpoured," as the reference evidently is to the promise in Joel and Isaiah.) "Into what, then, were ye baptized?"

"Into John's baptism." That is to say, they had confessed and repented of their sins, and had believed John's testimony to One greater than himself, who should baptize in the Holy Ghost. Moreover, their answer in the words of John vii. 39 would seem to imply that they were aware that the outpouring of the Holy Ghost depended on Jesus being glorified. But they had not heard that this had taken place.

The Apostle then, we may be assured, preached unto them "Jesus and the Resurrection," and they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus. And Paul having laid his hands upon them, they spake with tongues and prophesied.

From this narrative in connection with other Scriptures I am led to the following conclusions:—

That we must interpret our experience by the Scripture; not the Scripture by our experience.

That "disciple" does not exclusively mean a follower of Jesus, for we read of "John's disciples"; nor does it necessarily mean that all Jesus' disciples were true believers, for "many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with Him."

* R.V.; Speaker's Comm. † R.V.

‡ Speaker's Comm.—"The words are precisely the same as in John vii. 39."

That as the Holy Spirit was not and could not be poured out until Jesus had been glorified, so neither can He now be received in the fulness proper to this dispensation, apart from a belief in Him as crucified and glorified. Nor can the gift of the Spirit be withheld from them who so believe.

That as it was because Jesus was glorified that the Holy Spirit was outpoured, so it is not "by our own power or holiness" that mighty works are done, but by the Name, and through faith in the Name, of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, crucified and glorified.

That the Apostle regarded the Spirit baptism wherewith the risen Christ baptizes those who believe in Him, as including power for service as well as his indwelling presence, in accordance with the Lord's pre-Pentecostal promise, "Ye shall receive power, the Holy Ghost having come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me."

That the Spirit is given expressly to qualify believers to be Christ's witnesses.

That the gifts are included in the gift of the Spirit, and imparted to each member of the body according to the function which each is appointed to fulfil.

That in apostolic days the manifestation of the Spirit to profit withal was much more evident than in these days.

That the present need of Christian believers is not to receive the Holy Ghost, but to drink into that one Spirit in whom we have been baptized into the one body of which Christ is the Head; to seek wherein we individually and unitedly disobey and grieve Him; to humble ourselves; and to seek forgiveness and restoration of the power consequently withheld. R. C. M.

[Another view of the above incident is given in letters by Revs. Hubert Brooke and James Gall (p. 24). Our readers must judge.—ED.]

ISLINGTON CLERICAL MEETING.

THE Islington Clerical Meeting, held a few days ago, was very largely attended. Rev. W. H. BARLOW presided, and the papers read and addresses delivered were soundly Protestant and Evangelical in tone and substance. The subject was, "The Administration of the Word and the Sacraments." In the course of his opening remarks Mr. Barlow asked, How shall we play our part like men in the great conflict between good and evil? How shall we best maintain and distribute the wholesome truths of the Gospel, which have been the stay and joy of our souls? He replied: I can conceive no truer method than that which has prevailed in the best ages of the Church, viz., that all the true servants of our common Lord should aim at and cultivate the highest possible standard of personal holiness; that they should take their stand upon the Scriptures of truth, determined by God's grace that nothing shall remove them from their steadfastness and perseverance in this belief; that they should lay themselves out with far more prayerfulness and zeal and self-denial and perseverance than they have manifested before to win others to Christ.

Rev. TALBOT GREAVES introduced the first branch of the subject. His portrait of

THE MINISTER OF THE WORD

was very clearly defined. Not a sacrificing priest as in the Roman community, nor an apostle of doubt, as a proud intellectualism affects—the minister of the Word is God's creation and God's gift. Paul insists on this, speaking ever of God as "making him a minister," and putting him "into the ministry." Unless his own ears have been opened to hear the Spirit's call, no training, no learning, no ordination, can make him an able minister of the New Testament.

The second paper on this subject was read by Rev. T. GRAHAM, of Liverpool, who advanced timely thoughts regarding the minister and his duty. By yielding to modern tendency, and keeping back positive doctrine, God's own prescription for happiness and holiness of heart within and of life without, will be withheld. Preach we morality, preach social duties with utmost earnestness, but leave out or minimise the doctrines of the Gospel, and the ministry must utterly fail to reach the heart and reform the lives of men.

"The Word ministered" was dealt with by Rev. Dr. WACE. After referring to present-day treatment of Holy Scripture, he said: No criticism has yet overthrown the statement that God at many times and in many manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the Prophets. Nothing has been established to invalidate the reality and the truth of the promises that God made unto Abraham, and the oath which he sware unto Isaac, that He appointed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting testimony, that He spake by the mouth of his holy prophets which have been since the world began, that He would raise up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David.

The temptation is great to the ministers of the Word in these days, as well as to others—to forget, if not to disbelieve, that we are in possession of words of God which endure for ever, and which throw the light of his eternal truth and will upon the daily problems which perplex us. It is a too just observation which has been often made, that there is abundant but that it is doubtful—I do not know that it is doubtful—whether the minds and hearts of men are as familiar with it, and as much imbued with its thoughts, as in previous generations; and there is good reason for thinking that to a lack of this familiar acquaintance with it, and with its deep spiritual truths, to a loss of a habit of incessant perusal of it, is due much of the scepticism now developed. The Scriptures are their own best witness; and if a man can but be induced to read them diligently, even if it be simply in the English version—if he will but submit his mind and heart candidly to their influence—their permanent and penetrating truth will rarely fail to impress him with a conviction of their authority, a conviction too deep to be shaken by any mere probable speculations of criticism.

SPECULATION ABOUT THE BIBLE;

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE followed with a stirring address. Maintaining that the glory of the minister should be to preach the pure Word of God, he asked what danger there is in our day for any man to minister otherwise. Alas! he said, for the answer that has to be given from too many notice-boards, church doors, and publications. When we take note of the sermons about to be preached, what read we? That the latest poem of Tennyson shall be the subject of the next day's address, or the latest discovery in the scientific field, or the most recent geographical question concerning Central Africa: until at last we are compelled to wonder what men think people come to church for, with aching hearts and heavy woes, longing for comfort, and for peace, and for life, and to be brought into relation with Him who alone can bless them. It is a marvel in the present day that even Evangelical clergymen should have thought how, by displaying before the people they can best win the attention of the unconverted and the godless, and that there is no power in the old Gospel. In my humble judgment, these things ought not so to be, and I verily believe that it is our highest honour and privilege still to keep to the pure Word of God, and to the announcement that we preach God's Word in the belief that it is still a power, and will prevail with the sons of men.

SOMETHING TRICKY, SOMETHING THEATRICAL,

Speaking particularly to his younger brethren, Mr. Webb-Peploe said: You may be very certain of this, that the man who preaches the Word of God biblically, expositorily, and even dogmatically when dealing with a truth, and brings the Word of God to prove himself point by point, will be the man who will carry weight in the present day, and the man whose ministry shall be so blessed that at the end he shall have multitudes to welcome him into the courts of glory above. We may boldly affirm that there is no man who really wins souls to God whose preaching is not constantly the exhibition of the very Word of God. This being so, we ask not only whether we should be quoters of Scripture, but whether in our public ministry we are not to take heed "to deliver to men the whole counsel of God." In conclusion, he urged faithfulness in regard to the entire body of truth, not preaching justification alone, but sanctification also, and showing forth the office of the Holy Ghost, who transforms the believer into likeness with the Lord.

Revs. E. H. KNOX and A. E. BARNES-LAWRENCE followed on "The Sacrament of Baptism"; and Rev. N. DIMOCK dealt with the Lord's Supper. Ecclesiastical distinctions were discussed historically and doctrinally, and the Protestant position defended against Romish error and superstition.

The last paper was by Rev. H. E. FOX, who, after examining the use of the expressions "sacrifice" and "extension of the incarnation" in High Church literature, and deploring the significance of their prevalence, said: The more we can build up our flocks on their most holy faith, giving chapter and verse for every truth taught, the less likelihood will there be of error infecting their minds. The scientist protects his solutions with antiseptic media; so the wise pastor will show his people how the Word of God sterilises the germs of error which are passed through it. A Bible-taught and Bible-loving people will never breed much priestcraft or infidelity; they will never play with "trinkets" or treason, and will count "the faith once delivered to the saints" far too precious an heritage ever to tamper with it.

For the full text of the papers, we refer our readers to last week's Record.

The Evangelist.

"WITHOUT PRICE."

BY THE LATE DR. T. GUTHRIE.

THE poor say there is little chance or hope for them in this hard world. Well, are you poor? I had almost said, So much the better. "To the poor the Gospel is preached." You can get on well enough to heaven without gold. The wealth on which the kingdoms of this world set so high a value, and which, for all their talk of blood and breeding, has bought the coarse plebeian a marriage into proud patrician families, is here rather a hindrance than a help. Has not the Lord of the kingdom said, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven?"

In the freest and best-governed States, birth, and wealth, and rank, and blood give to their envied possessors great—often too great—advantages. It is the high-born chiefly that approach the person of the Sovereign, enjoy the honours of the palace, and fill the chief offices of the State. Royal favours seldom descend so low as humble life. The grace of our King, however, is like those blessed dews that, while the mountain tops remain dry, lie thick in the valleys, and, leaving the proud and stately trees to stand without a gem, hang the lowly bush with diamonds, and sow the sward broadcast with orient pearl. This is the kingdom for the mean, and the meek, and the poor, and the humble. Its King has said, "Not many mighty, not many noble, are called," "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

There is no degradation in honest poverty. But are you degraded, debased, an outcast from decent, good society—characterless? Nor does that exclude you from the mercy and grace of God. "Go ye," He said, "into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Go to the gallows; and preach it to the man with a rope on his neck, and his feet on the drop. Go to the jail; and preach it to the scum of the city. Go to her dens of iniquity; and preach it as freely and fully as in her highest and holiest congregation. Saving, gentle, pitying mercy turns no more aside from the foulest wretch than the wind that kisses her faded cheek, or the sunbeam that visits as brightly a murderer's cell as a minister's study. Nay—though the holiest of all kingdoms—while we see a Pharisee stand astonished to be shut out, mark how, when she approaches, who, weeping, trembling all over, hardly dares lift her hand and knock, the door flies wide open, and the poor harlot enters, to be washed and robed and forgiven, and kindly welcomed in!

Have you done nothing to merit this kingdom? Who has? Did Manasseh? Did Simon Peter? Did Saul of Tarsus? Was it his hands, reeking with the blood of Stephen, that earned for him the saving grace, and the honours of the chief apostleship? Was it for one look of pity, one word of kind sympathy from their lips that, as his murderers nailed him to the tree, our dying Lord raised his eyes to heaven and prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do?" No. They say — and why may not we?—"Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy He saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost."

THE OUTLOOK IN IRELAND.

The New Year is a time when people are accustomed to take their bearings and see what progress they are making. We are thankful to say that, although the opposition has increased both in extent and intensity, the field for successful work here becomes daily more enlarged. No doubt the work must be done in the proper way and with the right disposition. Would to God that more workers of the right kind were available. For ourselves, although sometimes almost driven to death, we cannot catch up with a tenth part of the work God has set ready to our hands. Every post brings us cheering testimony. An experienced and most successful Christian worker in the South of Ireland says :—

"As one engaged in the evangelisation of my countrymen, I write these words of encouragement. It may interest yourself and the many readers of your paper to know that in the county where I at present labour I have sold a good many copies of 'Hear the Other Side' to respectable Roman Catholics, some of them tenant-farmers in apparently comfortable circumstances, and some teachers of the rising generation under the National Board. I have sold the book under satisfactory conditions, for in selling the work I usually give a description of yourself and of it to Roman Catholics, and even sometimes when I do not sell it at all I quote from it some of your telling statements."

Another letter is from an ex-Roman Catholic girl, converted last summer. Like every genuine convert, she is labouring now, with all the strength God gives her, to point others to the Lamb of God. May hundreds like her be raised up in every corner of the land :—

"I am thankful to tell you the Lord has blessed me abundantly, and has kept me wonderfully from all my enemies. I very often meet with people that I do not know at all to tell me what they think of the disgraceful deed I have done; and there are one or two Roman Catholics here in ——— who made it up between them to come to speak to me, and when that time came they asked me many questions, but, thanks to the Almighty, He was present, and He gave me proper answers for their questions, so all they could say was to curse when they found they could not answer me. One of them said there was no Bible but the Douay, and it, she said, was full of blasphemy. That will give you an idea of the darkness the priests are keeping them in. I feel very much for them. I pray for all Roman Catholics, including bishops, priests, and also the head, as they say, the Pope. Any time I get the chance I speak to them, but they always run away when they cannot answer what I say to them. . . . I feel I shall never be done thanking God for being so merciful to me in leading me out of a life of darkness to a life of light; and, although all my friends have forsaken me, I have the best Friend of all, and He is the Lord Jesus."

The writer of another letter is yet a Roman Catholic. As the reader will see his eyes are more than half opened. May He who opened the eyes of the blind perform a perfect cure :—

"I have no taste for religious controversy as such, nor do I take much interest in those articles in your magazine which are devoted to the discussion of doctrinal questions. But in your efforts to expose the abuses, the disgraceful and un-Christian abuses which are rampant in the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, you have my fullest sympathy, and from the bottom of my heart I wish you God-speed. So far as I know you are the only journalist in Ireland who has the honesty and courage to direct the attention of the public to the unscrupulous means by which the Roman Catholic clergy take advantage of the ignorance, slavishness, and superstition of their flocks in order to add to their income, and thereby enrich and aggrandise their relations."

We are not accustomed to make much noise over the little God has enabled us to do. Quiet work is certain to be the most successful as well as the most pleasing to the Master. A good many letters find entrance to our editorial sanctum which it would be criminal of us to submit to public inspection. We have printed some, all the originals of which we preserve, that lovers of the Lord Jesus everywhere our voice can reach, may take courage and redouble their prayers and exertions for Ireland. Oh, if even all the Christians in this land would live and exhibit the Christ-life and love each other as little children, what a changed Ireland we should soon have. We have seen from one letter how bravely a young tender girl can battle for her Saviour. Shame upon us. If we Irish Christians had really loved Jesus Christ there would long since have been more results visible. Many waters cannot quench love neither can the floods drown it. If a man would give all the substance of his house for love it would utterly be contemned.—The Catholic.

THE NOON PRAYER MEETING.

At the Aldersgate-street noonday meetings there are often seasons of holy uplifting, when God seems very near, and clear answers to prayer strengthen the faith of his suppliant children. Last Friday was a specially rousing time. On the notice-board at the door were the names of Amanda Smith and Richard Weaver. The attendance was more numerous than customary, and all the exercises of the hour were pitched in a high key. Always genial and happy in tone, the president for the day, Mr. M. H. Hodder, seemed to have unusual freedom, and felt quite at home in guiding the course of what was very like an old-fashioned Primitive Methodist love-feast. The responses, welling out from warmed-up hearts, were plentiful as sunbeams on a July day.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH

had the first turn at speaking after the requests had been read out by Mr. Burn and earnestly presented in fervid prayer. Our good coloured sister is quite her old self, simple and transparent as an unspoilt child; full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. Just as a kind of introduction to her informal fifteen minutes' talk, she sang the well-known song of Zion :

In some way or other
The Lord will provide.

It was rendered with all those curious vocal genuflexions with which the Jubilee Singers familiarised us, and which in some mysterious sort of way touch the hidden spring of the emotions, so that now and then a lump rises automatically in the throat, and the listener tries furtively to stay the impending tear.

Mrs. Smith said the song had come forcibly to her mind as she sat and heard the requests for prayer being read out, some expressing financial trouble and others telling of the difficulties and trials of a spiritual kind. She could deeply sympathise with all, as she had often been in such sore straits herself, and had proved the truth of the promise that in his own way and time the Lord would provide. These trials, she said, were tests of faith. Forthwith she proceeded to tell a little bit of personal experience that interested the hearers immensely.

"I remember, a number of years ago, I was wonderfully tested in my faith with regard to paying my rent. I had been working very hard at the wash-tub and did all I could to meet my obligations, looking, of course, to the Lord to help me. This time I found it very hard to make up the amount for the month, which was six dollars—25s. of your money. I had spoken to the landlord and asked him to take off the odd dollar. I could manage five dollars, but the other was an extra strain. Neither the agent nor the landlord would agree. It was only a little bit of an attic away on the top floor in a back street, but the landlord told me he could easily get eight dollars for it, and he could not possibly reduce it. Well, I said to myself I would never ask him again, but I made it a matter of prayer. I just asked the Lord to trouble that man's conscience and heart, and make him take that one dollar off. I told the Lord how difficult it was to get the money, and that when I had paid my rent I had not got a single penny left. I had to be a great economist, and the most I could get to eat was a little mush and syrup.

"Sometimes when I had done the washing, I would take the clothes home to the lady's house, with the little account coming, perhaps, to about four shillings. The lady would say to me, 'Amanda, can you change me a twenty-dollar bill?' The idea of a poor washerwoman changing a twenty-dollar bill! 'Oh, well,' the lady would say, 'never mind; I will pay you the next time you come.' Sometimes I used to be washing all day and nearly all night, and I could not get the money. Do you know, I think it is a great shame to act in that way. You cannot 'splain to them, and tell them that you are so very poor, and all that. But the Lord knew all about it, and I told Him that I could use that dollar for Him, and I prayed that he would not let the landlord sleep or eat, and to trouble him all day, so that he would take it off.

"The next time the rent was due I had struggled and got the money together. I left it with a woman in the house and went away to work. When the landlord came for the money he took it, but he said to the woman, 'Well, she is pretty honest about the rent, tell her that she need not pay the extra dollar the next month.'" Clapping her hands triumphantly, and with a beaming smile on her coal-black face, Mrs. Smith exclaimed, "I could have told him how it happened; I recognised that God had done it."

Then our sister passed on to expound in her characteristic, experimental way the promise, "My God shall supply all your need out of his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." She told of deliverances from peril on her journeys half round the world; how her health broke down in Africa, and she came home to die but did not die; and how God's grace had been sufficient for her day by day. She was not always in the sunshine, but, glory be to God, when the clouds came she did not backslide. There were two settled facts in her Gospel, that she was the Lord's and the Lord was hers; so whether it was light or dark she fell back on that. Then she closed her little address by singing another song, the refrain of which was "Our God is able to deliver thee."

MR. RICHARD WEAVER

had been speaking on several occasions at the noon meeting last week, but at the request of the chairman he added a few words. Remembering that it was "temperance day," he told of the power of God to rescue the drunkard from the tyranny of his cups. He rather threw cold water on the medicinal "drink cures" that are in vogue at present, and cited the case of a man in Cambridge of whom he had been told, who had undergone this "cure," but was now as debased as ever. The cure that comes through trusting in the blood of Christ never fails. As striking examples of this Mr. Weaver told of the conversion of Bendigo at Northampton, and of his own father, who was delivered from the bondage of the drink at the age of seventy-two, and lived a conquering Christian life till he went home to heaven at eighty-nine.

Mr. Wm. Nobbs gave a brief word of corroboration as to Bendigo, and then offered very fervent prayer for the two servants of God who had spoken to us. When the chairman had added his petition and given the benediction, the hour was more than gone.

IN MEMORIAM.

On the death of Bishop Hill and his wife at Lagos, January 7, 1894, a few weeks after entering his diocese of Western Equatorial Africa.

Wrecked hopes and darkened place,
And the Lord above it all,
Making the rent, that through the rift
Yet choicer gifts might fall.

He gave them to his Church,
We praised Him for the boon;
Nor dreamed the lamps his hand had placed
He would remove so soon.

We hoped their light would shine
Further and further round,
Piercing dark corners of the earth,
Where woe and crime abound.

God needed signal lights
Of Afric's deep distress;
That hundreds more, impelled by Him,
Might to the rescue press.

He lifted them on high,
For evermore to be
His message flashing o'er the waves;
"The Lord hath need of thee."

K.

PARIS.—Christian friends who have been in the habit, when visiting Paris, of attending the Congregational Church, 23, Rue Royale, will be glad to learn that the service, which it was feared must be discontinued for want of funds, will still be carried on by Rev. S. H. Anderson. The spiritual work, though unobtrusive, is interesting. A meeting for Bible reading and prayer is held every Thursday evening at the pastor's house, 37, Avenue de la Grande Armée, to which Christian friends passing through Paris are cordially welcomed S. O.

GLASGOW UNITED EVANGELISTIC ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association was held last Thursday evening in St. Andrew's Hall. Lord OVERTOUN, who presided, said they had gathered at the close of twenty years' work of the Association, and they wished to give God thanks for the past, and to get fresh courage for the future. While they looked back upon the past year, they could not but remember they had lost one of their oldest and best workers, Alexander Wallace. He was identified with the Association from the beginning. He could not be with them for a time before his death, and they missed him because of the courage and brightness he always brought. He went much about the country evangelising and witnessing for Christ, and never spoke without pleading for the Free Breakfast Fund. He was always sending money he had gathered over bonnie Scotland. They hoped someone would be raised in his place to interest not only the people of Glasgow, but the people over the land, in the work of the Association. The directors had, in consequence of the very quiet way in which the work had been carried on, to regret that many of their best friends were not sufficiently aware of the great mass of work which was being done throughout the year. Though the reports were condensed, it was beyond human power to tell in a few sentences of the work done in the fifteen branches of the association all over the city. That work included the new departure to the Jews, associated with the name of Dr. Andrew Bonar. There was also the movement of getting the children over Scotland to read steadily and regularly the Word of God. Every department had been blessed; but one of the things that had tried the faith of the directors was the lack of funds, as many friends had been called hence during the year. The Fresh Air Children's Fund, which was also a new departure, had received last year £7000. This was apt to take contributions from other portions of the work. Six weeks ago there was a deficit of £2000, the expenditure being about £16,000, and the income £14,000; but through the liberality of friends in Glasgow and neighbourhood that deficit had been reduced to between £200 and £300.

Under the auspices of the Association there had been held several conferences with regard to non-churchgoing. The Association having worked loyally with all Evangelical Churches, it was hoped that the suggestions thrown out would be productive of some good. The association had undertaken another great work. For many years it had cast its loving hands not only upon Glasgow, but also upon regions beyond. Dr. Somerville went north, south, east, and west, to tell of the glorious Gospel and what God had been doing. Since then they had had a visit from Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Missions had been conducted all over Scotland by them and Dr. Pentecost. Latterly missions had been conducted by Mr. M'Neill and Mr. Burke. They welcomed Mr. M'Neill that night after five months' labour with Mr. Moody in America. After a little rest, he was going in their name, with Mr. Burke, first to the Cape, where they would be some weeks; then to Australia and New Zealand for some months. If these colonies did not lay violent hands upon him, he would also preach the Gospel in India.

Mr. J. R. MILLER reported that the noon prayer meeting had in point neither of attendance nor interest been on the down grade. Many business men had found it was indeed a rest at noon. The Bonar Memorial Mission to the Jews in Glasgow had made a good beginning, a hall having been engaged at 4, Carlton-place. Mr. GRAHAM, in his financial report, said that the contributions were the largest for many years. Mr. STEEL said that the work in Tent Hall had been carried on with earnestness and manifest tokens of blessing. There was an increase of 17,000 at the free breakfast, due to the great depression of trade. Mr. W. A. CAMPBELL reported favourably of the fellowship meeting, and Mr. ARTHUR of the work in the Bethany Hall. Mr. MACKEITH reported that the number of children who last year enjoyed the fresh-air fortnight was 6820, being 30,218 in the nine years. Mr. HUNTER CRAIG said that there were 700 workers in the Mizpah Band.

Rev. JOHN M'NEILL said that since he was in that hall he had been working in Ireland and in America, but more in the latter. But he must first say a word of Ireland, for in this, as in everything else, Ireland blocked the way. All sorts of people heard the Gospel. The Roman Catholics swarmed into the meetings and drank in the Gospel. He kept off controversy. Once he was put into an undenominational hall holding 700, but when he arrived at the town he learned that the whole adult Protestant population was only 200. So he entered a shop and whispered that he sympathised with Home Rule; though he did not talk politics the hall was filled to the door. Then he addressed a most wonderful meeting in Belfast, which was the head centre of Protestantism and other things of a pronounced type. He kept his thumb diligently upon the things he had been just telling them. There was a large building erected for a Unionist meeting, seated for ten thousand delegates, and the committee handed it over to Mr. Moody, never dreaming it would be filled. It was got for politics and worldly work, but God used the building for

A DEEPER AND DEARER BUSINESS.

But he would hasten on to speak of his visit of six months to Chicago. The work there was a glorious one. It nearly killed Mr. Moody, Mr. Robertson, and himself, but evangelists take a lot of killing, and they had lived to tell the tale. He often preached six and seven days a week, to audiences of 15,000 to 20,000 persons weekly, and this, too, though Chicago was a wicked and careless city. The audiences came from all ends of the earth. Month after month Mr. Moody and his band of thirty preachers cast bread upon the waters, and they would no doubt find it after many days. Their meetings were the real Parliament of Religion.

What a Trojan Mr. Moody was for work, and how he made other people work! The campaign was splendid, and he was a splendid general to serve under. Yet all the ministers reported they never had their services so well attended. For Mr. Moody's meetings they had eight theatres, six music halls, the loan of churches, and some half a dozen tents as well as open-air meetings. The meetings were all in the height of the heat of a Chicago summer. It was so hot, in fact, that the theatres were closed. Speaking of the great Exhition, he remarked that 750,000 persons paid admission to the World's Fair on "Chicago Day," and in the enormous crowd he never saw a man staggering with drink. He must admit that the drunkest crowd that ever he saw anywhere was in his native land. Oh, the shame and disgrace of the scenes when the trains were starting at the close of a holiday in Scotland—people staggering in all directions, and swearing at the pitch of their voices. But the drink curse was visible everywhere and at all seasons. The drunkenness of Scotland was in truth our standing disgrace, and we could not lift up our heads. Mr. M'Neill mentioned that in his tour through Scotland he preached in the pulpits of all denominations. He had only two refusals, one from the minister of a constitutional orthodox church in the north, and the other from a Broad Church minister in the south. There extremes met. Mr. M'Neill concluded by saying if you wanted to do good, preach the old Gospel. In that way you reconciled man to God, and if you brought man back to God you would bring him back to his brother man.—Daily Mail.

THE NEEDS OF NATAL.

A CORRESPONDENT in Durban writes desiring us to urge some evangelists or business men who can spare the times and means, to spend a few months there to stir up the hearts of God's people to full surrender for service, and to join in casting the net as the Master may direct. "There are plenty of churches, and not a few godly ministers, but little aggressive work among Europeans, except the Salvation Army. An open-air service is also held on the Lord's Day evening, at which the workers in the South-east African Mission assist. In Maritzburg more effective work is done." The climate (adds the writer), from April to October especially, is delightful, and to workers in England who are run down with their winter's work, a trip to the country would have a wonderfully recuperative effect. There are not a few earnest men in Durban who would heartily co-operate in any mission that might be organised, and there are many more who would come forward, when the power of the Spirit would be seen.

HEAVEN LEAVES A TOUCH of the angels in all little children to reward those about Him for their inevitable cares.—Mrs. Craik.

DISCIPLESHIP AT LOWESTOFT.

I AM sending you these lines from one of our fishing towns on the east coast of England, where for a few days God has directed my steps for the purpose of missioning. I have visited most of our large towns, and have been brought more or less into contact with many forms of Christian activity, and with varied phases of Christian life; but I must say that, so far as my own observation has gone in the whole of my travels, I have never met with a body of men and women who have more correctly reproduced the ideal of the early Christian Church than these simple fisherfolk living in the quiet little town of Lowestoft. The heartiness with which they grip the hand, the kindly word of welcome offered, the appreciative manner in which the truth of God is received, together with their joyous bearing and deep sympathy shown to each other in the hour of sickness, need, misfortune, or bereavement, are simply delightful to witness.

The workers in the Mission number between forty and fifty. Some are members of the Established Church, others belong to the Baptists, Wesleyans, and Methodists, and many have attended for years the Seamen's Bethel in the town, which has been both their spiritual birthplace and home.

The meetings at the Hall are held every Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Sabbath mornings a men's school (on the lines adopted by the Friends) gathers for an hour for reading, writing, and the study of the Word of God. A mothers' meeting is also arranged for weekly, together with a Gospel service and a Good Templars' lodge, which has been but recently formed. Some of the congregation come considerable distances, one elderly man walking four miles twice daily in order to be present at the afternoon and evening meetings, and the dear fellow has been doing this while yet unconverted, having only been brought to Christ during our present mission.

It has always been to me a matter of wonder that the Saviour, who was not Himself a fisherman, should have deliberately chosen the majority of the twelve men who were to follow Him from their ranks; I think, however, that I can now understand it! No body of men could be more earnest and enthusiastic, meek, self-sacrificing, and devoted in their allegiance to the Lord Jesus than those brave but simple folk who supply us with the produce of the deep. There seems to be something about them in the nature of a charm, which has an irresistible influence and power over you whenever in their company.

On Sunday afternoon I was invited to take tea with one of the members of the Mission and his family, and I shall never forget the effect produced on me by the sweet singing of the grace after the meal was over. It was a verse the words of which are gone, but whose music will linger in my soul for years to come. In the prayer-meeting that follows each service the petitions are sincere, fervent, and come from the very depths of the heart. No attempt is made at embellishment, and it does one good to listen to the burning thoughts and feelings expressed often in the nautical language of these dear people. As one listens to, watches, and moves amongst them, one cannot but long that the days may not be far distant when our more cultured and well-to-do churches will catch the spirit of these devoted men and bring to life again the zeal, devotion, and brotherly love of the early saints.

Then will the Christian profession and name become once more a veritable power in our midst.

ROWLAND STURT.

AFTER-CARE ASSOCIATION.—Sir B. W. Richardson, in presiding over the meeting of this Association, held at the residence of the Earl of Meath on Monday (15th), said: "There is, I believe, no association engaged in philanthropic work that is doing more useful work than the 'After-Care.' At the same time there are few so little known amongst the wealthy members of the community. The after-care refers to those who, having been in asylums for the benefit of their mental health, and having recovered, are anxious, on their restoration to society, to obtain some occupation which they may carry on as if they had never been so unfortunate as to have suffered under mental derangement. The Association has opened a small home in Surrey for nine inmates; it has supported a boarding-out system, and, in the past year, over eighty persons have sought its aid." Amongst the other speakers were Dr. J. Kennedy Hill, Dr. Parke Young, Dr. H. Rayner, Dr. Hack Tuke, Rev. W. St. Hill Bourne, and others.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28.—PROV. XXI.

1.—Without interfering with man's free will, God can overrule his thoughts, as the irrigator turns the waters of the Nile in the direction of the trenches that he has dug (Neh. i. 11; ii. 4, 5). 2.—Every man justifies his actions to himself, but God considers the hidden springs of motive. 3.—Ceremonialism does not count with God. It is easier than practical godliness, but of small consequence. 4.—The look reveals the heart, and the two together make up the lamp (R.V.) of the wicked, i.e., the light he casts forth upon the world, like the wreckers' lights on the seething waters, alluring unwary crews to their doom. 5, 6.—Steady industry prospers, where impulsive haste loseth as quickly as it gets. The wealth of the ungodly resembles the vapour, or will-o'-the-wisp.

7, 8.—Vehemence will not avail for the lack of character, whilst his work is strong and right whose heart is pure. 9.—Not places, but people, make life pleasant or irksome (v. 19). 10-13.—The way in which we treat other men is the measure of the treatment we ourselves shall receive. Even in this life the judgment of the great white throne begins to manifest itself. It is good that simple and righteous men should wisely consider the dealings of God.

14, 15.—Appease wrath and do justice, so life will yield its sweets to you. 16.—To refuse the light of God is to choose the death of the soul. A foolish man chooses his own way, his own company, and his own eternal abode. 17.—We have no right to make that into an end of life, which God meant for its refreshment. 18.—So Jehovah gave Egypt for a ransom for his people (Isa. xliii. 3). 20, 21.—In the poorest house, where there is the love of God, you will find treasures and joy. What a man seeks after he finds. 22.—Greater exploits are done by character than physical force.

23.—The tongue is the rudder of the life. Keep it, and you will miss whirlpools and rocks. 24-28.—The scorner, the slothful, the covetous, the wicked, and a false witness, are classed together as abominable to God here, and as certain to incur loss and penalty hereafter. 29.—We must set our face as a flint towards righteousness (Isa l. 7; Ezek. iii. 8, 9). But woe to the man who does so against God (Job ix. 4). 30, 31.—You cannot prevail against God, but if He is with you, you can succeed against overwhelming odds.

MONDAY, JANUARY 29.—PROV. XXII.

1.—Augustine advises every man to be careful, first of his conscience, and next of his credit. We should be careful of our good name, for it involves Christ's. 2.—Outward distinctions vanish in the presence of our Maker and Judge. The real facts of life are much the same to us all. 3.—See xxvii. 12. The Gospel tells of coming evil, and provides a sure hiding-place. Isa. xxxii. 2. 4.—Stoop low before God, humility is the door into his palace. 5.—Be thankful for the thorns that hedge up your way.

6.—Dedicate your children to God. Believe that He accepts the trust, and do your best to build up a noble character on the trellis-work of regular religious habits. 7.—How different God to man! He takes no advantage of our need, though we are poor, and must needs be ever borrowing without hope of paying. 8.—Every sin is a seed of coming sorrow. 9.—Give away your barley loaves, if you would have twelve baskets full of meat. 10.—Better sacrifice one man than that the whole brotherhood should be ruined. 11,12.—Unite purity of heart with courtesy and grace. It is the secret of securing the friendship of the great and good. Live thus, and the King of kings will be your friend.

13.—Sloth excuses itself by imagining danger. Most of the objections men raise against coming to Christ are generated in their unwillingness. 14.—The love of the unholy and the abhorrence of God go together. Hatred of impurity and the love of God are no less indissolubly one. 15.—It is very important when you are corrected that you should forsake foolishness. Ask the reason of God's chastisement, and deal with it, though it be bound in your heart.

16.—To grind down the poor and to make loans to the spendthrift, court poverty. 17.—At this point many suppose that another part of this book begins, the proverbs in it are somewhat longer. It perhaps contains proverbs which Solomon collected from the wisdom of surrounding peoples.

17-21.—There is one connected exhortation. (1) It describes the Gospel message. "Wise" (17), "excellent counsel and knowledge" (20), the certainty of truth (21), addressed personally to each individual (19). (2) It describes our duty. "Attend," "know," "retain," "trust." (3) The blessings of obedience. "Pleasant," "fearless," "gracious." 22, 23.—As you treat others God will treat you. 24-28.—Three cautions against wrong friendships, rash suretyship, and the removal of the ancient landmark. Deut. xix. 14. 29.—Diligence in business is the road to honour and success.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30.—PROV. XXIII.

1-3.—The laws of heaven should regulate our conduct on earth. As the ruler's guest, you are God's witness. Let not self-indulgence destroy the effectiveness of your testimony. "If any dish tempts my palate, I fear the serpent in the apple, and would please myself in a wilful self-denial."—Bishop Hall. 4-5.—We need the far-sightedness that can behold the true riches and the eternal kingdom, in comparison with which the most substantial gains of men are not. 6-8.—There is danger in the dainty meats of those whose hearts are evil toward us. Better a crust with the love of the host, than luxury without it. 9.—Cast not thy pearls before swine, 10, 11.—See xxii. 28. God is the kinsman and patron of the oppressed.

12-14.—Accept God's corrections, so shalt thou be able to correct. The disciple is awakened to teach. 15-18.—He who lives all day long in the fear of God will be in no danger of envying or imitating sinners. There is a future, and those who live for God shall be rewarded at their latter end. 19-21.—Youth is apt to become the creature of sense. Avoid bad company, and you will be kept in the way of prosperity and peace. 23.—When once you have bought the pearl of great price, hold it fast; the whole world would not be sufficient in exchange.

24-25.—How much more will the loving and obedient life give joy to God. 26-28.—When the heart is full of the love of God no unholy love can fascinate. It will naturally draw to itself pure women and innocent children. 29-35.—The physical ills attaching to drunkenness, the woe and sorrow, the contentions and anxiety, the vitiated blood and bloodshot eyes, are but symbols of the evils which are rotting the heart.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31.—PROV. XXIV.

1, 2. See also 19, 20.—We envy the wicked without just cause; their character and their end should warn us. 3, 4.—Holy living and gentle deeds make a fairer home than great wealth. 5, 6.—"Knowledge is power." Ask God to teach thee to war, and to counsel thee in thy ways.

7.—The wisdom which is founded upon goodness gives us confidence amid the concourse of men. 8.—Men earn their own epitaphs. 9.—The purpose of evil is sinful in God's sight. 10.—He giveth strength to the faint, which no day, however adverse, can exhaust. 11, 12.—It is not enough to abstain from doing evil, it is wrong if we permit the chance of remedying evil to pass unimproved. The blood of the innocent whom we might have rescued will be required at our hands.

13, 14.—We should avail ourselves of every opportunity of sweetness and self-improvement that God puts in our way; accepting them as the gift of his hand. The knowledge of God should be as sweet to us as honey to our palate. 15, 16.—The righteous, as well as the wicked, may fall, but the former shall rise again (Micah vii. 8). 17, 18.—Let us be careful how we permit ourselves to view with complacency the sins and failures of others, else we may incur their penalty. 19, 20.—Ps. xxxvii. 1. The repeated exhortation of the Bible is, "Fret not." The prosperity of the wicked need excite no envy, it is so short-lived.

21, 22.—Let us seek to improve the condition of society by lawful and constitutional means. 23.—An appendix is here added to this collection of the sayings of the wise. 24, 25.—Let us beware of the flattery that addresses wicked men as though they were righteous. Let us dare to rebuke the ungodly, though we sting as salt. 26.—Straightforward answers are as welcome as kisses to the lips. 27.—Let your life be well-ordered; do first things first. 28, 29.—The opposite of this is the golden rule. 30-34.—Let the slothful man see in this neglected field a picture of his neglected soul; the inner life needs as much careful culture as the garden, or else it becomes a wilderness.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1.—PROV. XXV.

1.—With this chapter another division of the book begins. The scribes whom Hezekiah appointed probably selected the proverbs of Solomon from a multitude of others. 2, 3.—That which men need to know is clearly revealed, but much concerning the purposes, work, and ways of God is hidden. Deut. xxix. 29. 4, 5.—As dross must be removed from silver, so wicked counsellors should be removed from the court and person of the king.

6, 7.—Seek glory and you will miss it; be modest and humble and you will be called to higher place and service (Luke xiv. 8-11). 8-10.—Do not be hasty in going to law, lest you repent at leisure. Be fully assured of your ground before you go into the public court. 11.—The apple of gold was probably the orange or the citron lying in a silver vase; so a fitting word spoken in the obedient ear is beautiful and acceptable. 13.—Would that we might so refresh the soul of Christ as we take his messages. 14.—To promise and not to pay is to be a cloud without rain. 15.—Gentleness has its own way in the end. 16.—This seems to contradict xxiv. 13, but the honey here represents human commendation. It should be taken in moderation. 17.—It is good that we can never weary God by much going into his presence. 18.—There are worse things than instruments of iron. 19.—"But none of those that trust in Him shall be desolate."

20.—There should be fitness in our treatment of people, songs for the glad, and comfort for the heavy-hearted, just as warm clothes befit cold weather. 21, 22.—Love melts hearts as heat metals. 23.—The lowering face is well described by the rain clouds of an overcast sky. 24.—Repeated in xxi. 9. It is the company and not the size of the house that makes home. 25.—Such is John xiv. to weary hearts. 26.—Don't yield before wickedness, or your power for good will be lessened. 27.—A little human commendation sweetens the hardest lot, but too much of it surfeits. 28.—The absence of self-restraint lays the spirit open to the incursions of evil thoughts.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2.—PROV. XXVI.

1.—They are alike incongruous and unreasonable. 2.—Men can no more determine where a curse shall fall than where a bird shall alight. Fear not the curses of men. Shimei's causeless curse never fell on David (2 Sam. xvi. 5). 4, 5.—We must speak or be silent as God may show. Sometimes we must avoid speaking, lest we be drawn into a brawl; at other times we must speak in order to show up a foolish person. 6-11.—A fool in the language of Scripture is not a half-witted person, as with us, but one whose character is morally worthless. It is a great mistake to entrust ourselves to such. We shall surely suffer for it if we do. 12.—Bad as a weak character is, one swollen with pride is worse.

13-16.—The sluggard is ever imagining difficulties. He sees lions where there are none (xxii. 13). His only real difficulty is his own indolence. He would rather starve than put forth any exertion. Yet he is full of self-conceit. Wiser than seven men, the number of perfection. 17.—When next a quarrel is going on, keep out of it, or the two combatants may make common cause, and vent their spleen on you.

18-19.—"A lie in jest does mischief in earnest" (2 Peter ii. 13). 20-22.—The tongue is a fire, and provides fuel for the fire it kindles (Jas. iii. 6). If it were not for the whisperers and contentious, the fire of strife would die out. It is the devil's to accuse and stir up contention (see xviii. 8). How eager we are by nature to hear scandal. 23-28.—Lips may speak fair, while the heart cherishes hate. So it was with Absalom and Judas (2 Sam. xv. 1-9; Luke xxii. 47, 48). And the hidden evil will presently reveal itself. But remember that those who set stones rolling will certainly be crushed by them. Whenever you are tempted to hear or tell slander, choke down the words, and you will do much to stamp out the fire of your heart.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3.—PROV. XXVII.

1.—We shall best provide for to-morrow by doing well to-day's duties, and not worrying about its unknown contents. Do not boast in your provision, you know not what may be really needed (Jas. iv. 13, 14). 2.—Compare the conduct of the centurion (Luke vii. 4, 6, 9). Of Cato, Sallust said, "He would rather be than seem to be a good man, so that the less he sought glory, the more he obtained it." 3.—What then will not be the vexation of those who miss the bridal-feast! 4.—The only cure of jealousy is the heart garrisoned by the peace of God.

5, 6.—That is not love which refuses to utter rebuke (Lev. xix. 17); yet how difficult it is to receive it (Gal. iv. 16). "Hunger is the best sauce." This is true also in spiritual things (Rev. iii. 17, 18). A sense of deep need makes us eager for truth. 8.—Abide where you are, till God clearly shows you the way out. 9, 10.—Our best friends are not always of our own kin. 12, 13.—See xxii. 3; xx. 16. 14.—Beware of those who are too profuse in their protestations of affection; you may rue their effusiveness.

15, 16.—The monotonous drip of the eaves is an apt symbol of the wearing effect of the man or woman who is never satisfied. 17.—Compare Job iv. 3, 4. Paul was strengthened to testify for Christ by the presence of Silas and Timothy (Acts xviii. 5). 18.—Compare 1 Cor. ix. 7, 13. Oh, to be honoured to wait on the Master as the Centurion's servant did, to whom He said, Do this. 19.—We are all made on the same general plan. 20.—The more "the lust of the eye" is gratified, the more it demands (Eccl. i. 8). But we shall be satisfied with God.

21.—Praise is as severe a test to a man's character as fire to metals. Reproach and blame are easier to bear. Dr. Payson mentions among his trials, "well meant, but injudicious commendation." 23-27.—Diligence in the occupations of life is a religious duty (Rom. xii. 11). But, oh, to keep fervent in spirit.

---

ARMENIA.—A committee of well-known pastors in New York city have undertaken to raise 3000 dols. for the support of three Armenian missionaries.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 4.

BEGINNING OF THE HEBREW NATION.—Gen. xii. 1-9. GOLDEN TEXT, verse 2.

UR of the Chaldees, now known as Mugheir, was situated on the right bank of the Euphrates, and about six miles from the stream. When Abraham dwelt there, about 2000 B.C., the city was in a flourishing and prosperous condition. Architecture and sculpture, astronomy and astrology were subjects in which the people had made considerable progress. They were skilful in weaving, metal working, and gem engraving. Writing was well known, and libraries were collected.

Yet the people were grossly idolatrous. The solemn lessons of the Flood in Noah's day were soon forgotten. Even Terah, the father of Abraham, had become an idolater (Josh. xxiv. 2). There are several legends of Abraham's early life, none of which are reliable in all their details, yet all having possibly some basis of fact. All represent him as very early perceiving the folly of idolatry, bearing a bold witness against it, and suffering considerable persecution from the king and from his own family.

It was the rapidly-growing corruption of the people everywhere that led God to adopt a new method of preserving in the earth a testimony for Himself.

I. ABRAM'S CALL (1-3).—From Acts vii. 2, 3, it appears that the call was given before leaving Mesopotamia. Possibly it was repeated after Terah's death in Haran. Compare the call with that of the Gospel. It came by a Divine word. Abram did not move until God spoke to him. Faith must always act upon a word of God. Feelings, impulses, speculations are useless. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." How God spoke to him we cannot know, but we know how He speaks to us (Heb. i. 1; ii. 1-4). It contained both promise and command. "I will shew"—"Get thee out." Each was necessary to the other. The promise rendered possible obedience to an otherwise difficult command. Obedience to the command was the line on which to discover the meaning of the promise. See how these two are united in the Gospel (Isa. lv. 7; Mark x. 29, 30; 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18). It involved great sacrifice. To forsake "country," and become an alien; to leave his "kindred," severing the ties of affection; and even his "father's house," his place of rest, and comfort and heirship, was not easy. Again compare it with the Gospel (Luke xiv. 26). It demanded great trust in God. For what did God promise him? There was no description of the land, nor any definition of the blessing. How did he know it was worth so great a sacrifice? Did it not seem like giving up a certainty for an uncertainty? So in the Gospel. Its blessings are mainly spiritual, and can have no attraction to men whose vision is limited by the eye of sense.

II. HIS RESPONSE.—The lessons suggested by this can only be learned as we read xi. 31, 32 with xii. 4, 5. We know that he obeyed "by faith" (Heb. xi. 8); but his example is more valuable to us when we notice two things:—(1) His faith triumphed after difficulty and failure. He set out twice for the land of Canaan, but the first time he came only to Haran (xi. 32). Why? Not because he did not believe God's call, but apparently because he had too strong an attachment to his father's house. Not a few are hindered from responding to the Gospel by some similar attachment. Until Terah was removed Abram never reached Canaan. And (2) he triumphed where others had failed. Terah started with him, and may fitly represent those who make a start but never reach the land of blessing. Such were the "mixed multitude" who came out of Egypt but never entered Canaan. Bunyan puts into his allegory many pilgrims who never reach the celestial city. Beware of stopping places short of full surrender to Jesus Christ.

III. HIS EXPERIENCE IN CANAAN.—Note how his faith was tried (6). Why bring him to Canaan if the land was already possessed by others? For the trial and strengthening of his faith. By forgetting that "the Canaanite is yet in the land"; by the expectation that sin would be weakened, and temptation less severe when the Christian life began, many a young Christian has been discouraged. Note, next, how his faith was strengthened. "The Lord appeared," etc. (7). Special trial was met by special grace. And the message was an advance upon that given before. Then it was "I will shew thee" (2); now it is "I will give thee" (7). The way to know is to obey (see Jno. viii. 31, 32). Note how his faith acted. Two features are prominent. First, his tent, the meaning of which is explained in Heb. xi. 9, 10. It showed that the earthly Canaan did not exhaust Abram's hopes. Second, his altar. By this he claimed the land, because God had promised it, even though the Canaanite was still there. By this he expressed his gratitude to God for the gift. And by this he ought to keep in a vigorous condition his own spiritual life.

For the Young.

CHILDREN'S WORK.

YES, many things for Jesus
A little child may do;
If only he is willing,
And loves the Saviour too.

Just something fetched for mother,
Or sister kissed when cross;
A book to a poor one given,
Though you may feel the loss.

May be some flowers taken
To someone sick and ill;
Whate'er it be, dear children,
Just doing the Saviour's will.

These little things for Jesus,
Done as a work of love,
Are just what Christ is noting,
While watching from above.

Then do some work for Jesus,
No matter great or small,
Do give to Him your childhood,
Or, better still, your all.

And thus, dear Christian children,
Your lives shall ever be
One hymn of praise to Jesus,
Till Him you love you'll see.

West Norwood. MAUD BUSSELL.

ROSE WOODVILLE'S WAY.

"MOTHER," said Pauline, "it is so strange about Rose Woodville's way. I wonder what her secret is—she makes friends of everyone. She is as polite and pleasant to one as to another. I don't see how she can be."

"And does my Pauline sometimes make enemies? and is she at times impolite and unpleasant?" asked mother, with a smile. The girl blushed as she looked into her mother's eyes, but she answered honestly—

"Yes, mother, she does make enemies, and she is not always polite or pleasant. You know, mother, I am such a positive sort of a girl—I have to like or dislike; and I show out just as I feel. Some people bother me so, and I rid myself of them in the shortest way, if it is not the sweetest way, like Rose's."

"How do you do this?" asked her mother.

"Oh, I let them know plainly what I think of their company," answered Pauline.

"And then?" said her mother.

"Well, if they have any sense, they get vexed, and go off, and leave me alone, as I wished. But if they are the kind who do not know when they are snubbed, I get provoked, and say something disagreeable."

"In each case, then," said her mother, "you care more for your own pleasure, comfort, or convenience than you do for those of others?"

"Well, yes, mother, I believe I do," was the candid reply. "Almost everybody does that, one way or another. I'm not more selfish than most others, but I cannot have such a kind, gentle, sweet way as Rose has."

Mrs. Warner looked a little sad as she said:—

"I think the secret of Rose Woodville's way is found in her obedience to our Lord's new commandment. I fear you, my daughter, neglect to keep it." Mrs. Warner opened a New Testament, and read St. John xiii. 34—"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

Pauline's face became very serious as she heard these words of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Can you imagine the Saviour as impolite or unpleasant in his words or manner to anyone?" asked her mother.

"Oh, no; never, mother."

"Or as caring more for his own comfort or pleasure than for that of others?"

"No, indeed. 'For even Christ pleased not Himself,'" said Pauline, reflectively. "No, He was never rude, or cross, or sarcastic; and yet those people that flocked around Him, teasing for miracles, and loaves and fishes, must have been provoking enough, too."

"What was it, then, in the Lord Jesus that made Him thus considerate of others—kind, gentle, courteous, patient, altogether unselfish?" asked Mrs. Warner.

"Oh, mother," said Pauline, humbly, "it was the love. But, mother, can I ever love as He did?" she asked.

"He bids you do nothing impossible; yet He says, 'As I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

Pauline was silent and thoughtful for some minutes. She was a fair-minded girl, and dealt honestly with herself.

"If Rose can keep that commandment, I certainly ought to," she said. "I will try, though I know it will be fearfully hard for me; I have no patience, and some persons are so stupid and tiresome."

"May not some persons find your short, positive ways tiresome, too?" asked her mother.

"Oh, they do," said Pauline, blushing. "I know I am not amiable, and indeed I am not. But I will pray to become so, to be made like Jesus. I will pray that He may make me so, for I can do nothing without his help."

"Yes, dear; we pray 'Thy kingdom come' by our actions far more acceptably and effectually than by any form of words. And our every action will be a genuine, earnest, prevailing prayer for the coming of the Kingdom if we at all times bear in mind and in heart this new commandment of our Lord, 'Love one another.'"

THE CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Stalybridge, Jan. 25 and 26; St. Luke's, Liverpool, Jan. 27 to Feb. 7; Mr. Jas. S. Tyler, Parmiter-street School, Cambridge Heath, to Jan. 28; St. Leonard's, Bootle, near Liverpool, Feb. 3 to 7; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Harrow, Jan. 27 to 30; Mr. H. Falkner, Leytonstone, Jan. 26; Bow, Jan. 29; Mr. G. Goodman, Highbury Hill Baptist, Feb. 4 to 11; Mr. E. Hughes, Congregational Church, Greenwich, Feb. 5 to 9; Mr. Josiah Spiers, Llandrindod Wells.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—S., Jan. 28, 2 Kings xxii. 11-20; 29, xxiii. 1-14; 30, xxiii. 15-25; 31, xxv. 1-16; Feb. 1, Psalms xxxix. 1-13; 2, xl. 1-17; 3, xli. 1-13.

THE WATER-MILL.

BY D. G. MITCHELL.

LISTEN to the water-mill, through the livelong day,
How the clicking of its wheel wears the hours away;
Languidly the autumn wind stirs the greenwood leaves;
From the fields the reapers sing, binding up the sheaves;
And a proverb haunts my mind, as a spell is cast—
The mill will never grind with the water that is past.

Autumn winds revive no more leaves that once are shed,
And the sickle cannot reap the corn once gathered;
And the rippling stream flows on, tranquil, deep and still,
Never gliding back again to the water-mill.
Truly speaks the proverb old, with a meaning vast—
The mill will never grind with the water that is past.

Take the lesson to thyself, loving heart, and true;
Golden years are fleeting by; youth is passing, too;
Learn to make the most of life, lose no happy day,
Time will never bring thee back chances swept away;
Leave no tender word unsaid; love, while love shall last—
The mill will never grind with the water that is past.

Work while yet the daylight shines, man of strength and will,
Never does the streamlet glide useless by the mill;
Wait not till to-morrow's sun beams upon the way,
All that thou canst call thine own lies in thy To-day;
Power, intellect, and health, may not always last—
The mill will never grind with the water that is past.

Oh, the wasted hours of life that have drifted by!
Oh, the good we might have done, lost without a sigh,
Love that we might once have saved by a single word,
Thoughts conceived, but never penned, perishing, unheard!
Take the proverb to thy heart, take and hold it fast—
The mill will never grind with the water that is past.

Love thy God and fellow-man, thyself consider last;
For come it will, when thou must mark dark errors of the past;
And when the fight of life is o'er, and earth recedes from view,
And Heaven in all its glory shines, 'midst the pure, the good, the true—
Then you'll see more clearly the proverb deep and vast—
The mill will never grind with the water that is past.

Selected.

ONE GOOD MOTHER is worth a hundred schoolmasters.—George Herbert.

THE EMPEROR AND THE BIBLE.

A THOUGHT FOR YOUNG MEN.

"In the good old days," a man who wanted to show his zeal in the cause of truth felt he could not better do so than by writing an "apology for the Bible." That "splendid charlatan," Napoleon Bonaparte, who, among other things, was not renowned for his piety, once saw a list of these "apologies."

"An apology for the Bible!" he exclaimed. "I tell you, the Bible needs no apology; it is its own witness, and a revelation of truths that will outlast the ages."

Some of his younger officers heard this remark, and clustering together they began to air their views and their scepticism, and some of them openly avowed their belief in the teachings and inspirations (as they called them !) of the hour. The folly of many of these was so apparent, that the great General, on hearing the profitless discussion, made his way to the group.

"Why, gentlemen," said he, in his finest tone of sarcasm, "it seems that you make up for believing nothing in the Bible by believing all the folly outside it!"

This silenced the chatterers, and one, at least, of them was so impressed that he resolved to study the despised Book. This he did upon all possible occasions, and with such result that he became an enthusiast and finally a fanatic.

Someone was speaking of this one day in the Emperor's presence. "At one time De M—— believed nothing in the Bible, and everything outside it. Now he believes everything in the Bible and nothing outside it. Can you account for such a change?"

The Emperor was a close student of human nature and, whatever he practised, an avowed champion of the Book. Hearing the discussion and the question, he replied:—

"De M—— reads the Bible, but he never prays. The Bible gives the Light, but prayer, gentlemen, brings down Love!"

How far the Emperor was right you will be able to judge for yourselves. I once saw pasted up in an editor's sanctum these words:—

"All reading and no writing—A Fanatic.
All writing and no reading—A Bigot."

They explained to me two kinds of Christians. One will regularly read a portion of Scripture daily, and, thinking this enough, will not, in prayer, seek to be instructed, "Open Thou mine eyes," and therefore, becoming his own interpreter of what he has read, will in his self-sufficiency make mistakes.

The other seldom, if ever, inquires at the written word, "Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do?" He will tell God his needs, his desires, his aims, and much else, but he fails to seek his Father's will in his guide-book.

We need to be much in prayer, asking that He will illuminate his word by the light of his Holy Spirit, making his thoughts and his life plain to us, that we may walk even as He walked.

Some among you may be the chosen ministers of God's word in time to come, and you will do well to remember the words of a living teacher greatly instructed of his Master:

"Life is altogether too short to defend the Word of God. Preach it. Preach God's word, and sow God's seed. Preachers should spend less time in propping up the Cross, and more time in pointing to it."

True, there are many ways of approaching the Bible. I owe it to the late gifted Miss Tucker—the "A.L.O.E." of my childhood's reading—that one of the most beautiful and comforting portions of Scripture was not passed over in a careless manner. If you will turn to Job xix. 27 you will see that the marginal reading makes it, as does the text in the German Bible, "Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not a stranger"! Is not that worth knowing? Does it not seem to illuminate the whole passage with life and love? There is no need to wait till you are greyheaded to preach the Word: if you read it prayerfully you can preach it now—silently, may be, but none the less surely and fully. For your life will preach it, if you are an out-and-out Christian, even more eloquently than your lips. It is the Spaniards who say, "A good life is a good sermon," and it is true. Be true, be earnest, be Christlike. "There is no answer to godliness. There is always a reply to logic, but there is never any answer to purity, patience, sacrifice, the heroic life of Christ and every Christian." Do not forget that it has been said, "To one sinner that reads the Bible, there are twenty that read professing Christians." Keep "under the shadow of the Almighty" (Psa. xci. 1).

M. Butler Gerds.

A VISIT TO CENTRAL AFRICA.

Sir,—Having had prominently brought under my notice during a recent visit to British Central Africa, and since my return, a number of printed statements in periodicals, &c., relating to missions in Nyassaland, perhaps a few facts gleaned from personal observation will enable those interested in the Zambesi Industrial Mission and the Mission of the Established Church of Scotland to realise certain points more vividly. At the outset, let me say that it is very unfortunate, when misunderstandings and misconceptions arise, for allusions thereto to be put in writing in such form that, passing into general circulation, they are bound, whether justly or not, to lead to unpleasant inferences.

Some seventeen years ago the Scottish Presbyterians selected Blantyre on the Shiré Highlands as a centre of mission operations, and at distances of between forty and fifty miles, northward and southward, have founded similar stations with a total of ten to twelve schools and about thirty preaching stations. (Just on eve of my leaving a further station was to be occupied in Angoniland.) Blantyre is in reality a native settlement—a large village-group of families brought together by the Mission, and directly in touch with the mission household—pursuing various industrial arts and crafts of peace, whilst one of the most pleasing scenes to be witnessed daily (and evidence of the influence wielded by Rev. D. C. Scott) is a succession of deputations of native chiefs, head men, and others, who seek the superintendent's advice on all conceivable matters; and though referred by him in many cases to the administration officer, never fail to report results ere returning to their respective villages.

The Z.I. Mission, recently founded on industrial lines with a view to speedy self-support and profits sufficient for reduplication of stations (for which the Vice-Consul informed me Mr. Joseph Booth had, in the capacity of a missionary entrusted with certain moneys, secured about 50,000 acres of land), is situated an hour's walk (i.e., four or five miles) from the head station of the Blantyre Mission, and is there undertaking coffee-planting on an extensive scale, while a small band from Australia are engaged in a similar undertaking, also under Mr. Booth's superintendence, some four miles off in an opposite direction. On visiting these stations, I found the agents busy with industrial operations and the acquisition of the language, and learnt that three or four conditional grants had been made for mission purposes in Angoniland, one of which is now being occupied. In addition, services are held in two or three villages by means of interpreters.

The general opinion I found expressed while on my tour was that, owing to the conditions that prevail in Nyassaland (the result of the civilising agencies that are being and have been brought to bear for several years past), there are far more than sufficient missionaries concentrated in Blantyre province for effective work without clashing with each other's operations (especially as diverse methods are adopted towards the natives), unless very defined areas are decided on. Certainly there are a great number of villages in the Shiré Highlands largely migratory, but a village often means half-a-dozen huts with not more than fifteen to twenty people, so that the population of the Shiré Highlands is by no means abundant. In fact, in order to secure the labour required for transport and plantation purposes, the aid of chiefs some hundreds of miles off in Angoniland and round Lake Nyassa has to be enlisted year by year to engage men.

Of course this feature may be turned to account by the Z.I.M., as, in order to ensure remunerative returns, they will have to do likewise, and thereby from four to six months in the year have a population of workers that can be wrought upon by educational and religious agencies at command. Hitherto it has been a rare exception for an Angonie or an Atonga to forsake his country and reside in settled territory, and past experience proves that to bring pressure upon workers to do so—owing to the prevailing relationship of chief to his people—will have to be done cautiously to avert internal strife and ensure the lot of the native being benefited.

Having been a guest at each of the mission stations referred to, I can vouch for their immense value as foundational, educational, and spiritual institutions. At Blantyre, Urlange, Domasi, not only is the natives' acceptance of the Christ of Christianity sought, but agencies are in operation for the maintenance and development of a vigorous Christian character with a view (in several cases) to the rearing of a native ministry. The extreme method, precision, and harmony (resulting from a close study of African nature) with which the daily engagements are pursued from early morning, are truly wonderful, while the spirit of devotion in which the members of the Industrial Missions have entered upon their work, and their self-denying conduct in seeking to adapt themselves to the pioneer conditions of their new life, are very commendable.

In several directions have I seen indications of goodwill towards each other on the part of representatives of the Mission staffs referred to; and it will, I am sure, require the perpetual exhibition of a large measure of the Spirit of Christ, not only on the part of the missionaries in the field, but also by the councils of the respective societies, to prevent injury being wrought on the civilised native population (as well as on the Christian) that is growing up and proving of service to an increasing European community. The African is closely observant, and displays keen perception in translating the meaning of all the actions of the msunga (white man), and which information he despatches with electric swiftness far and wide.—Yours sincerely,

William Lucas, F.R.V.I.A.
Durban, Natal. (Melbourne, Australia).

P.S.—From personal observation it requires little thought to perceive that any further accessions to the number of missionaries in Central Africa should mean the opening up of untouched areas. There is still much work to be done by large-hearted, devoted men and women in Africa, along African lines; but neither children nor young people under twenty should accompany any party; for fever is a great reality, and those possessing undeveloped constitutions, or severely subject to changes of temperature, are bound to suffer. Not only is life required in a climate so enervating, but abundant life, physical, mental, and spiritual. W. L.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Before leaving England, will you allow me to thank the kind donors who from week to week contribute through you towards the China Inland Mission? We are unable to express our thanks to them personally, but many a time, when our funds have been low, it has been a great cheer as well as help to receive the money sent through The Christian. The Lord who knows each donor will give to each an abundant reward.

I am expecting to leave England for a short visit to China, viâ America, with my dear wife; Miss Guinness and Mr. John Brock accompany us. We hope to attend the Second International Convention of the Student Volunteers in Detroit, Feb. 28—March 4, but before starting we should like to meet as many of our friends as possible at Exeter Hall on Feb. 2, 7 p.m. Besides Miss Guinness, her father and brother, Mr. Montagu Beauchamp, Miss Annie Taylor (of Thibet), and others have promised to take part. A number of our missionaries on furlough, and several who are shortly going out, will be present.

We trust that our friends will come themselves, and bring as many with them as they can. We are sorry that more have not had the opportunity of meeting Miss Guinness before.

We shall be grateful for prayer that the meeting may be full of spiritual power, and may be made a great blessing.—Yours very truly,

J. Hudson Taylor.

8, Pyrland-road, N., Jan. 20.

A REFRESHING LETTER.—We have just received a letter which gives us peculiar pleasure from the evidence it affords that Christian love can overleap the narrow bounds of sectarianism. It comes from Rev. J. Campbell Strickland, D.D., vicar of Christ Church, Tunbridge Wells, and is a kindly plea on behalf of a sick Baptist minister, Rev. H. H. Bourn, who has been ill for ten years with paralysis and a painful throat complaint, and is in circumstances of great need. "He has," says the vicar, "been an able and faithful minister of Christ," while his works have been highly commended by Mr. Spurgeon and others.

REV. DR. VAN DYCK,

OF BEYROUT, TRANSLATOR OF THE SCRIPTURES INTO ARABIC.

ANY reference to the work of Bible translation recalls to mind the name of Dr. VAN DYCK, of Beyrout. He is the doyen of living translators, and stands pre-eminent above them all; and when the history of Bible linguists comes to be written, he will occupy an honourable place in the front rank of translators of all the centuries.

The great and crowning achievement of his life has been the translation of the whole Bible into accurate and idiomatic Arabic. The version is the best that has ever been made. To this great result many circumstances have contributed. Hebrew and Arabic both belong to the Semitic family of languages, and much of the dead Hebrew tongue is still vital in the living Arabic. The structure of words and forms of speech follows the same lines in both languages, and a thorough knowledge of the larger living tongue, which may almost be said to include the smaller, enables the translator to clothe the thoughts of the dead language in the breathing words of the living.

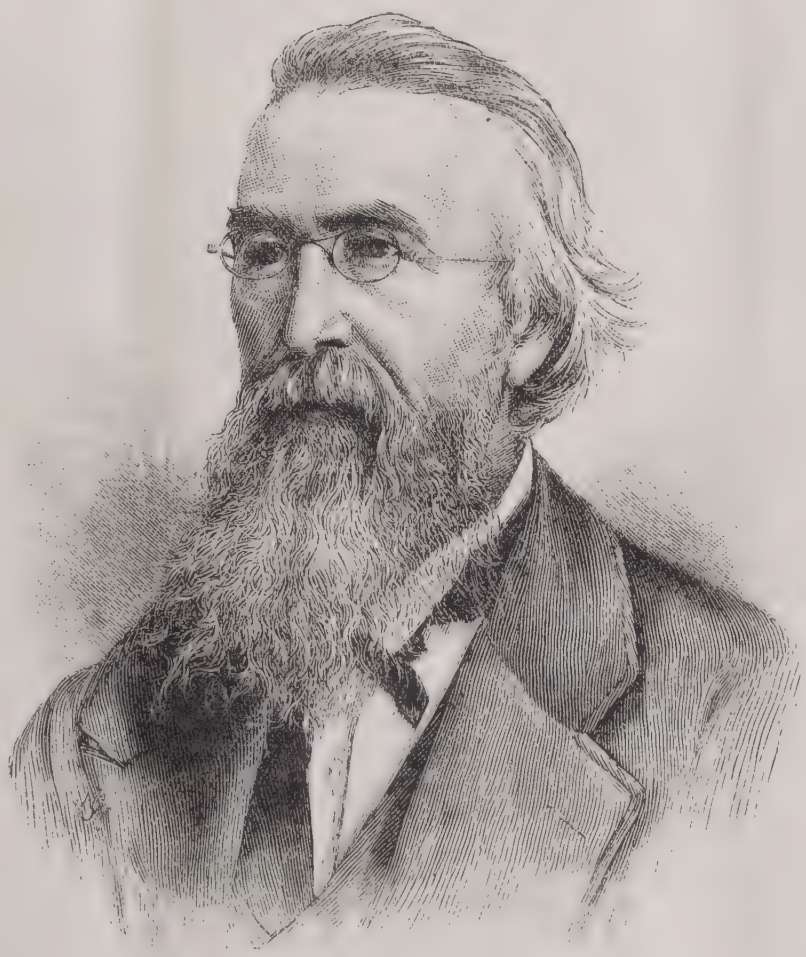
The New Testament was written in Greek, which is not a Semitic tongue, but the Greek of the New Testament is to some extent Semiticised in form, and in substance it is Semitic thought clothed in Greek. Dr. Van Dyck was living and translating in the land where the Bible was vernacular.

The natural features of Bible lands are worked into the whole texture of the Bible. The inspired men who wrote the Bible at first, speaking as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, employed the common and familiar objects around them as signs and symbols by which to convey God's message to men. God's thoughts are so conveyed through earthly symbols that every expression in the book has its roots somewhere in the Holy Land.

As Dr. Van Dyck went up and down the land, he saw the language material used by prophets and apostles when picturing to men the most spiritual truths. He found the whole land a living commentary on the book, and as he went in and out among the people, on his errands of mercy, he heard suffering men and women making known their wants, joys, and griefs, in the forms that flowed from the tongues of patriarchs and prophets, and that make up the warp and woof of the Bible.

Dr. Van Dyck reached the scene of his missionary labours, after a long voyage, in his twenty-second year. He had thus the great advantage of beginning the study of the Arabic language at a comparatively early age, while all the vocal organs were flexible. He was blessed with an ear quick to discriminate sounds, and an eye keen to mark forms. He came fresh to the language, and acquired it perfectly in an incredibly short time.

His complete mastery of the language almost cost him his life. He used to live among the people of Lebanon dressed like themselves. He assumed the native costume, turban and all. In 1848 there was an outbreak of hostilities between the Druzes and the Maronites. Dr. Van Dyck had been attending to the wounded on both sides, and on his way home a party of Druzes met him. They refused to let him pass, and when he told them he was an American, they declared that no foreigner ever spoke their language as he spoke it; but just when they were about to proceed to extremes, and they would have undoubtedly cut his throat, one of their party arrived on the scene, and declared that he had seen the doctor bandaging the wounds of a Druze only a short time before. The suspect immediately became a hero in the eyes of the chivalrous Druzes, who sent him home safely. His perfect command of Arabic got him into other scrapes of a like kind, but none so serious.



This great linguist and translator was born August 13, 1818, at Kinderhook, a small town in the State of New York, a few miles from the east bank of the Hudson River. The late Mr. Spurgeon, prince of preachers, was of Dutch extraction. Both father and mother of our prince of translators were Dutch. Most of the inhabitants of Kinderhook were Dutch, and spoke Dutch, and Dutch was the first language with which young Van Dyck became familiar, for it was more commonly spoken in his home and native town than English.

There was an excellent academy at Kinderhook. It was then a school of considerable reputation, and there the boy received his early education. From the Kinderhook Academy he proceeded to Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he took the degree of M.D.

He belonged to the Dutch Reformed Church, and he early felt a call to the mission-field. On leaving college, being then only a little over twenty years of age, he offered himself to the American Board of Foreign Missions, and was accepted.

Dr. Van Dyck landed in Syria in the early months of 1840. There were then several versions of the Arabic Scriptures, of varying excellence, in existence, but each had serious defects, and none were up to the requirements of the new and vigorous mission.

There are no very early manuscripts of the Arabic Scriptures, but it is said that a version was made by Warka, the son of Naufel, during the life of Mohammed. Through this translation Mohammed is believed to have acquired the fragmentary scraps of information regarding the Scriptures which are scattered through the Koran.

Towards the middle of the eighth century, a version was made by John, Bishop of Seville, from the Vulgate of Jerome, and other versions were made under the Patriarchates of Antioch and Alexandria.

Sergius Risius, the Maronite Bishop of Damascus, translated the Bible early in the seventeenth century, and the version was published in three volumes, between the years 1638 and 1646. Sabat, a converted Moslem, translated the New Testament, under the guidance of Henry Martyn, but it was found to be too Mohammedan. Saadias, a Jewish teacher of Babylon, and other translators produced the incorrect version that found its way into the Paris and Walton Polyglots. This version was subsequently published in Newcastle, in 1811, by the Bishop of Durham, under the care of Professor Carlyle.

The Newcastle edition, like all its predecessors, proved to be unsatisfactory, and a new and combined effort was made to produce a better version complete and uniform. Faris, an Arabic scholar, was employed for this purpose. He translated from the Authorised Version, and Professor Lee followed close on his heels, and revised from the original. Other oriental scholars assisted in the revision, and on the death of Professor Lee, Professor Jarrett took his place. The work was completed in 1856.

While this work was in progress, a version was begun at Beyrout by Dr. Eli Smith, destined to supersede all others. He devoted much of his time to the formation of an eclectic text, from which to translate. He selected the readings that pleased him best from all versions, and did not follow any one in particular.

On the death of Dr. Eli Smith, the work passed into the hands of Dr. Van Dyck. He returned at once to the Textus Receptus, so that the work of his predecessor was not of much use to him.

On December 26, 1858, a letter was written to the British and Foreign Bible Society, stating that Dr. Van Dyck was busily engaged on the new version, and that the New Testament would be finished in two years. On September 15, 1864, Dr. Van Dyck himself reported the translation of the Bible complete. This work was initiated by the American Bible Society, but from the first the translator was in correspondence with the British and Foreign, which was permitted to share in the work. The two societies co-operated in the most friendly spirit, the American Bible Society presenting the British and Foreign with a set of the Unvowelled Bible, and receiving in turn from the older society duplicate plates of the Vowelled Bible.

The laborious work of editing the new Bible in its various editions was undertaken by the translator. He returned to America for that purpose, and spent two years in New York in superintending the preparation of electro-type plates for two 8vo editions, one vowelled and one plain.

While engaged in editing the Bible, Dr. Van Dyck acted as professor of Hebrew in Union Theological Seminary, where he was offered the permanent professorship, but he returned to his mission work, and became a professor in the Syrian Protestant College, founded at Beyrout at that time. In this new college he taught astronomy, chemistry, and the theory and practice of medicine, and in addition he visited the hospital twice a week.

He often preached in English and Arabic, and, in addition to mission work, he had considerable practice as a doctor, but the great and crowning work of his ripe scholarship was his version of the Arabic Bible.

Dr. Van Dyck, in carrying out his important work, took full advantage of the labours of his predecessors, and he consulted Arabic scholars, both native and foreign, and collated their criticisms, but the great Arabic Bible, which has rendered all further translation of the Scriptures into Arabic superfluous, is an abiding monument of his scholarship and industry alone.

The Van Dyck Bible carries God's message to the Arab race, and all who are able to read the Koran can read it easily. When Henry Martyn began his version of the New Testament, by the help of Sabat, he said, "We will begin to preach to Arabia, Syria, Persia, Tartary, part of India and China, half of Africa, all the sea coast of the Mediterranean, and Turkey, and one tongue shall suffice for them all." Arabic is spoken over a vast area. It is pleasant to know that Dr. Van Dyck is still at Beyrout engaged in his beneficent work, and though he has passed the limit of threescore years and ten, he is still young in heart and fresh in thought.

William Wright, D.D.

MR. LANE AT BASINGSTOKE.

On Sunday, Jan. 7, was commenced at the Drill Hall, Basingstoke (a building capable of containing about 1000 people), a united Evangelistic Mission, promoted by the ministers of the different Free Churches in the town. The hall has been completely packed at the evening meetings, and the afternoon Bible readings have been so well attended that room could not be found in the Masonic Hall, and the meeting had to be transferred to the Drill Hall.

The preachers' expositions of Hosea xi. have been felt by many to have been a daily fund of great help in, and incidental to, increased Christian activity. A large choir occupied the stage, and led the singing of the sacred melodies. Mr. Lane was assisted by Mr. Alfred J. Mayers, a Gospel soloist, whose ministry of song was greatly appreciated.

The opening address of the Mission was taken from the parable of the dry bones, and the subject, "There was no breath in them," was the keynote of the Mission, the preacher throughout the mission dealing with terrible emphasis on the awful mockery of a Christless religion, a religion based on the shadow without the substance—a profession merely without the possession of real living vital union with Christ.

Night by night anxious inquirers were found clinging to the cross of Jesus, and going away with rest and peace in their souls. Many also at the afternoon meetings were found inquiring mournfully the way of salvation. On Friday evening there were nearly 1200 people present, the adjoining hall being utilised to accommodate those anxious to listen to the Gospel story.

The interest culminated to a point on Sunday week, when an overflow meeting had to be held at the Town Hall, and when this also was filled, hundreds were unable to gain admission, and this notwithstanding that rain fell during the evening. This Mission has undoubtedly been an epoch-making event in the religous life of the town. The quiet earnestness and determination of those engaged in the prepartory work has been very marked. There had been a thorough organisation of all available forces, under the leadership of Dr. Barnes, M.A., minister of the Countess of Huntingdon Church, acting secretary.

Mr. Lane has met with an enthusiastic reception, and in every respect has proved himself an ideal missioner.

The farewell meeting was held at the Corn Exchange, and was chiefly directed to those who had decided to lead a new life, whom he earnestly and affectionately urged at once to connect themselves with some Christian congregation.

H. Adams, Wesleyan Church.
J. Barnes, Countess of Huntingdon.
F. Evans, Primitive Methodist.
Capes Tarbolton, Congregational Church.

BRISTOL.—In connection with the Gospel Mission being held by Mr. Henry Varley in this city, a conference on the increase and deepening of spiritual life will be held next Monday, 29th inst., in Bethesda Chapel, Park-street. There will be meetings at 7 and 11 a.m. and 3 and 7 p.m. The special topic of consideration for the day will be "The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit."

FOREIGN AID SOCIETY.

The Foreign Aid Society has for more than fifty years done good work in helping Gospel work in France, Italy, Belgium, and Spain. The last report gives extracts from some deeply interesting letters received from French pastors. Here is a "practical incident":—

"A miner returning after long absence to his own neighbourhood, having in the course of his wanderings been evangelised and converted, embarks in a small trade. His Roman Catholic neighbours soon learn that every evening he reads the Bible and has family prayers. Attracted first by curiosity, they are soon touched by this evidence of faith as well as by the power of the Word of God. They attend in increased numbers, until at length the neighbouring pastor is summoned, and the people hasten to hear him. The result is that in this village there is now quite an interesting work."

Among the several agencies to which assistance is given is the Protestant Committee of Lyons, for the evangelisation of the inhospitable "Felix Neff Valleys" of the High and Lower Alps. Of Dormilheuse we read: "The population is annually diminished through death and emigration, while the birth rate is less. Pastor Liotard visits the place once a month, summer and winter, and in the latter season the journey, always long and trying, is not unattended with danger. The Roman Catholic schoolmistress complains of the impossibility of being able to give efficient religious teaching to the children, and it seems as if intellectual, religious, and even animal life were becoming extinct in these regions, so that in a few years the death-like silence will only be broken by the cry of the eagle and the thunder of the avalanche. At Les Violins, amid the fragile houses of La Combe, on which the sun only shines for two hours in summer, and never in winter, the wretched inhabitants are glad to send their children to the school kept by Madame Baridon, wife of the National schoolmaster. The average number of children is about thirty-five."

The secretary of the Foreign Aid Society is Rev. H. J. Browne, M.A., vicar of Christ Church, Barnet, N. The lady assistant-secretary, Miss Sophia Burgess, Redleaf, Greyhound-lane, Streatham Common, S.W., will be glad to send to applicants particulars of a prayer Union associated with the Society.

THE GOSPEL IN BOHEMIA.

Writing to Rev. George H. Giddens, Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society, Rev. J. S. Porter, of Prague, says:—

"Some interesting things are happening in our work. A book publisher, who has been awakened by attending our meetings, has begun to publish the Bible in divisions or parts, each part to cost about one halfpenny. It will be advertised extensively, and will be for sale on every bookstall in Bohemia. We cannot but hope and pray that God will own this effort to the good of many souls.

"The building in Husinec is nearly ready. In the spring we hope to begin work in the house of John Huss, if some friends come forward with the needed help. The building is good, and the park adjoining is exceedingly beautiful, both of them our property; and many will hear the Gospel from that place who are residents of other places, for thousands go thither to see the place where John Huss was born. The preacher and his wife will be light-bearers in this darkest corner of Bohemia."

This work at Husinec, as at Prague, and many other towns in Bohemia, is largely dependent upon the help of the Evangelical Continental Society. The story of the revival, through its means, of Evangelical religion, in the land of the reformer and martyr, John Huss, is one of the most romantic in missionary annals, and yet at the present moment, when these cheering doings come to hand, instead of being able to prosecute the good work with increased vigour, so great is the depression of the Society's funds that grants made annually at this season, to old and worthy workers, have to be withheld.

THE STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT for foreign missions will hold its second International Convention at Detroit, Michigan, February 28-March 4. Between six hundred and one thousand delegates are expected.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOURERS IN BRISTOL.

PROBABLY the largest Christian Endeavour gathering that has yet come together on this side of the Atlantic took place in Bristol on January 16; nor was it lacking in enthusiasm and spiritual fervour. Advantage was taken of the presence of the Endeavour Council, which had arranged to hold its quarterly meeting in the Western City, to inaugurate the recently formed "Bristol and District Christian Endeavour Union." If the early promise is realised in after days, the Bristol Union has before it a future of widely extended usefulness.

A happy foretaste of the evening gathering was provided at the social tea and reunion which took place in Broadmead schoolroom, when the members of the Council met the officers and friends of the local Union. The public meeting was held in the chapel itself, a spacious building seating 1600 persons. Before the appointed time the word was passed round, "Crowded out," and it was stated by the pastor of the church that fully two thousand persons were present. These were mostly young people, and afforded an inspiring and thrilling spectacle.

The chair was taken by the president of the Bristol Union, Mr. J. JAMES, in whom Christian Endeavour has a sympathetic and eloquent advocate. After singing and prayer the chairman gave his address, in which he stated that they were gathered for two purposes:—first, to welcome the Christian Endeavour council to Bristol, and secondly, to inaugurate the local union. It appears that there are in the union forty societies, with about fifteen hundred members, and belonging to almost every Evangelical body of Christians in the district. Church of England, Wesleyan, Presbyterian, Congregationalist societies meet in the Endeavour Union on common ground.

Alderman F. F. BELSEY, of Rochester, was the next speaker. His earnest words were wise and weighty, and full of spiritual power. Speaking of some perils that might possibly lie in the path of the movement, he urged young Endeavourers to be faithful to the Church and denomination to which they belonged. The motto of the Society was "For Christ and His Church," and that meant, first of all, the local church with which they were connected. Mr. Belsey further said that the societies did not exist to minister to the amusement of the members, not only to bring Christian gladness into their lives, but to train them for service, that they might go forth to witness for the Master, to do the work of Christ in the world.

Rev. E. ABBOTT, of Birmingham, took as his subject "An Appeal to the Churches." It was eminently desirable, for the sake of the young people themselves, that the Church should put forth its energies to win and retain them; it was also desirable for the sake of the Church. Speaking of the many young persons who drift out of the Sunday-school into the world instead of into the Church, Mr. Abbott said the Sunday-school was too often made a thoroughfare, rather than a home. To save the churches from exhaustion, stagnation, and finally extinction, they must replenish their numbers from the ranks of the young people. The Christian Endeavour Society was calculated to meet this want. Already there were 28,000 of these societies, with 1,800,000 members. In four years 400,000 young people had been drafted from the societies into church membership, of whom 158,000 were transferred in the one year from July, 1892, to July, 1893. These were eloquent figures, and evidently delighted as well as surprised a large proportion of the audience.

Rev. W. KNIGHT CHAPLIN, of London, secretary to the Christian Endeavour Council, spoke mainly of the progress of Christian Endeavour in Great Britain and Ireland. The population of the country, he said, was increasing at the rate of a Birmingham a year, and that one fact declared that the Church that most assiduously gave itself to winning the young for Christ would be likely to bear most fruit in the future. On this account the Y.P.S.C.E. had received a warm welcome. In the first four years they had in the British section registered 425 societies; the next year, 1893, they had added to these 579 new societies, or in one year considerably more than doubled the results of four. The year 1893 was closed with 1004 registered societies, and since the new year they had added at the rate of three societies per day. Christian Endeavour had had a cradle: it would never have a coffin; it sought a crown.

Rev. JOSEPH B. MORGAN, of Chester, Chairman of the National Council, then took charge of the meeting for the purpose of conducting a Consecration Service. After prayer by the pastor of the church, Rev. D. J. Hiley, Mr. Morgan explained the nature of a Consecration Service. Then followed the roll call. Nearly forty societies responded with verse of Scripture, or hymn breathing the spirit of consecration. When St. Luke's, Bedminster, Church of England Society, gave its message, the whole audience rose and sang Fawcett's well-known words:—

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love,
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

Responses were also made by the ministers present, hundreds of Sunday-school teachers joining in the act. The whole audience sang the favourite hymn, "God be with you till we meet again;" with hand clasped in hand all over the building the Mizpah was repeated, the Benediction pronounced, and the great assembly melted away. But its fruits will abide.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING IN CORK.

FROM time to time lately we have noted the efforts made by some Christian friends in Cork to preach the Gospel in the open air, and the opposition shown by a certain section of the Romish populace. That was only in keeping with the well-understood tenets and tactics of Roman Catholic ecclesiastics, who claim and exercise on their own behalf all the liberties granted by the free constitution of this realm, but who do not scruple to refuse such liberty to others when they can safely attempt to do so.

Now, however, the struggle for freedom in Cork seems to have assumed another phase. The authorities, whose duty it is to conserve the equal liberties of all the Queen's subjects, appear to have resolved in Cork to restrict that liberty so far as the open-air preachers are concerned. When we remember that political gatherings and demonstrations are allowed to be held freely in the principal streets without hindrance on the part of the police, their action seems all the more extraordinary.

An esteemed correspondent in the South of Ireland, writing to us on this subject, says:—

"The scenes in Cork are exactly what the workers foresaw, and prepared themselves for; that is, so far as the mob is concerned. They expected worse treatment, in fact. But that the police should interfere when the people's opposition is passing away, and drive the preachers first from the standing given them by the Mayor, a R.C., with his guarantee of non-interruption; and then when they found sanctuary elsewhere in private ground, drive the people away from hearing the Gospel—for this they could not be prepared. If the preachers have broken the law, why are they not summoned and properly tried for it? It certainly makes one's blood boil with indignation that in a nominally free country, just because Jesus Christ and Him crucified is the theme, the executors of the law should break the law to repress the Gospel.

"The same kind of thing is being done all about Ireland by the Irish Evangelisation Society, and the Irish Church Mission, without hindrance from mob or police. If this is lawful work, and because a mob chooses to make a noise and throw mud, why should the police attack the innocent and spare the guilty? . . . The day we have long prayed for is dawning in Ireland, and before we know it the whole land will stand wide open for the evangelists. Many signs are seen already that the change has begun. This is the best of them all—the street preaching in 'rebel Cork.'"

LAST SUNDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

On Sunday afternoon, says the Dublin Daily Express of Monday, on the resumption of street-preaching in Cork, a series of most regrettable and tumultuous scenes were witnessed. The preachers were warned beforehand by the constabulary that their meeting would be treated as an unlawful assembly, as an information had been sworn that it would cause riot and disturbance if held, and the preachers were called upon, as law-abiding citizens, to desist from attending such a meeting if held. Sharp at 3 o'clock the preachers, headed by Rev. F. W. Ainley, of the Free Church, and Pastor M'Cracken, of the Baptist Church, Colonel Doran, and Mr. Geo. Williams, of Dublin, assembled at the Free Church parsonage prior to marching into the streets. They were immediately surrounded by a crowd of immense dimensions and pelted with mud, while nearly every one of the band was assaulted. On emerging on the Infirmary-road a continuous shower of street refuse was poured upon the party, Mr. Ainley and Mr. M'Cracken being struck several times, the former on the head and the latter on the face. The evangelists then walked to their usual rendezvous in Anglesea-street, surrounded by the crowd, which was most disorderly. A large force of police, under County Inspector Gibbons, District Inspectors Davis, Concannon, Creach, and Morrison, now came up, and at once moved the preachers on amid a scene of great excitement and disorder. The missioners offered but little resistance, and, surrounded by policemen and followed by a howling mob, they walked back to the Free Church yard, and mounting a platform inside the boundary wall, they opened their service by singing a hymn. Mr. Ainley then engaged in prayer, and Colonel Doran and others spoke, but their voices were drowned by the shouting of the crowd. The police moved about the streets, and acted with great forbearance in the discharge of a most difficult duty. The meeting having ended, the preachers retired into St. John's Hall, to the rear of the church, but the crowd showed no disposition to disperse.

The constabulary endeavoured to clear the thoroughfare, but owing to the immense numbers of people that were in the vicinity it was impossible to do more than keep a clear passage along the roadway. After about fifteen minutes had elapsed a number of the preachers were seen to come along the south terrace in the direction of George's Quay. The crowd, numbering several hundreds, at once went in pursuit, and came up with them alongside of Buckingham House Free School. Owing to the fact that the police had not expected the preachers would take the route they did, there was hardly a constable present at this time to protect the evangelists, and they were assailed with great ferocity by the mob. They were kicked and beaten very severely, and copiously covered with mud.

When opposite the South Parish Presbytery the crowd became furious. At this stage Rev. Father Daly rushed out of the Presbytery, and interposed to save a young gentleman named Jagoe, who was in great peril. Father Daly, with great difficulty, got through the mob, got his arms around Mr. Jagoe, and managed to get him into the Presbytery. The scene that followed almost baffles description. With great difficulty Father Daly kept the crowd at bay, and three mounted policemen coming on the scene a minute later, an open space was cleared in front of the Presbytery. A number of foot-policemen arriving shortly afterwards, steps were at once taken to clear the thoroughfares, but the crowd was so determined in its hostility that it remained some distance away, and finally it was deemed necessary to carry Mr. Jagoe to his residence on a side car, which had to be guarded by three horse-policemen. Meanwhile an immense crowd had collected upon the South Mall, and as some of the evangelists were passing along to the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, escorted by constabulary, there was considerable commotion. The mob yelled and hooted until they were hoarse, and would undoubtedly have wrecked the headquarters of the evangelists were it not for the presence of the police. The mounted police trotted along the streets, clearing the people away, while the foot-police were also seen engaged in the same work. For a long time there was much excitement, and several stampedes took place. It was stated that a preacher returning home over Parliament Bridge was waylaid and most roughly used during the evening. Before the streets again wore their normal appearance darkness had set in.

It is but fair to state that to-day's as well as previous Sunday's meetings were not suppressed by an order from Dublin Castle, as many were led to believe, but the local authorities took what action they deemed necessary upon their own responsibility.

MR. THOMAS CONNELLAN, OF DUBLIN, has published another little book called "Landmarks," which contains a number of the articles he has contributed to the Catholic. In a strong but kindly way, he brings many Romish doctrines to the touch-stones of Scripture and of fact. We hope the booklet, which only costs 6d., will have a free circulation among his Roman Catholic fellow countrymen. We learn with much pleasure from the introduction that they are in daily increasing numbers turning to the Bible for guidance. Indeed some of the priests are now advising their flocks to read the Scriptures.

OUR VILLAGES.

Ever since the Conference held on Village Mission Work last spring in London, the Lord has been pleased to greatly bless the efforts put forth to extend his Kingdom. A great number of meetings have been held in some of the darkest and most needy villages, which have been largely attended. Numbers of people have stood to listen, often for hours at a time, as the Gospel has been sung and preached to them. One's heart is greatly cheered to see the interest and ready ear of those who listen. Would that more of the Lord's people might be led to go forth and labour in these outlying districts, where souls are hungering for the bread of life.

We are now holding a special mission of 100 days' meetings, endeavouring to follow up the open-air services of the past summer. God is giving great blessing to the Word preached, and we earnestly ask the prayers of all his servants that as we go from village to village his power may more and more be put forth. Aston Clinton, Aylesbury, Winchendon, Claydon have now been visited with mission services, varying from eight to ten days, and we go on every night until April, when the weather will be suitable to recommence the open-air work. Among the labourers are the Honourable Cecilia Parnell, Messrs. W. Luff, A. J. Fisher. Mr. W. Monro Collings and others are to follow.

In addition to meetings held, every house in each place is visited with Christian books, and people personally dealt with. The importance of individual work cannot be over-estimated; it must always tell, and result in blessing. The need of to-day is not so much preaching as getting people to decide individually for Christ. J. E. Taylor.

Aylesbury, Bucks.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

The New Year's prayer meeting in connection with the seven homes and open-all-night refuge of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution was held at Exeter Hall last week. Mr. George Williams presided, and addressed a few hearty words of cheer and encouragement to the voluntary workers and others, who more than crowded out the council chamber.

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, of South Kensington, gave a New Year's address. He spoke with much power upon the nature and conditions of the "perfect heart." The deep earnest spirit manifested promises well for the spiritual as well as the temporal work of the homes during this present year.

Mr. W. J. Taylor, who succeeded the late Mr. E. W. Thomas as secretary, gave a brief account of the past year's labours, and drew special attention to one of the most hopeful signs in connection with the missionary work carried on, viz., that of 967 young women and girls who were admitted to the homes, etc., in 1893, 551 were "preventive" cases. During the year several special gifts were sent as expressions of confidence in the executive at the time when, through the death of Mr. E. W. Thomas, the founder and secretary of the society, they were face to face with a crisis in the history of the work.

Upwards of 3,000 Gospel services, Bible, temperance, and other classes were held during the year. The committee rightly feel that whatever good is accomplished by the moral reformation of those under their care (and there is much to thank God for) they have failed in the higher sense unless the seed of Divine truth has been so implanted in the hearts of the inmates that through God's mercy in Christ Jesus they become saved for time and eternity. Mr. Taylor will be glad to furnish further information and send reports, etc., to any who for the purpose will communicate with him at 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

THE STUNDISTS.—A Moscow correspondent telegraphs:—The Minister of Public Worship, M. Pobiedonostseff, in answer to inquiries from the educational authorities of the southern provinces as to what course should be pursued when the children of Stundists attending the national schools refuse to attend the instruction in religion, and to cross themselves before the icons, has just replied that Stundist children must be made to observe rigorously all Orthodox religious observances practised in the school, and that non-compliance must be punished with immediate expulsion from the schools.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

Miss Geraldine Guinness, who is so soon to leave for China, in an address gives the following warning concerning the necessity for getting reliable evidence on the opium question:—

Our Government officials, who give us reports and statistics about this opium question, say some very strange things, and you see in the papers to-day a great many arguments that appear cogent; but I would give you an earnest word of warning about being careful as to what you believe. Most amazing are the warped views and mistaken impressions that even honest-minded Government officials may put forward in this matter. I travelled from China to England with the Chief Justice of the settlement of Hong Kong, a baronet who has represented the Government for twenty-five years in that district. This gentleman, with whom I had many long conversations, held certain very strange views upon the opium question—some of them quite inexplicable. For example, he told me that he knew for a fact that women never smoked opium in China! He said that he had heard of enthusiastic missionaries at Exeter Hall talking about opium-smoking among the women of China, but that he had been in that country for twenty-five years, and he knew for a fact they never smoked!

A statement more absolutely false and mistaken could scarcely be made! We have seen, in the opium-growing districts of China, that the women smoke it almost as much as the men; but when I tried to put this before him, he said that he could not believe it, because in all his twenty-five years of observation he had never come across a single case! Does it not show that we only see what we bring eyes to see, and that it is possible even for honest-minded men to live for a quarter of a century in the very midst of the evil without really observing it at all? So be careful how you believe what is stated in the papers. Get reliable evidence. And, dear friends, can you hope for more reliable evidence than that of men and women who have dwelt amongst the people, and whose whole lives are given to their salvation; who have wept beside their death-beds, and listened to the outpouring of broken hearts; who have gone in and out of their homes with the utmost freedom, and have been burdened beyond anything that you can ever know with the sins and sorrows of their hearts.

Mr. Thomas H. King, who has been nearly ten years in China, and more than three years of the time at Ping-Yang-fu, writes:—

"In one home known to me in Ping-yang, South Shansi, the home of Evangelist Li, there were four women at one time habitual opium smokers, viz. his mother, wife, daughter, and daughter-in-law. When Mr. Li married, his wife was not an opium smoker, but acquired the habit through helping to prepare the opium for her mother-in-law to smoke. In another home, that of a Manchu official named Shu, his three daughters smoke, and also his son, whose misdeeds caused his father to lose his office. In another house a woman and her married daughter are both opium sots. The above cases, personally known to me, are typical of tens of thousands of homes in China."

Mrs. King writes:—"From personal knowledge gained by visiting the houses in the street in which we lived in the city of Ping-yang, I can say that there are about fifty women in that one street (of about 100 yards in length), who are opium smokers."

A BIBLE CLASS FOR YOUNG MEN.

The Abbey-road, St. John's Wood, Young Men's Bible Class has been enjoying much prosperity. For nearly two years it has continuously studied on Sunday afternoons the Life of Jesus Christ, under the wise and sympathetic guidance of Mr. M. Green. The papers read by the members are of a high order. Mr. F. Gold, taking charge of the "Geography," has rendered great help; Mr. Collette has unfolded from time to time "the Parables"; the Pastor, Rev. H. E. Stone, has dealt with "Doctrine."

The continued interest and success of the class is another proof of the never-failing attraction of the Bible.

DURING A TRIAL at the Middlesex Sessions, a public-house valuer said the usual profits of a publican were 50 per cent., while in tied houses they were only 20 per cent.

A TEETOTAL JUBILEE.

On Monday evening an exceedingly edifying and buoyant gathering took place at the hall of the Christian Community in Bethnal Green. The occasion was the teetotal jubilee of Mr. James Atkinson, the secretary. Congratulatory letters were read from Mr. George Williams, the president, and others, including greetings in verse from Mr. Barry Wake. Mr. Wm. Noble spoke some wholesome words as to present-day tendencies. One of these is the transference of attention from the individual to the community and to the caucus. Even the County Council is not the Kingdom of Heaven. Some of those who know most about physiology are among the worst drunkards. We must deal with intemperance first and chiefly as sin against God, and then fight it in its first causes in the individual and in the home.

Mr. Atkinson gave an epitome of the temperance and total abstinence movement for the past fifty years, instructive to the young and interesting to the veterans. A stream of testimony flowed from these latter:—Messrs. Seaward, 76 years old, a life abstainer; Turner, Aylesbury, a teetotaler 59 years; Minter, age 70, abstainer 55 and his wife 63—118 years of teetotal life; Warsley, age 76, abstainer 60; Bowen, age 74, abstainer 54. But it was the Christian backbone in these remarkable men that was so striking. Every one spoke as an out-and-out Christian first, and an out-and-out teetotaler second, and the grit and persistence and the high quality manifested in them would give power to any cause.

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.

May I, through you, tell all the friends of our Mission, how graciously the Lord has prospered us in sending us just the right men wanted for the pioneer work in Tibet? It has been most encouraging to see how one after another has come forward, and in a way that has satisfied both themselves and us that they have been truly led of God to this difficult sphere of work. More than three times the number asked for have offered, but in the other cases the way has not seemed clear.

The names of those composing the band are as follows:—Mr. and Mrs. Ewan Mackenzie (with their child), Jensen, Johansen, Lövrensen, Ahmundsen, Stumbles, Arnott, Morges, Soutter, and Neave. They come from the following places:—Dingwall, Peterhead, Aberdeen, Dunfermline, Lochgelly, London, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. Coming as they mostly do from the north, they are more or less inured to a cold climate.

May we hope that all friends interested in getting the Gospel into Tibet will come and see the faces of our brethren at our farewell meeting at Exeter Hall on February 16. Annie R. Taylor.

Ayres Villa, Church-road, Upper Norwood, S.E.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

A sermon in aid of this Society was preached at the Sunday morning service in Rathfarnham Church, Dublin, by Canon Neligan, who took for his text Eph. iv. 11, 12, "He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the work of the ministry, for edifying of the body of Christ." The preacher pointed out that the clergy could not do all the work, and the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland came in and helped by their agents to spread the truths of the Gospel throughout the land. Through this means many souls have been led to Christ. These agents were not allowed to enter into controversy, their mission being to teach a full salvation. The Society had between forty and fifty agents doing this work, but they should have at least 100 of these men engaged in itinerant work; for there were many places vacant where men of humble station in life could spread the Gospel among people of their own rank. The Society wanted more help to do this, and he was sure that the members of the Church of Ireland would liberally assist in providing means to further the cause of Christ and his Kingdom.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—Branches have been formed at Taunton, Exeter, Plymouth, Devonport, Crown Hill (artillery depôt for the Western District), Tregantle Fort, and Bodmin. The seven Y.M.C.A.'s are heartily co-operating in the work, and transferring time-expired Christian soldiers to their membership.

THE NEW HEBRIDES.

THERE is pleasant news from the island of Ambrim, one of the New Hebrides group in the South Pacific Ocean, which the Presbyterians of Scotland, Canada, and Australasia are civilising. Little more than a year ago, Dr. Lamb, graduate of Edinburgh University, was landed on the beach, not without misgivings, among a crowd of naked savages. Thanks partly to the temporary efforts of two brothers named Murray, from Aberdeen, and soon to his own medical skill and Christian teaching, Dr. Lamb reports the results of a year's work, in spite of a hurricane which destroyed some of it, as four churches, five more about to be built, thirty-seven villages brought under his influence, and half the island changed. Dr. Lamb's best assistants have been natives who returned from Queensland, where they became Christians. His industrial mission has so succeeded that the colonial labour vessels can no longer tempt the young men to leave the island. The hospital is famed far and near.

Ambrim is the "gem" of the group, being a paradise of cocoanut palms, with the smaller sister isle of Aoba by its side; Minnar Peak, behind the mission station, is the centre of the group, used by H.M.S. Dart as the point for fixing the position of the other islands. There are eight thousand inhabitants, whose customs are of interest to ethnologists. Caste prevails in a curious form. The natives are divided into social grades called "Mels," each with its own hall, fire, and fruit trees; wealth is reckoned by the number of pigs, and by these ascent into a higher grade can be purchased. This leads to enterprise and thrift, and this worship of ambition is described as the only idolatry. Morally, too, the effect is good. Dr. Lamb and his assistants have never lost a pin, though for a year at the mercy of the people. Poisoning is the form of witchcraft that prevails, and this is giving way to the Scottish doctor's art.—Aberdeen Free Press.

GIRLS' ORPHAN HOMES, KILBURN.

A FEW years ago there appeared in THE CHRISTIAN a biographical sketch, with portrait, of the late Miss M. A. Cole, the founder of the Mount Hermon Homes, and at the close of it the editor said: "The responsibility resting upon Miss Cole's successor is no light one, and we fervently hope she will be encouraged and sustained by the practical sympathy of many friends."

This forecast as to the burden resting on Mrs. Parry's shoulders has been abundantly fulfilled, and although she has been graciously helped of God, and sustained in her work, she has had many severe trials of her faith, and much exercise of mind as to the carrying on of the work. Now there is special need for the prayerful sympathy and liberal help of the Lord's stewards in some unavoidable expenses that have devolved upon her. In the summer of 1892, Praise Cottage, at West Hampstead, built as an additional home by the late founder, had to be vacated, as it was unsafe for the children to remain in it. The London County Council have compelled her to pull down and rebuild the back part of the house, as being a "dangerous structure." This will probably cost over £100, besides the constant needs for the current general expenses—winter clothing, etc.

Owing to the long-continued financial depression, Mrs. Parry has been greatly tried by the falling off of subscriptions, so many of her supporters having met with heavy pecuniary losses through the recent failures of the Liberator and kindred companies. She writes: "We have one hundred orphans to feed and clothe, and I have never known a year in which I have had more applications for admission, many of which are very distressing cases that I shall gladly admit when able to do so."

I would earnestly ask the help of your readers on behalf of this important work, which has been little brought before public notice, but is none the less deserving of the warm and continual support of Christian friends.—Yours faithfully,

36, Baker-street, W. JAMES E. HAWKINS.

KING'S CROSS.—Bethel Chapel, Lavina-grove, Wharfdale-road, after being closed for some time, has been reopened for evangelistic work. A Christian band have met for some time past once a week at the house of one of their number for prayer and fellowship, and the above place being to let it was secured for a term in order to commence work in a neighbourhood noted for vice and sin. At the inaugural meeting, Mr. W. Seaman presided, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. Stanley Tape, H. W. Whittenbury, Pastor J. T. Mateer, and Mr. B. Edmonds. Workers are needed to aid in the preaching of the Gospel, Sunday-school, Gospel temperance meetings, and Band of Hope. The secretary is H. J. Stratton, 36, Pembroke-street, Islington, N.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

REV. W. H. MORRISON, of Kilcullen, Ireland, has brought to a close a five days' mission in conection with the Holyhead Branch of the Railway Mission. Many of the Lord's people in different parts of the country have been praying that there might be an awakening in Holyhead as in other places. Truly God has answered prayer, and the Holy Spirit has been working in the hearts of many.

On Sunday, Jan. 14, Mr. Morrison preached on the healing power of Christ, both morning and evening, at St. Skiol's Church, to large congregations, who seemed to drink in every word of the Gospel message. From Monday to Friday he held two services each day, that in the afternoon being held at The Welcome, and the evening meeting in the British School. Never before have we seen this place so roused and the people so eager to hear the good news of salvation, which has been so faithfully, earnestly, and clearly preached.

Numbers of the railwaymen, with their wives and families, have regularly attended. Temperance alone was not taken up as a special subject, but Gospel temperance was most impressively laid before the people. God's children, too, have had a message and a call to work. May many come forward to help in the Railway Mission, for helpers are sadly needed, and the work great! C.

OCEAN STEAMERS AND THE LORD'S DAY.

CAPTAIN HOYER, a Norwegian who has travelled much over the world, writes as follows to a friend on this subject:—

"I see from the papers that God seems to be dealing earnestly with England now, and that this labour question and coal war have caused much distress. Might not one reason be that those owning English steamers have provoked God's anger by their reckless use of Sabbaths, especially in the vessels trading round the whole world? I have often thought when I saw English steamers in foreign ports loading and discharging without the least regard for the Sabbath, and using the nights too, very much, which God surely intended for rest and sleep, that every hour they in such manner are stealing from the Lord, He will make them pay back by letting their steamers lie idle for days, and weeks, and months. And is not this the case now? God's laws can never be transgressed without punishment.

"Many of these steamers are no doubt partly owned by Christian men. They are themselves keeping the Lord's Day holy, and living earnest and upright Christian lives, but they should remember the steamers they have shares in, and think of what they are doing. All Christians who have more or less to do with shares and partnerships should draw back from such alliances, and unite to carry on trade on true Christian principles, that would recognise God's wise laws for this life. God will bless six days' work, but not the seventh."

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT is making considerable progress throughout Ireland, and there are comparatively few parishes in which no organisation exists to promote the cause of total abstinence; but in spite of all that is done, drink remains the curse of the Emerald Isle, and the drink bill exceeds by more than a million of money the total sum paid in rent by Irish tenants.

SHEFFIELD LODGING-HOUSE MISSION.—A public meeting, held on Saturday week in the Y.M.C.A. Lecture Hall, was addressed by Rev. John Slater, who spoke to the workers, giving them great encouragement in labour for the Master. The chairman gave his experience as a former worker in this branch. The report given by the hon. sec., Mr. A. Shipman, showed that for twenty-six weeks there had been forty-five meetings held in the houses of the city, with 800 inmates. There are twenty-eight workers in this department. In these branches several conversions and twelve temperance pledges have been taken. Hundreds of tracts and booklets have been used and well received. On Friday last they entertained also 113 of the male inmates to a tea provided by the workers and friends.

"OUR OWN MISSION," Gee-street, Goswell-road, is carried on by a few Christian young women, commenced a few years ago in a basement room. It was ere long necessary to enlarge. By-and-by, a vacant hall in Gee-street being to let, the workers seized the opportunity and engaged it. Here a most interesting work is now being carried on. The hall, which holds about 200, is nearly filled on Wednesday evening by adults, many of whom have been spiritually blessed and led to seek the Saviour. The children's meetings are also largely attended. On Sundays a school is conducted, and in the evening a Gospel service for adults. The helpers visit the homes around every week and render help to the sick and destitute. A report will shortly be issued by Miss Madell, 102, Pentonville-road, Islington, N.—E. G. C.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

THE conferences on practical current questions at Wycliffe Hall proved so successful last term that another series will follow during this term.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey has concluded a mission to men at the Y.M.C.A., whereon God manifestly set his seal of blessing in the decision for Christ of a number of men.

Rev. F. S. Webster, of Birmingham, addressed a gathering at St. Aldate's last week (the parish of which he was formerly curate), and gave an interesting account of work in Birmingham.

The list of speakers at the weekly meeting of the University Missionary Union includes the names of Bishop Tucker and Dr. J. G. Paton. It will be an especial privilege to hear the last named, whose life and work are so widely known and honoured.

The meetings held in connection with the week of prayer were very well attended, and were representative of the various Evangelical churches. The monthly meeting of the Oxford Prayer Union, which originated after Mr. Moody's last visit, has been largely instrumental during the past year in fostering the spirit of united prayer in Oxford.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University sermon was preached in Great St. Mary's, by Rev. H. Latham, Master of Trinity Hall.

Dr. Cunningham, of Great St. Mary's, has been appointed Rural Dean, in the place of Rev. J. Barton, resigned.

Principal J. Oswald Dykes delivered, on Sunday evening, in the Downing-street Presbyterian Church, the fourth of his lectures on the history of Presbyterianism, the subject being, "The Westminster Assembly of Divines." The Presbyterians of Cambridge may be congratulated upon the energy they are manifesting under their new ministry, and upon the interest taken in this course of lectures.

At the usual Sunday evening meeting of the Intercollegiate Christian Union, Rev. H. C. G. Moule gave an address on the words, "We have found Him." Very beautifully was the thought of the progressiveness of the grace in Jesus Christ expanded—progressive in its appropriation by, and practical power to, the believer. "We have an El Dorado at the outset," said Principal Moule, "but the development of its resources is gradual." Then followed a most impressive account of the speaker's conversion, related in a manner that must have arrested the heart and mind of many a hearer.

On Monday evening Rev. J. Barton, of Holy Trinity, gave a farewell address to the members of the Cambridge Missionary Union. He chose as his subject, "The History of the C.M.U." This body dates its origin to the visit of David Livingstone to Cambridge in 1857, since which date it has made notable progress in numbers, influence, enterprise, and zeal. The building of the Henry Martyn Hall marked an epoch in its history, in the year 1887, as evidenced by the following facts:—Between 1857 and 1887 sixty-five Cambridge men went to the foreign field, giving an average of two per annum; between 1887 and 1894 seventy-five men have gone out, the yearly average of departures since the building of the hall being no less than ten. The erection of the hall is mainly due to the laudable and unremitting efforts of Rev. J. Barton.

Rev. C. J. Proctor, Vicar of St. Peter's, Islington, has been appointed Vicar of Holy Trinity, in succession to Rev. J. Barton. He is expected to commence his duties here at the end of February, There is considerable satisfaction on the part of worshippers at the realisation that old methods of work and worship will not be discarded at the advent of a new pastor. There is much room for gratitude in the happy arrangement that has been arrived at between Rev. H. C. G. Moule and Mr. Proctor. At least, as far as the immediate future goes, the Principal of Ridley is to continue to occupy the pulpit on Sunday evenings. The interrogative clause of St. Matthew xix. 4, "Have ye not read?" was the text chosen by Mr. Moule on Sunday evening for a striking and timely sermon. This discourse is the first of a series to be preached throughout this term upon the Holy Scriptures, particularly regarded in their relationship to the testimony of Jesus Christ concerning them. To members of the University this course of sermons will be as helpful as needful.

FRESH EVIDENCE of the cosmopolitan character of the temperance crusade is to be found in the interesting fact that a distinguished Japanese literary man, Mr. M. S. Nakada, of the Johagu Darshi office, Tokio, has requested and obtained the permission of Miss Frances Willard to translate into Japanese that lady's book, "Glimpses of Fifty Years." Mr. Nakada expects to publish the Japanese edition at Tokio early this spring.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago opened, on January 1, the doors of its new building, which with its thirteen stories stands at 153, La Salle street.

Mr. J. Hughes, travelling secretary for France, has just concluded a tour amongst the Associations in the north of that country, and has been greatly encouraged by the work that is being done.

The Calcutta secretary, Mr. J. Campbell White, M.A., has arrived in India and taken up his work in Calcutta; and Mr. G. R. M. Roche has been elected as the first paid secretary of the Bombay Association.

The Rio de Janeiro Association reports that while the work has not been stopped by the Revolution, it has been seriously hindered. Special services during the week of prayer for young men were much blessed.

The Association at the University of Tennessee has now a missionary band of eight, three of whom are volunteers. The Week of Prayer resulted in six conversions and in upwards of fifty students promising to take the higher ground.

Dr. L. W. Munhall writes to the Young Men's Era pointing out that Y.M.C.A's. are peculiarly adapted for evangelistic effort of a special kind, and urging that greater attention should be given to Gospel services in theatres and such resorts.

The annual meeting was held at Abergavenny on the 18th. Much valuable work of an evangelistic character has been done by the Association during the year. On the 4th prox., Mrs. Baeyertz commences a fifteen days' mission under its auspices.

Accounts are to hand from Cape Town of an interesting Christmas breakfast at the Y.M.C.A. A hundred and thirty members and friends sat down, and an address was delivered by the new president of the Association, Mr. Councillor Paterson.

The annual meeting of the Torquay Y.M.C.A., was held on the 15th inst., there being a good attendance of members. The secretary reported an increase of members over last year, and considerable progress in the spiritual work of the Association.

The meetings during the week of prayer in the Southport Y.M.C.A. were smaller than in former years; but were characterised by intense earnestness, much pleading for the manifested power of the Holy Spirit, and believing prayer for a revival of religion.

Dr. Harry Guinness gave on Saturday evening, in connection with the Dublin Y.M.C.A., an address on Social Purity. The Metropolitan Hall was crowded with men, who listened to his strong and serious statements on the ruinous consequences of sin—even in the body—with interest and attention.

It is probable, says the Adelaide Y.M.C.A. Herald, that one of the results of the Jubilee Conference in London in June next, will be that very active measures will be taken to more vigorously prosecute Association work in the Colonies than ever before, and it is proposed to raise a fund for the purpose.

College Associations are actively at work among the young men of forty-seven Ohio institutions, where last year 2500 students were paying members in a student population of 10,851; seven hundred and eighty-nine were enrolled in Bible classes, and 1665 were in weekly attendance upon the Gospel meetings.

A series of services held under the auspices of the Intercollegiate Department of the Philadelphia Association has proved productive of great good. The meetings were held at the Walnut-street Theatre, special speakers being secured. One evening recently Mrs. Ballington Booth addressed an audience composed exclusively of men.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the Walsall Association was held on Thursday in the Temperance Hall, which was crowded, there being an audience of between 800 and 900 people. The Mayor presided, and addresses were delivered by the Archdeacon of London and Major Seton Churchill. The report showed gratifying progress, the membership having doubled during the year; and all branches showing the most decided improvements. Previous to the chair being taken, a short gymnastic display was given by the members in a highly creditable manner.

On Monday, 15th inst., the annual meeting of the Greenwich Association was held in the Lecture Hall in London-street. The president, Mr. S. C. Hatch, occupied the chair. The meeting celebrated the first anniversary of acquisition of the present freehold premises, the inevitable consequence of such a progressive move being a vastly augmented and expanded work. The report evidenced the spiritual activity which, by God's blessing, the members of the Association had, during the past year, been enabled to engage in; over 400 Gospel addresses having been delivered. At the Sunday meetings the audiences were good, and the workers earnest. Success has been courted by the Association, and they have the reward of their labours, for their members' roll has been increased during the year by one-half. Whilst active at home, they are endowed with a missionary spirit, and two more of their members are leaving for the foreign mission field in a few weeks. At Monday's meeting Mr. Geo. Lidgett, L.C.C., Rev. G. S. Reaney, Rev. A. Lowe, and Mr. C. H. Marten (a member of over thirty years' standing) all spoke in encouraging, inspiriting, and go-ahead terms of the great work being done by the Y.M.C.A. men for the King of kings in the Royal Borough of Greenwich.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Brentwood Association held a few days ago its New Year's Party. Rev. W. Legerton and Mrs. Haltridge gave short and suitable addresses. The membership of the Association is now over seventy, and the well-furnished rooms, open every day, are at Ingleside, New-road.

The opening meeting of the York Y.W.C.A. for the New Year, was held on January 10. The meeting room was very full, from sixty to seventy being present. Miss Dodd, the Secretary from Highbury, gave an address on 2 Kings ii. — the steps of the Christian life. On Sunday, the Bible class assembled in a hired room, and Miss Dodd again spoke. About eighty were present.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A Society has been inaugurated at the Lowestoft Congregational Church, with forty-two active and twenty-six associate members.

The North Shields, Howard-street, Society is progressing. Recently the members gave the people of their Mission a free tea and sacred concert.

A very enjoyable evening was lately spent in the schoolroom of the Bible Christian Chapel, Ryde, in connection with the Society, which is flourishing greatly.

The Dublin, Brighton-road, Society, held its New Year's consecration meeting, led by Miss H. Horrell, Rev. C. S. Laird speaking on "Consecration to God and Dedication of Ourselves."

The inaugural meeting of the Stormont-road, Lavender Hill, Society, was held on Friday, January 12, under the presidency of Mr. Lamb. Mr. Abel gave a very helpful address on the Endeavour Movement.

There are now 1021 branches in this country of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour. The last formed in Leeds is No. 1012, it being connected with Meanwood-road Baptist Church. The elders of the Metropolitan Tabernacle have granted the use of that building for the first National Convention to be held in London. Whitsuntide has been selected as the date, so that the country branches may be able to attend.

The Christian Endeavourers of N.S. Wales have taken up work among the Aborigines of Newcastle and Sydney, in connection with the Aborigines' Protection Association. Some seven members of the Society took the work up at La Perouse Camp, near Botany, Sydney, and the results have been most encouraging. The Endeavourers are putting up a mission house at La Perouse. During this last four months some four Aborigines have come out for Christ.

Salvation might come, says the Nottingham Congregational Magazine, to all our churches if the Christian Endeavour Society were taken up earnestly by our pastors and deacons. It is the hope of the future. We know how it has taken root at Hucknall, and we now report its great success at Colwick-street. At Eastwood also a branch has been formed amid most encouraging circumstances. Wherever the Christian Endeavour Society is carefully introduced true Christian experience is realised in the hearts of its members. And without this experience of the heart no Church can rightly be named Christian.

THE SOUTHSEA MISSION.—In Portsmouth and other parts is an undenominational work carried on in simple dependence on God for the last thirteen years. The efforts consist of Gospel tent work on Southsea Common and elsewhere, services in mission halls and cottages, and house-to-house visitation, tract distribution, individual dealing with souls, Bible carriage and colportage work. The ninth report is full of interesting matter and accounts of real work. Two cases saved from suicide are given, and instances of fruit found after many days. Mr. John Denning, superintendent, will send a copy to any interested. The claims of the poor are heavy, and he is desirous of giving soup suppers to the unemployed, but is unable for the want of funds. The address is Myrtle Cottage, St. James's-road, Southsea.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Mr. George Clarke has been holding Gospel meetings at Uddingston, with many tokens of fruitful result.

Unfermented wine is now used in a large number of congregations at the communion, and seems destined to become universal in Scotland.

The Cunningham lecturer for the forthcoming series of lectures in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, is Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan, Greenock.

Bishop Tucker, of Eastern Equatorial Africa, has awakened great interest in Uganda and its missions by his recent lecture in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh.

At the annual meeting of the Scottish Protestant Alliance in Glasgow last week it was stated that the battle against Popish encroachments would be vigorously carried on.

The Free Church authorities in Edinburgh are taking legal steps to secure possession of the church buildings in the Highlands that have been retained by the congregations seceding from that Church.

A public examination of the "subjects" who submitted themselves, in Dundee, for experiment in the "Tyson drink cure" has revealed the fact that in almost every case a great aversion to intoxicants has been produced.

Rev. John Hall, of Cullen, has been holding special Gospel services at the Free East Church, Aberdeen. The pastor of the church, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, has declined a call to the charge of Mr. Moody's Avenue Church, Chicago.

By the will of Miss Margaret Macfarlane, Paisley, close on £9000 are bequeathed to various public bodies, Mr. Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes, getting £1750 for a cottage, and the residue of the estate going to the Home and Foreign Mission schemes of the United Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Marshall Lang's lectures on Pastoral Theology, in the University of Glasgow, are attracting a great deal of attention because of their freshness. He desiderates more culture of the spiritual life in students for the ministry, and training for them in practical work under an experienced minister.

Esther, the wife of Deacon Abraham, of St. Nestorian Orphanage, Oroomiah, Persia, is at present addressing meetings in the West of Scotland. She spoke last week, at the Sunday prayer meeting in Glasgow, and on Sabbath evening to a large congregation in the Free High Church, Paisley.

Mr. Jas. H. Smith's monthly magazine, Pray and Trust, is enlarged and improved in appearance with the New Year. The current issue is a deeply interesting one, and we are not surprised to hear that the magazine is rapidly growing in favour. The editor is the much-esteemed secretary of the Dundee Y.M.C.A.

Encouraged by the good results of the meetings held in the West Free Church, Coatbridge, recently, by Mr. D. M'Lachlan, evangelist, and the pastor, a new series of evangelistic meetings, started after the New Year, are being now carried on. Whole families are being reached of the non-church-going or lapsed.

Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, has, during the past fortnight, presented several remarkable scenes. Three times in each of these weeks the large building has been filled with an audience of 1600 young people under sixteen years of age. The order, quiet, and attention were remarkable, and many remained to be conversed with afterwards.

Rev. Hugh Macmillan, of Free Martyrs, Paisley, has declined a call to St. George's Presbyterian Church, Blackburn. At the Presbyterian meeting held on Saturday to dispose of this call, it was stated that during his five years' ministry in Paisley Mr. Macmillan has doubled the membership of his congregation, chiefly by accessions from the non-church-going.

The ninth annual report of work in the Border Counties' Tent states that the tent last year covered a distance of about sixty-four miles. In every place the power of the Lord was present to heal. In some parts the people were much more receptive to the Word than in others. In one home alone eight adults professed to be saved—one of them having already entered upon colportage work. Christians have also expressed their gratitude for the tent services.

The Dundee Advertiser has a portrait and brief sketch of Rev. Dr. Black, of Inverness. Our contemporary says:—"As a pastor he is greatly beloved. He takes a personal interest in the welfare of every member of his large congregation, and his genial, bright, happy manner has made him a favourite with all classes alike. He is prominent at all gatherings of a philanthropic kind; but if that were all it would be nothing. He practises as well as preaches. He gives of his goods to the poor, and for all that his name is not a frequent occurrence in the published subscription lists."

PERSONALIA.

Rev. D. Burford-Hooke has, we hear, been laid up with an attack of influenza.

Pastor Charles Spurgeon received a very hearty welcome on resuming his pastoral duties at Greenwich on Sunday.

Rev. Dr. Bullinger is, we are glad to learn, slowly recovering from a somewhat serious cold, which for some weeks quite incapacitated him from work.

Miss Cusack is publishing this week a new work entitled THE TRUTH ABOUT CONVENT LIFE. The book (2s. 6d. post free) may be had of the authoress, Castle Court, Bournemouth East.

Mr. William Lethaby, writing from Jerusalem, states that the Turkish Government has stopped his work in Moab, and, in fact, put an end to all mission effort in the region beyond Jordan.

Mr. Hermann Warszawiak, of the American Hebrew-Christian Mission, now edits The Hebrew Christian, a monthly paper, formerly the organ of Rev. Jacob Freshman's mission work.

Rev. Thomas Cook, the well-known evangelist, was married, on 10th inst., to Miss Jessie Foster, of Markenfield Hall. His young wife starts with him on Feb. 9 for missions in Australia and India.

Rev. Dr. John G. Paton has decided to remain a few months longer in this country, and has agreed to speak at the great Exeter Hall Missionary Meeting on behalf of Presbyterian Missions on May 11.

Mr. T. Lewes Sayer left Madeira for Cape Town on January 17 in greatly improved health. He expects to return to England in April to resume his work, and asks continued prayers for complete restoration to health.

Mr. James Murray, of the National Bible Society of Scotland, has lately made a journey through the little-known country that divides South-west China from Upper Burmah. He was hoping to re-enter China viâ Tong-King.

Dr. Maclaren's annual sermon to the young is now a recognised institution in Manchester. The church was crowded on Sunday week, when he spoke with all his accustomed power, from John. xi. 26, 27, "Believest thou this? Yea, Lord, I believe."

Dr. Talmage has announced his intention of resigning his pastorate of the Brooklyn Tabernacle in March next, on the completion of his twenty-fifth year of service. Reuter's correspondent states that the funds of the Tabernacle have been largely falling off for some time past.

Mr. Nagasaka, who is acting chaplain on board the new Japanese warship Yoshino, wrote recently from Malta to Miss M. McLean, of the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, that he is working hard on board ship, and is meeting with much encouragement. His field of effort is an important one, as there are 230 souls on board.

Pastor Chiniquy, writing from Montreal on January 1, says that there are evident signs that the power of Rome is shaken to its foundation in Canada. On the last day of the year eighty communicants sat with him at the Lord's table in his church. With few exceptions, all were converts from Romish error.

Miss Mitchell who has been trained as a nurse in the Tottenham Hospital (says The Messenger), hopes to sail for Palestine in March. She will reside at Nazareth in order to learn the language until the arrival of Miss Townsend, who has been forbidden, under medical advice, to return to her work at Shefa Amr until the end of the year.

Mr. Maxwell Wright, we much regret to hear, still continues very seriously ill, being subject to dangerous attacks of fever. It was felt that prayer had been manifestly answered in the successful results of the operation that was performed last November. He is still, however, in a very critical condition, and will greatly value prayers on his behalf.

Rev. John McNeill has arranged to conduct a week's Gospel mission in the Dome, at Brighton, from January 30 to February 5, in connection with the Brighton and Hove Association of Free Churches. He purposes sailing for Cape Town on February 10, having meetings probably at East London, Durban, and several other places. After that his plan is to proceed to New Zealand, beginning at Dunedin; thence to Australia, and perhaps visiting India on his homeward journey. Mr. J. H. Burke will accompany him as singer.

Rev. Thomas Champness, we deeply regret to learn, has broken down under the strain of prolonged overwork. He has been ordered to Buxton for at least a month's rest. All his engagements are cancelled, and he is making no new ones at present. It is to be feared that financial worry in connection with his work is partially the cause of this. "When" (exclaims a contemporary) "will the Christian people of this country learn that men who have given their lives to the service of God and man ought at least to be liberally supported by those who are blest with great wealth?" We trust that Mr. Champness may speedily be restored to health and work.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. A. T. Jones, of Newport, has been conducting special services in Bristol, and God has given much blessing.

Leeds.—The Nonconformist Ministers' Association has decided to hold a united Nonconformist mission early next year, in connection with which meetings will be held in every part of the city.

Messrs. Potter and Millar, of Chicago, have recently closed a series of evangelistic meetings, at Zanesville, Ohio, of two weeks' duration, held under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal churches of Zanesville. The meetings were all largely attended and resulted in much good.

Mr. Richard Weaver commenced on Sunday a mission in Woolwich, preaching in the morning in the Baptist Chapel and in the evening in the Drill Hall, holding two to three thousand. Much interest was manifested, and many seemed pierced to the heart, being deeply convicted of sin.

Mr. John Evans has been holding an eight days' mission at "Stephen-the-Yeoman" Ragged School, Bermondsey. There was a good attendance right throughout, and great interest manifested. Some were brought to the feet of Christ, and led to accept Him. Workers were greatly strengthened.

Woodstock.—On Sunday last a week's united evangelistic mission at the Baptist Chapel, conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. Duxbury, assisted by ministers and local preachers in the district, was brought to a close. The building was crowded again and again by enthusiastic congregations, among whom there was great rejoicing over sinners saved and saints revived.

Fifeshire.—Messrs. Canning and Roger, of the Evangelisation Society (Scottish branch), are conducting missions respectively at Pittenweem and Leslie, with blessing. The attendances and interest at Pittenweem are very encouraging. Mr. R. Henderson Smith, Y.M.C.A. travelling secretary, has just concluded a short mission at Leven, as part of an extended visitation of the associations in the Edinburgh district.

Gospel Missions have been held in Ballinasloe by Rev. Jas. Kirkwood, Methodist Conference Evangelist; in Westbourne Presbyterian Church, Belfast, by Mr. Jno. Anderson, of Dundee; in Crumlin-road Methodist Church, Belfast, by Rev. Ed. Hazleton; at Rathdrum, co. Wicklow, by Mr. J. H. Crawford, of the Irish Evangelisation Society; and at Charleston-road Methodist Church, Dublin, by Revs. Dr. Nicholas and B. S. Laird, M.A.

Wellow.—Mr. W. Chester Turner, of the Evangelists' Home, Birmingham, is holding a successful mission in the Primitive Methodist Chapel. The meetings have grown in interest nightly, the attendances being large, and people from the surrounding villages attending the services. Night by night souls have sought a seeking Saviour. Many cases of conversion have been given, and Christians have been brought into abundance of grace.

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were having immense throngs of people to hear them preach and sing the Gospel at Providence, R.I., according to the latest accounts. Thousands were unable to enter the Music Hall, and overflows had to be arranged. Mr. Sankey has paid a visit to Washington, to pave the way for a mission in that city which Mr. Moody and he are to conduct next month. Much interest was excited by the presence of the famous Gospel singer, and a great united choir was to be formed.

Mr. Richard Howton has been holding a twenty-one days' mission in Bradford, under the auspices of the G.N. Mission. The large Mechanics' Institution, which holds upwards of 1500 or 1600 people, has been crowded. Sunday evenings during the mission Mr. Howton has conducted several united Bible-readings; in the afternoons in other mission halls—one in the large Central Hall. During the mission many Christians have been blessed. Mr. Howton has now commenced a twelve-days' mission in Morley.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have had a good time in Edinburgh. The meetings increased remarkably in numbers during the closing days; but the Saturday evenings at Carrubber's Close proved exceptionally encouraging. Last week the mission was held in M'Crie Roxburgh Free Church, and great blessing has been experienced. The power of God was present to heal, and many gave themselves to the Saviour. On Sunday the evangelists began at Carluke, but ere long, it is hoped, they will return for further services in Edinburgh.

Slough.—Rev. Dr. Morris has just concluded a fortnight's mission in this place. The difficulties, spiritual and atmospherical, were enormous; but in answer to prayer God gave proof of his power and willingness to save: first to believers the blessing came—a new vision of the power and beauty of Christ; from them it passed on to the indifferent, and a great awakening ensued. The preacher's relentless condemnation of sin and winning appeals to the sinner, and the clear upholding of Jesus, have brought great joy to the place.

Gorleston, near Great Yarmouth.—Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a united Gospel mission here. The services were held in all the chapels, ministers and Christian workers joining heartily in the work and a spirit of unity being manifested such as probably has not been witnessed in Gorleston before. The afternoon Bible readings were times of refreshing, believers being quickened. The Gospel services were fairly well attended, and the power of the Lord was present. A number have confessed Christ as the result of the mission. JOHN LING.

Mr. Charles Inglis has during the past fortnight been preaching nightly at Walthamstow, and God's people are filled with thankfulness for the gracious awakening in their midst. Large numbers have been brought together on week nights, while on Sundays the hall has been crowded. Many have been spoken with personally about their souls, and professed to receive blessing during the mission. The children of praying parents have been brought to a knowledge of the truth, backsliders restored, and men and women brought from darkness into light. Mr. Inglis is now labouring in the West of England.

Cranbrook, Kent.—Mr. John H. Cooke concluded, on the 14th inst., a very successful fifteen days' mission here. Prayer meetings preceded and were continued daily during the mission. The attendances throughout were most encouraging, large congregations assembling every night of the second week. Afternoon Bible-readings were given, and proved very helpful to Christians. By special invitation, Mr. Cooke held a drawing-room meeting, which was numerously attended. The Lord has owned the labours of his servant in the conversion of many souls, others are earnestly inquiring the way of salvation, and believers are strengthened in the faith. C. T. S.

MIDLAND PLATELAYERS' MISSION.

THIS Mission is in full working order, with a staff of 105 helpers, who supply 466 men with monthly packets of Gospel papers. Through increase of work, and home ties, I am unable to continue as head of the Mission, and earnestly desire that some one should take the conduct of it. I will gladly supply all information, and shall be ready to hand over the work at once to anyone who will undertake the future management.

The work of the Mission is specially suited to those who are not able to be actively employed in the Lord's service.

(Miss) M. G. MURRAY MACGREGOR.

18, Millfield, Folkestone.

THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES IN GLASGOW.—As Mr. William Forbes has been preaching in this city he arranged a tea-meeting on Monday last at the Christian Institute for the women engaged in the pantomimes. After tea Gipsy Smith spoke and sang. Addresses were also given by Rev. Dr. Donald McLeod, Councillor M'Farlane, Mr. W. M. Oatts, and Mr. Forbes.

CHRIST AND HIS WORK.—Christ is a Regenerator, not a reformer. The reformer works by programme; the Regenerator works by the silent, subtle, infinite power of God the Holy Ghost. No wise man despises reforms; no Christian man is satisfied with them. As effects they are good; as causes they are impotent. As is the work of Christ, so is the work of his ministers. It is not a reforming work, a social work, a political work, a controversial work; it is all this and more, and only this because it is more.—Dr. Parker.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a mission to be held in Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, February 4—17, by Rev. James Oatey.—For much blessing on evangelistic services at Uckfield during the present week, conducted by Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—For blessing on a mission, St. Paul's, Newcastle-on-Tyne, January 27—February 8, missioner Rev. J. O. West, Church Parochial Mission Society.—For much blessing on the mission to be held, God willing, by Major Sherrard, R.E., January 28 to February 4 inclusive, at the Chatham Soldiers' Home.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—The Central Anniversary Prayer Meeting held on Tuesday, the 16th inst., on behalf of missions to Roman Catholics was very encouraging. The room of the Christian Police Institute was filled. General Haig presided, the address being given by Rev. E. W. Moore. The new plans of the committee for developing the work were specially laid before God in prayer, the meeting being followed by a conference of London workers to discuss methods for deepening the interest of God's people in the work of the Society. The committee although burdened with an annual deficit of £3000, are laying the need of Ireland on the hearts of Christian sympathisers, in the hope of being enabled to secure an increase in income, and so to carry out extensions of work which are urgently needed.

Letters to the Editor.

THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST.

Dear Sir,—I quite agree with "R.C.M." that this is no topic for mere controversy. My last letter was written, not to prove controversially an expository point, but to defend an experimental truth.

Happily the two later articles considerably modify the first assumption, which alone I was concerned to disprove; and in the former of these I most heartily agree with one sentence, the gist of the whole question, "They were all with one accord in one place . . . resting believingly in the risen Lord Jesus who had been crucified. These are still the conditions on which the poured-out Spirit must be received."

Now, the real point that concerns, or should concern, Christians to-day is this: Is the Apostolic question of Acts xix. 2, applicable to them, or not? Is it possible for Christians now to be as the Samaritans were for a time—believing, baptized, and receivers of God's word—and yet not to have received the Holy Ghost? To this question I have answered "Yes," and "R.C.M." has answered "No." Hence the one would urge Christians to answer the Apostolic question for themselves; the other would say that they need not trouble about it, for of course they have received the Holy Ghost.

Will your readers listen again to that question? Paul found at Ephesus certain "disciples," a name habitually applied to believers in Jesus Christ—Christians. Taking them to be such—for he was evidently surprised at their later reply—he said: "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" In any case, that simple question surely implies two possibilities: 1. It is possible to be a believer and to have received the Holy Ghost; and 2. It is possible to be a believer and not to have received the Holy Ghost. For if these two things are absolutely inseparable, then the question has no meaning; for it asks: "Did you on believing receive, what every believer cannot help receiving?"

The question itself, therefore—quite apart from the Johannine character of these disciples, which took Paul by surprise—points to a distinct alternative: "believing" and "receiving the Holy Ghost," are events which may be coincident in time, or they may be separated by a definite interval. This possible separation the Apostle wished to remove from these disciples, as Peter and John did from those in Samaria. Wherever, therefore, these two blessings of faith and reception of the Holy Ghost are not coincident, there the believer should be urged—to-day, as under the Apostles—to press on and have the defect made good.

I hope all readers will understand that the above in no way denies what we are all agreed in: that believers are all "born of the Holy Ghost." It only distinguishes that work of the Spirit from the "receiving" of Acts xix. 2. Hubert Brooke.

January 15, 1894.

---

Dear Sir,—In 1878 I published my first volume of "The Science of Missions," entitled "The Evangelistic Baptism Indispensable to the Church for the Conversion of the World," showing—

First. That in the application of Redemption the Father's work is exclusively Evangelistic, dealing with sinners only, revealing Christ striving, drawing, and giving. The work of the Son, on the contrary, is exclusively Pastoral, receiving and dwelling in believers, and thereby giving them life and holiness.

Second. That both the Father and the Son act exclusively through the Holy Ghost as their agent, according as He proceeds from the one or the other.

Third. That when He proceeds from the Father He is called the Spirit of the Father, and does the work of the Father; and when He proceeds from the Son He is called the Spirit of the Son, or the Spirit of Christ, or sometimes Christ, and does the work of the Son.

Fourth. That at conversion the Father sends forth the Spirit of the Son. At Pentecost the Son sent forth the Spirit of the Father, to endue the Church with his own evangelistic power, which it never had before.

The Christian, in reviewing this book, among other kind things, said: "This clear and earnest reasoning puts the necessity of the evangelistic baptism of the Church for the world's conversion before the minds of all who are privileged to read his words. May the second part be as good as the first."

Since that time The Christian has changed its opinion, and now denounces the views which it once eulogised. What is the reason? The Christian tells us. In the Authorised Version of Acts xix. 2, it says: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" but the Revised Version translates it thus, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" and The Christian, not very wisely, but very excusably, came to the conclusion that the revisers had convicted the Authorised Version of both a grammatical and a theological error, and censures those who adhere to the old error as "dealing deceitfully with the Word of God" by adhering to what they know to be a wrong translation.

But when the blind lead the blind both fall into the ditch; for it so happens that the Authorised Version is right, and the Revised Version is wrong, both grammatically and theologically. As to the grammatical error, Alford is the chief offender. I am more anxious, however, about the theological error, because it strikes near the very roots of the Christian system.

The error of the Revised Version in attempting to buttress the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, consists in denying that the Old Testament saints had the Spirit of Christ dwelling in them, and that it was from Him that they derived their life. It was as true of the Old Testament saints as it is of the New, that without Him they could do nothing. Whence did they get their spiritual life, if it was not from the Spirit of Jesus dwelling in them? "God hath given us eternal life, and that life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life." Was it only after Pentecost that the Church needed Christ to dwell in them?

Our Lord's conversation with Nicodemus was before Pentecost, and his language is perfectly decisive in regard to the Old Testament saints: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." The begetting flesh is the flesh of the father; the begotten flesh is the flesh of the son; but they are the same flesh. So, the begetting Spirit is the Spirit of the Father, and the begotten Spirit is the Spirit of the Son; but they are both one and the same Spirit, though under different administrations. Does not this prove that whenever a man is born again, whether before or after Pentecost, the Spirit of the Son is begotten in him as the spirit of life and holiness, though not of evangelistic power?

Our Lord promised that when the Advocate was come (not the Comforter, for that is very misleading), He would abide with them for ever, and there never has been a time when He has been altogether absent; but He has long been a stranger in the land. At present there are hundreds who possess this evangelistic spirit, and who carry revival and conversion wherever they go; and yet they are not the holiest men in the church. But it is not hundreds, but the whole church that are summoned to the fight, and the command was, and is, that they should not begin to preach till they were endued with power from on high. That is the reason why so many ministers who are filled with the Spirit of the Son, but not with the Spirit of the Father, have never been the means of converting a single soul. Conversion is not enough. James Gall.

Edinburgh, Jan. 12, 1894.

[The above letter was accompanied by the following pathetic note. Warmly reciprocating our dear brother's kindly feeling, we leave it to our readers to judge whether The Christian has changed its opinion on the above or any other vital subject. An editor must give a somewhat free hand to those who review books; but using "evangelistic baptism" as a general term, and without specific reference to this discussion, we still endorse the above paragraph printed in italic. Mr. Gall's letter raises more than one question outside of the Expository Note which called it forth. We cannot undertake to insert correspondence relative to these.—Ed.]

My dear Brother,—Be assured that nothing but a sense of duty would ever allow me to lift my pen against anything contained in The Christian, a journal that more fully reflects my views (which are rather in advance) than any other, and to which I am so much indebted, and not I only, but the Church of God. But this matter is vital, and of the highest importance. Therefore I had to write.

I am now in my eighty-sixth year, and my public work is done, my feet deep in Jordan, the heart gradually losing its power, so that for half the day I am confined to bed. But I am very happy, waiting for the sound of his chariot wheels. And I am very grateful that I have been permitted for above sixty years to keep the field not without some victories.

Praying that you may be long spared to carry on your glorious work,—I remain your much attached Christian brother, James Gall.

35, Newington-road, Edinburgh, January 12, 1894.

---

Dear Sir,—I think that many leaders amongst us are laying a burden on tender-hearted Christians by urging on them the necessity of a special baptism of the Holy Spirit for power in service, and giving certain conditions before this gift can be obtained—such as putting away certain evils out of their lives, "full consecration," etc.

These are the results of the in-dwelling Spirit yielded to, and not the conditions of God's free gift. His conditions are given in John vii. 38, 39 (our belief in Christ glorified). If instead of praying for an extra baptism, we would yield to and use the wonderful power God has already given to us (Phil. ii. 13), the Church of Christ would be stronger and more restful. We should speak less of a "cleansed heart," whilst the world and our fellow Christians would see more of a cleansed walk in us.

As the coming of our Lord might be divided into three aspects—

First. At his incarnation: in partial power, but with visible signs and wonders;

Second. Spiritually to each individual believer's heart;

Third. With great power and exceeding glory;

Is it not so with regard to the Holy Spirit? His first advent on the day of Pentecost, with power and outward signs, gift of tongues, etc. to believers. This was the partial fulfilment of Joel ii. 28, and when St. Peter quotes this passage, in Acts ii. 17, he introduces the preposition "of" my Spirit (is not this thought suggested in Rom. viii. 23, by the word "first-fruits," also "earnest" in 2 Cor. v. 5?). His third advent at the restoration of the Jews, when Joel ii. 28 will be literally fulfilled, and God will pour out his Spirit on all flesh, to which blessing St. Paul seems to refer in Rom. xi. 12.

Is this striving after visible signs of the Holy Spirit really his own work, when one of the signs of his presence is "He shall not speak of Himself, He shall glorify Me (John xviii. 13, 14)?—I am, dear Sir, faithfully yours, A. C. L.

---

Sir,—With reference to Mr. Hubert Brooke's letter in The Christian of Jan. 4, it seems to me that we must distinguish between the gift of the Holy Spirit as an indweller, and the miraculous manifestations that were given to the early Church as a confirmatory sign that the gift had taken place. This confirmatory sign, evident to the senses, appears to have been given sometimes at the moment of decision for Christ, or conversion, the time when the Spirit is actually bestowed, as, for example, while Peter was preaching the Gospel to the company assembled by Cornelius. Sometimes the confirmatory miraculous sign was not given at the time of conversion to Christ, when the Spirit was received as an indweller, but was withheld for a while, and was afterwards given for a special purpose on a special occasion, such as that of confirming the authority of the Apostles at Samaria. And we must therefore take it that on that occasion Peter and John prayed that the Samaritan believers, who already possessed the Spirit by virtue of conversion to Christ, might receive the miraculous confirmation of the fact in the same way as Jewish believers.

In the case of Acts xix. those disciples cannot be said to have believed in Christ and given their hearts to Him till Paul proclaimed to them his full Gospel. Then they did so, and at once received the gift of the Spirit, and then the miraculous manifestation was added as a confirmatory sign of the fact, after Paul had laid his hands upon them.

This distinction between the gift of the Spirit and the miraculous manifestation given as a confirmatory sign of it, has been pointed out by Calvin, Alford, and other eminent commentators. J. T.

---

Dear Sir,—I most thankfully endorse your expository note in Christian, December 28, and believe with you that there were many like Apollos in those days who received "the things of the Lord knowing only the baptism of John," and that people in the present day can be in no such equivalent position before God, every living soul in this dispensation being either without the Spirit of Christ, or "in Christ"; if the latter, then they have been baptised by one Spirit into the one body—i.e., the Church (1 Cor. xii. 13), and blessed with all blessings of the Spirit (Eph. i. 3).

As I once heard a working man put it: "Christians are crying, 'Lord, give me more of the Holy Ghost,' when all the time the Holy Ghost is saying, 'give me more of you.'" The Scripture bears these homely words out for the believer.—Yours in Him,

Scotland. D.

---

Dear Sir,—I have read with much pleasure and profit the interesting letters on the Holy Spirit. With regard to the procession of the Holy Spirit, it seems to me that He proceeded from the Father to Christ, who then shed Him forth on the day of Pentecost. The words in Acts ii. 33 clearly teach this. Then, if we look at the type, the holy oil was poured on the head of the high priest, and flowed down to the skirts of his garments; the priest, I think all will agree, was typical of Christ—Christ the head, the body his Church.

The most important practical consideration, however, is why is it that some Christians enjoy the Spirit in Pentecostal fulness, and others evidently do not?

I believe the answer to that question to be, because some Christians have never apprehended a full Christ. For, it is found that believers are immediately filled with the Holy Spirit whenever they realise that they are sanctified in Christ as well as justified (1 Cor. i. 2); these are the two pillars of the holy temple.

When that step of faith is taken the Holy Spirit has then full play; until then He is hampered by the fleshly endeavours of the believer to get holiness of his own manufacture.

Never do we find any exhortation in the Epistles to wait for the promise of the Father; on the contrary, the command is, "Be ye filled with the Spirit," and "Whosoever will, let him take of the Water of Life freely." The Holy Spirit is in the world now, and will at once take up his abode in fulness of Pentecostal power in any heart prepared to receive Him.

One other thought. The holy oil was not to be poured on flesh of man (Exodus xxx. 32). Now, the believer is not in the flesh, but in the Spirit (Rom. viii. 9), being "circumcised with a circumcision not made with hands in the putting off of the body of the flesh in the circumcision of Christ" (R.V., Col. ii. 11).

All believers are, therefore, eligible to be fully anointed with the Holy Spirit as soon as they recognise their saintship in Christ.—I am, yours in Him,

WILLIAM GOURLAY.

Kincraig, Weston-super-Mare, Jan. 12, 1894.

"A SERIOUS QUESTION" SOLVED.

SIR,—May I suggest a solution of the question under the above heading in your issue of the 11th inst., in reference to the lack of funds for mission work? For a year I have set aside one-tenth of my income for the Lord's work. By adopting this plan I have been able to give away in that time about £60, and in the ordinary way it would not amount to more than £25 or £30. I mean, had I given like most people do, by fits and starts; and I am quite sure I am no poorer to-day in taking the Unseen Partner into my affairs. If every Christian would do likewise, I am sure the empty coffers would soon be filled, and the labourer, who is worthy of his hire, be paid. It might occur to some minds that they could not afford a tenth; in such cases, it would be practical to make it a twentieth, so as to adopt systematic giving.—Yours truly, ONE TENTH.

THE GOSPEL AND ITS MINISTRY.

DEAR SIR,—Will you accept my sincere thanks for your cordial and generous notice of "The Gospel and Its Ministry"? But when, in the closing paragraph of your review of my book, you describe me as "a forcible writer," I fear you give undue praise. For you go on to express a wish that in discussing the question whether faith means trust, or merely belief of testimony, I had "combined both meanings, instead of setting them one against the other, saying, 'Faith in its simplest character is not trust, nor even faith in a person, but belief of a record.'"

Instead of being "forcible" here, I seem to have failed even in clearness. Throughout my chapter on Faith my plain wish was to emphasise "both meanings," and nothing was further from my intention than to "set one against the other." In the sentence quoted (as above) you have inadvertently omitted a word which brings into prominence the qualifying phrase, "faith in its simplest character," and which connects all with what goes before. At page 36, I had said: "In its first and simplest phase in Scripture, faith is the belief of a record or testimony. It is, secondly, belief in a person; and it has, lastly, the character of trust." And at page 42, I go on to say: "But faith not only receives the word of Christ, it reaches on, and lays hold upon, the person of Christ."

You will be glad, I am sure, to find that we are at one on this important subject. And its importance leads me to hope you will let your readers have the explanation I offer.—Yours faithfully,

R. ANDERSON.

39, Linden-gardens, W., Jan. 20.

ORPHANS IN MADRAS.—Mr. G. J. Israel writes from Lake Side Villa, Veyasarpaundy, Madras, that the Tamil Mission Orphan Home is now an accomplished fact. Lake Side Villa has been secured for the purposes of the home, and at the time of writing there were already four orphans in residence. Mr. Israel says that help is required both for the support of the orphans and for the preaching expenses.

CONGO NEWS.—It is proposed to send forth in the spring a party of five, to reinforce the existing stations of the Congo Bololo Mission, on the Congo. This means an expenditure of £800; the passage and outfit of each person costing from £150. Only two of the six leading rivers of Lola Land are as yet touched by the Mission; the other four still wait. We greatly desire to open up work on the Juapa, but feel it impossible to extend operations without a large increase in our financial resources. Spiritually, the prospect is an ever-brightening one. Notwithstanding the varied and numerous difficulties incidental to the pioneer stages of the Mission, it has already a number of baptized believers at every station, and the Christians are beginning to evince a desire to bring others also to Christ.—Regions Beyond.

OBITUARY.

MRS. ARROWSMITH.

THE death of this Christian lady, mother of the well-known evangelists among the young, is recorded. She took a deep and lively interest in all good work, especially in the Children's Special Service Mission, with which her sons are so closely associated.

DEATH OF REV. GERASIM D. KYRIAS.

This well-known servant of the Lord in Albania has been called to his rest. He died at Monastir, Macedonia, on Jan. 2. Some months ago his medical adviser had suggested removal to Athens for the winter, but this did not take place. He passed away in the utmost peace and comfort, trusting in the Lord, and faithful in speaking to those who gathered around his dying bed. His loss to the work among the Albanians at this time seems irreparable. There is some hope that soon there may be given to the public an account of his captivity among brigands eight years ago, to the sufferings of which may be traced very largely his early removal. W. A. ESSERY.

MR. RUTHVEN PYM.

Many will hear with regret of the death on Wednesday, 17th inst., of this noble helper of many good institutions, who was seldom found slow to respond when any genuine work appealed for aid. He was a member of the eminent banking firm, Messrs. Coutts. A correspondent writes:—"Besides being a noted banker, Mr. Pym was engaged in connection with Baroness Burdett Coutts and other philanthropists in all kinds of social works for the good of his fellows. There was hardly a society with which he was not connected, and the Church has lost in him a distinguished and munificent member. His wife, a permanent invalid, only died on Monday, and as he was unconscious, he did not know it."

PROFESSOR AUG. GRETILLAT.

By the death of Professor Augustin Gretillat, great grief has fallen upon the Independent Church of Neuchâtel, and a serious loss has been sustained by French-speaking Evangelical Protestantism. Born at Fontainemelon in 1837, M. Gretillat enjoyed Christian training as a child, and good educational facilities as a young man. Resolving upon a pastoral career, he studied at Neuchâtel, under M. Fred. Godet, and at Halle and Göttingen, under Tholuck, Julius Müller, and Dorner. After some years of ministerial work, he accepted a call to the chair of Systematic Theology at Neuchâtel; and while, for twenty-three years, he enthusiastically devoted his energies to the discharge of his onerous duties, he was ever ready to forward evangelistic enterprise, and lend a hand in pastoral work. His contributions to theological literature have been of great value.

REV. SAMUEL MATEER, TRAVANCORE.

We regret to hear of the death of this veteran servant of Christ, who went to India in 1858, and laboured until 1891 well nigh unceasingly in the Gospel, seeing, as he himself was wont to say, the whole aspect of affairs, in regard to the reception of Christian teaching, revolutionised. His works, such as "Native Life in Travancore," and more fully "The Gospel in South India," reveal how deeply he was impressed with the mighty changes produced. He began work in Pareychaley, then he extended to Trevandrum, to which later on he devoted himself entirely; so that really his long missionary life was given to the Malayalam and out-castes of Trevandrum. As an evangelist and pastor he was greatly blessed; but he had also much literary and lingual gift, which he turned to good account in translating and revising in Tamil and Malayalam. We gave his portrait, with a sketch of his life, in our issue for Sept. 8, 1892. Since coming home from India, Mr. Mateer had been staying at Hastings, where he passed away.

MR. J. G. GENT, RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

This faithful servant of Christ fell peacefully asleep in Jesus on Jan. 20, in his eighty-third year, after several years of prostration and suffering, borne with Christian patience. He was one of the founders of the Ragged School Union, and worked assiduously in the cause from 1844 for five years as a voluntary worker, and then for thirty-one years as its first secretary, until in 1880 he was forced to retire through ill-health. During the last fourteen years, although hindered by physical weakness from taking an active part in the work he so dearly loved, yet he still took a keen interest in the great movement in promoting which he had spent so many of the best years of his life. He enjoyed for a lengthened period the personal friendship of the Earl of Shaftesbury, and was often with him scouring the slums of London, seeking the ragged and needy ones, and rescuing many ready to perish. It is rather remarkable that this "Ragged School worthy" should so quickly follow to his eternal rest his former colleague, Mr. R. J. Curtis, whose death was recorded in THE CHRISTIAN of Jan. 11.

REV. J. B. MYLIUS, HATCHAM PARK.

The death of this devoted young clergyman is a serious loss to South London Evangelicals. The City Press records that: "About three years ago he accepted the charge of All Saints, Hatcham Park. Overpowered with the ever-growing neighbourhood, he consulted Rev. W. H. Stone as to the course he should adopt. 'I want,' he said, 'a second curate, if I am to overtake the work committed to my charge. I have no means. There is only one way out of the difficulty, and that is to accept the chaplaincy of the South-Eastern Fever Hospital, which will not materially interfere with my work as vicar of the parish.' 'Have you counted the cost?' asked Mr. Stone. 'I have,' replied Mr. Mylius. The chaplain he accordingly became, performing the duties that devolved upon him with that loving devotion he brought to bear upon everything he undertook. A few weeks ago he caught the fever, and last week he passed away, a martyr to duty, at the early age of thirty-two. His memory, however, will long be revered by those who were privileged to know him." During the three years of his ministry at Hatcham, Mr. Mylius laboured indefatigably for the welfare of the large flock committed to his care, winning the love and respect of all classes, but especially of the poor, whose unhappy lot he did his very best to brighten. He was a genuine Protestant; gloried in the great truths re-affirmed at the Reformation, and in his own quiet conciliating way did much for the Protestant cause.

MRS. BISHOP'S JOURNEY TO KOREA.

IN pursuance of her work in the interests of missionary enterprise and geographical science, Mrs. Bishop, the distinguished authoress, has left Liverpool by the Allan Line steamer Mongolian for Halifax. On her arrival there she intends to cross direct to Vancouver by the Canadian Pacific Railway. After spending a week at Senator M'Donald's in Vancouver Island, she will sail for Japan on the 3rd of February. Thence she goes by a Japanese steamer throughout the inland seas, the east coast of Korea, and then round the south coast, and up the west to Chemulps, where she will be received by Bishop Corfe. Her further movements will depend upon circumstances, one of the most important being the state of her health. The distinguished traveller is provided by the Foreign Office with a recommendation to the Consular authorities, and besides many other advantages she has a special Chinese passport and a letter of introduction to the Viceroy of China, Li Hung Chang. Mrs. Bishop, who is now over sixty years of age, is well equipped for her work. To her many and various acquirements and accomplishments she added, during last summer and autumn, a thoroughly practical knowledge of photography.

During the past summer she resided a good deal at her cottage at Tobermory, a place endeared to her by sweet memories, a beloved sister, Miss Henrietta J. Bird, whose name in the Island of Mull, as in many other communities, is associated with all that is pure and noble. Mrs. Bishop took a leading part in such work as the Young Women's Christian Association, technical classes for the education of women, and the visitation of the sick. She ably assisted Miss Gardyne, of Glenforsa, in forming the Argyll Nursing Association.—Daily Mail.

WESTERN CANADA.

THE record of the progress of the Canadian Presbyterian Church in the West for the past nine years is, we believe, not to be paralleled in the history of any Church in any age. In congregations she has gained 400 per cent., in churches 300 per cent., in members 330 per cent., in revenue 1244 per cent. The enterprise, energy, and liberality of this young Western Church are such as to call forth the admiration of all true Christians the world over. The Scotch and Presbyterian element is the dominating force in Western Canada, and consequently the responsibility of Scottish Presbyterianism to this new country is correspondingly great. The extraordinary rapidity of extension in settlement has proved too much for the Canadian Church, and therefore is it that she has sent a delegate (Rev. C. W. Gordon) to ask co-operation in the mission work of the West, which has hardly less claim upon the interest of the Presbyterians of Great Britain than upon those of Eastern Canada. Mr. Gordon is meeting with much success in Scotland.—Dundee Advertiser.

EVERY CHILD that is born into the world forms part of the scheme of the universe. His young life is the germ out of which the life of his manhood and old age will develop. The end depends on the beginning.

The Book World.

A BOOK FOR PREACHERS.

Nature as a Book of Symbols. By William Marshall (author of "The Visible God"). (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) A really strong book, by a bold but careful and deeply reverent thinker, writing on a noble theme. Its great point is, not that nature abounds in symbols of the spiritual, but that the whole of it forms one grand book of symbols. "The entire visible universe is shown to be a moral unity, and strictly analogous to a higher unity of the written Revelation of God." Nature and the Bible are counterpartal: not similar, but identical. "All natural phenomena are a Divine revelation—of God, of man, and also of man's relationship to God, in all its varied aspects and manifold possibilities . . . The whole visible universe is like an emblematic scroll upon which are depicted all the primary and permanent moral relations subsisting between God and humanity."

The first six chapters, by far the least popular of the book, are introductory; but all the rest is occupied with a most suggestive and stimulating series of examples of nature's symbolisms. The sky is a symbol of God; the sun of Jesus Christ; the moon and the planets of everything that receives and reflects the wisdom and love of God shining in Jesus Christ, e.g., the Bible and the Church; the stars of the angels; the earth of man; and rain, wind, and dew of the Spirit. The symbolism of the clouds, and of the four seasons, is also dealt with. For those who will take pains with it, this is a singularly fertilising book, a great help to all who preach and teach. It is grandly true to the central verities of Revelation and spiritual life, while it overflows with suggestive thoughts. Not least in its educational value it trains the reader to read for himself, with no other aid than a spiritual eye, and the light of the Bible, fresh pages in nature's great book of symbols.

A PROPHETIC SCHEME.

Millennial Dawn, a work in three volumes, issued in America, and published in this country by Mr. Elliot Stock, makes an appeal to the Christian public in terms more confident than the contents warrant. The volumes are entitled: (1) The Plan of the Ages, (2) The Time is at Hand, and (3) Thy Kingdom Come, and they are furnished with several charts and schemes to elucidate the prophetical views of the author, Mr. Charles T. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., U.S.A. These views are very distinctive, and find easy acceptance with such as sympathise with pronounced millenarianism, and can not check the premises on which the more peculiar arguments of the writer are founded. Among the several independent positions maintained, but by no means legitimately sustained from Scripture, is the theory that in the millennial age the Gospel will be preached to all who died without hearing it. He says: "The Gospel age is merely for the selection of the Church, the royal priesthood, through whom, during a succeeding age, all others shall be brought to knowledge and opportunity." This is pure speculation, and opposed to the teaching of the Apostle (Rom. ii. 14-16) regarding conscience as the light of God to those who have not heard of Christ. The author has a provoking way of quoting a passage of Scripture to his purpose by inserting words which would assuredly have been found in the sacred text if intended by the writers. For instance, he twice refers to Dan. xii. 4, thus: "Shut up the words and seal the book, even to the time of the end; [then] many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." A note of time cannot be thus inserted. Textual criticism of the crudest kind is favoured, and the first sentence of Rev. xx. 5, "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished," is summarily rejected as spurious! In a note he gives some reasons for thus accommodating Scripture to his prophetical scheme, and he says enough to show how little he really knows of the critical apparatus with which he has been trying to acquaint himself. For the information of such as may have been distressed or exercised by this unjustifiable excision from the Apocalypse, we may say that Mr. Russell's statement is founded on misapprehension, and quite misleading. No critic of the text has excluded the sentence, nor is there any critical reason why it should be so much as brought under suspicion.

---

The annual volume of The Regions Beyond (Partridge & Co. 3s. 6d.) makes a most valuable repertory of missionary facts and their application, with special reference to the needs and claims of Africa.

Footsteps of Truth. Vol. xi., edited by C. Russell Hurditch. (2s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) This annual volume presents a varied miscellany of Bible notes, suggestive points, helpful articles, and pen pictures of well-known workers.

The half-yearly volume of The Review of Reviews (5s. H. Marshall & Son, 125, Fleet-street) is a marvellous storehouse of information as to current literature and present-day movements. As a work of reference on these subjects it is invaluable.

Lofanza: An African Slave Story. The life story, in fact, of one of the Congo lads lately in Harley House, penned by Dr. Harry Guinness. (Partridge & Co. 2d.) This simple yet thrilling narrative should touch many hearts on behalf of the dark Congoese.

The Sword and Trowel. (Passmore & Alabaster. 5s.) Here we have vol. xxix. of a magazine which in the late Mr. Spurgeon's hands did grand service, and which now is largely "In memoriam" of him. There are even now many good things in the volume, but the master hand is missed.

God is Love, and Other Sermons, by the late Rev. Aubrey L. Moore, M.A. (6s. Nisbet.) The discourse which supplies the title is a powerful argument for the Trinity. Although tinctured with High Church sacramentalism, the sermons are vigorous and thoughtful, and in some cases stimulating in a high degree.

Grout's Zulu Grammar (revised edition). (J. F. Shaw & Co. 15s.) Mr. Grout, of the American Board Mission to the Zulus, after twelve years' study, published his grammar in 1859, and he has been spared to issue a revised edition. There are about half a million Zulus within the borders of Natal, besides those in Zululand, the latter being protected, the former wholly under British rule.

Jews and Christians, the new quarterly magazine, edited by Rev. A. Lukyn Williams, M.A., has made an excellent start. Sir John Kennaway writes a graceful and serious introduction. Then follows a very valuable and comprehensive article on "The Blood Accusation," by Professor Hermann Strack, of Berlin. Finally, the editor writes on "Liberal Judaism in England." If it should continue as it has begun, this magazine will well supply an important place in periodical literature. (6d. Nisbet & Co.)

Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, vol. xxxix. By the late C. H. Spurgeon. (Passmore & Alabaster. 7s.) This new volume possesses very great interest from the solid substance of the sermons as well as from the precious memory of him who spoke them. The publishers state that there is enough copy in hand to publish a sermon weekly for some years to come. These sermons are still read regularly by tens of thousands, and testimony to their worth is constantly being received from all parts of the world.

From our Dead Selves to Higher Things. By Frederick James Gant, F.R.C.S. (3s. 6d. Nisbet.) The works of the flesh and the lusts of sense are analysed with masterly skill, and the "higher things" are described in a manner which, to use the author's own expression, "rends the veil of agnosticism in twain from the top to the bottom." This is all the commendation we can give the book, for so far as its theology goes it is so mystical and sophisticated as to afford a very uncertain guidance to anyone who would seek the Kingdom of God and eternal life.

Mr. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, has brought together into a neat and well-printed booklet the impressive address delivered by Mrs. Bishop in Exeter Hall on Nov. 1, upon "Heathen Claims and Christian Duty," and the Missionary Sermon at Great Queen-street by the late C. H. Spurgeon, entitled "Our Omnipotent Leader." These two weighty and remarkable utterances form a missionary plea of irresistible force and cogency. We trust the contents of this booklet will be widely read, pondered, and heeded by all sections of the Christian Church. (Morgan & Scott. 2d.)

Christ's Divinity School, and other Sermons. By Hugh D. Brown, M.A. (Alexander & Shepheard.) This book of sermons is excellent. Evangelical doctrine could hardly be more clearly or forcibly stated. Mr. Brown knows what he believes, and why he believes it, and he embodies the truth in this volume with energy, enthusiasm, and common sense. His loyalty to Christ and to the teaching of the Word makes him speak in no honeyed terms of those who while professing to teach others, know nothing certainly for themselves. His style is simple, homely, racy, sometimes humorous, and abounds in apt and striking illustrations. His method is eminently Scriptural, and if his expositions are not profound, they are always clear and practical.

Septem Ecclesiæ, being Thoughts on the Epistles of Christ to the Seven Churches in Asia. By Henry H. Orpen-Palmer, B.D., Vicar of St. Peter's, Cheltenham. (Elliot Stock.) The "thoughts," which extend over upwards of five hundred pages, are admirably expressed, the outcome of wide reading being combined with the conclusions of independent study. A feature of the book is the frequent introduction of hymns and poetical excerpts, as a kind of emphatic illustration of great truths. Many old acquaintances are met with in these lines, which, as the author says, "make the essential idea attractively gleam and sparkle." This treatment of the Seven Epistles is very readable and should prove useful. The supplemental "Poem on the Tragedy of Jezebel" seems to us to be out of place in the covers of this volume.

The Regions Beyond for January is called a self-denial number, and bears the title of "The Marathon of To-day." The very able editor, Miss Lucy Guinness, minutely and graphically describes the ancient battle of Marathon, and then shows that our battles are to be fought against the drink foe, the opium curse, African slavery, heathenism abroad, and vice at home; that the centre of earth's battle is the Cross, and that the liberator of the world is Jesus. The article teems with startling and terrible information, as well as with hopeful and enthusiastic trust in the overcoming God. It is a very valuable and useful epitome of Christian effort on spiritual lines. It will do good to everyone who reads it, and everyone may do good by circulating it. Quantities for this purpose are offered at reduced rates from Harley House, Bow, E.

---

Three terse and pointed Gospel booklets, by George Kelsey, are Faith, The Meek, and Deliver Us from the Evil. (6d. per dozen. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

The Child, the Servant, the Soldier. Three Aspects of the Christian Life, Rom. viii. 8-11, is a helpful Bible study, by Francis Paynter, M.A., Rector of Stoke-next-Guildford. (Marshall Bros.)

The Publisher's Circular for Jan. 13 (1½d. Sampson Low & Co.) contains a very interesting sketch of the popular publishing establishment of Messrs. Cassell and Co., with portraits of the original members of the firm.

---

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Marshall Brothers.—The Four Aristocracies and other papers. By C. L. M. and G. M. M.

From Alexander & Shepheard.—Talks with Men, Women, and Children. By Rev. David Davies. Fifth series, 6s. 6d.

From Jas. Nisbet & Co.—The Church Catechism, with explanations, notes, and proofs from Scripture. By T. A. Stowell. 1s.

From Henry Kimpton, 82, High Holborn.—Indigestion, Gout, Corpulency, and Constipation clearly explained treated, and dieted. By Thomas Dutton, M.D.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE FOR INDIA.

The annual meeting of the Edinburgh Auxiliary of the Christian Literature Society for India was held last week in the saloon of the Royal Hotel, Princes-street, Edinburgh—Sir William Muir presiding. There was a good attendance.

The annual report stated that during the year there had been a decided advance in the good work done by the Society. Both at home and in India efforts had been made successfully to keep pace with the growing demands for the Society's publications, no less than for the trained and qualified teachers supplied by its institution at Ahmednagar. The increase in general Christian literature had been fivefold during the last four years. This was altogether apart from the school books issued. The training institution had seventy-one normal students under training during the year, with 100 pupils in the model or practising schools. Two converts from Hinduism were added to the Church last year. Of the eighty-six Hindus who had entered the institution, fifty had become Christians. They had now 8319 pupils in their circle schools in Bengal.

The chairman urged the claims of the Society, and spoke of the good work it was doing. Rev. J. Colville Peattie, Madras, bore testimony to the importance and value of the work of the Society, and pointed out the absolute necessity of that work being vigorously continued. So imperative was the work, in his opinion, as a help to missionary labour, that he considered that missionary societies should themselves meet its pecuniary requirements. The Church was still backward in its attention to the better-educated class of natives, and there was a great field open in that direction. Rev. F. Ashcroft, Rajpootana, suggested that the Society should give increased attention to the enormous demand there was for literature suitable for grown-up English-speaking natives, especially books written in the country and by the people themselves.

Dr. George Smith, Dr. E. S. Fry, Rev. James Johnston, secretary of the Society, Rev. J. N. Russell, Madras, and Rev. W. M. Teape afterwards spoke in advocacy of the Society's claims.

---

THE ANNUAL TEA FOR GIPSIES and travellers was given in the Shaftesbury Welcome, Culvert-road, on Monday last. This hall is now the centre of Ragged School Union operations in Battersea. Over 160 sat down. They were all sizes and ages, from babes in arms to men of years. Interesting addresses were given at the meeting which followed During the year the vans are visited; the gipsies are invited to the hall, and helped with hospital letters, clothing, etc.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

Warning to Advertisers.—The greatest care should be taken in writing the address at the end of Advertisements. We also beg to call the special attention of Advertisers to the following Notice which appears in The Postal Guide:—"Letters addressed to initials or to fictitious names at any Post Office are not taken in, but are at once sent back to the writers."

Letters Addressed to the Office.—Advertisers who require their letters to be addressed to the office of this Journal will be charged an additional Sixpence for each Advertisement, and another Sixpence extra if letters are to be forwarded to their private address.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department,
Bouverie House,
Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

| | |
|---|---|
| For Great Britain and Ireland .. | 6s. 7d. per annum |
| For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. .. .. .. | 8s. 10d. „ „ |
| For United States and Canada .. | 2¼ dols. „ „ |
| Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy .. .. | 2½ dols. „ „ |

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

| | |
|---|---|
| 4 Copies monthly .. .. .. .. | 2s. per annum. |
| 8 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 4s. „ „ |
| 12 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 6s. „ „ |
| 24 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 12s. „ „ |

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

WE purpose next week to give a portrait and sketch of the late Rev. John Green, of Brockley, organiser of the Gospel Mission to Lighthouses and Lightships.

We have received a number of letters on "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost," a selection from or a summary of which we hope to give in our next.

A paragraph in our last issue, received from a Scottish correspondent, erroneously made it appear that Bishop Tucker's missionary visit to Edinburgh was past. The Bishop will preach there on Saturday, February 11th, and on the following evening will address a meeting in the Free Assembly Hall.

A minister writes:—"If you will send me some back numbers of The Christian, I will see that they are judiciously distributed, and an honest effort made to obtain subscribers." It occurs to us that many of our readers may be willing to do the same thing amongst those attending their own place of worship. Our publishers will gladly send on a parcel for this object (carriage paid). In making the application please state how many can be distributed.

The communication on p. 11, from our much-esteemed and well-informed friend, Mr. Broomhall, is deserving of careful attention. It has been argued that the feeling of Indian natives is in favour of the retention of the opium traffic. Per contra, we have before us an article from The Indian Mirror, of Calcutta, described as one of the most influential native papers in India. It severely criticises the action of the Bishop of Calcutta and his clergy, and declares that the Church of England in India, by reason of its relations to the Government, has always opposed beneficial reforms.

We would direct the attention of our readers to two important letters upon the Higher Criticism, on page 10, from Rev. Edward White and Mr. Alexander Forrow. Some young ministers of the advanced school have gone so far as to deny the right of "laymen" to express opinion upon this subject at all. This is dangerously approximate to the claims of the Popish priesthood. It must be remembered that ministers, generally speaking, move in a more or less restricted circle both in college and afterwards, and keep in touch mostly with those of their own trend of thought.

A "layman," on the other hand, has a wider range of vision and experience, and seems to us, therefore, to be not only within his right in claiming a hearing (for is it not for the "layman" that the minister holds his position?), but is peculiarly qualified to form an all-round judgment upon many matters which the minister may regard from a one-sided point of view. It is of higher import to study the Scriptures than what men have written about them.

As our readers are aware, a conflict is in progress between a party of evangelists on the one hand, and the priests and Roman Catholic population on the other, as to the right to preach the Gospel in the streets of Cork. The evangelists have persistently continued their efforts; the police have forcibly removed them; and, in the words of Mr. George F. Trench, who has written a powerful letter to the Cork Constitution in favour of the evangelists, "at last the authorities have taken steps to appeal to the Law Courts on this vexed question." With the desire of the evangelists to preach the Gospel, which they have so courageously carried out, we need not say that we have the most unqualified sympathy; that, as citizens, they have a right to the protection of the civil power in the exercise of their civil rights, is indisputable. Whether the preaching of the Gospel in the street is one of those rights, will, we hope, now be legally settled. Whether the evangelists have acted in the wisest way we have not the means of deciding. We await with deep interest the progress of events, assured that the issue will be for the furtherance of the Gospel.

In these days of co-operation it seems as if it might be a help and stimulus to the humbler, but not less important, workers in the Master's vineyard if they had a sort of Christian Workers' Union. The evangelist, city missionary, Scripture reader, Bible-woman, colporteur, and parish nurse, might thus be brought into touch with one another in a kind of family council, and might together devise some means of self-help for provision in sickness, infirmity, and old age. These classes work very hard, for long, unregulation hours, often without any human sympathy, and often are not expected to have any human failings. They are the vehicles of bounty to others, than whom they are often more needy, and, while they cheer the stranger, the sick, and the lonely, are themselves not seldom unremembered and uncheered.

A pathetic cry comes to us from one of these toilers, underpaid, and quite unprovided for as to an earthly future. "We seem almost forgotten," he writes; and he pleads for "brotherly sympathy and recognition." There are those who would gladly promote such an organisation if they knew how to set about it. Who will devise something for the benefit of these often unknown and unrecognised men and women who are doing God's work under frequent discouragement and disappointment?

A popular London preacher, when asked what was the secret of popularity in the Metropolis, replied, "Modernity." Be modern. There is something of truth in it in one sense—viz., that the preacher should speak of the events and sins and difficulties of to-day in the language of to-day; he should be a man of the times. But if "modernity" means that his teaching is to be coloured with the thought of the newest novel, or has to be a reflection of some poet, or must be suited to the last scientific theory, then we think that the preacher will do better if he keeps as close as possible to that message which his Lord has given him. He is an ambassador for Christ, not a fastidious eclectic appointed to prepare dainty things for the palate of fastidious congregations.

Much excitement has been caused by the arrest of Jabez Balfour. The topic has no place in our columns, but it suggests a few reflections for Christian men. The greed for gold has been the cause of some of the most disgraceful frauds of this century, and has killed many victims, and thrown others into indescribable misery. Some of the men who have done these things have been frequenters of places of worship. Can any teaching on sin and judgment, then, be too plain? How many would be able to be comfortable under an honest sermon against taking bribes? What are "tips," "considerations," etc., but bribes?

We know not the dangers at our own back-doors. The Westminster Gazette has been shedding light upon the doings of the "Trinket Tally-man," who, with his glittering wares, entices servants to take what they cannot pay for at once, and to sign a document they seldom understand. Then when they become irregular in payments, a thing to which he tempts them by not being regular in his calls, he has them in his grip. Mr. James Greenwood, the writer of the article, observes:—

> It would be interesting, could it be ascertained, how many of the number of domestic servants sent to prison year by year for robbing their employers owe their downfall and disgrace to the machinations of the rascally trinket tallyman.

The New Review for February contains a reply to Count Tolstoi on "The Preaching of Christ and the Practice of His Churches" by two representatives of the Church of England, a Roman Catholic, and a Congregationalist. The main point of contention is as to whether our Lord's words, "Resist not evil," are to be taken and acted upon literally. All are against the Count, though with such qualifications as, in appearance at least, make them practically say, "We wish we were with you." This is especially true of the Rev. J. Guinness Rogers' paper, which says: "The attitude of the churches in relation to war has too often been strangely inconsistent with their professions, and with the teachings of their great Statute Book."

Several points of interest and signs for good strike us in the Conference on Conciliation in Labour Disputes held at Durham. The largeness of the gathering of men and masters, the place of meeting—the Miners' Hall—the fact that the president was the Bishop of Durham, all these were good signs; more followed in the discussion. The Bishop said :—

In no way could the cause of industry be better served, and he desired nothing better than that Northumberland and Durham should still hold their place in the field of British industry till the end was reached—till the passion for private gain was tempered, if not displaced, by the enthusiasm for the public service, till employer and employed recognised their place side by side as fellow workmen for the good of the commonwealth, in the strength and joy of one life.

---

The need for some great effort on every one's part was strikingly shown by Mr. Burt's statement that last year there had been "635 strikes, which brought suffering, misery, and death to thousands." In Northumberland and Durham there is a joint committee of men and masters which has done capital service. Mr. Burt said :—

Before the joint committees were established in their district, local colliery strikes were almost of daily occurrence, but now they had almost been put an end to, and in Northumberland there had not been a single revolt. In arbitration cases the award of the arbitrator had always been accepted both in Durham and Northumberland, and with that encouragement they should go a step forward. Could they not follow on the lines of the joint committee for the settlement of general wages? The signs of the times were encouraging; never had there before been so much attention given to these questions, and never had workmen looked at them in a broader spirit. Let employers and workmen therefore meet face to face, discuss these questions thoroughly, let all possible information be given, meeting not as buyers and sellers, but as men with upright and downright honesty, with fair dealing between man and man, and there would come the better times.

As the Speaker has appointed a Chairman of the Board of Conciliation—Lord Shand—we may hope for everyone's sake, men, masters, and the public, that things will now go smoothly.

---

The sketch of Millet, the French painter, given in The Leisure Hour, emphasises the truth that every man in every calling does his best when he works for his God, not for society, and not for his daily bread. The best of every fine mind is lost where that mind is not believing and reverent. The worldliness of the world impoverishes the world. More impressive pictures, more enrapturing and more elevating music, more ingenious inventions, more profound discoveries, more useful social methods, would be given to us, if genius were consecrated to God who gives wisdom liberally. By the breath of his Spirit common-place men are raised to a higher level, and able men become safe leaders. A humbly educated American Quaker, a tailor, of the last century, wrote one of the purest styles just because he was a man of exceptionally pure heart. The stretch of intellect gives poetical illustration of this vital truth, that God wants the whole man.

---

According to the Odessa correspondent of The Daily News, the Procurator of the Holy Synod of Russia reports that the Nonconformists of Russia, i.e., Stundists and others, are increasing every year. The suppressive measures against them are a failure :—

In Nijni the Nonconformists number 70,000, in Saratoff 53,000, and in Samara 81,000. They are also very numerous in the eparchiates of Viatka, 72,000; in Tchernigoff, 50,000; and in Polotzk, 82,000. In Siberia they steadily increase. There are 30,000 in the eparchiate of Irkutsk, 55,000 in Tobolsk, and 80,000 in Tomsk. The largest number of Nonconformists and sectarians in any single government are to be found in the Don country, where they number 106,000 souls.

His Excellency even admits that "the extremely religious mode of life, the strict moral discipline, the close sympathy, and the unfailing support rendered to the needy by the affluent members of these sectarian communities, have all combined to enlist the voluntary adhesion of the simple and ignorant Russian peasants."

---

But, says the correspondent, he might have gone on to say that, by the force of their example, they wield a highly beneficial influence upon the more amenable of their Orthodox neighbours. Their persecutions are spreading the Gospel wherever they are banished to, just as the Word grew in the days of the Apostles.

---

A question and answer in the House of Commons may have far-reaching effects. A question put by Mr. Byles on the subject of disarmament, and answered by Mr. Gladstone just before Parliament rose, has, so says The Times correspondent in Paris, attracted great attention, and awakened deep sympathy. A gentleman well acquainted with most diplomatists, and formerly in diplomatic service himself, testifies :—

All the official or diplomatic personages with whom I have conversed seemed to think the question less inopportune than I imagined. All made me understand that the mania for armaments was an epidemic of which all, without publicly confessing it, would gladly be cured. "The most mischievous thing in these armaments," remarked to me a statesman in one of those capitals, "is that the only cure is war, and that, the war over, there is no telling that the malady would not begin again, either for the sake of fresh revenges or because experience had shown that tactics and weapons had not given the results expected to accrue from such enormous sacrifices. Rest assured that this prospect of intermittent wars, making even peace ruinous, is disquieting all minds, and that leading statesmen, and even sovereigns, are reflecting on it. The difficulty is to devise a plan of lightening this crushing burden without imposing on any State a diminution of forces or a renunciation of what it considers legitimate claims or aspirations. This is the difficulty of the solution which they would fain arrive at."

---

This is very good so far; but the practical conclusion strikes us as very lame. This experienced diplomatist, pressed by the correspondent, replied :—

Now the only means which the men I speak of can see of putting an end to senseless outlay necessitating crushing taxes and onerous loans is to make twelve months' service obligatory on all. Technical objections will doubtless be urged and specialists will perhaps protest, but there have been the same objections and protests against the three years' system.

---

Universal service, he says, now exists in military countries, and cannot be meddled with. But some would say, why not? Is this to go on for ever? He advocates the reduction of length of service on this ground :—

Nothing therefore is more logical, humane, and conformable with economic exigencies than to reduce by two-thirds burdens which are getting intolerable, and from which before long the only way of escape will be the utilising of the engines of destruction accumulating for years, so that war will have to be made for its own sake, and it will be better to perish in action than at peace.

We shall be thankful for any diminution of the burdens of the people, but why not adopt M. Jules Simon's suggestion of a "Truce of God" till at least the end of this century? If the nations had six years' relief from the horrors of preparing for war, they would, at the end of that time, find some way of prolonging their blessedness.

---

HOW TO RUIN A SON:—(1) Let him have his own way. (2) Allow him free use of money. (3) Suffer him to roam where he pleases. (4) Give him full access to wicked companions. (5) Call him to no account of his evenings. (6) Furnish him with no stated employment. Pursue either of these ways, and you will experience a most marvellous deliverance, or you will have to mourn over a debased and ruined child. Thousands have realised the sad result, and have gone sorrowing to the grave.

The Old Faith.

"Present-day Theology" is prefaced by a "Biographical Sketch" of its able and saintly author, which is all too short. Lewis French Stearns was born at Newburyport, Mass., his father being at that time pastor of Federal-street Presbyterian Church, or, as it is commonly called, "Whitefield Church," because George Whitefield lies buried in a vault beneath the pulpit. With every external and hereditary advantage, he was, through the grace of God, granted the unspeakably higher advantage of a definite and deep religious experience. He knew what he believed, and he knew in whom he believed. He came safely through a keen religious struggle in his own mind, which aided him in part to write another book of a special kind, which is making its way among thinkers—"The Evidence of Christian Experience." To one of his classes of students he sent as a dying message the words, "Tell my dear middle class that nothing is of importance to them except to know Jesus Christ as their Divine Lord and Master." In his last hours he said, "I die in the old faith."

One of the unfulfilled thoughts of Lewis Stearns' mind which may some day fructify in another mind was, that an argument for the truth of Christianity might be derived from the doctrine of the Atonement. "If," he said, "if the Atonement is—as undoubtedly it is—the central doctrine of Christianity, so that the cross is not only the symbol of our faith, but the exponent of its inmost and most essential meaning, then there ought to be in it a stronger evidence for the truth of the whole system than that which can come from any other source. Instead of maintaining a continual attitude of defence respecting this central doctrine, acting as if we ourselves doubted its reasonableness, we ought, like Paul, to run the standard of the cross up to the masthead and draw our great proof of the truth of Christianity from 'Christ crucified,' even though it seems at first 'unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness.'" He was of opinion that sooner or later the argument must come into prominence, and that Christianity must stand or fall by its essential doctrines. We think so too; let it be tested by the things peculiar to itself, for herein lies its power.

On the uses of Scripture Dr. Stearns has some discriminating and valuable remarks. The relation of Scripture to the development and perfecting of Christian character is well stated. "Granting," he says, "that men might have a genuine knowledge of God's revelation in Christ through personal experience without the agency of the Scriptures, that knowledge would inevitably be one-sided, imperfect, and even, in many of its elements, false. Christians do not by the new birth spring immediately into perfectness, either of character or knowledge. Sin, and the spiritual, moral, and intellectual disturbance which sin produces, still remain in greater or less measure in every Christian. The spiritual eye of the best Christian is near-sighted and wrong-sighted. Hence the need of a standard and guide by which the individual imperfections and errors may be corrected. This the Bible affords."

And yet there are men among us who speak of our independence of the Word of God, because we have detached the Spirit of Christ from the dead words! They even go so far as to say that we know better than did the writers of the Gospels, and hint that we may even grow into the realisation of a higher revelation!

The Family of God.

I wonder how many Christians realise their membership one with another. How well we know the disagreeable and painful sensation which we have sometimes described as "feeling ill all over," and yet the offending part has been, perhaps, the meanest of our organs! We realise at such times the fellowship of suffering, and discover that no part is independent of another.

How great also the rejoicing of the family when the well-earned "pass" of the studious lad rewards him for his continual toil! The honour of the individual member is cause of rejoicing on the part of all the members of the family.

Beneath these simple facts of everyday experience is hidden a spiritual truth of so deep significance, that only the Holy Spirit can unfold it to us by degrees. But it is quite clear, and can be laid down as an axiom, that we have responsibilities, hitherto undreamt of, as members of one body, of which the Christ of God is head. How far we rise up to our duties and obligations will be in exact proportion as we have "A heart at leisure from itself,

To soothe and sympathise."

Who is sufficient for these things? Only those who are found much at Jesus' feet, and thus go forth to "speak in living echoes of his voice," and who recognise that they are sent as He was sent. Were we to realise that the weakest, most faulty child of God is a member of our body, how careful should we be in thought and word and deed; never could we expose the failings of that one to the curious looks and idle talk of those who know not God!

It is an awful responsibility to be a Christian, for we affect the destiny of the whole body. Our strength or weakness is so much gain or loss to the great commonwealth—the family of God; and to us as weaklings the command sounds forth, "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." Some of us are learning what St. Paul meant when he said, "When I am weak, then am I strong," for we realise in our moments of conscious weakness that his "grace is sufficient" when we cease our efforts and fall back on grace.

The fact is, we do not drink in sufficiently of God before going forth from our rooms in the morning to mingle with our little world. The hurried prayer and reading ill prepares us for our conflicts with "the powers of darkness" and "the mystery of iniquity" working in our midst! If more of us could say with Job, "I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food," the mere residue of time and strength would not then be offerings made to God.

Is the body in any way suffering through our weakness and neglect, and thereby weakened? If we have not, in our individual capacity as members, what we need, is it not because we "ask not," or we "ask amiss"? Do we sufficiently mingle praise with our petitions, and do we take the thing for which we ask, or is the act of receiving a thing undreamed of? Did we but stand upon the promises of God for others and ourselves, and praise God continually for making them in us "spirit and life," we should abundantly prove them in our experience. But like St. Paul we must be determined to "know no man after the flesh"; in other words, we must be prepared to stand upon the naked word of God, in spite of the evidence of sense. It is in this way that the asking will give us the heathen for our inheritance, and that "a little one shall chase a thousand."

In living thus for others there is a reflex action, for we find out that in seeking another's wealth we have thereby gained our own. We have a peculiar individual ownership in God, and God in us; but at the same time we learn increasingly to rejoice in the family Fatherhood of God. There is a tender, touching pathos in that wonderful, comprehensive prayer when we say "Our Father," and bring before Him not our needs alone, but the needs of the whole family. "As the Father hath sent Me, so send I you," is the clue to our position as "members one of another."

Our Saviour Jesus Christ "made Himself of no reputation"; "took upon Him the form of a servant," and eventually "gave his life a ransom for many." It is precisely to this life we are called, and this life—the Christ life—leaves no room for selfish care, or pleasure, or self-seeking.

In solemn tones the Lord asks each one of us, "Can ye drink of the cup I drink of and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" It is true that we may ignore our responsibility, but we are directly and indirectly responsible for the weal of the whole body, and only can we nobly discharge our responsibilities by yielding ourselves wholly to his service, and by letting the government of our little world rest wholly on his shoulders.

The Word says, "Be filled with the Spirit." If we are not thus filled we are depriving the body of that life which should flow through us. We cannot plead our weakness as excuse when the means of strength are within our grasp. By waiting upon the Lord we renew our strength. "To them that have no might He increaseth strength." The power is not in us, but is vested all in God, and it is by inquiring of Him to do it that we realise the might of God, and learn to know Christ, and the power of his resurrection.

And now, how can we confer a benefit on the body, no matter how confined our sphere of action? Is it by much speaking, by continuous rushing hither and thither? Rather will this benefit be conferred by one who is much alone with God, in the secret of the closet. Prayer is the weapon that prevails with God and man. In it we become strong to "endure as seeing Him who is invisible," and in "watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints," we are defenders and supporters of the family—the Family of God.

Gertrude Cockerell.

SEAMEN AT DUNKERQUE.

Since the opening of the "Rest" last March the number of sailors has steadily increased; many of the men in the weekly boats now look upon it as their home on this side of the water. God has set his seal on the work, not only by sending the funds for furnishing and necessary alterations, but He has given us to see that our labour is not in vain in the Lord, by turning many a weary wanderer from "darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God."

Said a sailor the other day, "You see, ma'am, if we come to the 'Rest' we expect to be spoken to about our souls." I replied, "It is an expectation that will surely be fulfilled." Coming to the "Rest" has proved the turning point in many a downward career.

We are anxious to extend our work by taking rooms which are to let in the same building, and would greatly facilitate our work, and enable us to open a coffee-bar for the sailors on the docks, which is greatly needed. Will not some of the Lord's stewards enable us to take this step at once? I will gladly give further information about the work to any who desire it.

Alice Stewart Mackenzie.

Sailors' Rest, Bassin Freycinet, Dunkerque, France.

FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

One of the best human helps towards a systematic study of the Scriptures and a thorough equipment for service, that we have lately met with, may be found in Mr. Charles H. Yatman's "Lessons for those who are or who want to be Christian Workers," published by Mr. Elliot Stock (1s.). Mr. Yatman is an American evangelist, and is evidently a man well versed in soul dealing; no one inexperienced or semi-experienced in Gospel work could give forth such a clear and certain sound on these high and sacred themes. The little handbook (which is very attractively got up by the publisher) has three divisions, one dealing with the study of the Bible, a second on the Divine agency in salvation, and a third on modes and methods of practical work.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken (no mean authority on the point) commends the book in a very warm preface, and his praise is amply deserved. The lessons are in outline, but they are remarkably pregnant with suggestion, and are not at all of the mechanical dry-bones order of prelection. The following example, taken from the third section, will indicate the terse, epigrammatic, and thoroughly wise and practical nature of Mr. Yatman's writing:—

HOW TO LEAD A MEETING.

Come filled to the brim with your subject.
Let your words be on fire.
Be tremendously in earnest.
Keep time on opening and closing.
Be perfectly natural.
See that the air, lights, and seats are in good condition.
Keep out of the old ruts.
Speak so that all can hear.
Do not take the time of others.
Have something to say as leader; and say it.
Do not let persons speak or pray too long.
Do not sing funeral hymns at a praise service.
Have plenty of Scripture, and give its meaning.
Do not mind critics.
Adapt yourself to circumstances.
Be guided by the Holy Spirit.
Keep to the theme, and make others do so.
Always give the best you have.
Put soul-power into the service.
Never lose your grip.
Select both hymns and Scripture beforehand.
Keep your voice right to the size of the room.
Sit where the people can see you.
Strike for results when the iron is hot.
Be wise in giving the invitation to the unsaved.
Keep in mind the fifteen minutes after-service.
Use your own Bible, and get others to use theirs.
Do not let organist or pianist give a concert.
Urge brevity and brightness.
Help the weak and timid ones to take part.
Have great variety in the services.
Make the stranger welcome.
If your plans do not suit, try others.
Do not imagine you are the meeting; you are only the leader.
Pray much before you come, while there, and after.
Depend on God for help more than on the people.
Do not be afraid of mistakes.
Let your face and manner be blessed to the people's good.
Have both solemnity and joyousness in the meetings.
Have faith in God.
Have an object in every service you lead.
Do not sing too slow or too fast.
Get the people's minds off you and on Christ.
Services that do not honour God, and help people to live better and brighter lives, ought never to be held.
All people are not leaders.
The way to learn how to lead meetings is to lead them.

BERLIN.—Pastor Julius Rohrbach writes from 28, Krumme Str., Charlottenburg:—"After the week of prayer we had a fortnight's special services at Moabit and Charlottenburg, which were abundantly blessed, both to believers and others. Every afternoon for two weeks some thirty Christian workers gathered with us for the study of the Word, taking for our subject: 'God's righteousness as explained in the Epistle to the Romans.' We have also opened a school for the training of evangelists, combining Bible study with practical mission work. Pray for us."

THE CHURCHES AND THE HIGHER CRITICISM.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Forrow's letter, in The Christian of Jan. 4, on "The Spiritual Condition of the Churches" is valuable as contributing to a consideration of the causes of decline in spiritual power among us, originating, as many think, in a diminishing interest in the careful study of the Holy Scriptures, which alone are "able to make the man of God wise" unto the salvation of others. I venture to offer a brief contribution to this useful discussion.

For two years, subsequently to my chairmanship of the Congregational Union, I was invited to superintend the Homiletic Class in one of our theological colleges, and thereby had some opportunity of studying close at hand the make-up of the minds of the present generation of ministers, and the processes of their theological education. So far as the personnel of the class was concerned, my experiences were altogether delightful. There could be no rational doubt as to the simplicity of purpose and general right intention of its members, as men preparing for the Sacred Ministry. But it was evident that, speaking generally, the stress of literary studies, especially in the case of the large proportion who had not previously enjoyed many educational advantages, left but comparatively small space and small strength for the close and connected study of the Sacred Scriptures. It was further evident that the process of preparing a class-sermon on a self-chosen text seldom called out the faculty of connected exposition, and, indeed, early and strongly encouraged the habit, so common in modern ministries, of regarding the Bible as a collection of "texts," each one of which was useful in proportion as it set flowing the fountain of original thought in the sermon manufacturer.

The last thing I ever expected to hear was a discourse which consisted of the connected exposition of Prophetic or Apostolic doctrine. And there seemed to be a certain aversion from the habit of fortifying the human statement, whether on doctrine or morals, by the critical citation of Scriptural authorities. In one word, the sacred Scriptures, as a whole, do not, and cannot, hold their rightful place in even the best of our theological colleges: and this, not from any desire to keep them in the background, but because the time of the student is occupied with studies which, it is hoped, may better qualify him afterwards for such connected Scriptural investigations. But when he "settles in the ministry" he is beset with a thousand additional claims on his attention, and his mental habits have been formed on the plan of textual sermonising, with the too common result that the views of truth and of life, inspired by larger studies of the Sacred Oracles, are not always produced by such "settlement."

The professedly religious literature which he reads, and even the "religious" newspapers and magazines, can seldom be regarded as special aids either to Biblical study or to devotion. It is expecting too much of a young married man, who has to preach three sermons a week on single texts, to christen, to visit, to marry, and to bury in turn all the congregation, to anticipate the result that he will generally devote himself to connected study of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures; when it is also expected of him that he should read carefully the principal books written against them by the learned men of England, France, and Germany.

All the while, their main authoritative spiritual power and their main self-evidencing energy lies in the wonderful internal unity of the Holy Writings of the Old and New Testaments; and it is only as this larger connected study of them is pursued that the vision of God therein revealed is fully vouchsafed to the modern teacher and prophet.

And it is only thus that the true answer can be given to the gainsayings of the destructive part of the modern criticism; as it is only thus that the prophetic soul, whose lips have been touched by a live coal from off the altar of incense, in answer to perpetual prayer, will be able to recognise that "glory of the Lord" which fills the Temple of Revelation from one end to the other.

And I do not hesitate to add that in judging of the value of most of the modern books, which, under the name of Higher Criticism, are now gradually undermining the substantial faith of the simpler sorts in the records of Divine Revelation, it is an immense assistance to form some acquaintance with their authors and chief advocates. In most cases the result of such personal contact between men who are "alive in the Spirit," and those who are capable of regarding, for example, that sublime and holy book of Deuteronomy as an impudent forgery, set forth falsely, under the name of Moses, by the reforming high priest Hilkiah (probably the godly father of the prophet Jeremiah), is to convince them that such critics are certainly deficient at least in one quality essential to the validity of the highest criticism. For, if the book of Deuteronomy was a forgery, it was one of the most wicked and daring impostures ever known among men. So thought Mr. Binney and Mr. Baldwin Brown; and so will think, I imagine, the generality of men who intimately know the book itself, and the personal spiritual qualities of the leading writers who are capable of rejecting it as a "pious forgery."

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

Edward White.

Mill Hill, Jan. 26, 1894.

---

Dear Sir,—I have read with much interest your remarks on my letter on the "Spiritual Conditions of the Churches." I am not surprised to learn that it has elicited some denials of its accuracy, but I am surprised at the singular consensus of testimony which I have received from all parts of the country to the contrary effect. There has been but one solitary exception, and that of such personal violence, that I am willing to believe it must have been written in the "brief madness" of anger, therefore not to be taken seriously. Moreover, as the writer has prudently marked his letter "private," I am debarred from dealing with it in any way. On the other hand, I have received congratulatory letters not only from some of the foremost men in the Nonconformist Churches, but from others of no religious profession whatever, who are nevertheless keenly alive to the effect on our national life of maintaining unimpaired the popular reverence for the Divine authority of the Scriptures.

I have been particularly impressed by a letter from a gentleman who was at one time a well-known Secularist lecturer and right-hand supporter of the late Charles Bradlaugh. This letter is instructive as showing what is likely to be the effect of the so-called Higher Criticism on persons with speculative tendencies, or those naturally given to doubt, a class daily becoming more numerous and influential with the wider diffusion of knowledge, and, as might be expected, specially prominent and aggressive amongst the rising generation. Two quotations will suffice. The writer says: "They (the critics) are doing what Thomas Paine tried to do, but their position (in the churches) will do what Paine failed to do." Again, he writes: "The principal Secularist who has been opposing Christian teaching at Peckham Rye the past summer is a youth of eighteen, a former Sunday scholar, and he told me that he did not want to read infidel works for arguments; the writings of Dr. A—, Professor B—, and others were quite enough." My correspondent gives full names, but I am anxious to avoid giving pain to anyone. I have not, therefore, given so much as the initials.

There must be one inevitable effect of this treatment of the Scriptures, which its advocates and imitators entirely overlook. I refer to its bearings on the great missionary enterprise. How can our missionaries in India, China, and elsewhere continue to appeal to the Divine authority of the Scriptures as revelations of the mind and purpose of God in relation to man, if the greater portion of them, and particularly the historical books, are rejected by Christian ecclesiastical authority as devoid of any such character? Let it not be forgotten that the educated classes in India and China, in India particularly, are scarcely less familiar with our literature than we are. Many a young missionary has been astonished to find the Brahmin priest whom he was trying to convert more familiar with the Christian Scriptures than he was himself. Why, sir, if the gentlemen of the Higher Criticism are right, we have no Bible left to us with which to go to the heathen world, and the heathen world will soon know it. Henceforth the poor missionary would stand before the disciples of Confucius or Gautama opposing the splendid literature of the cultured classes and the darkness of the masses with a mere fragment of the Bible left to him, like a sword shattered to the hilt, and that done by some of the men who have sent him forth to do battle on their behalf. I commend this aspect of the question to the thoughtful consideration of some of my brethren in the Congregational body and other denominations, whose hearts never throb with such earnestness as when praying for the coming of the Kingdom in heathen lands.

I entirely agree with you, sir, as to the motives of many of those who, as you say, "handle the Bible in this free manner"; their motives are above reproach, but in their anxiety to get rid of the chaff and dust of dogma, and the accretions of priestcraft and ignorance, they are throwing away the finest of the wheat. What I cannot understand is their apparent inability to foresee the consequences or to realise the inconsistencies of their means with the ends they have in view. You say, and I agree with you, "The passionate devotion of some of these ministers to the glory of Christ cannot for a moment be questioned." What my poor lay understanding is at a loss to grasp is, how this attitude towards Christ can be reconciled or maintained with the repudiation of those very Scriptures to which He appeals as evidence of his claims and Divine authority. Either Christ was Himself deceived in appealing to those Scriptures, or He was invoking the aid of a witness which He knew to be erroneous or untrustworthy. How these gentlemen can reconcile such a method with our Lord's honesty, to say nothing of his Divinity, is what I cannot understand.

Mere negative criticism will carry little weight with men of action. But such criticism may become not only positive, but aggressive and destructive when translated into action, and it is just here that the advocates of the Higher Criticism fail to see whither they are going. Christianity is the Christ in action, and is rooted in Him as the infallible God incarnated in our human nature. Divinity and infallibility admit of no degrees. The doctrine of any limitation of Christ's knowledge is fatal to his Divine claims. Now, as above stated, Christ appeals to certain Scriptures as testifying of Him. The learned Oxford professor and his admirers in our churches directly join issue with Christ on this simple question of fact; they say that the Scriptures do not refer to Christ, but to someone else. Whom are we to believe, Jesus Christ, or the gentlemen of the Higher Criticism? If the latter, then we must admit the logical consequence that Christ was deceived Himself, has innocently or knowingly deceived millions of Christian souls who have trusted Him to the uttermost, and, but for the superior knowledge of the gentlemen of the Higher Criticism, would have deceived us.

Why, sir, what becomes of the Christ, the Son of God and the Saviour of the world, under this critical method? What right or reason have we to look for a vigorous spiritual life where teaching like this is recognised; indeed, what else can we expect but a decline of spiritual power ending in spiritual torpor and death? These gentlemen are laying the axe at the very root of the foundation of Christianity. If they are right, then we must part with our Saviour, and to our despairing cry of "To whom then shall we go?" they give us no reply. There is no escape from one of these horns of the dilemma.

Yours faithfully,

Leytonstone, Essex. A. Forrow.

---

PERCY HALL MISSION.

Among the various branches of this Mission in Central London—which has been carried on for some time past by members of the Regent-street Polytechnic—is the Sunday evening "Casuals'" Service. This has taken the place of the early morning Free Breakfasts of previous winters, and the experiment has proved successful in gathering in about 100, as many as the hall will hold. A Gospel service is held, after which hot coffee and bread-and-butter are served round.

Many of these men have lost good positions in life, but, in their own words, are willing to do anything or to go anywhere if they can only get another start. Last Sunday about forty gave in their names and particulars of their past history and occupations, if possibly something might be found for them to do. If any generous-hearted employers are willing to give any of the men a chance I shall be happy to furnish further particulars.

As a very few have to bear the whole responsibility, both of this work and that amongst the children, any help would be thankfully received, whether in provisions for these teas, second-hand clothing, or aid towards the heavy expenses. The work is entirely voluntary, and has been the means of much help in the past, not the least of which has been the taking of about 100 poor little Londoners to the seaside for a fortnight in the summer.

63, Clarendon-road, W. Wm. J. W. Roome.

CALCUTTA CLERGY AND OPIUM.

BY MR. B. BROOMHALL.

During the recent sittings of the Opium Commission at Calcutta, Lord Brassey, the president, read a letter that had been submitted to them by the Bishop of Calcutta and some of the clergy in his diocese. In this letter the memorialists say:—

"It seems to us that while it is most natural that philanthropists in England should have a general horror of the habitual use of opium, the climate, conditions of life, etc., in India are so entirely different from those prevailing in England, that the question assumes in this country a totally different aspect. While admitting that there are evils arising from the abuse of opium, we are of opinion that they are not sufficiently great to justify us in restricting the liberty which all men should be permitted to exercise in such matters, medical testimony seeming to show that opium used in moderation is in this country harmless, and under certain conditions of life distinctly beneficial. Holding these views, while we regard the Government as most seriously responsible for any measures bearing upon the moral well-being of the people, and trust that careful watch will be kept against any irregularities of administration tending to encourage the excessive consumption of opium in the country, we consider it our duty to add that in our opinion the system adopted by Government in regard to the production and distribution of the drug, is, on the whole, less liable to abuse than any other that could be devised."

This letter from the Bishop and clergy of Calcutta is one of the most unwise and most deplorable letters we have ever read. It is being widely reprinted in this country, and will probably greatly mislead many, who, not having acquainted themselves with the true state of the case, may readily assume that the opinions of the Bishop and clergy of Calcutta are authoritative.

That would be sad enough, but there is something unspeakably more sad, and that is, the tolerable certainty that the people of India, who know what the real effects of opium are, will, by the astoundingly foolish action of the Metropolitan Bishop of India, be led still more to identify Opium and Christianity. That they are already identified both in India and China, the following statements afford painful proof:—

Rev. R. Wright Hay, of Dacca, says:—"As a missionary I have been frequently twitted by educated Hindus and Mahomedans with the fact that our 'Christian' Government has fostered, by its abkari policy, vices against which both Hinduism and Mahomedanism warn and enjoin the people; and I have found widely existing among all classes, the awful impression which found expression when a Mahomedan gentleman said to me, concerning a fellow-student who had taken to the opium habit, 'He has left Mahomet, and is following Jesus.'"

Rev. H. C. Knox, of the Church Missionary Society, Fuh-kien, says:—"The law of justice is, to do to others that we would have them do to us. Do we do this as regards the opium trade? Some people say, 'You should not go on talking about this much-debated question.' But when you have been, as I have been, into Chinese villages, and asked the people if there is anybody in the villages who did not smoke opium—it would be absurd to ask if there was anybody who did smoke it—and when the people have said, with a sickly smile, that they cannot think of any grown-up man in the place who abstained from opium, and further, when you have heard it called many times 'The Jesus Opium,' thousands of chests of which come over from our Indian dependency with a great V.R. upon them, then it is surely time to move in the matter for the prohibition of the obnoxious traffic."

Have the Bishop and clergy of Calcutta thought of the possible consequences of this their attempt to support the opium policy of the Indian Government? What if, by their influence, the people in England who now demand the abolition of our Indian opium trade (except for medicinal use) were turned aside from their purpose, and the evil trade allowed to continue unchecked, to destroy the bodies and souls of millions? The Bishop and clergy say, "We consider it our duty to add that, in our opinion, the system adopted by the Government in regard to the production and distribution of the drug is on the whole less liable to abuse than any other that could be devised."

Have these men ever beheld the great poppy-fields of India, more extensive than some of our English counties—covering about 450,000 acres of land? Have they attended an opium auction, one of the sights of Calcutta, and seen opium worth a million sterling change hands in half an hour? And have they in thought followed that opium to the homes of its millions of consumers?

Do they know that "its mission is to debase and ruin, to lure its victims to a premature and wretched end, and to plunge their families into destitution and misery"? If they do not know this, they have paid but little heed to the solemn protests that have from time to time come from the entire missionary body in China. Mr. Williamson disclaims any reference to China in this letter which he signed, but this is scarcely consistent with the words used, which refer to "the production and distribution of the drug." But, apart from China altogether, their letter indicates a discreditable ignorance of the state of things in India itself, and this attempt to support the Government's opium policy calls to mind the exclamation of the late Lord Elgin, who, grieved with what he saw in 1857, exclaimed, "These are your teachers, O Israel! Imagine what the pupils become under such leading!" But indignation is swallowed up in sorrow at the thought that a number of Christian ministers should have placed themselves in such a false position before the world. They refer to medical testimony as "seeming to show that opium used in moderation in this country [India] is harmless." Let them read the following testimony, given by a medical man who speaks from an experience of nearly thirty years:—

Rai Lal Madhub Mookerjee, Bahadur, L.M.S., gave the following evidence before the Royal Opium Commission: "I am a graduate in Medicine and Surgery of the Calcutta University, President of the Calcutta Medical School, lecturer in ophthalmic medicine and surgery in that institution, and a medical practitioner in this city. I am a Fellow of the Calcutta University, and Presidency Magistrate in this city. I am also a past-president of the Calcutta Medical Society, and was a municipal commissioner for the town of Calcutta for nine years. I have had nearly thirty years' experience in my profession. I was many years in the Government service. I was medical officer in charge of the Famine Hospitals at Chitpore and Sealdah during the great Orissa famine of 1866. I was also house surgeon for thirteen years to the Calcutta Ophthalmic Hospital, and teacher of ophthalmics in the Campbell Medical School.

"Concerning the physical action of the opium habit, I am of opinion that it produces slow and steady and certain degeneration of the human system, abundantly evidenced in the digestive disorders and emaciation that attend its use. Its mental and moral effects are none the less harmful and none the less marked. It most certainly tarnishes the moral nature of man, weakening his mental control over his will, and thus causing him to be the prey of the evil and vicious habits of lying and stealing. After thirty years of a busy medical life, I cannot but look with mournful regret upon the modern social history of my country. I remember with joy the days of my collegiate and classical training, and it seems to me that the habit of using narcotics is strongly accountable for much of the physical degeneration and moral decrepitude of my countrymen to-day. My impression is that the courage and physical stamina of the Sikhs and Rajputs of the renowned Ranjit Singh's time are not the same to-day. I can recall with pride the valiant prowess of the Nepalese princes and people in the past, and from personal acquaintance with them in my professional duty I can say that the steady, increasing use of narcotics has not only caused them to degenerate physically, but mentally and morally, and they can now bear no possible comparison with their heroic ancestors. I have also a very close and intimate acquaintance with the great noblemen of the honoured court of the King of Oudh. Opium and alcohol have played sad havoc, not only with their prestige, but their intemperance in opium is a by-word, for it has lost them their inheritance, and is blotting them out of the land of the living.

"It cannot be said that Western civilisation and education are causing the degeneration of my people; on the contrary, for these blessings we owe undying loyalty and gratitude to England. Surely it is vice that is ruining India, and admittedly the great vice is the habit of using opium or alcohol....

"Since I value opium for its medicinal virtues, I cannot regard its habitual use, except for medical purposes, as anything else but harmful. While in the well-to-do its deleterious action may in a measure be masked or impeded by the free use of nourishing food, it is positively true that without such nutritive protection, the effects of opium are, and can be, nothing else but degenerative.

"As an old man, as one who has the highest and best interests of his country and his people deeply at heart, and as one who has borne the heat and burden of a lifetime of professional labour with the appreciation of his professional brethren, leading them to elect him as the first Indian President of the Calcutta Medical Society, I look upon the advent and work of the Royal Opium Commission as providential. I verily believe England will now step in and save India in her downward course of intemperance and its inseparable vices. Such a course was not only necessary, but essential and imperative, as nothing but the strong arm of the British Parliament could cope with the lethargy and almost immovable conservatism of my countrymen. Much as it may be dreaded that those of my countrymen who are addicted to the use of opium may be seriously inconvenienced by any immediate wholesale restriction of the sale of this drug—a dread of which I believe is too much exaggerated—I am too fervently imbued with a religious patriotism for my people, to ask for anything less from the Government of England than such protective legislation as will save the coming generations from the curse of intemperance. I would not stop with opium alone, I would include alcohol just as thoroughly, as the rapid and alarming spread of alcoholic intemperance among the people of India during the last few years has led to the reproachful saying that 'England found India sober and made her drunk.' May I, in conclusion, urge the prayer, that the Royal Commission on Opium may soon be followed by another on Alcohol?"

We recommend this testimony to the Bishop and his clergy, and would fain believe that did they but know a thousandth part of the wretchedness, poverty, disease, and death which follow indulgence in opium, they would sooner that their right hand were cut off than that it should append their signature to such a letter as the one they have signed and presented to Lord Brassey.

SOCIÉTÉ EVANGÉLIQUE DE FRANCE.

The interest in the advancement of the Lord's kingdom in the world must lead every sincere Christian to attach much importance to the work in France. The position of Paris and France generally on the continent of Europe is unique, and its influence for good or bad is felt everywhere. The conversion of France to Christ must, therefore, be to every Christian what the conversion of Rome was to the Apostle Paul.

With great thankfulness to God we have to record that the labours of the Société Evangélique de France, which now ends its 61st year, are still blessed by the Master. How interesting it is to watch the formation of churches here and there in this large country. Wherever the Society has placed a pastor or evangelist, a little church has always been formed from amongst the Romanists.

Let us for this time stop at the last station opened in Paris at St. Antoine. You will find there plenty of work done; everybody seems to lend a helping hand to Pastor Migot. An active Y.M.C.A. and a not less active Y.W.C.A. are in operation with weekly meetings.

In November there were five baptisms, and three in December. On Christmas Day around the Lord's Table were gathered fifty-three communicants, amongst whom ten were new members. Three from the Y.W.C.A., two from the Y.M.C.A., and five older people; all had followed regularly the services for the last two years. Thus the light is spreading; about twenty new churches are, in a similar manner, forming themselves all over France, but want of space forbids to give details.

It is certainly encouraging, but when we look around us, and see the gross ignorance of thirty-six millions of priest-ridden Romanists, we earnestly pray that more should be done—that new workers should be added to the little staff. Alas! this year the help which England and Scotland has hitherto given to this society has been much reduced, and there is already a debt at the bankers of £1200. So the committee has requested me to visit England and Scotland to lay this matter before our brethren.

Brives, Corrèze. C. W. Cremer, Pastor.

[109]

MONMOUTHSHIRE'S BITTER CRY.

The touching letter from Mr. T. M. Wintle, of Pontymoile, given in our issue for January 18, led to my paying a visit to the place, and instituting inquiries into the condition of affairs. In the eastern valleys of Monmouthshire, the tin-plate industry has for some time been in a very depressed condition. The disastrous coal war of last year brought things to a crisis, involving the total closing of many of the works, and nowhere has this been more general than in and around Pontymoile. The result is deplorable in the extreme. In large cities men so thrown out of work can turn to something—or some member of the family can earn a little. But here! the place itself has grown round the tin-plate works, the whole people virtually depend on these; and when the works are silent and still there is no other resource. Let them go somewhere else, has been suggested. But where can they go? Other tin-plate works are nearly in similar case. They are closed or are working half-time, and if their own workers are only doing half-a-day's work, how could they employ men from other parts?

The nett result is that at Pontymoile, Pontynewydd, and such places the people are starving en masse. A few are in work (partial), a few are tradesmen, and so on, but the bulk find starvation staring them in the face. This has gone on since August last; everything pawnable has been pawned, and thoroughly respectable, decent, hard-working people are reduced to sheer helpless despair. In many cases the heart seems to have failed them; they can do no more; they must bear it grimly and die. Both men and women appear to be meeting the terrible pinch in this resolute spirit of endurance.

A HELPER IN NEED.

But while they complain not, others know and mark their need. Mr. Wintle, who for sixteen years has been greatly used of God in the United Christian Mission at Pontymoile, has had some such experience before: in 1886, for example, things were bad for a time. Hence even last autumn he began to organise helpful relief, starting with free meals to mothers, an occasional meal to fathers, and free dinners to the children. As things got worse, three free meals a week were given to fathers and mothers; while the hungry children were fed once a day; then, by way of further increase, a free meal was, last week, given to adults every evening.

This system of free meals has now gone on without intermission for twenty-two weeks, and will go on, should the Lord send the funds, as long as the need lasts. It is a pitiful thing to stand as I have done the last few evenings, in the midst of such a gathering, and see decent, honest, intelligent men and their wives thankful for a bit of bread. Opportunity is of course taken to put the Gospel before them. I have myself spoken each evening, and have been delighted by the attention paid, but the meal is fairly and frankly given because they are starving. In a place of this kind, every family is known to Mr. Wintle and his helpers; there is no such thing as indiscriminate almsgiving; the state of things at home is accurately known, and those only are helped who need it.

A FURNACEMAN'S STORY.

In giving the following actual case remarks may be made (as they have been made) on the large family. Well, its size did not produce the present distress, though it has aggravated its pressure at home. A furnaceman, a native of the place, said:—I started to work at Pontymoile when the works opened twenty-two years ago, and have never worked anywhere else until now. I have a wife and ten children, and am expecting every moment to have an addition to the family (this came during my stay at the Mission). My eldest is nineteen years, and my youngest two years of age. I have not worked more than three weeks, to put it all together, since we have been idle—last August; and three weeks is not much spread over such a long period. I have earned a shilling or two now and again, but it hasn't been a living. When I have worked since, I have done a little with the gasfitters, but not at all regularly. There has been very often no food to eat, and we have been bordering on starvation. Charity has been all we have had to depend upon. My brother-in-law has helped me all that lay in his power, but he has a wife and seven children himself, and could not be expected to do very much. The Mission people have been my best friends. If it had not been for them I don't know what would have become of us. They have acted very kindly towards us, especially at Christmas time. If it had not been for them we should not have had anything to eat, for we hadn't a bit in the house. The children come here to the free dinner every day, and breakfast on Sunday; and I have been to the free meals here myself. When I am working regularly I get from 30s. to 35s. a week, but with such a large family as I have there's nothing to save out of that. There have been times when I have looked absolutely in vain for a bit of something to eat—that's a fact. The cupboard has been bare, and it's been a hand-to-mouth existence—with precious little in the hand. I have been bound to pawn or starve, and I have only what I stand upright in. I can't answer for others, but that has been my experience. I have been that I have been nearly driven to "make away with myself,"—a man starving for want of work, and willing to work, and can't get it. As to the rent, of course that is all behind. I have always paid when I could, but the landlady has been here to-day, and said that she could not afford to give us the house for nothing, and that unless we paid we should have to be turned out. If that comes to pass, there'll be no chance of getting a fresh house. Nobody will let a house to a man that's out of work, and we shall have to go to the "big house"—there's nothing else to do.

OTHER NECESSITIES.

This is but one case out of many which, save as regards the number in family, are precisely similar. I find that not a few have no food at all but what they get at the mission—subsisting, that is, on one meal a day. As may be anticipated, these free meals have led to many other forms of kindly aid. Tales of every kind reach Mr. Wintle's ears. His wife has taken up the case of expectant mothers—many, alas! without a rag for the coming stranger—and by contrivance and diligence has got together something like the maternity bags well known in London missions. In other cases help of a very practical kind has been rendered; but the rule is not to give money, save in some very exceptional cases. The aim is simply to tide the people over the deplorable crisis, enabling them to hold on until trade revives and the works reopen.

Here is another very sad aspect of the case, thus put by The Western Mail:—

Mr. Thomas M. Wintle, of the Christian Mission, tells a still more awful tale, the truth of which he vouches for—and he ought to know, engaged as he is in the work of relieving the sufferers, "Amongst the unemployed, are a number of factory girls, and, it is sad to relate, some of them have bartered away their virtue for bread, and others would have done the same had we not opened a home at Pontymoile to take in the most urgent cases, and give them a brief training to enable them to go into domestic service." Not only reduced to famine, but driven to vice!

Amongst the many things which interested me greatly while here nothing pleased me more than to mark how a few girls (formerly in this work) are being trained for domestic service. A portion of the Institute has been fitted up as a Home; and there, under the care of a matron well adapted for the task, five girls, rescued from grave danger, are developing into promising servant maids.

Many will be delighted to hear how all this relief work is brought before God. Every night all the workers who can spare an hour meet for definite prayer, that God would provide the funds needful to feed the hungry poor. The petitions are none the less urgent by reason of the fact that many of those who plead with God are themselves in sore enough straits. Then night by night there is praise; for Mr. Wintle has a happy knack of taking the people into his confidence by reading to them in whole or in part the kind letters sent (with gifts), by sympathisers in various parts. Many of these would be greatly moved did they but hear how their letters are laid before God with devout thankfulness.

Such are a few glimpses of the state of things as I observed them last week along the eastern valleys of Monmouthshire. The need is very great and urgent. Mr. T. M. Wintle, Pontymoile, near Pontypool, will be thankful to hear from sympathising friends willing to help in this grave emergency.

Pearl Fisher.

[I am happy to hear from Mr. Wintle that my brief note at the foot of his former letter had induced many to contribute to his relief fund.—R. C. Morgan.]

Aggressive Work.—5.

Some years ago I used frequently to meet a cotton-broker leaving the Exchange Railway Station whilst I was entering it early in the morning. I often handed him a tract and spoke a passing word. One morning he stopped me, saying, "It's all very well for you to be giving these papers and doing this sort of work; but if you had to be on 'Change at business as I have you would find it a very different kind of thing." He evidently thought tract distributing, etc., was my business, and that I was a paid official.

I replied, "Well, you will find me on 'Change at about one o'clock." "What!" he said, "do you mean to say that you are a business man?" I answered, "Yes." "And are you a married man with a family?" Again I answered, "Yes." Greatly surprised, he hurried off without another word.

Some time afterwards I was preaching in the open-air in the Crescent, Buxton, during Whitsuntide, to a very large concourse of people, when I became conscious of someone in the crowd around pressing very closely to the chair upon which I was standing. I looked down to see who it was, and found my cotton-brokering friend as large as life, with a smile upon his face, and there he stood supporting me most nobly right through the meeting. He had been careless about such matters in the past, but now was beginning to take an interest in them.

I used to meet him in Liverpool occasionally afterwards, and believe he became a humble follower of the Saviour. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is everyone that is born of the Spirit" (John iii. 8).

A few months before this I gave a tract to a stout, middle-aged man, and asked if he loved the Saviour. Tears immediately filled his eyes, and he said he once did, and once was in the narrow way. He was much affected, and could not stand to talk, but moved restlessly about until he got away, and I saw him no more. Is not the backslider the most miserable man under the sun, for he is in the light and knows his dreadful position?

A tall, handsome-looking gentleman was standing alone in a public thoroughfare. I handed him a tract, and asked the question, "Is your soul saved, sir?" He looked kindly at me and replied, "Why yes, sixteen years ago, and I will tell you all about it. One evening I had heard a very faithful sermon in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, upon 'Ye must be born again.' Every word appeared to go right home to me, and as I afterwards walked along Cheapside, the truths crystallised in my mind, and upon reaching Bow clock I stood still, and the way of life in all its beauty and simplicity broke in upon me and I saw it all. Instantly my sins fell from my back on to the parapet, and if nobody has removed them they are there yet, for I certainly got rid of them."

"Happy day, happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away."

We cannot all tell the day when the burden of sin rolled off our backs. Nor is it necessary we should, although there must have been a moment when they did, if we have joy and peace in believing.

The Aintree race week is a busy time at Exchange Railway Station here. Amidst the crowds going and coming, and the hubbub and babel of voices, one can do nothing in the way of Christian work but become a witness for the Master by speaking to individuals and groups of men, shouting out Scriptural texts, and putting one's head inside carriage windows asking such questions as: "Where will you spend your eternity?" "Are your souls saved?" "Do you love the Saviour?" etc., etc. A powerful voice is necessary for such work. One man suddenly pulled up the carriage window and caught me under the chin, cutting my tongue, yet not effectually quietening it. The anathemas and Billingsgate thrown at me through the carriage windows were something dreadful. One was reminded of Paul's allusion to fighting with beasts at Ephesus (1 Cor. xv. 32). However, the testimony was given notwithstanding. It is for us to do the work, and the Lord alone can bless it, but He who said, "Ye are witnesses of these things," will never allow the Word to return void.

Liverpool. D. M. Drysdale.

REVIVAL IN ABERDEENSHIRE.

A REMARKABLE work of grace has been going on at Torry, near Aberdeen, for some time in connection with a Gospel mission conducted in the Free Church by Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist. From the beginning of this mission the Lord has truly visited us with showers of blessing. He has greatly revived his people, and aroused them to wonderful activity and zeal in his work. They have been led to see, as many of them never saw before, that they are saved, not simply to escape the doom of sin, but that they may be instrumental in leading their relatives and neighbours to Jesus Christ. Above all, our hearts are gladdened by the fact that many have been led to accept the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour.

During last summer and autumn a deep sense of spiritual barrenness and a yearning for quickening prevailed among our workers. While the Gospel was earnestly and faithfully preached at our Sabbath and week-night services, and at our summer open-air meetings, and no small interest was manifested, there were no distinct results; we seemed to be making no headway. This led to much prayer and searching of heart. In humble dependence on God for much-needed blessing, we were led to arrange for the special mission, which we commenced on January 7.

At the first meeting God began to work, a deep impression was made, and a few souls decided for Christ. During the first week the interest grew and deepened. On the Tuesday evening five young men who had been in anxiety for years were enabled to yield and receive the Lord Jesus.

The following Sabbath was a day of much solemnity and power, and it was found impossible to deal personally with all who waited in anxiety. The services of the day began with a meeting for prayer and praise at 9.30; the last service commenced at 8 p.m., and we could not leave off speaking to anxious souls till 11.30.

On Monday, Jan. 15, as the meeting was being opened, the startling tidings reached us that one of the fishing-boats had been run down in the bay and two lives lost. This sad message was intimated to the meeting, and had to be conveyed to the widows in their homes. No address was given that night. Mr. Smith, having referred to the sad accident, said: "I feel God has preached the sermon to-night, and I dare not add a word." The after-meeting was then announced, and several were led to Jesus' feet. Next day we heard of a touching incident connected with that memorable evening. A number of inquirers, who could not be at the first meeting, had gathered, and were about to come into the after-meeting when they found it dispersing.

On Tuesday evening there was a large gathering. It was felt that the disaster of the previous night had produced a most solemn impression. That evening yielded a rich harvest of souls. From this point the Spirit's operation in power became still more manifest in the breaking down of strong men and women. It was much easier to lead them to accept God's offer of salvation, and numbers came to decision while the address was being delivered. Night after night the wonderful work of God went on, the interest spread, many careless people were induced to come to the meetings. Under the faithful preaching of the Word they were awakened, and many of them received salvation.

Sabbath, Jan. 21, was a day to be remembered, as fruitful in the conversion of several who confessed they had up till then been self-righteous Pharisees. The congregations at all the services that day were the largest we have had in Torry. On the previous Saturday we held a most refreshing and stimulating testimony meeting, lasting two and a-half hours.

In such movements, cases of peculiar interest occur, and to some of these we cannot help referring. A son who had been in anxiety for many years, and whom we had tried in vain to help, had his bonds broken while his father was agonising in prayer in his behalf. The joy of father and son was full. A husband, newly converted, asked us, before he went out to sea, to visit his wife lying in rheumatic fever. On his return, she welcomed him by saying: "I'm a' richt noo, Jamie." He did not quite understand her, and she said, "Not my body, but my soul."

A young married woman was led to Christ at one of our meetings. She still showed much anxiety. Being asked why, she said, "Oh, pray for my husband; I am afraid I have helped to drag him down." Her mother, on hearing the good news, said, "We were washing together to-day; as we washed and rubbed away I prayed constantly that my daughter might be washed, and at times I urged her to come to Jesus and let Him wash her. We did that a' day, and now my prayers are answered."

A whole boat's crew of seven sturdy fishermen, of whom one only was a Christian, are all now rejoicing in the knowledge of personal salvation. The last of these seven, after a night of deep anxiety, closed with Christ in the early morning as he knelt beside his engine thirty miles out at sea. Great is the joy of some households whose members were lately divided and are now all one in Christ Jesus. Some of the scenes witnessed when the last of the members of a family professed conversion were extremely beautiful and touching, and will never be forgotten.

While the mission conducted by Mr. Smith is now closed, we do not expect the work to cease. It is intended to carry it on as long as anxious souls are found waiting and willing to be dealt with. Our object in sending you a report of this great and blessed work, is that others may be encouraged and stimulated to new activity and expectation; and that the abundant grace might, through the thanksgiving of many, redound to the glory of God.

EDWARD BROWN.

Free Church House, Torry, Jan. 27.

ROME AND RESCUE WORK.

ONE of the present-day tendencies is to give countenance and support to any organisation which is supported by an array of big names, without paying sufficient heed to other considerations of greatest possible weight. Our Roman Catholic friends, who are certainly gifted with ability to discern the signs of the times, are not slow to recognise this tendency, and to use it to their advantage. One of the most significant illustrations of this is furnished by the proposal to establish in Manchester a "Night Home for Girls." The work is to be in the hands of the Sisters of Charity belonging to a society founded three centuries ago by St. Vincent de Paul. The movement was inaugurated at a public meeting held in the Mayor's Parlour of the Manchester Town Hall on Jan. 15th, and was supported by the Lord Mayor (Mr. Alderman Marshall), who presided, the Bishop of Salford, the Earl of Denbigh, Sir Charles Hallé, Mr. W. Mather, M.P., Mr. J. W. Maclure, M.P., the Very Rev. Mgr. Gadd, Father Bernard Vaughan, and others. Among the absentees were the Duke of Norfolk, who sent an apology for non-attendance, and enclosed a donation of £50, and Mr. Justice Day, whose letter, warmly approving of the scheme, was accompanied by a donation of £10 10s.

Any work that aims to prevent girls from falling into a life of sin and shame, and to rescue those who have fallen, has our warm sympathy and support. But it will be seen that the originators and, to a large extent, the supporters of this movement are Roman Catholics. This does not necessarily discredit the work, but it should lead Protestant Christians to hesitate before transferring their interest and gifts from Protestant and Evangelical institutions, which, without the patronage of many titled individuals, have been for years doing a solid and useful work of prevention and rescue.

Romish proselytism proceeds in many and subtle forms; and though this proposed Home is announced to be unsectarian, and every inmate is to be free to attend her own place of worship, anyone who knows what Roman Catholicism is can understand how such a rule can be kept in the letter and violated in the spirit. Dr. Barnardo's experience teaches us that disinterested philanthropy, which takes no account of creed, is not the kind of philanthropy which Rome practises. And if there are existing organisations doing similar work on Protestant lines, and doing it well, it is the duty of Protestants to see that these organisations do not languish. True preventive and rescue work can only be done by those who know and are able to teach the simple way of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ.

The Manchester City Mission is one of the old and proved institutions for reaching the masses of the people. It is under the leadership of Mr. J. W. MacGill, a skilful organiser, a fearless and energetic worker, and, withal, a man who knows the truth and is able to teach it in the power of the Holy Ghost. For the rescue of fallen women two bands are at work—one, of sixty men under Mr. MacGill, working in Manchester, and another of fifty men who work in Salford under the direction of Mr. Crewdson.

The story of the work done also by the Ambulance Corps is full of most thrilling interest. This rescue band is composed of working men, some of whom have themselves been saved from drink, and who go forth at night to pick up and care for those who are drunk, and to befriend the poor girls who have fallen or are falling into a life of sin and shame. No work could be more trying and painful, nor any more blessed. The scenes witnessed are harrowing beyond description; but the joy of being able to help and save some is unspeakable.

Here are a few instances, condensed from reports of witnesses of the work:—

"God bless you. I have been praying a long time for my brother." So said a young woman when two of the workers brought her brother home in a state of helpless intoxication. The mother lay dying, and expecting soon to be "with Christ, which is far better."

"God speed you in your work." The speaker was a sorrowing wife, whose drunken husband had been helped home. Her eyes were swollen with crying, and her little baby was on her knee.

A worker went up to a young woman, who was leaning against a wall, sobbing bitterly. "You don't look like a Red Bank girl," said the worker. "Oh, no," she said, "I come from the country; and oh, I am so miserable. He (pointing over her shoulder) do beat me so. What would mother say if she knew what her poor girl was doing to-night?" Yet, though she moaned and cried, she would not leave the man who treated her so cruelly. She received a card telling her where to go if she wanted a friend.

We add only one other incident, which shows that the respectable class of drunkards are touched by this work.

An elderly gentleman, respectably dressed, was found drunk and incapable, after two o'clock one morning. The workers took hold of him and helped him to his beautiful home in Whalley Range. They delivered him up to his sorrowing wife, but not before they had knelt together in prayer. Not long afterwards a message reached the workers that this gentleman was anxious about his soul. One of the workers visited him and taught him the way of salvation. About a year and a half passed away, when a young lady came to the City Mission office with this message:—"Some men took my uncle home while he was the worse for drink, and prayed with him. He became a true Christian. He was taken ill last week and died. Among the last things he said was, 'Seek out these men, and the man who came to me, and tell them I die happy in my Saviour.'"

IN WORD AND DEED.

THE various centres of activity forming the localised work of the North-East London Gospel Mission have been earnestly striving during the past weeks to mitigate in some real way the pitiful distress so superabundant in our huge metropolis just now. Day by day and night by night has seen something attempted and something done. Homes have been made brighter and desolate hearts gladdened. Some 2000 children, factory girls and "gutter" lads, have been given a New Year's treat, and pleaded with to come to Christ. The aged widows have been gathered to tea, and sent home "all smiles" with little presents; while soup and bread is served twice a week to starving unemployed dock labourers and others, and the children of the poor match-box makers are given a hot dinner every Tuesday.

While the frost lasted, ample means were forthcoming, but with the advent of milder weather supplies have practically ceased to come in. There are three soup kitchens now open, and last week the crowd that stood in the rain for nearly an hour in the hope of getting a soup ticket was larger than ever, and many were unavoidably disappointed, while the number of hungry men sent away unrelieved after the coppers had been drained of the last basin was many more than during the frost earlier in the month. The Gospel meetings both for old and young are being well sustained, and increase in numbers and interest.

W. CHORLEY.

6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.

MR. J. LOUIS FENN, of the National Temperance League, conducted a five days' Gospel temperance mission last week in the Mission Hall, New Church-street, Bermondsey. About thirty pledges were taken, among which were those of a number of drunkards.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 4.—PROV. XXVIII.

1.—"Like one that absconds from debt, who thinks everyone he meets a bailiff."—Matthew Henry. See Lev. xxvi. 17, 36; contrast Elijah (1 Kings xviii. 18), the three Hebrews (Dan. xvi.), Luther at Worms. 2.—A distracted Court means a suffering populace. 3.—The poor, when exalted to power, are sometimes hardest on the men of their own class. How different the Lord Jesus, who, once poor, sympathises with the poor and needy!

4.—A man's private character reveals itself in the public men whose lead he follows. 5.—The viewpoint is of all importance. Your judgment will be just if you seek the glory of Christ. 6.—Character is more than property. To be upright is better than to have much without the love of God. 7-9.—Keep the law, pity the poor, augment your substance with honest gain, so shall your prayer be sweet to God as fragrant incense. 10.—Evil, like the boomerang, returns on its instigator.

11.—We do not always realise the mental comments which our dependents are passing upon us. 12-14.—The desire to hide sin is part of the nature of sin. Cover your sin, and it will cry against you; uncover it by confession, and God will cover it. 15, 16.—It is as bad to lack understanding as to oppress. Weakness leads to wickedness. 17.—So Judas went to his own place.

18.—Though in the dark, walk uprightly. Deliverance will come. 19, 20.—Be diligent and faithful; it will pay best in the end. For "innocent," R.V. reads "unpunished." 21, 22.—We are all prone to treat people according to their dress and position, and to hedge ourselves around with the good things of this world; but there is no security in men or things, want will break through both. 23.—Compare xxvii. 5, 6. "He that cries out against his surgeon for hurting him when he is probing his wound, will yet pay him well, and thank him when he has cured it."—M. Henry. 24.—The fact of kingship tends rather to magnify than minimise sin. 25, 26.—Man must trust, as the clematis must cling. Let us be careful that it is not "I," but Christ. 27.—We get as we give. We carry home the baskets full of fragments, when we have disposed of our barley loaves.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5.—PROV. XXIX.

1.—In mercy God sends many messengers before He inflicts the doom of sin (2 Kings xvii. 13-18). Alas that man hardens his neck Pharaoh (Ex. ix. 24) and Ahab (1 Kings xxi. 20). Judgment may be delayed, but it is sure, sudden, and irremediable. 2-4.—How important is our influence for good or evil, whether in the nation or the family. 5, 6.—The flatterers of Darius ensnared him in their plot against Daniel. How often do sinful men lead others into pitfalls where they are taken captive by the devil. 7, 8.—The righteous are wise in the wisdom of the heart, and influence all ranks, from the poor whom they assist, to the public controversies which they allay. In a crisis more is done by character than eloquence. 9.—Leave controversy alone, trust God to settle your disputes.

10.—This is the old enmity between the seed of the woman and that of the serpent (1 Jno. iii. 12). Ask Christ to keep back your wrath and still you. It is stronger to repress than give vent. 12.—Like man, like servant. 13.—See R.V. Both are subjects of God's providential goodness and illumined by his sun (Matt. v. 45). 14.—The foundation of society must be stable, else the apex will rock. 15 and 17.—Children may cause deepest shame or greatest delight. Their training will determine which. Try reproof, and if that fails use the rod. But the rod without reproof is in vain. The children of God need and receive both (Heb. xiii. 10). The wickeder men are, the shorter their reign. 18.—The bond of society is religion. Break that, and it must fall to pieces. 19.—Words will do for sons, rods are for slaves. Cease to have a childlike spirit, and reproof will be exchanged for the rod. 20.—Restrain yourself. Speak slowly. Act deliberately.

21.—Neglect of this caution brought Ishbosheth under Abner's influence, and gave Joab too great power over David (2 Sam. iii. 8; xx. 10). 22-24.—An angry man, a proud man, and a thief, are ill partners for any of us. We cannot share their company without infection from their character, and participation in their doom. 25.—Faith makes the unseen God more real than the wrath of man. Trust Him, thou shalt be safe. 26.—Man's verdict is of little importance as compared with God's. 27.—Be thankful if you are quick to detect and to abhor the will of sinful men.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6.—PROV. XXX.

1-3.—Of Agar we can learn nothing except that he was a wise man who gave instruction to two scholars. Ithiel and Ucal are regarded by some as symbolical names. They mean "God with me," and "I am strong," and may indicate the character which Agar desired for himself and his scholars. His professed ignorance is not false modesty, but a genuine consciousness of deficiency which true knowledge always gives. 4.—There is only one answer to these questions, God in Christ. 5, 6.—God's word will pass with us through fires of suffering, for it is tried. And God interposes Himself between us and human hate.

7-9.—A befitting prayer for us all. Better to let God choose for us, than choose for ourselves. Better to have moderation with God than plenty without Him. 11-14.—Four evil generations. Beware of them. 15, 16.—The heart that has God is alone satisfied, and says Enough! 17.—If you break the law of God, you are in collision with the world that obeys Him. 18-20.—We are surrounded by things we cannot understand. Mystery, therefore, is no reason for rejecting the Bible. But let us beware of the mystery of iniquity.

24-28.—These little, but wise creatures, teach us (1) diligence, to use present opportunities (25); (2) the need of shelter (26). A coney is about the size of a rabbit, and lives in the clefts of the rocks. The fiercest lion cannot hurt them there (Isa. xxxiii.) 16; (3) unity; (4) faith (28). R.V. renders this "lizard." Can you take hold by faith? 29-31.—Put not too great store on statliness of mien. It is shared by animals who lack the nobler attributes. 32, 33.—Refrain thy mouth from evil. Be still, and commit thy cause to God. Least said, soonest mended.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7.—PROV. XXXI.

1, 2.—The name Lemuel means "devoted to God," so his mother calls him the son of her vows. Who he was we do not know. 3-5.—From his mother's lips Lemuel heard warnings against vices which she could only mention with horror. How much better to hear them from her lips than to have them presented afterwards in all their deceptive attractions. How many fall because their parents have not warned them. 6, 7.—The use of alcohol as medicine is legitimate. We have no right to take for pleasure what God intended for serviceable use.

8, 9.—The vice of intemperance leads to injustice. Let us ever care for the cause of the poor and needy. 10-31.—The description of a virtuous woman. In the Hebrew it is an acrostic, the twenty-two letters of the alphabet beginning the verses. 11, 12, 23.—As a wife.—Perfect trust is the foundation and result of love. There is no such reward to woman as to have this heart-trust from the one man to whom she has given herself. And from the moment she realises it she counts all else but loss that she may help him and do him good all her days.

13, 27.—As mistress.—A beautiful picture is given of her industry in the home. She sits amongst her maidens, pervading their lives and talk with her influence, and she is not above working with her hands. She bestirs early. Her household is well ordered and fed. She preserves her gains, and invests them in what will yield lasting profit. She does not forget the poor and needy. She not only opens her hand, but her mouth with loving counsel and wise helpfulness. For an ideal like this, who is sufficient but she who is filled with the love of God, and inspired by his Spirit? 28—31.—As mother.—Let each woman so live that in years to come she may be her children's ideal. To have so lived as to win the devoted esteem of husband and children will have been better than gold and silver, and is within the reach of the poorest.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8.—ECCLES. I.

The preacher or assembler signifies Solomon, and may be taken to mean also the wisdom of God speaking through his lips. The Book compares the variety of human pursuits as made the chief end, and contrasts them with the real blessedness of true wisdom. 2. "Vanity of vanities" is the Hebrew for the most utter vanity. Life without God is as disappointing as the broken soap-bubble to the child, or as the mirage of the desert. Nothing satisfies except it has God in it. The love of the world and of the Father are mutually destructive.

3-11.—We have here the yawn of the worldling over the monotony of everything. The passage of the weary generations, the procession of day and night, the wind itself, with all its fluctuations at last reduced to such a system that its currents can be predicted from day to day; the river always flowing on; the ocean tide always swelling and falling; the absence of novelty; the very thoughts and philosophies of men returning in a circuit to those of the earliest ages; the dead level of human life—this is the moan of the sated worldling, who has eaten at every banquet table, drunk of every vintage, and gone through every form of human delight. To many, life has become an ineffable weariness. They are willing to expend any money that shall provide some new diversion; their one endeavour is to kill time. All this comes of aiming too low for joy, and seeking it under the sun, instead of in those realms which need neither sun nor moon.

12-18.—The experience of one in such a position as Solomon is of the utmost value in estimating the worth of this world, for not only his state, but his natural qualifications, were of the highest order. King of a united people, specially gifted with wisdom, and surrounded by all that Oriental splendour could give, if he found life vain without God, how much more shall we? His first endeavour was to know, and to find there the cure for heartache; but in spite of all his efforts he discovered much wisdom to be much grief, and increased knowledge increased sorrow. The Holy Spirit alone imparts the knowledge that has no sting in it.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9.—ECCLES. II.

1-11.—Solomon's second attempt was to find happiness in his estate. He tried mirth; his Court was full of merrymaking. Then he turned to wine, carouse; then to building, planting, landscape gardening, farming. From these he gave himself up to the attractions of the harem. Into the cup of his life he put every ingredient that wealth could purchase, or ingenuity procure; but as he explored each new phase of promised happiness he turned from it with a sigh, which in these days would be called pessimistic. In point of fact, things, however plentiful and beautiful, can never satisfy the heart of man when they are made an end instead of being enjoyed in God. 12-23.—He had tried worldly wisdom and foolish pleasure, and in these verses he appraises them, and finds that though it is better to be wise than foolish, yet the advantage is not overmuch, because so soon as death comes the wise man and the fool stand upon the same level. "One event happeneth to all." And if death be all, why should we spend our days in the vain endeavour to excel, to pile up riches which we cannot spend, and to make a name which shall be soon forgotten? To live for God, and to secure his well done, is alone worthy of our endeavour, and will compensate.

24-26.—Looked at from the point of the materialist to whom death closes all, it is perfectly true that life presents every inducement to adopt the creed of the epicurean, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." And yet the lust of the flesh, i.e. the power of enjoyment, passes away even before the world itself, which is as a fleeting shadow. Then what will not be the anguish of the other world, where there shall be the desire to enjoy, but the power and the means of enjoyment will be wanting? Live to please God, and you will find that you are inheriting life's truest wealth.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10.—ECCLES. III.

1-11.—There is a timeliness in life. Each human life passes through certain phases and experiences. All natural things are lawful in themselves, but our mistake is not to enjoy them in God's allotted order, and as He may dispense them. Men have sought to deny themselves of many things which are right and natural, thinking they were doing God's will. Many are afraid to enjoy bright and beautiful times when God puts them into their lives, because they have a doubt of God's beneficence. It is not wrong to rejoice in every good thing which the Lord God gives, but it is wrong to mistrust Him, to think that He grudges us aught, to refuse to do the ploughing, the mourning, the refraining, the casting-away, the keeping silence. No true life can be strong without the perpetual alternation of experience; one unbroken time would not so well promote our moral growth as a succession of varied ones. God exercises us by travail (10). And He has set eternity in our heart (11, R.V.). We can never be truly satisfied with the things of time, since we have within us a capacity for the eternal. As well fill up the ocean with the contents of wheelbarrows!

Delitzsch says: "God has not only assigned to each individually his appointed place in history, but He has also established in man an impulse leading him beyond that which is temporal toward the eternal." 12-15.—Do good as long as you live, so will you get good. Enjoy good things as God's gift, and they will not hurt you. Trust God's unchangeableness. God's will moves in an eternal circle; He calls again that which had passed away. 16-22.—These verses contain Solomon's creed when selfish indulgence had brought him to the verge of atheism, and when he was prepared to say that there was neither God nor hereafter. It is quite possible that for such a one there is nothing better than sensual gratification, but the heart of man can never rest there; it must come out of the fevered atmosphere, and stand beneath the opened heaven, and cry out for the living God. This was but a phase of Solomon's experience, but, as we shall see, like others, it passed away.

---

EAST LONDON.—On Thursday evening the Gospel Pioneer Band (one of the auxiliaries of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society) celebrated its third anniversary by a tea and public meeting in the Seamen's Chapel and Institute, St. George's-street. It was reported that 166 open-air meetings had been conducted, largely attended by people who would not otherwise hear the Word of God. A system of public-house visitation was carried on throughout the year.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 11.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH ABRAHAM.—Gen. xvii. 1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT, Gen. xv. 6.

ABOUT twenty-four years have elapsed since Abram left Haran for Canaan (compare xii. 4 with xvii. 1). The main events of his life since then are: his failure in Egypt (xii. 10-20); his separation from Lot (xiii.); his victory over the four kings, followed by his meeting with Melchizedek (xiv.); the covenant (xv.); and the device of Sarah for helping the fulfilment of God's promise, leading to the birth of Ishmael (xvi.);

Since the separation from Lot, Abram's home had been at "Mamre which is in Hebron" (xiii. 18). Tradition fixes the spot at "Er Râmeh, about three miles north of Hebron, where Constantine built a large church in memory of the patriarch, and where a perennial spring supplies the neighbourhood withwater. The name Mamre belonged to the Amorite chief, and was also given to a famous oak or terebinth tree that grew there. Here Abram resided when the incident of this lesson occurred.

(1) GOD'S APPEARANCE TO ABRAM (1-3). The time is significant. For thirteen years there seems to have been no such communication (see xvi. 16 and xvii. 1). Why this long silence? Was it to train Abram to walk with God even when these sensible enjoyments of his presence were withheld? More probably it was because the scheme devised by Sarah and adopted by Abram was a departure from the way of faith. To enjoy constant and conscious fellowship with God we must be careful never to forsake the ground of faith.

The name God takes is a new one (1). Hitherto He has been known to Abram, as Elohim, the creator and preserver, and from Melchizedek he had learned to know him as "the Most High God" (xiv. 19, 22). This new name is El Shaddai, and represents God as almighty and all-sufficient. It contained a silent but powerful rebuke to Abram. Could such a God require humanly devised schemes to enable Him to fulfil his promises? As well might a glow-worm help the sun to shine. How foolish our unbelief appears in view of such a name as this! But it contained encouragement too. The message that follows contains promise and command. It would be impossible either to believe the one or obey the other without the knowledge of God as the Almighty One. All true advance in the life of faith is connected with growth in the knowledge of God. "The people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits."

The call accompanying this revelation is in two parts, one an explanation of the other. Perfection is not sinlessness, but a walk under the constant sense of his presence, with unvarying obedience to his will, and with no other desire than to please Him. Perfection in this sense should be the aim of every believer. Is it yours?

The effect upon Abram was significant (3). Never before has there been such intimacy between God and Abram; nor has Abram ever been so humbled before God. The "friends of God" never allow familiarity to lessen their reverence. The nearer we get to Him the more unworthy we appear in our own eyes. God's secrets are revealed to those who fear Him (Psa. xxv. 14), and obey Him (Jno. xv, 14, 15).

II. GOD'S COVENANT WITH ABRAM (4-9).—This is an advance upon what God has already promised. The seed is no longer merely as "the dust of the earth" (xiii. 16), nor as "the stars of the heaven" (xv. 5), but now "a multitude of nations" (5). The land, at first indefinitely promised to his seed, then its limits defined (xv. 18), has now the added thought of security of tenure (8). This is God's method always. At school, the lesson of to-day is a preparation for a more advanced lesson to-morrow. God deals with you like that. Meet his promises and commands with the spirit of faith and obedience, and he will not fail to add more. The advance in Abram's case was marked by his change of name (5). His former name meant "exalted father," his new name means "father of a multitude." The advantage of this change of name was, that it recalled the promise, kept alive a sense of responsibility, and continually encouraged his faith. The name "Christian" should do the same for us.

Like that made to Noah, this covenant foreshadows the new covenant. Its blessings are literal, and have their application to Abraham's natural seed. For this, God is keeping the Jews among, yet distinct from, all other nations. But the language used evidently goes beyond that. Read it in connection with Gal. iii., where Abraham's seed is not Isaac merely, but Christ (16); the children of Abraham are not mere natural descendants, but believers (7); and the blessing is no longer earthly, but spiritual and heavenly (9, 14).

Think of Abraham, hearing these promises so long ago, and meeting them with simple faith. They are made to us on the same authority. Shall his faith reprove our unbelief? Or shall we by faith prove ourselves the true children of Abraham?

For the Young.

"ONLY A SNOWDROP."

BY REV. JOHN MITCHELL.

YES, I am only a snowdrop, but I come, as the morning star, to herald a brighter day about to dawn. The short dark days of winter are passing away, and the sun is hastening to bring back summer with its joy and gladness. And I comfort drooping hearts as I remind them that God has not forgotten to be gracious, and that one day all sorrow and sighing shall flee away. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

"Only a snowdrop," but I show mankind that God has not given over the earth to barrenness and death. True, there has been abundance of life all the winter, but it has mostly been hid. But life gradually reveals itself. Life cannot remain hid. "The Life was manifested, and we have seen it," said John the apostle when speaking of that Life which was the light of men. And all who have the life of Christ in them will manifest that life in their walk and conversation. Life is hid, as is the seed, that it may bud, blossom, and bear fruit.

But where does life come from? Where is its source? "With Thee is the fountain of life." Everything leads us back to God? But why do some men of science fail to recognise God? Because they do not go back far enough. They trace back to prehistoric ages on earth, but beyond that they refuse to go. Then they look for God in his works. The wise men from the East did not look for Christ in the star, but they followed where the star led them, and they found Christ. But some scientific men look for God in the stars, and by the aid of their telescopes, and cannot find Him. They lack the wisdom of the Magi.

"Only a snowdrop," but I have forced my way through the snow which covered the ground. Life always finds some obstacles to overcome. But it is the triumph of life to overcome difficulties. Difficulties are a blessing to man. Much that people enjoy to-day in civilisation they owe to difficulties. Difficulties bring out latent talents, and develop gifts which are of great service, and which make men famous. Difficulties in the Christian life are the making of good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

"Only a snowdrop," but I represent the purity of that land where no stain of sin can enter and where all is peace and love. My purity is from God. It is but the reflection of his purity. Man, too, was made pure but he fell. God, in the greatness of his love, did not leave him hopeless. He has opened up a way by which he may be restored to purity. There is a glorious promise to all who seek that restoration:—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

"Only a snowdrop," but I usher in the time of flowers—flowers of every tint and hue. I shall soon vanish away, but lovelier flowers will take my place, and I shall not be missed. Before the Rose of Sharon bloomed on earth there came a man from God to announce his appearing. Multitudes gathered around this man and began to idolise him, but he declared that his own popularity should wane and pass away. And he was content that Christ should increase while he should decrease. And when he pointed them to Christ they left him and followed their Lord. They lost a preacher, but they found a Saviour. They lost a man, but they found a God.

"Only a snowdrop," but I have made the world a little brighter than it was when I entered it. If all who came into the world did the same, the desert would soon rejoice and blossom as the rose. But alas! men too often come into the world, and then leave it darker—so far as their own influence goes—than they found it. They lived for themselves, and forgot God. They did not glorify Him in their bodies and in their spirits, which were his. How solemn a thing, then, it is to live!

THE CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Luke's, Liverpool, to Feb. 7; Cheetham Hill, Manchester, Feb. 8; Ripley, Feb. 9; Shenley, Feb. 12; Watford, Feb. 13; Tollington Park, N., Feb. 14; St. Andrew's, New Kent road, Feb. 15; Reading, Feb. 18; Derby, Feb. 20 and 22; Boulton, Feb. 21; St. Alban's, Liverpool, Feb. 25 to March 4; Mr. J. S. Tyler, St. Leonard's, Bootle, near Liverpool, to Feb. 7; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, St. Michael's, Ipswich, Feb. 10 to 20; Y.M.C.A. Hall, Ipswich, Feb. 24 to 27; Mr. G. Goodman, Highbury Hill Baptist, Feb. 4 to 11; St. Matthew's, Chelsea, Feb. 25 to March 2; Mr. E. Hughes, Congregational Church, Greenwich, Feb. 5 to 9; Home of Industry, Bethnal Green, Feb. 26 to March 2; Mr. Josiah Spiers, Llandrindod Wells; Mr. H. Falkner, Luton, Feb. 18 to 20.

JEWISH CHILDREN MADE HAPPY.

Year by year Mr. and Mrs. Ehrlich, whose mission work among East London Jews is well known, endeavour at the beginning of the year to brighten the lives and cheer the hearts of some of the many Hebrew children of Whitechapel. The dark-eyed little ones are got together and made happy; they recite pieces which they have learned, and sing Christian hymns. Then, by way of a finish, many bright and pretty things are taken from a Christmas tree, and distributed.

A few days ago, Mr. Ehrlich gathered six hundred of his little friends, members of his Band of Hope, for their Christmas festival, in the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel. The company was divided into two parties; three hundred of the tiny ones were entertained in the afternoon, and three hundred of their older brothers and sisters attended in the evening. Sweets, toys, and useful articles were abundant, thanks to the liberality of good friends of the mission.

Not only did the children enjoy themselves very much, but such friends as were present, who had helped to promote their joy, were delighted at all they saw and heard. There is much that is dull and distressing in the life of the children of poor Jews, but this was a "red letter" occasion to all who took part in it. The Band of Hope is a very important section of Mr. Ehrlich's work, and we hope it will continue to prosper, and that many of its members will grow up to be true Christian Israelites.

A SAGACIOUS PUSSY.

A missionary lady, late one evening, trod on a snake in her bedroom. When, after a long and unsuccessful search, it was supposed the snake had escaped to the garden, the family cat traced the creature to its hiding-place, keeping watch over it until some servants killed the cobra, for such it proved to be.

On another occasion the same lady was sitting with a friend, when she got up to close a door on account of the glare, and was much startled to see a full-sized cobra enjoying the cool of the room, just inside the door, and about two feet from where she stood. Calling to her friend to get some of the servants to come in as quietly as possible, she waited to see if the snake would try to escape. Hearing sounds, the creature stood on the defensive, with its head erect and hood spread out, and then crept out into the verandah, only to return by another door! Seeing the snake glide into the middle of the room towards where she stood, the lady discreetly, and, if the truth were told, somewhat hastily left the snake in possession, and went out to hurry the servants. When they arrived the snake had vanished, but the same sagacious pussy was seen watching a dark corner under a bookcase. The cobra was discovered underneath, and was soon killed by the servants, but not until it had tried to attack the cat more than once.—The Zenana.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—S., Feb. 4, Psalms xlii. 1-11; 5, xliii. 1-5; 6, xlv. 1-17; 7, xlvi. 1-11; 8, Mark i. 1.13; 9, i. 14-28; 10, i. 29-45.

HIGHBURY CORNER GOSPEL MISSION.—The tenth annual social tea and general meeting was held on Monday week in Sebbon Mission Hall, Sebbon-street, Islington. A number of Christian workers attended the meeting, and nearly all gave short earnest reports of work done, many owning to having received their first call to aggressive Christian work through the instrumentality of the H.C.G.M.

EAST LONDON STREET ARABS.—On Wednesday last week, a tea and entertainment was given by Mr. Harry Lewis and the friends of the "Children's Band" to more than 1200 children at St. George's Chapel, Cable-street. The children were invited through the Wesleyan East-end Mission. All the rooms connected with the chapel were crowded with children, while the court outside was also filled with a shouting, struggling throng waiting their turn, as there was not sufficient space to seat the whole number at once. The largest rooms were entirely filled with about 400 boys, regular street arabs, many without shoes and stockings, while rags and dirt were common to all. The food was distributed in paper bags, each containing a substantial supply of bread-and-butter, bread-and-jam, and cake, while large tin cans of tea were provided. At the conclusion of tea, the children witnessed a magic-lantern entertainment in the chapel.

The Lord's Poor.

One hears much of the patience and endurance of the poor under their heavy burdens; and in visiting them we have been struck with their passive acceptance of the worst ills to which flesh is heir. They tell their stories of hunger, cold and sickness, of cruelty, neglect and misery, with a quiet "can't-help-it-you-know-Miss" style that tells its own tale of long familiarity with scenes that haunt the working and sleeping hours of the sympathetic visitor.

But specially have we been struck with the manner in which the Lord's poor bear the sorrows and privations of their lot. The uncomplaining attitude of their brothers and sisters who are yet without hope, and without God in the world, in their case is changed into the upward look of faith and submission that lifts their poverty-stricken lives out of the commonplace, and transforms the drudgery and sordid cares that oppress them, till we have sometimes felt after leaving these "hidden ones" as if we had been breathing air from the mountain top which has sent us as giants refreshed to our own work and duty.

Do my readers, who may not be in the habit of visiting amongst such, feel inclined to doubt the statement? Will they read a perfectly accurate record of visits recently paid to humble Christian homes, where Christian love and trust have triumphed over cold, hunger, and misery, and death itself?

"NOTHING BUT CRUSTS FOR DAYS."

A dreary back street in a densely-crowded East-end district, leading out of a thoroughfare lined on each side with street stalls and redolent of the odours peculiar to such neighbourhoods. We are ushered into a little living room, bedroom and kitchen combined, a pleasant home-like apartment. An elderly woman is in bed suffering with bronchitis, and a girl of twenty-two is waiting upon her. We are surprised at the general appearance of comfort and respectability, but presently discover our mistake, for the girl on learning our errand asks us to withdraw to a top room, carpetless and fireless. There we find an old wrinkled woman, who, with Bessie's help, tells the story of destitution which the aspect of the place fully confirms.

"We're selling up everything to pay rent and get us a crust."

"Look here, Miss," and Bessie opens a drawer and produces a handful of pawn-tickets. "Half-a-crown a week from the parish for grannie is all that's come into the house since I've been out of a place, and there's me and grannie and my two little sisters to keep."

"Bessie's been a good girl, Miss. She might ha' done well for herself after her poor mother and father died four year agone, but she wouldn't let me and the little 'uns go to the House, and she would only take a place as 'daily,' so that she might come home o' nights and do a bit for me and the children. She earned four shillings a week till a while ago, when she was ill and fell out of a place, and ever since she's been selling up her clothes, till now she ain't fit for a decent place."

"And I couldn't go out to look for a place neither this last fortnight, for my landlady's been that ill I couldn't leave her with no one to see after her, so I've been nursing her. She can't afford to pay me anything, but she's very grateful."

"Don't you have anyone come to see you from the church you attend?"

The faces of the old woman and the young girl brighten pleasantly.

"Oh, yes, the district visitor comes to see us, and Bessie's been in her class of week nights for years."

"And doesn't she help you at all?"

"Yes, Miss, she's often brought us tickets for bread and soup, and such like, but we don't tell her how bad off we are. It'd grieve her too much, and we allus keep our poverty to ourselves."

"But you must be frank with me. How do you manage to live?"

"I couldn't tell you, miss. We've had nothing to eat but dry crusts for days, and I'm faint and hungry now, and there ain't nothing in the house for tea. I'd work till I dropped if I could get work to do." So says the girl. The old woman nods and shakes her grey head in confirmation, but exclaims, "We ain't unhappy though, Miss. It's my birthday, and I'm seventy-seven, but as I was a sayin' to Bessie this morning at breakfast time, if I lives to another birthday and haven't more than this dry crust to eat, I hope I may be as 'appy as I am to-day."

"That's true enough, Miss, and many and many a time afore I've gone out to look for work in the morning without a bite, I've knelt down to that bed and asked God to send us help, and sure enough He has." We can listen to no more, for we are not yet case hardened. We promise to try and secure Bessie an outfit and a daily situation, and then from a purse, which is by no means wellstocked, we select a small silver coin and slip it into the grandmother's hand.

"Oh," exclaims Bessie, "it's always like this. Just when we've had no bread and no money in the house something has come." We beat a hasty retreat marvelling at the simple faith of this ignorant but Spirit-taught girl and her aged grandmother.

"MY MERCIES ARE PAST RECKONING."

Presently we stand before the door of a tidy cottage in one of the suburbs of London, already teeming with a population of respectable working people. The open door reveals a well-scrubbed passage-way with bits of carpet and oilcloth down the middle. A small basket of mangling blocks up the further end. A widow with thin, worn face, upon which mingle, like April rain and sunshine, ready tears and smiles, invites us into the small kitchen partially filled with a large mangle.

On the table there stands a half-cup of weak, milkless tea, and that and a few crumbs suggest a recent scanty meal. But in spite of this, a child of tender years asks beseechingly for bread, and will not be silenced. There is no food in the house, and the woman says she must take the mangling home before she can get money to buy any. She exhibits with delight a bone with a little meat upon it, already somewhat decomposed, which a neighbour has given her a few minutes previously. "With an onion it will make a lovely dinner for the children," she says. There are three of them, not reckoning the mother and a big boy who will walk seven miles from his place of work at nightfall, and who, until he is out of his apprenticeship, is earning little more than will keep him in shoe leather.

"My children are good to me, and if I can hold out for a few years longer things will be easier. But the mangle is hard work and nearly kills me, Miss, with my heart being all wrong; still, there's nothing else I can do. Don't think I'm complaining, for the Lord's always mindful of his promise, and He's been a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless. My mercies are just past reckoning."

"You belong to a Christian church, I hear. Don't you receive any help from it?" we ask wonderingly.

"Never till last week, for I've not been in the habit of talking about my troubles to folks. I tell them to the Lord, and He always helps in His good time. Last week I was ill and we well-nigh starved, and a kind neighbour who belongs to the church went to the minister, and he sent me three shillings out of his own pocket. There was nothing in the poor box, for it's a very poor church in a very poor neighbourhood, you see, Miss." A little more conversation, and we rise to go. The widow follows us to the door with thanks and grateful tears in her eyes, for which there is little enough cause.

"You've cheered me up finely, Miss, and may the Lord bless you abundantly!" Our hand is grasped and held for a minute, and then our brave sister watches us out of sight.

"I'VE GOT THE REAL THING."

We next find ourselves in a room, the picture of cleanliness and even brightness, in a block of model lodging-houses, situated in one of the low-lying river districts of the East-end. Here there is a widow dying of cancer in one of its worst forms, and yet struggling to keep up to the very last for the sake of the two elder lads, who between them earn the family income of sixteen shillings, and two bright little girls, for whom she has "torn herself to pieces," as she expresses it, in the fearful struggle to keep the wolf from the door since the father died. Just recently she has been visited by deaconesses, and says, "No tongue can tell what I owe to them."

"What have they done for you?" we ask.

"Oh, Miss, they've led me to Christ, and now I cast my care on Him every day, and I'm not afraid to die. I've got the real thing, and it's the comfort of my life. No, I don't get parish relief. I did for a bit, but I wouldn't go to the House, and so they stopped that. I can't and I won't leave the children while I've got any breath in my body. Sister's trying to get the little ones into a Home where they'll be brought up right, and I'm just hoping and praying they may be taken in, for the doctor says I may be gone in a twink." We may add that the cruel sufferings of this devoted mother shortly came to an end, and a few days previously the little ones were admitted to the Home referred to, where their childish feet will be guided into ways of pleasantness and truth.

"THE PARISH ALLOWS ME A TRIFLE."

Just one more peep into a home where poverty reigns supreme; no, not supreme, for hope and faith are enthroned in the hearts and lives of those who dwell within this little cottage some distance removed from London din and smoke. Heavy sorrows have overshadowed this home for long years. The delicate, prematurely aged woman, who opens the door is the mother of seventeen children, seven of whom have been taken from her by death, some in early girlhood and boyhood, others in infancy, and one after twenty-two years of suffering, during which she was "just the sunshine of the home, so loving and patient." Then followed the heaviest stroke of all. The father, a good devoted man, was cut off in the prime of life, leaving the widow with six children unprovided for.

"I can only do a little sewing, and the parish allows me a trifle. All the children but one or two are delicate, and need good food, and how we've managed since their father died I don't know. The Lord's been good to us, that's all I can say, and, though I'm crushed with sorrow, I don't doubt his love and care." How has she managed indeed to keep the roof over herself, and the children still at home? Not all children either, for the eldest is twenty-five and weak-minded, through fits in infancy. "Not troublesome at all, but no one except his mother would keep him," says that mother. Then there is hard-working cheery Mary, who does all the washing and house work, and finds enjoyment and profit at the little Methodist chapel on Sundays, and the week night class, which she regularly attends. There are three other younger children, bright and promising, and then comes the pet of the family, a white-faced, golden-haired girl of three, who has been reared thus far with difficulty.

Truly, the faith and patience of the saints takes root and puts forth its hardy blossoms in strange unlikely places, we often think, while visiting such abodes, in which the Apostle's words are daily verified: "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed." Annie F. Perram.

38, Westbank, Stamford Hill, London, N.

WORK FOR THE STARVING.

Sir,—As the misery and distress do not diminish, but increase, will you allow me to appeal to your readers for assistance? Our Bible-women and voluntary visitors are overwhelmed with applications for relief. It is piteous to hear the children crying for bread, and we have to curtail our gifts for want of funds. Last week, by the kindness of the Earl and Countess of Dudley, I was privileged to lay a scheme before some West-end friends at Dudley House, whereby some of the unemployed might be put to work. About eighteen months ago we purchased very cheaply a large and commodious freehold building, with courtyard and six small cottages. For want of funds we have not been able to fit it up. It is intended to use it for recreative and educational classes for children every week-day evening—a kind of Young People's Palace—and on Sundays for Sunday-schools.

We feel now it is an opportunity for putting some of the unemployed to work, and after my appeal at Dudley House I had sufficient promises to warrant me at once commencing operations, and on Monday last I began the work, but cannot continue long unless I get more funds. I am convinced that I have only to lay this matter before the generous public to enlist their sympathy and help, so as to keep these poor men at work, and thus tide them over the trying months between this and the spring.

Donations for this twofold object will be most thankfully received.—Faithfully yours,

Edwin H. Kerwin.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E.

The Late BISHOP HILL,

OF WESTERN EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

IT may safely be said that of the illustrious band of faithful men and women who, in recent years, have laid down their lives for the sake of Africa's evangelisation, none have been more sincerely mourned than is he whose portrait we give to-day. Bishop Hill and his life partner had so recently left this country for what, it was hoped, would be their greatest life-work, that the news of their death came as a great shock of pained surprise and of deep regret. We are even now without details with respect to the passing away of these workers, except that fever was the cause. We can but humbly bow in the presence of disappointed hopes and plans nipped in the very bud, and say with the patriarch of old: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

(From a Photograph by Messrs. T. C. Turner & Co., 10, Barnsbury Park, London, N.)

Bishop Hill has been cut down in the very midst of his days, according to our human reckoning; he was born near Stamford in 1851. He was early bereft of parental love, but his training had been carefully seen to, and he started out in life with the happiest prospects. We cannot tell the circumstances of his conversion, or describe the influences that led him, when little more than twenty, to devote himself to the work of foreign missions. He passed through his three years' missionary curriculum at the C.M.S. College, Islington, then under the fostering supervision of Rev. W. H. Barlow. At its close he was appointed to a post in West Africa in connection with the Yoruba Mission, so that his first experiences of work were a preparation for the more responsible post to which he was afterwards called.

The deadly climate of the West Coast soon told on the health both of Mr. Hill and his young wife, who had gone out with him in 1876. They had to return to England, where he entered for a brief period on the work of a curate. His health having been restored, Mr. Hill was designated for service in the more temperate region of New Zealand, and there he spent twelve years of active, happy, and fruitful labour. His leanings appear to have been, from the first, in the direction of evangelistic, rather than purely pastoral work, for at the end of four years he severed his connection with the C.M.S. at the Antipodes, and devoted himself to direct Gospel effort among the colonists. He met with much success in this line of service, as any who knew his gifts and his fervour of spirit can readily understand.

Having returned on a visit to the mother country in 1890, he was providentially brought into contact with the parochial mission work of Rev. W. H. Aitken. The writer well remembers the deep impression made by Mr. Hill's earnest exhortations to a number of his brother clergy gathered for spiritual conference at Roxeth, near Harrow, in the autumn of 1890. Mr. Aitken, in a warm memorial notice of the deceased Bishop, relates how he was greatly drawn to him at this juncture, and persuaded him to take a part in parochial special mission work. He continued as missioner for a year, and made himself conspicuously useful as a worker among the young. His quiet, unassuming demeanour and intensely sympathetic nature made him a great favourite with the children—as indeed they did with older people; and we doubt not there are numbers of young Christians who owe to him their decision for Christ and his happy service. During this period Mr. Hill was looking for the pointing hand of Providence towards a more settled and permanent field of work. This seemed to come to him in connection with the disturbed condition of affairs on the Niger. He believed he could be of service to the churches there in producing more harmonious relations, and he offered himself to the Mission with that view. Considering that serious bodily sickness had driven him before from that region, so inhospitable to Englishmen, there was real heroism in this step. The C.M.S. recognised the fact by an acceptance of his offer, and he was entrusted with the general oversight of the Mission on the Niger. Before he could enter on the active discharge of his duties, Bishop Crowther had been gathered to his fathers, leaving a vacancy in the bishopric.

We believe the suggestion that Mr. Hill should be nominated as successor to Bishop Crowther came first from Mr. Aitken, who says that he eagerly favoured this idea, thinking that the duties of bishop would not necessitate his friend having to reside in an unhealthy region. The recommendation was warmly seconded by the Bishop of Waiapu, New Zealand, who was able to speak of Mr. Hill's labours in his diocese. His name was accordingly submitted by the C.M.S. to the Archbishop of Canterbury, with the result that the appointment was made. Final proceedings were deferred, however, till Mr. Hill could pay a visit to the Niger in the capacity of Bishop Designate, and report on the situation. Having regard to the strong desire of the African churches for a native Episcopate, he counselled the appointment of two native coadjutors; he was even willing to resign his own appointment if it were deemed the best course to take. As many of our readers know, the two African assistants recommended were elected to office, and all three were set apart for the work of the bishopric in St. Paul's Cathedral at the end of June last.

As the party did not leave England till November, the interval was filled up in maturing plans for the working of the diocese, and in visiting different parts of the country with the view of stimulating missionary zeal among the home churches. Those who were present at the last Keswick Convention will not be likely soon to forget the worthy and important part played there by Bishop Hill; especially at the Students' Conference and at some of the subsidiary meetings. His words seemed to carry double weight from the fact that he had laid himself on the altar of foreign service in a place that involved great risk and undoubted sacrifice. His two coloured friends were also objects of much interest, and their earnest words at some of the missionary meetings confirmed the impression that they were truly consecrated servants of Christ, and would be manifestly helpful in the work of overseeing and directing mission work among their fellow countrymen.

The great farewell gathering in Exeter Hall in November was a memorable assembly, if only for the solemn and weighty words of the Bishop, and those of the well-known traveller, Mrs. Isabella Bishop. Mrs. Hill also spoke with singular effect and pathos in the afternoon, proving herself a true helpmeet in the great work to which she and her husband were devoting themselves. We may quote here, with reference to the immediate plans that the Bishop had in view, from an obituary notice in a contemporary :—

He left England in November last with a very clearly defined policy. He proposed to attack the Soudan from two different parts. Oyo, the most northern out-station, he desired to make a centre of work, and from there to push up as far as Ilorin, a Mohammedan town right in the interior of Africa. Then, from Lokoja, taking another route, he proposed to pass into the Bassa country. Amongst other enterprises upon which the Bishop set his heart were the establishment of a training institution for natives and a hospital at Onitsha. He believed there was a wonderful opening for medical missionary work in West Africa. He was also anxious to put a mission steamer on the Niger, and he contemplated inviting English clergymen to go out to his diocese from time to time to teach the native pastors to work their districts on the lines of the English parochial system. Bishop Hill had great hopes of the native clergy and congregations. He often said that they were not judged fairly in England. It was not just to compare them with highly-favoured English congregations, although he declared that he had met with some congregations in West Africa who could stand the test well. But the real comparison, he contended, was between what the West Africans were and what they are, and in this way he thought the future was full of encouragement.

God has not granted to our zealous and devoted brother the privilege of carrying out his plans ; that will be left to other hearts and hands to accomplish. But we must believe that the spirit of energy and thorough consecration shown by the late Bishop will have due influence on the future of this Mission, and that our friend whom we have lost and whom we mourn so sadly, shall share in the joy of those who one day will bring their golden sheaves of success and lay them at the Lord and Master's feet.

As yet the closing chapter in the life of the Bishop and his wife cannot be told in these pages. The sorrowful details are doubtless now on the way across the sea, and we shall soon be in possession of them. Meantime we have desired, in this brief sketch, to perpetuate the memory of one who had endeared himself in a very special way to all who were honoured with his acquaintance, and whose noble example must prove a stimulus to many towards full consecration and whole-heartedness of service for the Lord who has redeemed them.

AT A HEATHEN FESTIVAL.

Writing of a visit to a recent heathen festival, attended by some 25,000 people, Mr. T. Patient, of Malvalli, South India, says :—

It was our great joy to speak of Jesus the Mighty to Save to crowds of people for three days, and to put the Word of God in the vernacular into their hands. There was great attention and very little opposition all the time. Our thoughts were many as we moved in and out among the surging mass of human beings. My chief thought was, What a privilege to preach, read, and explain the Word of God to these dark-skinned and dark-minded natives of Southern India. Our hearts have been stirred in seeing these poor idolators worshipping their dumb idols. Please pray that many may be saved from them, and serve the living and true God.

FREE CHURCHES OF BIRMINGHAM. — The Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of Birmingham and district was inaugurated last week by a public meeting, held in the Town Hall, before which was laid a report of the recent house-to-house visitation of the city. It appears that out of 338 churches of all denominations, which were invited to join in the work, 161 actually took part. From these 4000 visitors volunteered, and over 75,000 forms, representing the number of houses visited, have been returned filled up.

THE CRISIS IN WEST AFRICA.

By Dr. C. F. HARFORD-BATTERSBY.

We are face to face with a crisis at the present time such as is almost without parallel even in African missions. In 1890 the East African Mission sustained the loss of four missionaries, all of them new recruits, and other missions have lost valued missionaries. Twelve months ago the Congo Balolo Mission were in the presence of just such a crisis as meets us to-day. Six missionaries in as many months was a high price to pay for carrying the Gospel to those dark regions, and that from the small missionary band working on the Congo ; yet each one knew the risks which lay before them all, and they counted not their lives dear unto themselves.

Now, within a fortnight of the home-call of Bishop and Mrs. Hill, two more missionaries, first Rev. E. W. Mathias, and then Rev. James Vernall, are taken from us. The explanation of this extraordinary mortality must be left till letters can be received, but in the meantime we may summarise the facts which we have already in our possession. These we know from the telegrams which have followed one another with such startling rapidity, from letters up to December 22, and from Miss Goodall, who left Lagos on December 23, and has arrived only a few days. Bishop and Mrs. Hill reached Lagos with their party of eight missionaries for Lagos, and four for the Niger, on December 15, intending to start for the Niger before the new year. All the party seem to have been in good health on landing, but soon after the Bishop seemed to be indisposed, but again recovered, and was well when Miss Goodall left Lagos. Bishop Ingham left Lagos by the same steamer with her, having been in Lagos three weeks, and having been present to welcome Bishop Hill on his arrival. Much time had also been spent in conference. About ten days later a telegram informs us that Bishop and Mrs. Hill have died at Lagos, and later on that Miss Maxwell is returning convalescent.

On Friday evening (Jan. 19) the news was received that Rev. E. W. Mathias had died in the Forcados River, which is one of the stopping-places between Lagos and the chief mouth of the Niger, and from this we gather that the male portion of the Niger contingent had started for their destinations. On Saturday we learnt that the Rev. James Vernall, of whose illness we had heard in a telegram from Mr. Tugwell, had also passed away. We see, then, that the sickness which has been designated by the one term "fever" in Mr. Tugwell's second telegram seems to have laid low four out of the five whom we have mentioned in Lagos itself, whilst it is practically certain that Mr. Mathias must have acquired his fatal illness also in Lagos. This is the more remarkable as Lagos has not been considered to be so unhealthy as many other places, and when I last passed home residents there were priding themselves on their comparative immunity from fatal illness.

It will be seen that no arguments can be based on these sad events against sending European missionaries to the Niger, as none of the present party ever reached the Niger. Nor would it be reasonable to suggest, as some might be tempted to suggest, that we should not send Europeans to Lagos, as we have maintained a European staff there since the very commencement of the Yoruba Mission, there being besides a large settlement of Europeans connected with the Government and trading operations, who have generally maintained fair health, though, of course, a certain percentage have broken down.

The present case, however, is most unusual, and suggests to one's mind the possibility of some special epidemic, or at any rate of some sudden outburst of disease due to a peculiarly bad season—and we learn that the last rainy season was unusually prolonged, which may, in a measure, account for an outbreak of fever. I find in The Times the notice of death of a captain at Lagos, who must have died at much the same time.

It is hard on any other supposition to account for five people being struck down with serious sickness within a few days of one another. It would be foolish to indulge in further speculations as to what the fever may have been ; but one knows that even in our own country whole households have been attacked by some fatal epidemic, to which successive members have fallen victims.

I have said so much in order to help others to realise that in spite of the sore bereavement which our Mission has suffered we must not give way to despair, but seek to learn the lesson which God means to teach us in such a solemn manner, and set ourselves to put forward every endeavour to strengthen the hands of our dear brethren and sisters in the mission field on whom so heavy a burden rests.

Thank God for the prompt action that the committee have taken in the matter of a successor to Bishop Hill. Mr. Tugwell especially needs our prayers that he may be able to make the best arrangements for the work, and that he may be specially fitted for the post for which he has been chosen. Mr. Dobinson, too, on the Niger, will have great responsibilities resting upon him, and we should pray that he may have "a right judgment in all things." A few picked men will, no doubt, be required to step into the vacant places. God grant that they may be able to come forward without delay.—The Record.

"IN MEMORIAM"—BISHOP HILL.

Mourn for a chieftain gone—a bright soul fled—
Truth's fearless champion numbered with the dead !
The deep voice hushed, whose clear and ringing call,
As a blest memory, on our hearts will fall ;
A spirit vanished from the darkened earth,
Whose life-thoughts whispered of a higher birth !

Mourn for the warrior who was ever found
In thickest fight upon life's battle-ground,
Strong in faith's armour, ever on his shield
The words were graven "To no foe I yield!"
But on his heart a talisman he wore
That gave to him the spirit-strength he bore.

The likeness of his Captain, calm and sweet :
This was the magnet that made swift his feet ;
The risen Christ, the loadstar of his life,
That winged him onward through the weary strife.
Joy to the conqueror ! He has found his rest
Upon that Saviour's loving, faithful breast.

Weep not for him with such glad victory crowned,
Whose name will live among the true renowned ;
The strife is over, and the conflict won,
The pain of life is past, the race is run.
By the bright waters, where the palm trees wave,
He lives rejoicing 'bove the cold, dark grave.

But weep for those whom he once strove to win
To nobler service from a life of sin—
The dark benighted ones on Afric's shore,
Crushed and oppressed by superstition's lore ;
For them he toiled and wept until the breath
Of burning fever brought the chills of death.

And with him passed to the bright home above
The gentle spirit of his earthly love—
The tender mother and the loving wife—
Both spared the anguish of a parted life ;
O wondrous bliss ! at heaven's gate to meet,
Where Jesus waited their glad souls to greet !

List to the clarion-call, that from the skies
Speaks to God's soldiers, bidding each arise :
"Come to the battle-field, the foe is nigh ;
And danger lurks beneaths the clouded sky.
Gird on both Sword and Helmet for the fight—
Press to the front, O Warriors, with the Light!"

Salisbury. S. M. Pearce.

CALIFORNIA.—On the eve of the New Year, 170 British seamen and apprentices from the ships in San Francisco Harbour assembled in the Seamen's Institute for a watch-night service, conducted by Rev. James Felt. God has blessed the work of the Institute, which has been cordially welcomed by the crews.

The Evangelist.

A ROYAL PROMISE.

Some time ago a clergyman was asked to visit a very poor woman who was dying of slow consumption. She was a true child of God, but appeared to have no earthly friends who were in a position to help her in time of need.

The thought of the workhouse infirmary appalled her, and she refused to die within its walls. The authorities declined to grant her any help while she objected to enter the union.

"You are totally unfit to do anything for yourself," said the clergyman who was visiting her; "can you think of no friend who could assist you just now?"

"Not one," replied the poor woman, sorrowfully.

"Think again—there may be one," urged her visitor.

"Yes, yes, sir; you are right!" exclaimed the poor widow, sudden faith and joy illuminating her wasted features. "Yes, I have one friend, of whom God has just reminded me."

"And who is this friend?" asked the clergyman.

"It is Her Majesty the Queen," replied the poor widow. The clergyman started; he thought the poor, friendless creature's mind was in a weak state—that it was giving way under the pressure of adverse circumstances—that she was raving.

By way of humouring her, he asked her kindly,

"And how is it you are able to count the Queen your friend?"

In reply, the invalid said that Her Majesty, when Princess Victoria, and staying in the Isle of Wight, went out frequently in a yacht, or cutter-boat, of which her son (the widow's), a very delicate lad, was helmsman. She proceeded:—

"The Princess often came and spoke to him, and when he was absent for some days from his post she noticed it, and inquired as to the cause. Hearing that my boy was ill Her Royal Highness graciously asked my permission to visit him. Needless to say, it was given, and when the Royal visitor came to see him she found him in bed very ill.

"After remaining with him for some time, and comforting him with many Divine and gracious words, she ordered that delicacies, such as would tempt the capricious appetite of an invalid, were to be sent daily from her own table." (This reminds us of the "daily provision of the king's meat" spoken of in Dan. i. 5, only that in the present case the royal kindness could be gladly accepted.) "Then," resumed the widow, "after kind words to me and my son, she always left some little remembrance of her visit in the shape of money."

"And what of your son?" asked the clergyman.

"After much suffering he died, and the Princess, with gentle sympathy, called upon me in my humble home, and did her best to console and comfort me in my grief."

The Princess, upon leaving the sorrowing mother, kindly said:

"If you ever need a friend, apply to me; and for his sake—your boy's—I will assist you as you may need."

But the widow allowed the years to roll on, and though she was often in the sorest straits, she never took the Queen at her word—never applied to her for the help she knew she would receive if she did so. She possibly felt it would be presumption in one so obscure to claim the promise of the Queen of England.

Now, in her last extremity, she felt she must remind the royal lady of her promise made years ago; she was the only one on earth to whom she could apply, as she had told the clergyman. He at once wrote to the Queen, stating the facts of the case, and asking if it were true. An answer came almost immediately, saying it was all true, and that Her Majesty was so pleased to be reminded of her promise, and that she would, according to that promise, provide for the comfort of the poor woman during the remainder of her life. What a truly royal answer! This is a beautiful story, but it is to the lesson it teaches that our hearts must turn. A greater than our Queen, even the King of kings Himself, has promised, "for his sake," the sake of his Divine and only Son, to provide for us in our need (John xiv. 13, 14). "And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us" (1 John v. 14).

We see ourselves sick, and poor, and blind, and dying of sin, and we have God's promise that He will save us from perishing (John iii. 16), and yet perhaps we say to ourselves:—

"Ah, God will not remember me! I am only so-and-so—God could not have meant me when He made that promise."

Perhaps it has come to the time when you and your soul must come to close quarters with each other; you are at the extreme edge of things—you are like to die, and some friend, one who knows God, comes to you, as the clergyman came to the widow, and reminds you, with great searching of heart, of the need in which you stand of immediate help.

You realise it—you think, and you suddenly remember the promise of the Promiser, "Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me" (Ps. l. 15).

You have neglected his offer all these years, maybe, but now you need and claim his help, for you cannot live without Him. And the answer comes immediately from the King, "Fear not; for I have redeemed thee . . . thou art mine" (Isa. xliii. 1). "I have seen his ways and will heal him; I will lead him also, and will restore comforts unto him" (Isa. lvii. 18).

Our Queen's kind heart has often made her a friend in time of need to many of her subjects; but we have a King who is Himself touched with the feeling of our least infirmity (Heb. iv. 15); He is no promiscuous helper—remember. He is ever the same—yesterday, to-day, for ever—there is no change in Him or his purposes, and He gives Himself!

The heart of our King has "borne our griefs and carried our sorrows" "with everlasting kindness" (Isa. liii. 4; liv. 8); and He is continually saying to his forgetful or weak-in-faith children, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out."

No earthly Sovereign has anything to offer us comparable to the gifts and blessings our heavenly Father and King is waiting to shower upon us. What poor creatures we are! We treasure up and magnify a little bit of perishable charity if it spring from the heart of a queen, forgetting, or not heeding, "the unsearchable riches of Christ," which are ours for time and eternity if we will but have them. It is no cold offer of something which can well be spared from the royal table—it is a life laid down, the life of God's Son, and He pleads with us with passionate pleading—"Come unto Me"—"Oh, why will ye die?"

Behold Me standing at the door,
And hear Me pleading evermore;
O weary heart, oppressed with sin,
May I come in? May I come in?

M. B. Gerds.

BULGARIA'S GREAT NEED.

I beg to draw attention to a subject which has been laid very heavily on my heart for some time, namely, the need of Gospel light in my dear country.

The national religion of Bulgaria is the Greek Church, the services of which consist entirely in ceremonies and outward performances.

The church is dead and indifferent, the clergy are ignorant and immoral, the masses of the people are superstitious and benighted, the intelligent class are sceptics and infidels. These are some of the great evils to which this young nation is subjected. A little has been done by our American brethren to spread Gospel truth among the people, but the work is in its infancy. The Scriptures have been translated into the modern Bulgarian tongue, and the British and Foreign Bible Society has colporteurs in the principality.

The population of Bulgaria is said to be from six to seven millions, of which only 5000 are nominal Protestants.

My object in writing this is to create a deeper interest in Bulgaria, so that some Christians may be led to give themselves to the work of God there, and others may help on evangelisation in other ways. I am now in missionary training, and hope as soon as my course of study is complete to go and preach the glorious Gospel to my people. I should be very glad to hear from any who might be willing to join me. The language of Bulgaria is phonetic, and easy to learn. The climate is one of the healthiest in Europe. There is great liberty for circulation of the Word of God and Gospel literature, also freedom for preaching, and ample scope for all kinds of evangelistic work.

Basil Keusseff.

Cliff College, Curbar, Sheffield.

A VOICE FROM CHINA.

In Answer to a Letter from a Relative Speaking of Christianity as a Drivelling Superstition.

From one expression that you use in speaking of Christianity, am I not right in believing that you do not know, or have forgotten, what Christianity is? And for this reason:

Supposing it could come to my knowledge that Christianity was not true, I should, of course, no longer believe that it was true, I should know it was false. How, then, should I regard it? As "a drivelling superstition"? That would be impossible. Because I know (whether it be true or whether it be false) that that which is best in me—the highest, the noblest, the purest, the best—and not in me only, but in many, many more, is the result of Christianity.

I know that if I ceased to believe in Jesus as my Saviour, and Master, and Friend, I should sink to a lower type of manhood, for that which is highest and noblest in me would (of necessity) have departed out of my life. I am conscious of this that it must be so.

Then the very fact that though it could come to my knowledge that Christianity was false, I should even then know it was in its working the most noble and beautiful thing there is, is one reason why I am persuaded it is true, and why it must be, and, I think, should be, very difficult for me to believe it is false. Does the false exceed in purity and nobility the true? Does belief in a false superstition make me more highly developed—a more complete man? And because I cast off the false must I all my life through remain at a lower level, no matter how much truth I substitute in its place? Surely not.

With all other religions it is so different. The Mohammedan, the Buddhist, the Confucianist, does not know that he is changed in heart. He knows that he is not. In consequence of his religion the man within him is not developed and purified and ennobled. Nay, how often even the true devotee seems rather to become shrivelled and to degenerate. He may naturally be a good, a humble, and a kind-hearted man. But the tendency of his religion is to make him self-righteous, to contract rather than to enlarge and ennoble him.

When you draw near to God through the one Mediator between God and men, and go forth as God's reconciled child, and commissioned servant, you will be conscious that something within you hitherto dormant has been awakened, and is being developed, you will be conscious that you are a higher type of man than before. No argument then can possibly persuade you otherwise, for you will know that it is so.

I wonder if this will enable you to understand my position better and explain why I feel you cannot know what Christianity is, or you could not, even if you still thought it was a superstition, regard it in the very least degree as a "drivelling" superstition.

Of course, the form of Christianity without the power, without the reality, is as drivelling as you please; and there is plenty of it everywhere. But know—and I see illustrated in the lives of some I have been, and am now, associated with—the real thing, which, whether true or false, is, beyond all comparison, the most lovely flower and the choicest fruit I have anywhere seen or experienced. It is as noble and beautiful as the other—the mere theological shell—is sickening and drivelling.

You always give me the impression that you think it is foolish of me to be a Christian, and that if I had more brains or common sense, or used more what I have, I should not be gulled as I am and led to waste my life out here in China.

But do you not see that, admitted a large accession of brains and common sense, it would be very difficult for me, as I have said, to become an unbeliever, because I should have to say to myself, How is it possible that that which I know is the noblest part of my being is due to a false superstition? How is it possible that in consequence of my belief in a system of lies I have, I know, reached a higher and fuller development, and that if I cease to believe these lies I must, I know, necessarily shrink and degenerate?

Be it remembered, however, that it is not belief in a system of theology but in a Person which is the core of Christianity.

J. H. H.

(117)

AFRICAN MISSIONS VISITED.—19.

By Mr. D. A. HUNTER.

Leaving Durban by the morning train last Saturday, fifty minutes' run on the North Coast line brought me to Duff's Road Station. One sees much sugar-cane growing in this district, with gangs of coolies cultivating it. Some 25,000 of these East Indians are now in Natal, most of whom have been brought over by the Government to work on the sugar plantations, tea gardens, railway extensions, and on all works where gangs of regular labourers are needed. It seems a strange thing to import labour into a small colony like Natal, which has nearly half a million Zulus, but these Zulus seldom care to work for more than six months on a stretch. They have their own ploughing to attend to and their friends to revisit, consequently they do not prove such permanent workers as the coolies. Both the Anglican and Wesleyan churches are seeking to evangelise this large East Indian population, but there is ample room for more labourers among them.

At Dugg's-road Station I was met by an American spider, drawn by two black bullocks, and after two and a-half hours' drive, over roads which have suffered much from the recent rains, reached Inanda, a station of the A.B.C.F.M. This station is pleasantly situated in the midst of a hilly country, with a fine background of mountains and valleys, while to the east one looks away out over the Indian Ocean.

The industry of the missionaries and their pupils is abundantly evidenced by the gardens and fields around the station, whose products form a substantial part of their food.

Here is being carried on one of the most hopeful works in Natal, in the shape of a boarding-school for Zulu girls. Some of these girls are the children of native Christians, others come as raw heathens right from their kraals, and the outward transformation from their almost nude state, red clay, and cumbersome "jewellery," into respectable-looking girls, in neat, clean print dresses, is marvellous. Some of these girls have most romantic histories, which, if treated by a skilful writer, would rival in interest and excitement even "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

To give the bare outline of one of these stories:—

A heathen man, living some distance from Inanda, wished to add another wife to his kraal, but had not the cattle wherewith to procure her. He had, however, a daughter of a marriageable age, and arranged to marry her to an old polygamist, from whom he would receive sufficient cattle to buy the wife he wanted for himself.

His daughter, hearing of the fate her father intended for her, and having heard something of Inanda, fled to good Mrs. Edwards for protection.

She was received and clothed, but was not long left in peace, her father appearing with a policeman and an order from the district magistrate, empowering him to take her away. The girl was most unwilling to leave, but in face of this instrument of the law, the missionaries did not feel justified in keeping her, and told her she must go. A few days after she appeared again at Inanda, with traces on her body of the horrible ill-treatment she had received at the hands of her father. Again he followed her up, and, in spite of the missionaries' remonstrances with the magistrate, the girl was again handed over to the cruelty of her friends.

A third time the girl escaped, hid herself in the bush to escape pursuit, and turned up at the station like a poor hunted creature.

This time the missionaries determined at all costs to protect the girl, in spite of the law and the inhuman Christian (?) magistrate. Mr. Edwards took her before the government authorities at Maritzburg, and when they would do nothing to prevent this traffic in human beings, resolved to go to prison rather than give her up. The authorities were evidently not prepared to throw an American citizen into prison for the crime of protecting a British subject from being sold into practical slavery, nor to face the righteous indignation and ignominy such an action would bring upon themselves. Their fear got for the poor girl what their sense of justice would not give, so she was left to pursue her studies, and has become a good Christian woman.

A lame girl now at Inanda has a remarkable story. Living in a heathen kraal, where no missionary had ever come, she knew nothing of Jesus nor of education. A boy from her kraal, however, who had been working in one of the towns, learned to read at a night-school. Coming home for a holiday, he brought his spelling-book with him, and found in this girl an eager pupil. All too soon he went away again, but not before the girl had mastered the alphabet. The book was also left with her. She persevered in her efforts to read, until she could get no further without some one to help her. No human help was forthcoming, but one night while asleep she had a vision. A hand over her shoulder pointed to the unsurmountable difficulty, and a voice explained it. This was done twice over.

In the morning, when she opened her book, her difficulty was actually gone, and she really learned to read. She got possession of a Zulu New Testament, and when, some time afterwards, a missionary heard a report of her, and visited the kraal, it was to find this girl a true believer, with a remarkable grasp of Divine truth, considering her groping after it in the dark.

After a time, it was arranged to have her brought to Inanda, where she is now much prized on account of her good influence among the other girls, and her earnest efforts to win them for Jesus. She is so lame she can only move about on her hands and knees, and has to be taken to church in a wheelbarrow. An American gentleman, who recently visited Inanda, has promised to send her a special wheel-chair from New York, in which she will be able to propel herself. She is clever with her hands, and models little vases, etc., in clay. These, when fired, are sold, and it is her joy to give away the proceeds for the advance of Christ's Kingdom.

I went to a temperance meeting held in the Station Church on Saturday afternoon. A native occupied the chair, and all the speakers were also natives. A number applied for admission to the society, rising up and stating when and how they were led to take this stand. Each application was considered, and approved or deferred. The case of one girl caused a good deal of discussion. Although she is a Christian, and does not drink native beer, her parents are still heathens, and have not consented to free her from the household duty of helping to make the beer. The point raised was whether she should be admitted a member before her parents had consented to this exemption.

On Sunday afternoon I spoke by interpretation to a large congregation, pressing home the obligation of every Christian, black or white, to obey Christ's last command, and help to preach the Gospel to every creature. After I had finished, one man jumped up, saying he could not keep silence; they must not let the words they had heard pass away as words, they must convert them into actions.

On Monday I returned to Durban, and on Tuesday took train on the South Coast line as far as Isipingo, the terminus. There a horse was awaiting me, and a ten mile ride brought me to Amanzamtoti, another American station.

Much interesting work is going on—a boys' boarding-school, with workshops and outdoor labour; the beginning of a medical mission; kindergarten teaching successfully carried on among the bright wee Zulu bairns; a band of theological students in training, most of whom are married men, for whom cottages are provided, and whose wives receive also an invaluable training, while their husbands prosecute their studies. The ladies of the station use their personal influence among all in the inimitable way which seems to be the peculiar gift of Americans.

In Mr. and Mrs. Ransom I found delightful friends and enthusiastic Christian Endeavourers. My time at Amanzamtoti was all too short, a day being lost en route there. Owing to the heavy rains I could not wait a day longer to make up for it, being under the necessity of keeping an appointment up country, so I had to return to Durban.

---

IN MEMORY OF C. H. SPURGEON.—Vast congregations attended the second anniversary service held on Sunday at the Metropolitan Tabernacle in memory of the late pastor of the church, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, when touching references were made to his lamented father by Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, both morning and evening. At the latter there was not an available seat in the immense building. The preacher reminded his hearers that his father fought, not against individuals, but against heresies and false doctrines. He had a wonderful way of reaching men's hearts—of holding up to men the mirror of their lives, and of speaking to them in the language they understood.

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers will be interested to hear that after prayerful consideration on the part of the president, the council, and leaders of the Cape General Mission, it has been decided to accept the proposal of Mr. and Mrs. Osborn-Howe to amalgamate the work carried on by them in Natal and Zululand under the title of the S.E. Africa Evangelistic Mission, with that carried on by the Cape General Mission, the union taking effect from January 1, 1894.

The necessity for responsible representation in England has long been felt by the S.E.A.E. Mission, and it was, therefore, Mr. and Mrs. Osborn-Howe's intention to organise such representation on lines precisely similar to those of the Cape General Mission. By the amalgamation of the two Missions, not only is the unnecessary expenditure of time and mission funds, involved by two separate organisations, avoided, but that unity is promoted which two missions similar in character and aim, and working side by side in the same corner of the Lord's vineyard, ought to manifest. It will likewise be remembered that the Cape General Mission was formed in 1889 by Mr. W. Spencer Walton upon the basis of a mission begun in the Cape Colony by Mr. and Mrs. Osborn-Howe.

The United Mission will be known in future as the SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION, and will be represented in England by the present council, secretary, and local helpers of the Cape General Mission.

All reports of work will appear in the pages of The South African Pioneer, in the January number of which a complete list of the workers will be found. As an evidence of the growth of the work, it may be stated that the total number of workers now amounts to 70, most of whom are dependent for their support upon the freewill offerings of the Lord's people.

The council, in accepting their increased responsibility, earnestly solicit the prayers and interest of your readers. They confidently anticipate that the United Missions will be enabled to enlist far wider sympathy, and, by the grace of God, to accomplish far greater results, than could have been possible had they continued to carry on their work as separate organisations.

We are glad to add that as long as health and strength permit, Rev. Andrew Murray will continue to act as president of the "South Africa General Mission," all communications in regard to which should be addressed to the Secretary, Mr. Arthur Mercer, 14A, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon.

We remain, Dear Sir, yours very faithfully,
On behalf of the Cape General Mission:—
Thomas B. Miller, Chairman.
H. W. Maynard, Hon. Treas.
Arthur Mercer, Secretary.
On behalf of the S.E. Africa Evan. Mission:—
Geo. B. Howe, M. S. Osborn-Howe } Hon. Supts.
J. Robinson, Hon. Treas.

---

SANTANDER, SPAIN.

A correspondent writes:—"In August last year the Evangelical chapel in Santander was finished, for which the zealous pastor, Tienda, had gathered contributions, and it was inaugurated with great rejoicing. When one has not had to move from one hired house to another, one can hardly understand the happiness of the Evangelical community at last to have their own building.

"Then on November 3, came for Santander that terrible dynamite explosion of which all the papers have told. Of course no report can describe either the terror of that fearful moment, nor the desolation that was still to be seen four weeks later, when I visited the place. What a grief to all was the destruction of their beloved chapel, which had not long been finished, and which was still burdened with a debt of thousands of francs, which they had hoped gradually to extinguish. Still, the preponderate feeling of all was that of gratitude to God, who had so graciously protected them, that not one of the congregation had perished in the fearful accident.

"I visited the schools with seventy-five boys and more than thirty girls; it is still held in a hired house. I rejoiced to see the work going on, and to speak with those engaged in it."

---

THE RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE ASSOCIATION now includes over 230 middle-class schools and colleges, situated in all parts of the country.

THE WORK GIRLS OF THE CITY.

When, some eighteen years ago, Mrs. Fisher, becoming concerned on behalf of girls employed in the workrooms and warehouses of the City, endeavoured to gain entrance to these places in order to read the Word and speak faithfully to the young women engaged, few would have ventured to prophesy how the work would grow and prove fruitful in blessing. Yet so it has been, as was abundantly evidenced in the testimonies borne at a meeting of sympathisers and workers held on Wednesday week in the Lecture Hall, 186, Aldersgate-street.

Mr. M. H. Hodder, who presided, welcomed heartily the assembled friends, and thanked God for what had been done by these workroom services and readings, as well as in the many ways in which it is sought to help and win the young women employed in the City.

Mrs. Fisher, in giving a statement as to the experiences of the past year, referred with deep thankfulness to the spirit of prayer among the girls themselves, telling how a few have resolved to curtail their dinner hour (twice a week), in order to spend ten minutes in special prayer for the unsaved who drop in to the half-hour dinner service.

Looking back on the past eighteen years, Mrs. Fisher said there had been difficulties and discouragements, and even during the past year there had been much trial. But out of it all God had brought blessing, proving anew his faithfulness and power. Mr. Lane's special mission had been the means of bringing out some who are now bearing bright testimony to the grace of God. A letter was then read from the Bible-woman telling of one and another now living to the glory of God, who had been awakened to a sense of their need of Christ in these services. Sometimes God gives the fruit at once, and the workers have the joy of seeing a girl wonderfully changed, at other times the fruit is found after many days. Here it may be noted that besides the visitation of workrooms and factories, and the reading and speaking as opportunity serves, there are dinner-hour Gospel talks at the Old Welcome, and a weekly evangelistic service conducted by some earnest young men. This latter has been much blessed, and usually there are found at the close several seeking the way of life. Then there are gatherings of a very profitable character at Mrs. Fisher's own house, which also have been made a great blessing to many young people. It was mentioned that the Old Welcome Restaurant, where the girls can bring their food if they so incline, and can obtain cheap wholesome meals and pleasant company, has been a great boon to many, and is attended, during the winter, by 500 to 600 daily.

The leader in this special service having thus outlined the general aspects of the operations, the meeting was thrown open in order that various workers might bear testimony to what the Lord had done.

An employer, a devoted Christian, who takes the greatest concern in his employés, told of the way God had blessed the meetings in his house of business, and read letters showing how grateful many girls were for the interest taken in them, and the faithful way in which the need of salvation had been pressed upon them, at a time when they themselves cared little for such things.

Another Christian employer said that in the Tuesday workroom meeting at his place of business there had been a good deal of definite encouragement. It was within the mark to say that from first to last over fifty souls had been won to the Saviour in his establishment alone; and it must be remembered that he (the speaker) sees these people again and again in work-a-day life, and knows the change wrought in them. He felt sure that Mrs. Fisher's most urgent need at the present moment is for workers, more ladies willing to speak and sing.

Next came a succession of lady workers, some ten of whom bore brief testimony to the way God had blessed the work. One dwelt on the marvellous change which might be observed in the poor, weary, jaded faces of the working girls as the power of God begins to lay hold of them. Another gave some illustrative cases from two new workrooms to which access had been gained during the past year. The next told how, when feeling somewhat depressed, thinking "It don't seem to do any good," God laid it on the heart of one of the girls to come forward and confess the blessing the services had been to her soul. Then came a young worker, who told how she began in great trembling, and how God had given answers to prayer and encouraged her to go forward: within the last month three girls had decided for Christ. Then came two sisters, earnest, faithful, and useful workers, whom God has greatly blessed in the Mission. These told of workroom talks, and home visitation, also of the formation of a band of King's messengers, Christian workgirls who seek to work for Jesus, and have been much blessed even in open-air services. After further words from other workers—all praising God for blessing granted—the proceedings concluded with a couple of delightful testimonies from girls who had themselves been converted by means of this mission to the City workrooms, and who are now witnessing for Jesus, and seeking to win others to Him.

ENCOURAGEMENT IN CHINA.

In the new issue of the Quarterly Record of the National Bible Society of Scotland, some account is given of the work of Mr. S. F. Whitehouse, of Chinkiang, China. Reporting on his exertions, Mr. Whitehouse says:—

"The 25,000 (less ten) publications issued during the year represent more preaching and longing and a deeper kind of work than the writer has experienced in China before. Some cases rise vividly before me in which inquirers deplored our short stay, and urged our return. This is all true, but we are so ignorant and in the dark. One man from the country bought a hundred Gospels to take home and give to his friends. Never having been asked till then for more than a double or triple set—and that very rarely—I was amazed to see this poor-looking man hand over nearly a week's earnings for copies of the Word of God to give away.

"Every now and then we are informed of something encouraging out of this pioneer work. About five years ago some Christian ladies from Hokéo visited a city fifty miles distant, and sold a number of books. One family bought the Four Gospels and the Acts. A year afterwards a man came to Hokéo saying that he had obtained the loan of these five books, and desired to understand the Gospel. His questions about Je-lu-sah-leng (Jerusalem), the meaning of 'the mustard seed,' and other parables, showed that he had read the Gospels carefully. The story of the death of Christ had deeply moved him. He proposed to reside at his own charges at Hokéo till he understood the Gospel. Having been instructed and helped, he returned home. Some time afterwards he came again, bringing presents, and accompanied by one of his relatives, an opium-smoker, who was willing to give up the habit. The first inquirer, Chéng, after probation, was baptized, and, with his relative, returned home.

"By-and-by an evangelist was sent to their district. It was found difficult to obtain a house in which to preach, when the now reclaimed opium-smoker offered his own house, and, at the same time, crossed the Rubicon by burning his ancestral tablet. He was afterwards received into the Church, and has proved a valuable helper—one more useful than the friend by whom he was first introduced. There are now a number of inquirers here, among whom are eight of the Chéng family, all of whom have given up their idols and are awaiting baptism.

"When a Chinese convert comes three days' journey simply to inquire about the Gospel, maintains himself while he is being taught, and gives presents to his teachers, burns his idols and tablets, foregoes his legal rights and yields to oppression for Christ's sake rather than go to law, and, knowing the persecution that will probably follow, offers his house for a preaching-hall, and himself takes a lead in Christian work—we may have the assurance that his religion is not vain, and that there must be something remarkable about a 'Four Gospels and Acts.'"

A PROTESTANT VAN.—On Wednesday last week an interesting and crowded meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. Drawing-room, Sheffield, in connection with the Church Association, to inaugurate the sending forth of a Protestant Van. The Van is a handsome, well-built structure, containing a stock of Bibles and other books for sale, sleeping and cooking accommodation. It is called the "John Wycliffe," will be in charge of a colporteur evangelist, and for the present will work in Sheffield and the neighbourhood. The Church Association has eight other vans of the same description, and a considerable number of towns and villages have heard the message of salvation and Protestant truth from the preachers.

WORK AMONG FRENCH PRIESTS.

From time to time very touching accounts are given in Le Signal of the work carried on among French priests by MM. Réveilliaud and Bertrand. In a recent issue of the paper named, a converted priest, a man known to be absolutely worthy of confidence, wrote:—

"I have read with much interest M. Bertrand's report about the work of which he is director. He fully recognises the terrible struggle, and the almost hopeless difficulties which await a sincere priest who wishes to follow the promptings of God in his soul. No one is more deserving of the compassion and sympathy of fellow Christians than the priest in France who has found out the falseness of Catholicism. It is true that some of these men are not sincere, but they are the exceptions. Those who merely wish to get free can do so without becoming Protestants.

"But, as a rule, a Romish priest is not so much blameworthy, as rather a victim himself of false education, ignorance, and prejudice. Shut up in a seminary when quite a boy, he has no notion of anything outside Romanism. All information about the Reformation is carefully kept from him; and even afterwards, when he comes across the question in history or theology, it is only in an utterly perverted form, and as an object of contempt. Thus he enters the ministry in perfectly good faith; and if by the grace of God and peculiarly favourable circumstances, his eyes are afterwards opened, what is he to do? The sacred character of his position, and also general sentiment, form barriers which it is almost impossible for him to cross without help.

"Again, how is he to live, without any means of his own? Even if he were to seek secular employment, he would find himself hindered on all sides by the force of prejudice. Hence the absolute necessity of some helping hand at this crisis. There are others, again, who still more deserve Christian consideration, viz., those who, as one of them wrote, feel that they cannot give up work for the Lord. They have devoted themselves to that, and cannot go back. Further light has come into their soul, a truer faith has taken possession of them, but the desire to consecrate their lives to the preaching of the Gospel, so far from becoming less, has only become a more clear and imperative call from on high. It is just at this point that the sympathetic help, such as is given by M. Bertrand and his friends, comes in to enable such a man to follow his convictions, and to find a happier path for useful ministry. Whereas, without such help, a sincere soul might abandon the effort in despair, and gradually become a mere formalist, sceptical in heart, making shipwreck of his own soul, and being a curse to others. I write as one who has been myself helped out of a painful struggle into a path of salvation and peace."

MISSIONARY HYMN

In the distant heathen countries,
Women, tender, loving, sad,
Yearn for Jesus Christ's sweet message,
That alas! they never had.

Chorus.—Up, and save them lest they perish!
Let them not in darkness die;
Someone Jesus Christ is calling,
Is it you, or is it I?

Weeping, watching, and despairing,
By a nameless longing stirred,
They are sitting in the darkness,
Waiting for the Living Word.

Who will answer to the summons?
Who will Jesus Christ obey?
He is waiting for your answer,
Jesus waits to lead the way!

He has heard the cry of anguish
Rise from lonely beds of pain;
He has brought the love and healing—
Who will the glad news proclaim?

Jesus loves these heathen women;
When a child to earth He came,
On a mother's breast He rested,
And He lisped a mother's name.

By his cross the women lingered;
By his grave a woman wept:
And the news of resurrection
From a woman's lips first leapt.

Mary G. Burnett.

STREET PREACHING IN CORK.

Street preaching (says The Irish Times) was resumed in Cork last Sunday afternoon, despite the prohibition of the magistrates, and considerable uproar prevailed for some time, but happily none of the preachers was injured. At three o'clock the band, headed by Colonel and Mrs. Doran, Mr. George Williams, Organising Secretary Open-air Mission, and Pastor M'Cracken, of the Baptist Church, proceeded to a spot near Parnell-bridge to open their services. They were followed by a hostile and menacing crowd of large proportions, that hustled the speakers about freely. On halting, disorder at once began, and County Inspector Gibbons, with about one hundred policemen, arriving on the scene, the crowd was partially dispersed and the evangelists moved on. The latter offered passive resistance, but a solid body of policemen kept behind and pushed them along, while the remainder of the force, including several mounted men, were engaged in keeping the crowd back and suppressing disorder. In this manner the South Mall was traversed, the evangelists singing hymns and attempting to preach.

When the party came in front of the Young Men's Christian Association premises, the usual retreat of the preachers when hard pressed, the police turned them towards its entrance with the object of getting them inside. This they resisted, and demanded to be allowed to proceed along the street. The police were obdurate, and, after a scuffle, the preachers were forced into the doorway of the building. Mr. Williams mounted a chair just outside the door, and was about to speak when it was taken from under him, and he was almost carried into the building by several constables. During this mêlée charges of assault were freely made on either side, and the constabulary obtained the names of several of the band. Some hours later, when a few of the party were returning home they were pursued by the crowd, and were it not for the fact that the police effectually cordoned the thoroughfares for some time, and kept the crowd, which now numbered several thousands, at bay, it would have fared ill with the evangelists. The police were then engaged for some time dispersing the crowd, and the streets were in a state of ferment for an hour. Throughout the police acted efficiently; while preventing the preachers from at any time speaking in the street, they also took care to save them from the assaults of the crowd.

RICHARD WEAVER AT WOOLWICH.

This veteran evangelist is now on a ten days' visit to Woolwich, in connection with Rev. J. Wilson's church. The meetings commenced on Sunday, 21st, being preceded, on Friday, 12th, by a special Gospel address by the pastor to the Christian Band, when a number professed conversion by the power of the Gospel.

During last week the meetings held in the chapel were remarkably well attended, while some 2500 have been present at the Sunday services held in the Drill Hall. Notwithstanding his advanced age, Mr. Weaver has usually preached for an hour, and the addresses throughout have been characterised by deep earnestness. The preacher, who has spent so many years in the work, has gleaned the life stories and experiences of all sorts and conditions of men, and, told with deep pathos and inimitable power, they have found eager and anxious listeners.

The visible results are most encouraging, many having decided henceforth to serve Christ, among whom was a publican's wife; a number of soldiers have also put on the "whole armour of God," and prayer is asked that these may be kept firm to the Master. The chapel being overcrowded and many turned away, larger premises had to be sought for the three last nights of the mission.

THE UNITED CHRISTIAN MISSION is the name, unfortunately quite indefinite, of a very interesting Continental agency for spreading the Gospel in its simplicity. As advertisements inserted in Roman Catholic and secular papers, comprehensive Scripture passages, such as John iii. 16, are sent into homes where the Gospel is utterly unknown. A recent report says: "Not one paper in Italy has refused our messages so far. Acting on a letter received from Singapore, pointing out the need of such work as ours in the Colonies, we have given orders for insertions to be made in twenty Colonial papers." Rev. John D. Kilburn, of Ottensen, Holstein, Germany, hon. sec. of the work, writes to us: "We have openings for sending John iii. 16 into hundreds of thousands of homes in Portugal and Spain, where in all probability it has never yet been. Our funds, however, are more than exhausted, and we must wait for help before going forward further."

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

"That He might gather together," etc. (Eph. i. 10).

It is not to be doubted that the view of all modern writers, as of R.V., is the correct one, "That He might sum up," etc. Only once besides is the word used, in Rom. xiii. 9, "All the law is comprehended, summed up, in this." Now, while "gather together" would imply a change in the position or disposition of certain parties, as in the Universalist theory, the sense "sum up" rejects this idea, and presents a view too simple to need explanation.

The question, then, is, what is meant by "all things" here? And the answer is that there is no reference to all things in general, but "the all things" (ta panta), or the whole of the matters just detailed. And what can these be but the all spiritual blessings which had formed the entire context, and which are now said to be summed up in Christ, so that in having Him we have all these, as now fully disclosed in the dispensation of the Gospel? Of these, most begin on earth. Some, again, are entirely of heaven (as in iv. 4, 14). But, in earth or heaven, they are all summed up in Him. Thus the passage is seen to be one unbroken whole. See how, after this statement, the chain of blessing runs on: "In whom we are also made an inheritance" (R.V.).

See now the same all things (ta panta), the whole, in v. 11: "According to the purpose of Him who" (? "worketh"; no, but) inworketh (energei, as in v. 20, iii. 21; Gal. ii. 8; Phil. ii. 13; 1 Cor. xii. 11). Such, in fact, is the only application of the word. God bestows the whole in giving Christ to us. But vain would be the bestowment if He did not also work in us the blessings themselves. It would be interesting to connect with this the "all things" in verses 22, 23, and iv. 15, where they can only refer to the matters in their context. But space forbids. Enough to refer to the kindred words: "He that spared not his own Son, but freely delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not, with Him, also freely give us all things?"

J. M. Denniston.

Kingston, Jamaica.

THE SAILORS' REST, PORT SAID.

Another year is left behind us, and here we are still kept by the power and grace of God, both in work and trust in Him against the stream of sin and unbelief. To the Lord be all the praise, for He has enabled us not to feel discouraged.

In my work I have been able to reach a great number of all classes amongst the inhabitants in the town. A great part of last year's work was the assistance of suffering, which seems very likely to increase. When I first came here, more than ten years ago, I had no idea this would form part of my work for the Lord. I find this a means in the Lord's hand of reaching the people, of whom several hundreds have been helped during the year. Many Jews and others have been helped in food and clothing.

Up to the end of last year, and during thirty-two years in the Lord's service, He enabled me to distribute 1,014,000 Scriptures in thirty-six languages, including 4200 Bibles, 13,000 Testaments, and 21,000 Gospels in twelve languages, in the town of Port Said alone.

Your sincere fellow-worker in the Lord,

Port Said, January 22. G. A. Eoll.

MR. THORNE AT GREAT YARMOUTH.

This earnest evangelist conducted a short mission at the Friendly Societies' Hall, in this town, from January 16th to 19th. Although it was the first time Mr. Thorne had visited Yarmouth, a good number were present at the opening service, and each evening showed a marked increase in number of hearers and interest. Each afternoon at 3 o'clock Bible readings were held, at which much interest was shown. One striking proof of the attraction of these meetings may be instanced. A gentleman having a few minutes to wait before catching his train, proposed to pass the spare time in the meeting, but such was his interest in the reading, that he stayed till the meeting was over, and thus lost the train.

W. M. T.

THE SIBERIAN PRISON SYSTEM.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily Chronicle telegraphs that fresh light has been thrown upon the Siberian prison system by the Siberian paper Vladivostock which states that the Governor of the Amour Provinces recently visited the prison of Nicholaivsk, and found the condition of that prison to be indescribably bad. The prisoners never receive warm food, and the sanitary condition of the place is deplorable. It appears that the inspector of the prison lives generally at Vladivostock, whilst his post is filled by a common soldier. If this state of affairs exists in one of the oldest and largest prisons in Eastern Siberia, it is not difficult to imagine what takes place in the smaller prisons and stations in the mining districts of the North-eastern governments.

ZAMBESI INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

Sir,—In your issue of to-day, an interesting letter appears from Mr. Lucas, of Australia, in which he alludes to the locality and work of the Zambesi Industrial Mission. In the flying visit made during October last by Mr. Lucas, it could hardly be expected that he would fully grasp the position and enter into the reasons why the Zambesi Industrial Mission should have chosen one out of their eight stations about five miles from the older station at Blantyre.

The explanation of the choice made lies in the fact that the Zambesi Industrial Mission has definitely undertaken to aid the domestic slaves of the Angoni tribe to obtain their freedom, and as far as may be possible, bring them under Gospel influences.

The first thing the freed slave asks for is a place of safety where he may put up his hut and have a small plot of land to grow his food.

In the present somewhat unsettled state of Nyassaland, the maximum safety—from the ex-slaves' point of view—is in the vicinity of the area occupied by planters and the fort-like depôt of the African Lakes Company.

Even in this supposed safe locality some who have been helped to their freedom and now reside on the station in question, have been so frequently threatened with burning-out and recapture that it has been found expedient to satisfy their late owners with gifts of calico, and so avoid further strife.

In paragraph 5 Mr. Lucas states, "Hitherto it has been a rare exception for an Angoni or Atonga to forsake his country and reside in settled territory," but the reason of this "rare exception" is not made apparent.

The writer was, until November last, constantly working day by day with some hundreds of these people—mainly Angoni—and during hours of recess and other leisure times has frequently questioned them as to their real position. Their statements are as follows:—

(a) That they have been stolen from various tribes during war raids by their Angoni masters, their villages burned, and their families broken up.

(b) That they dare not attempt to escape, or they would be speared to death, or sold to the Arabs and put in the slave-stick.

(c) That when any do succeed in escaping, their relatives, friends, or those remaining in the same village are compelled to drink "mwabvi," a deadly poison; that often a whole village of people have to drink this poison, and many die therefrom.

(d) That they greatly desire to get free, but dare not let their chiefs or headmen know this; and that they see no way to obtain freedom except by the help of the missionary, or some white man.

(e) That they could purchase their freedom for twenty fathoms of calico per adult and half the quantity for a boy or girl (value 10s. and 5s. respectively).

(f) That if they were helped to their freedom by anyone and a place found where they could live and work, they would gladly repay several fathoms per month till all was repaid.

Repeated interviews with H.M. Consul, Mr. H. H. Johnson, as to the best way of going to work to help these oppressed people have resulted in the plan now being attempted. It is hoped, and believed, that Angoniland may be led into liberty by mission effort rather than by the process now in course twenty days' journey south in the Matabele and Mashona country.

One other item in Mr. Lucas' letter may I correct? He speaks of two or three villages as being evangelised from the Z.I.M. station. As a matter of fact, over twenty-five villages are being evangelised from those centres by native and European Christians.—Yours sincerely, Joseph Booth.

St. Martin's House, 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C., Jan. 25.

MARYLEBONE PRESBYTERIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL is personally superintended by Rev. Dr. Pentecost, and is in a very flourishing condition, the order being particularly good, a special feature being the "minute of perfect silence" before the singing of the closing hymn. The service of praise is led by a children's choir of forty voices, an Erard grand piano, and a small orchestra formed by some of the teachers; the whole conducted by Mr. Rechab Tandy. The schoolroom is now probably the most cosy in London, being warmly carpeted and decorated, owing to the regard the minister has for children. Dr. Pentecost recently presented each teacher with a copy of his "Bible Studies" on the International Lessons for 1894, a volume of some 450 pages which he has produced annually for the last fifteen years. The school is conducted on similar lines to those advocated in the "Westminster Teacher," and which appear to be admirably adapted to the needs of the present day Sabbath-school.—The Presbyterian.

THE Y.M.C.A.

REV. DR. THEODORE L. CUYLER, of Brooklyn, has intimated that he purposes attending the International Conference in London next June.

The Sydney Association reports splendid results from the aggressive efforts carried on by the mission workers in the poorest quarters and on board ship.

Rev. H. E. Fox., M.A., has just held the first of a series of "at homes" in the rooms of the Durham Association. The gathering was one of much pleasure and profit.

The Leith Fellowship Union is now represented in China by Mr. Alexander Menzies (formerly of Perth), towards whose support, in connection with the China Inland Mission, £50 a year are subscribed.

The Scottish National Union of Y.M.C.A. and Fellowship Associations issue an interesting quarterly paper showing the variety and extent of the work being done by this Union among young men.

The annual social gathering of the Aberdeen Association Lodging House Mission was held last week in the new hall beneath the Free North Church. It was reported that the attendances at the Sunday evening meetings increased greatly.

The forty-fourth annual meeting of the members of the Dublin Association, held last week, was presided over by Mr. Richard Wilkinson. The report showed that the membership had nearly doubled, and the old debt been wiped out during the year.

The Damascus and Jerusalem Associations send very encouraging accounts of their work. At Cairo and Alexandria the branches have an excellent sphere for service, but are limited in their operations by the need in each case of an officer who could give his whole time to the work.

The Steine House Magazine, organ of the Brighton Y.M.C.A., gives encouraging accounts of the evangelistic, Bible study, and missionary work in their busy seaside town. It is delightful to observe how the young men are seeking to carry the light of the Gospel into the surrounding rural parts.

The report of the Watford Association says:—"The work during the past year has been attended with some difficulty, but it has been well maintained, and at the present time there are many encouraging signs. The Bible class and prayer meetings have been attended by young men earnest in their inquiries after truth."

During the past year, sixteen members of the Foreign Missionary Society in connection with the Glasgow Association have gone abroad to different parts of the world, but special interest attaches to the departure of Mr. Gilbert Ritchie, who is to be supported by the Glasgow Association, in connection with the China Inland Mission.

At the first annual meeting of the Tavistock Association, an encouraging report was rendered. Services for young men on Sunday evenings, Bible classes, open-air meetings, and cottage services had been worked vigorously, and the reading-room and library had been well patronised. Sixty-two members and fifty-six associates had been enrolled.

Good results have followed to the Falkirk Association from the Annual Scottish Conference having been held in their town in September last. The secretary reports that "one direct result is found in a greater sympathy for Y.M.C.A. work on the part of the public." The membership has also increased, and the attendance at the Sabbath morning meeting has almost doubled.

The opening of the new building at the Paignton Y.M.C.A. took place a few days ago under auspicious circumstances. The premises have been erected by a limited liability company, the capital being £2500, in 500 shares of £5 each. The revenue, it is hoped, will be furnished by the shops on the ground floor, and the upper portions of the building—on the Sheffield plan—will be made over to the Association, rent free.

Several letters are to hand from the Eastern Associations, which speak hopefully of the work. Rev. A. E. Stuart, for example, writing from Damascus a few days ago, says that the work there is very cheering; they have fifty-three active members already, and they are expecting others to join. Writing from Jerusalem also this past week, the head-master of Bishop Gobat's School says that he is surprised at the wonderful vitality of the Y.M.C.A. in that city. Similar accounts are to hand from Gibraltar and Malta.

---

PHILIPPOPOLIS.—Mrs. Tonjoroff writes that the Medical Mission is supposed to be open three times a week, but owing to the severe weather and consequent illness it has lately been open daily, and much good work has been done, the seed of the Word being sown in many hearts. As patients come from all parts of Bulgaria, the message of the Gospel is carried into every town and village of the Principality. Mr. and Mrs. Tonjoroff have urgent calls to visit many remote villages.

THE Y.W.C.A.

THE annual meeting of the Y.W.C.A. has been fixed for April 25, and Rev. W. R. Mowll will be one of the speakers.

By invitation of Lady Hope, a meeting of Y.W.C.A. secretaries in the West district, and other workers and friends, was recently held at 7, Connaught-place. The Hon. E. Kinnaird, Lady Hope, Miss Macleod, and others took part.

The Y.W.C.A. Week of Prayer will be observed during the week commencing February 18. A number of London Institutes are arranging special meetings; and several clergymen and ministers have promised to preach sermons to young women.

The Melbourne Association has been celebrating its eleventh anniversary. The secretary says:—"For the Y.W.C.A. these have been busy and happy years. The Lord has blessed the work abundantly, and has crowned it with his rich blessing. The building in Spring-street is a monument of answered prayer."

Looking back on the commercial crisis of the past year, the secretary of the Sydney Association says:—"Our way six months ago appeared hedged in with difficulties, and it seemed that our work must suffer, but we can testify that such has not been the case. We have had, each week for some time past, instances of definite blessing, and the assistance afforded by our employment agencies has been increasingly in demand, whilst we have been relieved from financial anxieties."

The first annual report of the St. Paul's, Upper Norwood, branch shows that much progress has been made during the year. The Bible-classes have been well attended, and the membership exactly doubled, there being now 200 names on the books. A missionary working party, a flower mission to factory girls, and social gatherings have formed part of the work. The president, Mrs. J. W. W. Morean, was presented with a drawing-room clock, and an illuminated address on her leaving Norwood. Miss E. Elkington is the hon. secretary.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Y.W.C.A. was held last week in the City Hall. Mrs. W. M. Oatts submitted the report, showing that the membership was 2560, being an increase of 136. There were thirty-seven branches in Glasgow and district. A new institute was being built in Bridgeton. The financial state with regard to the central premises in Bath-street and the undenominational branches showed that the total income was £2229, and the expenditure £2106. An address on Tibet was afterwards delivered by Miss Annie R. Taylor.

A largely-attended social gathering has been held by invitation of Miss Morley, at the Finsbury Institute, 14, Finsbury-square. After tea and coffee had been served in the refreshment-room, the members assembled in the large class-room. Lord Kinnaird presided, and gave a short address; and Miss Morley distributed a number of prizes and certificates to successful students of the evening classes. At 8.30 the gymnasium was crowded to hear Miss Morley's description of her recent visit to Palestine. The lecture was full of interest and of Bible instruction, and was illustrated by excellent dissolving views.

---

LODGING-HOUSE WORK IN SPITALFIELDS.

WORK among the lodging houses in Spitalfields is being carried on by Mr. Millership (of the L.C. Mission). There is a terrible amount of destitution in the 171 lodging houses he visits. The Spitalfields Lodging House Band sustain the various philanthropic efforts and assist the meetings on Sunday nights. Free breakfasts are given on Sunday mornings to hundreds of starving and shelterless ones gathered out of the streets. Cocoa suppers and free meals are also given to ragged children and others.

There is, moreover, a monthly tea-meeting for fallen girls, which has been productive of most encouraging results. Over thirty girls have been placed into homes, refuges, and sent to broken-hearted parents and situations through their special efforts during the last three months. Further details of rescue and good effected would be gladly given by Mr. Millership, who may be addressed 87, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, E.

---

A REMARKABLE PIECE OF NEWS (says the Missionary Herald) has arrived from Uganda. Bishop Hirth, of the Roman Catholic Mission, writes as follows:—"After much hesitation I have concluded that it is necessary for us also to print the New Testament, which the Protestants are spreading everywhere. The chief reason is, that we cannot prevent our people from reading it: everybody wishes to know how to read for baptism—except women and old men. We are therefore preparing an edition, with notes drawn from the Holy Fathers."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

IN Philadelphia, Penn., a number of souls have been won for Christ by the Society.

C. E. Societies in the Reformed Church in America raised last year for missions, from February to October, 3,073.20 dols.

Miss M. Louise Law, a member of the Society of West New Brighton, Staten Island, N.Y., has entered upon her new work in the girls-school at Sidon.

The Dunbar, Neb., C.E. Society has been greatly benefited by a recent revival. Both in numbers and in spiritual life has the Society felt the result of these meetings.

Mr. Stanley Newcombe, secretary of the Auckland Provincial Union of New Zealand, writes that on Sept. 31 there were thirty-two societies of Christian Endeavour in the Union.

Rev. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, says the Christian Endeavour Society is useful in every good work. In revivals it stands ready to help in the distribution of invitations, or work in the inquiry meetings.

The Central Union, N.J., lately held a very interesting meeting at Cranbury. "Soul-winning" was the general subject of the evening, and a helpful feature was the reading of a religious census of the various towns of the district.

Says Rev. D. Mactavish, in The Presbyterian Review:—"The rapid growth and almost phenomenal success of the Y.P.S.C.E. within the Church is surely an assuring fact to those pessimists who have taken up Elijah's wilderness wail: 'And I only am left alone.'"

Mrs. J. P. Burkholder, of the Free Baptist Mission to the Santals, writes: "We live in the jungles of India among the Santals, who are supposed to be one of the aboriginal tribes of the country. This year we have organised a Christian Endeavour Society among our young people, and also a Junior Society for the children. Both are well attended. The people are very poor; but we hope with our Father's help, to train up a good band of workers.

---

BIBLE SOCIETY NOTES.

AN edition of 30,000 copies of the Malagasi New Testament, in a convenient form for the pocket, is now being printed by the Society. The New Testament in this form has a large circulation in Madagascar. The Society's reports bear continued testimony to the desire of the people to obtain the Word of God.

The work of translation and revision of the Scriptures is going forward at the present time with a ratio undreamt of in the past years. Of Asian languages alone, the editorial committee had before them at their last meeting questions with regard to Arabic, Persian, Hindi, Marathi, Telugu, and half-a dozen other Indian languages. Also Burmese, Chinese, Shanghai vernacular, Mandarin, Canton vernacular, Korean, Ainu, Japanese, Malayan, and several languages belonging to the Malaysian Agency, In Africa, work has been going forward in Swahili, Pokomo, Popo, Ronga; and for various islands of the South Seas questions were discussed affecting versions in Maré, Nguna, Keapara, and Futuna.

---

NELSON SQUARE MISSION.

THE reopening of this hall took place on Monday, January 22, when Lady Hope (who is giving up the Mission) formally handed it over to her successor, Miss Martin, of Regent's Park Chapel. About eighty of the mothers belonging to the Mission, and a number of friends, were present. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided, and introduced Miss Martin, warmly welcoming her as a friend and fellow-labourer in South London, and assuring her of the deep interest he should ever take in the mission.

Miss Martin, in a few words, told the mothers that the work would be carried on much in the same way as formerly, and that though much would be done to help them in their daily work, the main object would ever be to lead them to accept the Lord Jesus as their own personal Saviour.

A substantial tea was served to the mothers, after which Dr. Latchford spoke a few earnest words. We understand that, in addition to the other works, there will now be a medical mission attached to the hall, superintended by Dr. Latchford. M. H.

---

OPIUM CLUBS IN BOMBAY.—The Bombay Guardian of January 6th publishes an article signed by three missionaries, giving an account of a visit they paid to the so-called "clubs" which have sprung into existence since it was ostentatiously proclaimed in the Times of India that the opium-smoking dens in Bombay had been finally closed on July 31st, 1893. The visitors found that these clubs were simply the old dens under a new name.

IRISH NOTES.

Evangelistic missions have been held in Creggan, Monaghan, and Donaghadee Presbyterian Churches.

Collections on behalf of foreign missions were taken up last Sunday in all the Presbyterian churches in this country.

A Soldiers' Recreation Room has been established in connection with the Methodist Central Mission, Dublin, and promises to do much good.

An important series of meetings under the auspices of the "Out-and-out Band," were held last week in George's Hall, Dublin, by Revs. C. G. Moore and Chas. Inwood.

Dr. H. Guinness has been delivering a series of lectures on African mission work, illustrated with limelight views, in Cork, Dublin, and Belfast, and has obtained many promises of support.

A bequest of about £3000 has been left by Mr. Wm. Campbell to Lower Abbey-street Presbyterian Church, Dublin, and the interest is to be used in the furtherance of mission work in the locality.

Special services were recently held in connection with Rev. J. B. McBride's Presbyterian Church, Fahan, co. Donegal. The meetings were conducted by ministers from the surrounding district, and much blessing was received.

The will of the late Sir Thos. McClure has been published, and in it he states that for many years he made it a habit to give the half of his income to the cause of God. He leaves the half of his property to the Presbyterian Church.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Throughout Scotland, there are over 120 persons on the pension list of the Aged Christian Friend Society; the Society has only been at work in Scotland for three years.

Miss Isa C. Gow, one of the lady foreign missionaries in India of the United Presbyterian Church, who is home on furlough, is visiting the congregations connected with the Buchan Presbytery. She is having very large and enthusiastic meetings.

The Edinburgh Women's Branch of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union held a meeting on Friday in the hall of the Young Women's Christian Association, George-street, Edinburgh. The meeting was for school girls, of whom considerably over one hundred were present.

The ministry of the Rev. Martin Lewis, formerly of Gravesend, is proving very successful in Queen's Cross Church, Aberdeen. On Hospital Sunday the congregation raised £100, the largest sum collected in any of the churches of the city, and more than double the contributions of last year.

The Bishop of Chester has been advocating in Edinburgh his scheme of civic control of public-houses. He said he was quite prepared to admit that it was reasonable to give opportunities for the trial of prohibition in any community which was found willing to adopt it upon fair conditions to all concerned.

The death is announced of Rev. Andrew Duncan, of Mid-Calder U.P. Church, at the age of seventy-four. He was appointed colleague to his father at Mid-Calder in September, 1842. There he has laboured during the entire period of his ministry, and his death severs a family connection with the Mid-Calder congregation, which dates back to last century, his father having been ordained to the pastorate in 1799.

Dr. Marshall Lang's lecture last week in Glasgow University was on Church Order and Methods. It was very able and interesting, as the lecturer sought to show how to vitalise church courts, and make them more than the machinery of routine. He said, "Some clergymen stood aloof from these courts. With men of this type he had little patience. If they were too fine for their Presbytery they were too fine for their cloth."

The second public inquiry into the efficiency of Dr. Tyson's cure for drunkenness was held last week in the Y.M.C.A. Buildings, Dundee. A number of the patients who had been under treatment appeared, and testified to the beneficial effects of the cure. Their united testimony was that the medicine had relieved them of all craving for strong drink, and that they had greatly improved in their general health since beginning the treatment.

A special meeting of those who received blessing during the "Limelight Services," was held in the Glasgow Cowcaddens Free Church last week. There was a large attendance. The centre was filled down to the pillars by a large number of persons—men, women, and young people—who were brought under impression during the last three or four weeks. Rev. William Ross presided. Mr. William Thomson, evangelist, who had been conducting the services since January 3rd, gave an address on "Consecration." The mission has proved a great blessing to the district.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

Mr. W. Edwards has been lecturing in aid of the "Missions to Seamen," and his account of the work must assuredly evoke interest and prayer for our sailors.

The Men's Week Evening Bible-class at the Y.M.C.A. is well attended by men from different parts of Oxford. The year opens with a study of the books of the Acts.

The annual breakfast of the L.M.S. was held at Mansfield last Saturday, presided over by Dr. Fairbairn. Canon Christopher's well-known gathering takes place next Saturday.

The Congregational Church at Summertown, which is rapidly becoming one of the most important suburbs of Oxford, was opened last Thursday, when Rev. B. M. Eason was ordained as minister.

The University sermons on Sunday were preached by the rector of Poplar (Rev. A. Chandler), formerly a well-known worker in Oxford in connection with the Men's Institute, and Rev. Dr. Bernard, of Dublin.

The programme of the Mansfield Summer School of Theology has just been issued, and includes some of the foremost scholars of the day among the lecturers. The course of study bids fair to be both interesting and helpful to ministers, for whom it is specially intended.

In connection with the Oxford Labourers' Trade Union a meeting has been started on Sunday evening by Mr. F. G. Benskin, of Christ Church, with the hope of reaching some who do not attend the ordinary services. A good commencement has been made, but, of course, it is at present only an experiment.

There are now two very flourishing P.S.A. meetings in Oxford, one at the Y.M.C.A. and the other at the Cowley-road Congregational Church, where there is also a week-evening meeting of the same kind. There are unmistakable tokens of blessing in connection with these meetings, which are conducted on sound and solid lines.

Rev. R. F. Horton has been in residence at Mansfield for the last ten days, during which time he has conducted several services, and held meetings with addresses on "The Christian Life." The attendances have always been good and often very large, while the teaching has been for the most part helpful and free from his well-known views on Inspiration.

The first of the Wycliffe Hall Conferences was held last week, when Rev. H. J. R. Marston, of Icomb, opened a discussion on the Reformation in relation to current questions with a most able and suggestive address, wherein he dealt with the questions of Culture, Socialism, the Ministry, and the Bible. An interesting discussion followed, in which Rev. F. J. Chavasse took part, and gave those present the benefit of his own ripe experience.

CAMBRIDGE.

The university sermon was preached on Sunday by Rev. G. E. Jelf, Canon of Rochester.

A most interesting account of missionary work in Palestine was given on Monday evening at the weekly meeting of the C.M.U., in the Hy. Martyn Hall, by Rev. C. T. Wilson, who has for some years been labouring in the Holy Land.

Sermons in connection with the Cambridge Association in aid of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel were preached in no fewer than thirteen churches on Sunday last, while the annual meeting was held in the Alexandra Hall upon the following day, presided over by Bishop Selwyn, Master of Selwyn. Lord Stanmore (formerly Governor of Fiji, Ceylon, and New Zealand) gave abundant testimony to the permanent good achieved by foreign mission effort, which he described as "enormous, immeasurable, incalculable."

On Sunday evening, in Holy Trinity, Rev. H. C. G. Moule preached the second of this term's series of sermons on, "The Holy Scriptures in their relation to the testimony of Jesus Christ concerning them." After dwelling on the fact that the unique characteristic of our Scriptures is that they possess the Divine imprimatur, in the testimony of the Divine Christ to them, Principal Moule dwelt on the fancied discrepancies between the great facts of nature and the findings of natural research, on the one hand, and the facts of the inspired writings on the other.

BE WATCHFUL AND WISE. The lower life of your child is selfish; it is yours to train it by your daily benevolence.

REV. T. B. PANDIAN, of Madras, whose work among the pariahs is well known, is still in this country, and will be glad of opportunities to describe his efforts among "The Slaves of the Soil in Southern India," and to set forth the needs of other classes of the community. His address is 54, The Grove, Ealing, W.

THE GOSPEL IN ALGIERS.

Another year of work in North Africa has passed, and as we look back one wonders how many of the souls who have heard the glad tidings during 1893 will we meet in the glory. In Mohammedan countries one sees so little result, but we are fully persuaded that God has blessed, and will continue to bless, his own Word faithfully preached.

At the beginning of 1893 we all felt that more work could be done if we were nearer the Arab quarter, and so we started praying for a house, and before long a house presented itself which could not have been more adapted to our wants. We praised God and took courage. After making all necessary arrangements with the landlord, who is a Jew, we commenced operations, which were just finished when I had to leave for home owing to my health. During our absence, however, our fellow-workers, Miss Trotter, Miss Freeman, and Miss Haworth, moved in and made all ready for the continuation of the work on our return, then they too came to England. It was in October when we got to work again, and soon found our new quarters were in the right place. The meetings began to be better attended, even more men came than we wished, as French law forbids over twenty in any assembly without special Government licence, which under existing hostility to mission work would not be granted.

All went on well, and then Satan rose up and hindered, for every meeting-night a crowd of young men and boys would congregate before the door, making all the noise they could to interrupt the meetings. We were helpless, and could only pray and pray. God answered us, and now, as a rule, we have quietness, but the boys now and again come when they know of a meeting.

We have been having four meetings weekly for men and one on Friday for women; these latter come very well considering how they are kept such prisoners by their husbands. Then I have started receiving visitors in the shop which forms part of our house and opens on to the street. Here we can get at the men better than in their own shops. The days I am not there I visit—sometimes with encouragement and often with much disappointment—and sometimes one is ordered off the premises. Then again as often as I can I make tours to the villages and towns, sometimes accompanied by another brother and sometimes alone. I have just returned from a journey on the borders of Koobyhas with Mr. Creudet of the N.A.M. We went first of all to a village called Souk-el-Haad, where we met with some encouragement. The men listened well, and seemed interested at what we told them; we distributed Gospels to those who could read, and also gave to some to take to the "Tolbas," or learned men of the distant tribes. From there we went on to Palestro, a large French village, which we found a good centre for the villages near. One day we hired animals and visited a very large tribe, about 2800 feet up the mountains. It was very cold, but on arriving at the first village found a café, where we were received kindly by the natives. We are always glad to find these cafés, because the men always congregate there, and we get a good number always to listen to us. From there we went to Dra-el-Mizan; there we had an encounter with the gendarmes, who marched us off to the judge, but we gave a satisfactory account of ourselves, and they let us go. We also visited several other towns and villages, in all of which we preached and distributed Gospels.—Yours in his service,

F. C. Brading.

2, Rue du Cruissant, Algiers.

THE VILLAGES OF BENGAL.

Writing from Shantirajpur (P.O. Shikarpur), Bengal, on Jan. 3, Mr. A. G. Lockett, of the C.M.S., says:—

The work I represent is evangelistic, among the rural portion of Bengal. After some years of seed-sowing, we have just been greatly cheered by our first baptism; the convert was a Hindu, of respectable family. We have every reason to believe that he is a truly converted man, and that his life will recommend the Saviour, whom he has now confessed.

We ask for earnest prayer that the Holy Spirit may awaken in those to whom we carry the message a real sense of sin; we feel that this is the great need. There is much interest, but what is wanted is that men should be convinced of sin and know their need of a Saviour.

SO TEACH as to awaken the thinking powers of your children.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER was happily observed in Bombay. Among the speakers were Rev. E. N. Thwaites, Rev. Martin J. Hall, and Lord Radstock.

OBITUARY.

REV. GEORGE BELL, NEWCASTLE.

By the death of Rev. George Bell, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, the Presbyterian Church in England loses its oldest minister. Mr. Bell was a Northumbrian, and born in 1804. He commenced his ministerial career in 1834, in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and ten years ago celebrated his jubilee. In 1873 he was appointed Moderator of the Synod. Three years later he took a prominent part in the negotiations which resulted in the union of the Presbyterian Church in England with the congregations of the United Presbyterian Church south of the Tweed. His death was brought about by the breaking of one of his legs; bronchitis supervened, and after a brief illness he painlessly passed away.

REV. CHARLES E. INGHAM.

News has reached the Baptist Missionary Society of the death of Rev. C. E. Ingham, who, though not directly associated as one of its agents, being connected with the American Baptist Missionary Union, was nevertheless well known and highly esteemed for his successful work on the Lower Congo. Formerly he was in the Guards, and fifteen years ago was well known in London as an evangelist. He entered missionary work through Dr. Grattan Guinness's East London Institute. An expert shot, his skill in this respect often proved to be of good service, so that he is said to have brought down during the past dozen years no fewer than one hundred elephants. A month ago his aid was sought in one of the African villages near Stanley Pool to shoot an elephant which was devastating the crops. Whilst he was carrying out this object, the wounded beast trampled him to death.

REV. G. T. BRAINE-HARTNELL, LISKEARD.

A correspondent of The Record in an outline of the career of the late Rev. G. T. Braine-Hartnell, of Liskeard, says:—"He was a man who will be greatly missed, for no parish was ever blessed with an incumbent more self-denying or more devoted. Mr. Braine-Hartnell began his ministerial career in Jamaica, where he laboured for many years. In 1873 he was appointed Metropolitan Secretary of the Jews Society, which office he held for eleven years, the duties of which he carried out with much zeal and ability. In 1884 he was appointed by the Simeon Trustees to the Vicarage of Liskeard. During his incumbency the restoration of the parish church has been completed in a style worthy of such a noble edifice He was second to none as an ardent lover of the Evangelical principles of our Church, and he would yield, no, not for a moment, to those who were fond of novelties, or who desired to introduce doctrines or customs which he considered contrary to the Protestant character of the Church of England. His sermons and teachings were ever full of Christ and Him crucified. The love of Christ constrained him. His work has been very arduous, and in some respects very trying, so much so that he has passed away at the age of sixty-one years, when it might have been supposed that a man of his strong physique would have been spared for many years to work in that important sphere of labour."

MISS MARY PHILLIPS.

The death of this lady, who formerly resided at 72, Mildmay Park, London, will be regretted by many. She went to Cannes in the early part of November, intending to pass the winter on the Riviera. She removed to Mentone on December 30, and some ten days later was visited with a severe attack of asthma, to which she succumbed on the morning of January 19. To the last the medical men who attended her were of opinion that the attack would pass off; but she was convinced herself that the end was at hand, and contemplated it with the most perfect resignation.

A beloved brother, with whom she had recently been residing near Manchester, was coming to see her, and she spoke much of his visit, looking forward eagerly to it. He arrived the evening before her death, and she had the great satisfaction of seeing him once more. She was buried on the afternoon of January 22 in the Protestant Cemetery, so well known to all who have visited Mentone, and occupying the most exquisite situation in that lovely spot. The scene at the graveside was truly touching. In the little group who surrounded the grave there were, in addition to her brother, two nephews and a niece, her faithful maid, some members of the chaplain's family, and several residents in the hotels.

But the most touching feature of the group was the presence of some Irish ladies, visitors in Mentone, who attended to show respect for one who had done so much for the relief of distressed Irish ladies, for whom Miss Phillips had raised over £7000 during the last twelve or fifteen years.

Miss Phillips will be well remembered at Mildmay for the great interest she manifested in the cause of the Jews.

MISS MARY GREEN.

This lady, who died at Redhill, on January 17, in her seventieth year, was well known to a large circle of Christian friends, especially in London. Long years ago she was a helper with Lady Rowley and others in the East-end sewing classes, which formed the commencement to much of the permanent evangelistic and philanthropic work with which we are now so familiar in needy East London. For a series of years Miss Green was privileged to conduct Bible-classes for the aged poor in Marylebone Workhouse, and was encouraged by the spiritual results which attended her patient endeavours in this ministry of love. The writer remembers being present at a large tea-meeting given to the poor people from the workhouse, in Crawford-street Rooms, at which Lord Shaftesbury gave a kindly and suitable address. As he was leaving the meeting, Miss Green took him to shake hands with the oldest of the guests of the evening, a Christian woman of ninety-three, and the Earl stooped down and kissed the forehead of the aged believer. Reminiscences of the leading Christians of the past half-century were a marked feature in Miss Green's conversation; she had met with most of the outstanding Evangelical preachers and laymen of the great period in which she lived, and was on familiar terms with many of them; her love of sound doctrine was intense, and she herself was deeply rooted in the truth, which she had learned in the school of Christ, and in which she delighted. The declension from sound doctrine which so characterises this present time was to our friend a source of deep grief, and by her removal one of the faithful in the land will be missed in the gatherings of those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. J. E. M.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins are evangelising together at Newport, R.I.

Brooklyn.—Rev. Messrs. Dixon, Wharton, and Greig and Mr. McWilliams are carrying on active aggressive Gospel work in Brooklyn.

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, after closing their mission this month in Washington, will probably visit San Francisco, to work at the mid-winter fair there.

Mr. F. H. Dawe, of the Evangelisation Society, has had very encouraging meetings during the past month at Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry, Bethnal Green.

Mr. Sidney Vivian, Evangelisation Society, has completed a month's mission with the Free Wesleyan Methodists, St. Keyne, Cornwall. Great blessing was the result of the Word preached.

Rev. J. Hallowes, of Birmingham, has conducted an eight days' mission at the Tyndale Congregational Church, Gloucester. The meetings were much appreciated, and several were brought to decision for Christ.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a nine days' mission at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Waterloo, Liverpool, and commences another at Bournemouth on February 3, in the church of which Rev. J. Ossian Davies is pastor.

Mr. M. Williams, Welsh Evangelist, has conducted special missions during the past three months in the counties of Bucks, Berks, Glos., and Wilts. Cases of blessing are reported. The evangelist commenced a mission in Swindon Primitive Methodist Town Chapel on Sunday last.

Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society, has finished a three weeks' mission at St. Stephen's, Church Town, Cornwall, which has proved a real refreshing time, God's blessing having followed the testimony of his servant. Mr. Clark goes on to Trethosa, to hold a fortnight's mission there, and would value the prayers of God's people.

Mr. Henry Thorne, having concluded brief missions at Yarmouth and at Fulham, gave an address to a large number of the poor and destitute at the Clock House, King's-road, Chelsea, on the 24th ult. He also addressed the annual meetings of the Fulham and Beckenham Y.M.C.A. He has arranged to conduct a series of services at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, and elsewhere, in connection with Dr. Barnardo's work during February.

Liverpool.—A ten days' mission of the Church of England commenced in this city on Sunday. A special service was held in the cathedral church in the evening for the reception of missioners, clergy, and Church workers, and an address to them was delivered by the Bishop. During the period of the mission frequent services will be held daily in seventy-five churches in the city, and the programme of the mission embraces special daily addresses to business men, and open-air services, etc. A systematic effort will be made to reach the dwellers in the slums.

Special Gospel addresses will be given each Sunday during February in Bennerley Hall, Bennerley-road, Wandsworth Common.

PERSONALIA.

Archdeacon Moule, of Mid-China, has been so ill that his brother, Bishop Moule, has been summoned to his aid.

Mr. W. Raju Naidu, since his return to Madras from England, has started a promising school for Pariahs at Kosapet.

Mr. T. A. Denny and Lady Hope have left for the Cape by the Grantully Castle, and expect to return within two months.

Rev. Dr. Douglas, of Montreal, the great champion of Social Purity, is, The Methodist Times learns, at the point of death.

Archdeacon Sinclair has consented to act as president of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, in succession to the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop.

Principal Morris, D.D., of the Congregational Memorial College, Brecon, recently celebrated his 81st birthday. The octogenarian Principal is in good health and vigour.

Mr. S. J. Phillips, of Fishponds, Bristol, is sailing, with his wife and child, on February 10, by the s.s. Paris, from Southampton. He would be glad to know of any Christians going by the same vessel.

Mr. Henry Morgan, of 160, Marlborough-road, Grandpont, Oxford, who has so long worked in the villages with his Bible carriage, drawn by a donkey, has been suffering from a long illness. He is still very weak, but is hoping for restoration to his work.

Rev. Robert and Mrs. Wallace, of the Marchmont Home, Belleville, Canada, have arrived in England on their annual visit. They purpose taking out a party of boys to Canada about the end of March. Their address is 92, Wellesley-road, West Croydon.

Mr. John Skerray, of Clarendon Villa, Harrow, Middlesex, who has had many years' experience in evangelistic work, both in connection with the theatre services and the Evangelisation Society, is open to undertake Gospel missions. Friends desiring his services may communicate with him as above.

Mr. F. S. Arnot, whose intention to return to Africa we announced a few weeks ago, has been suffering from a severe attack of African fever, and is prohibited by his medical adviser from carrying out his intention for the present. He will therefore remain in this country advocating the cause of Africa.

Dr. Parker is to visit Bradford for three days during this month. The idea originated with the Bradford Sunday-school Union and the Christian Endeavour Society, whose object is to secure the co-operation of the leading ministers in the town in an effort to be conducted on broad Evangelical lines. The mission will commence on February 19.

Rev. H. Tugwell has, The Record understands, signified his acceptance of the See of Western Equatorial Africa, in succession to the lamented Bishop Hill. Mr. Tugwell has for several years been connected with the Yoruba Mission. He hopes to reach Liverpool on February 20, and it is thought that one result of the recent calamity may be his return with a band of recruits prepared to take the vacant posts.

The late Sir S. A. Blackwood.—Doubtless there are many who cannot contribute largely to the Mildmay Memorial Fund, referred to in recent issues, who would gladly collect smaller amounts amongst their friends towards perpetuating the good work of one so widely esteemed. For such collecting-cards have been provided, and they may be had on application to Colonel J. F. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.

Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, the indefatigable and self-sacrificing honorary secretary of the Strangers' Rest in Ratcliff Highway, is, we are thankful to say, recovering from his attack of rheumatic fever. He is ordered to the seaside, and it will be some weeks before he is able to return to business. His fellow-committeemen have contributed the nucleus of a fund in appreciation of his long self-denying service to the Rest, and to meet the expenses of his illness.

Isaac Sharp, the well-known Friend minister, writing from Houston, Texas, on January 9th, said: "A tremulous hand has largely given place to something with a little more vitality in it. I still feel the 'grip' of influenza upon me now and then. The marvel is (so it appears to me), that more of it is not apparent. So I venture forth with a fresh warrant, 'Go in faith.' To the praise of the Lord be it written, for I am still as 'a wonder unto many.'"

Miss Robinson, who is now staying at The Hut, Bisterne Close, Burley, near Ringwood, Hants, has issued a letter showing how, by reason of her retirement, the various institutes and homes associated with her name are now being conducted by others—the Soldiers' Institute, at Portsmouth, by Rev. J. Gelson Gregson; the Sailors' Welcome, by Mr. R. G. Pither; the Institute at Alexandria, by Rev. T. R. Lawrence; and the Welcome Mission Hall, Landport, by Mr. T. Hogben.

"THE CATHOLIC RELIGION."

An esteemed correspondent writes to us:—I have before me a shilling book (The Catholic Religion. By Rev. Vernon Staley. Mowbray & Co.), coming from Clewer, and professing to be "a manual of instruction for members of the Anglican Church." That this manual is popular, is evidenced by the fact that 5000 copies were sold in one fortnight.

Let us examine the "instruction." On page 31 we read: "The Episcopate is of Divine institution in the Church, and therefore a necessity." "No Church Without a Bishop, not only expresses a fact of history, but a great truth also." "No person can act as a minister of Christ, either lawfully or validly, without ordination by a bishop." Again, further on (page 50), we read: "There can be no safety outside the Church."

As to what the Church consists of, we are not left in doubt. "The Eastern, the Roman, and the Anglican portions of the Church make up the Catholic body, the Universal Church." In a foot-note we find that this Anglican portion numbers about twenty millions. Naturally, the question occurs, What about the other ninety millions which complete the 110 millions, supposed to be the number of Protestants in the world. We are not left in doubt on this point, and we thank Mr. Vernon Staley for this crumb of comfort. "Those bodies of Christians who have lost the Apostolic succession have lost with it the Divine warrant of such grace" (page 39). "God may excuse those who act in ignorance, and He will reward their faith by some gift of grace; but if so, such grace is uncovenanted grace." Where may those who are not among the twenty millions get salvation? Well, they may (page 51), "if they have been true to conscience, be received into the Church in Paradise, in the time of waiting between death and judgment"!

Now let us ascertain how Rev. Vernon Staley gets rid of sin. First of all, in holy baptism we are made members of the Church of Christ (page 123). What follows? "All sin, actual as well as original, is washed away in baptism." On page 267, etc., we read about priestly absolution. Nevertheless, after all this provision, the author has an uncomfortable feeling that in spite of it (page 184), "many souls depart this life of whom we must admit that, as far as we can judge, they appear not to be good enough for heaven nor bad enough for hell." How are these many souls to be dealt with? "We may hope that a place of mercy may be found for such in the intermediate state, in which the evil may be completely purged and the good more perfectly developed." Let us glance at just a few more lessons in this "instruction." On page 159 we learn that the "Mother of the Lord was specially sanctified from the womb, and lived a life of spotless innocence." What need had she, then, of a Saviour at all?

In other parts of the book we read of prayers for the dead (page 214), forgiveness of sins by penance, priestly absolution, the Real Presence in the Lord's Supper (153), and seven sacraments (288). But for the great circulation this book of 400 pages is having, I should not have written. Let me solemnly appeal to my brethren in the Church of England:—Are you powerless to expel such men as Revs. Vernon Staley and T. T. Carter from your communion? Are you going to permit this false Popish teaching among your members? What are your bishops about? Where are your godly laymen? If nothing can be done to prevent this false teaching, the days of the Protestant Church of England are numbered.

WHY DON'T YOU HURRY?

"The King's business requireth haste," (Judges xxi. 8.) A missionary being asked what it was that directed his thoughts towards the foreign field, answered:—"In coming home one night, driving across the vast prairie, I saw my little boy John hurrying to meet me; the grass was high on the prairie, and suddenly he dropped out of sight. I thought he was playing, and was simply hiding from me, but he didn't appear as I expected he would. Then the thought flashed across my mind, 'There's an old well there, and he has fallen in.' I hurried up to him, reached down in the well, and lifted him out; and as he looked up in my face, what do you think he said? 'O papa, why didn't you hurry?'

"Those words never left me. They kept ringing in my ears until God put a new and deeper meaning into them, and bade me think of others who are lost: of souls without God and without hope in this world; and the message came to me as a message from the heavenly Father, 'Go and work in my name'; and then from that vast throng a pitiful, despairing, pleading cry rolled into my soul as I accepted God's call, 'Oh, why don't you hurry?'"—Watchword.

The Book World.

FEBRUARY MAGAZINES.

"Earthly Paradises" is the title of a paper in The Quiver by Rev. E. J. Hardy on the charms of true domestic life.

Service for the King, the monthly record of Mildmay Missions, has begun a new series, in a different cover, and at the price of one penny. (J. F. Shaw & Co.)

MESSRS. PARTRIDGE'S SERIALS.

The publications that issue month by month from this Paternoster-row house have long been of the most attractive and useful kind; we are glad to note that they fully maintain their well-established repute. The British Workman (1d.) has this month a telling temperance story, "Only a Glass," by Lady Hope; and a characteristic article on "Working Men as Authors and Poets," by Mr. W. T. Stead. The editor is calling for and receiving original contributions from working-men. The Workman seems better than ever. The Band of Hope Review (½d.) is delightful. Margaret Haycraft is one of the writers this month. Nothing new can be said in praise of the household favourites—The Mother's Companion, The Friendly Visitor, The Family Friend, The Children's Friend, and The Infants' Magazine—each is a gem in its way. In Our Own Gazette (1d.) Rev. F. B. Meyer has a paper full of good counsel on "Preparation for Opportunity."

Meditations Chretiennes, par F. Ollier, Pasteur de l'Eglise Réformée de Lille. (3fr. 50c. Le Cateau: J. Roland, 15, Rue Saint Lazare.) This is the author's seventh series of discourses. Twenty-five in number, they embrace a wide range of Gospel teaching, and are uniformly loyal to Scripture.

Hymns and Spiritual Songs is the title of a collection edited by Joseph Storrs Fry, specially for use in the Sabbath schools and mission meetings of the Society of Friends. The publication marks an interesting denominational development. As to the hymns they include fresh gems as well as old friends, and they have been brought together with Christian taste and judgment. (3d., 6d., and 1s. E. Hicks, jun.)

The Life of Christ, by Archdeacon Farrar, has for many years enjoyed a widespread popularity. Whatever may be its deficiencies, it is a striking outline of the Life of lives, and has proved of service to many. Messrs. Cassell have now issued, in one handy volume (7s. 6d.) a new edition, revised throughout. In a prefatory note Dr. Farrar says:—"I have done my best to improve and amend this edition in many ways, and have added not a few points of interest."

Verses for My Friends, by William Kitching. (Edward Hicks, jun.) Some of the pieces in this attractive volume have appeared in our pages. The author has been writing poetry for many years, and his subjects include precious Scripture portions, and some of the special religious testimonies of the Society of Friends. While these are distinctive features of the book, we would not overlook the capital poems on Christian doctrine and evangelistic enterprise.

Six Generations of Friends in Ireland, 1655 to 1890, by J. M. R. (E. Hicks, jun.) Here are narratives of the life and experiences of Thomas Wilson, Thomas C. Wakefield, John Grubb Richardson, and other worthies. The stories of religious persecution and national distress of the seventeenth century are set off by an inspiring record of spiritual and philanthropic achievement in more modern days. The pages are replete with incident, and should have many readers. Simplicity lends charm to the narratives, which are themselves full of stimulus to Christian devotion and righteousness of life.

"Clear Round!" By E. A. Gordon. (Sampson Low, Marston, & Co., Limited.) The story of a tour of the world, written for, and dedicated to, her children by a Christian lady—cultured, well-read, intelligent, who has acquired the art of seeing and the habit of exercising it to the full. The hardships and annoyances of travel only add zest to her enjoyment, and everything is seen couleur de rose and described con amore. The Atlantic, Canada with its railway to the Pacific, British Columbia, refined Japan, industrious China, India (especially the Mutiny), the Suez Canal, Egypt, are the subjects of graphic chapters, charmingly written by one who evidently went to see the pleasant side of things, and saw what she had eyes to see. Throughout the book there is an approval of what is thought to be praiseworthy in Romanism and Heathenism; and criticism is chiefly reserved for Protestantism and Protestant missions. In the appendix the longest note is the transcript of a letter from a Times correspondent, in which is "briefly summarised the main body of the indictment brought against the missionaries in China," without a word in their commendation or defence; at which we cannot help expressing our surprise and regret. All profits accruing from this publication are devoted to the educational work of Madame Tel Sono among the noble classes in Japan.

1833 and 1833: An Ominous Parallel, contains, with additions, a lecture delivered before the Protestant Truth Society, of Edinburgh, by Robert H. Muir, Minister Emeritus of the parish of Dalmeny. It develops "some of the more or less unconscious handmaids of advancing Popery in the Scotland of to-day," and deserves many readers. (1d. Office of the Protestant Truth Society, 9, Rutland-street, Edinburgh.)

RELIGIOUS BOOKS FOR BULGARIA.

Sir,—A new and urgent opportunity has just been opened for the diffusion of protestant religious books in Bulgaria. For six or eight years past this powerful method of mission work has been checked by the oppressive action of the Mussulman censor. At the present moment this obstacle is removed, but for how long no one can say. The American missionaries have sent an appeal to British Christians for assistance to push through the Press (1) a New Testament Commentary, in three volumes, by Dr. Riggs; (2) a new and enlarged hymn and tune book for the Bulgarian Evangelical churches; (3) a translation of Dr. Stalker's "Imago Christi"; (4) new religious tracts. All these books are in hand, but substantial help is absolutely necessary for their completion and publication.

God has opened the door of opportunity, and the urgency for aid is of the greatest. Full information I shall be most glad to send, and also to receive donations on behalf of this vitally-important publication work.—Yours faithfully,

W. A. Essery,

Hon. Sec. Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

FROM DR. S. H. KELLOGG.

Rev. Dr. Kellogg, of the American Presbyterian Mission, North India, who has for some time been engaged in the translation of the Bible into Hindi, writing from Dehra Dun on Jan. 3, says:—

"Our work has gone on most happily and harmoniously. Dr. Hooper, of the C.M.S., is my colleague, and Mr. Lambert, of the L.M.S., will probably be added to our number in the coming spring. In our station here the holiday week has been gladdened by the reception of six Hindus by baptism into the Church of Christ, all, I trust, truly converted to the Lord—so far as man can pass judgment on his fellow.

"Our good brother, Mr. Herbert Francis, is labouring here among the Europeans with unsparing devotion. The degree of warmth and spiritual life which is shown in our weekly prayer meetings has been so refreshing to me, for so often, on coming from home, one misses the glow and warmth of such Christian gatherings.

"I hardly need to say how fully I find myself in accord with The Christian on the great vital questions of the day, looking, with yourself, for the speedy 'appearing and Kingdom' of our Lord Jesus Christ, and interpreting the marvellous movements of our day among Gentiles and Jews in the light of that predicted supreme event of the ages."

FOR EVERY CHILD THERE IS HOPE. It is within the free choice of every separate personality to diminish the sum of wickedness and to increase that of virtue. But the child must be trained as well as taught.

A VILLAGE LIBRARY.—Mr. J. H. Marshall, of Crockenhill, Swanley, Kent, referring to the statement of village work in our issue of November 28, thanks our readers for the eighty volumes of books sent; says the villagers are deeply interested; strangers coming into the library wish there was such a place in every village. The manager and colporteur leaves no stone unturned to meet the expenses, but the price of coal, the scarcity of work, and the initial costs have left at the end of three months a deficit of about £10. If this were cleared off, it is believed that the little work would be self-supporting after another three months.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a fortnight's mission at Swindon Primitive Methodist Town Chapel, by M. Williams.—For a large blessing on a twelve days' mission at the People's Congregational Hall, Leyton, commencing January 28.—For a mission being conducted this week by the Rev. G. M. Smith, of Gloucester, in Blankhill Presbyterian Church, Berwick.—For much blessing on a fifteen days' mission at Tunbridge Wells by Mr. J. J. Scroggie, commencing February 4.—For blessing on a Gospel mission at Stonybridge, commencing February 4.—On special services in Madras, commencing January 28, conducted by Mr. V. D. David, of Ceylon.—For services at Hazelbury Plucknett, by Mr. John Bennett, Evangelisation Society, February 4 to 18.—For blessing on Rev. C. G. Moore's visit to Ipswich, February 10 and 11.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

BRANCHES of the National Protestant Church Union have been formed at Marylebone and Guildford.

According to The City Press, the ecclesiastical authorities are contemplating the lighting of St. Paul's by electricity, and several experiments have already taken place.

Rev. B. B. de Wolf, late of St. Mary's, Sheffield, has been asked by the British and Foreign Bible Society to visit Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand in the interests of the Society.

Rev. E. Lauderdale, formerly a student in the Pastors' College, who recently resigned the pastorate of the church at the Tabernacle, Grimsby, has decided to enter the ministry of the Church of England.

The Queen has been pleased to approve of the appointment of Rev. C. W. Stubbs, rector of Wavertree, Liverpool, to be Dean of Ely, and of Rev. Edward C. Wickham, late head master of Wellington College, to be Dean of Lincoln.

Rev. C. H. Banning, M.A., vicar of St. Nicholas, Rochester, and rural dean, has accepted the vicarage of Christ Church, Highbury, vacant by the removal of Rev. J. W. Chapman to Harrogate. Mr. Banning was for some years connected with the Jews Society, and still retains a warm interest in its work.

Bishop Barry, who has been staying for some time at Mentone, returned last week to his prebendal house within the precincts of Windsor Castle. He has undertaken to assist the Bishop of Winchester during the absence of the Suffragan Bishop of Guildford, who has gone to Algiers for a few months for the benefit of his health.

A Church Mission to the Deaf and Dumb has been started in Carlisle. The object is to help the deaf and dumb in every practical way, having regard to their spiritual and temporal necessities, to assist them in acquiring suitable education, and in their efforts to obtain employment, and to provide for them, if possible, wholesome recreation.

According to the Liverpool Diocesan Calendar for 1894, the total population of the diocese is now estimated at 1,250,000. The total number of benefices is 205, and working clergy 400, of whom 205 are incumbents and 195 curates. The number of temporary churches and mission-rooms licensed for service is a trifle over 70, and the number of lay readers who have received the Bishop's approval is 75.

The Church Pastoral Aid Society is establishing training homes for its women agents in various centres of population. A sub-committee has presented a report in favour of starting such homes, and has prepared a scheme of management. The ladies will be required to pay a contribution to the working expenses of the home. Although they will live in community they will take no vows, and their work will be conducted on Evangelical and Protestant lines.

Bishop Edward Bickersteth, having returned to Japan, has, with his wife, taken up his residence in Tokio. Rev. A. Ernest Webb, who has joined the St. Andrew's Mission, is expected to reach Tokio early in March. The prospect of missionary work in Japan, which has developed much under Bishop Bickersteth, is said to be particularly bright. Rev. H. Evington, who has been nominated as one of the assistant bishops, is now on his way home for his consecration on February 24.

The Bishop of Ripon (Dr. Boyd Carpenter) preached on Sunday morning to an overflowing congregation in St. George's Church, Bloomsbury, from the words, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine" (Matt. vii. 6). All the study of the Christian Church, said the preacher, showed that the Church had persuaded itself at certain times that certain opinions were absolutely dangerous, and persecution followed. In an age in which enthusiasm for the remedy of abuses is a glorious passion, we needed above all things the lesson of the text, lest we should be tempted to do evil that good might come. All reforms must be worked for in the spirit of Christ. This was true Christianity, the Christianity of the much-disputed Sermon on the Mount—the need for Christ's spirit.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. F. Hastings is leaving North Adelaide, much to the regret of an attached church. He goes first to Monte Video, where he will join his son-in-law and two grandchildren, and then he proceeds to England.

At the annual meeting recently held at Park Hill Congregational Church, Nottingham, the minister (Rev. Wm. Crosbie) presiding, reports were presented of an exceptionally satisfactory character. During the three and a-half years' ministry of the present pastor, the membership has more than doubled.

On Wednesday last week, Rev. E. Theodore Hitchens was cordially welcomed by the church at Eccleston-square as co-pastor with his father, Dr. Hiles Hitchens. The occasion also marked the twenty-third anniversary of Dr. Hiles Hitchens's settlement. Addresses were delivered by Canon Fleming, Professor Thomson, Rev. W. J. Woods, and others.

The Dean of Canterbury attended a missionary convention, under the auspices of the L.M.S., on Tuesday last in the Congregational Church, Guildhall-street, Canterbury. He spoke of the growth of missionary work during the present century and the great importance of having female as well as male missionaries. Rev. Drs. McFarlane and Horton also spoke.

Every Congregational minister is to receive from the British Committee of the Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice, a circular urging him to promote a memorial to the Prime Minister, calling for the enforcement of the prohibition of the cantonment system in India. The circular is signed by Drs. C. A. Berry, John Brown, A. Goodrich, and Principal Simon, Revs. J. P. Gledstone, A. Rowland, H. Arnold Thomas, and W. J. Woods.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have decided to reinforce and extend the Mission in Matabeleland without delay, as soon as the circumstances of the country permit of the active resumption of missionary work. It is understood that the directors intend to establish an industrial training institution, to teach the natives useful manual arts, their opinion being that, in the present circumstances of the country, such training will be more immediately useful and more likely to be productive of permanent good than the establishment of ordinary schools.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, in his last week's Merchants' Lecture on "The Living Christ and the Living Word," said there were on the one hand men who drew attention to the amount of work the Bible was accomplishing, and others who were exercising their critical ingenuity to show that the Bible was entirely wrong. The work it had effected was the best answer to all the critics. It inspired the faint-hearted, and strengthened those who endeavoured to do God's work; it put the bridle upon human passion, and spurred up the noblest and best in human purposes and human affections. The writers of the Psalms, upon which so much criticism had been expended, were holy men, and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. The criticism of man, therefore, was of no avail.

Calls.—Mr. C. L. Kingsbury, of Nottingham Institute, to be assistant pastor of Matlock Bank Church; Rev. T. F. Touzeau to Loughborough Park, Brixton.

Resignations.—Rev. F. W. B. Weeks, of Upperton Church, Eastbourne.

BAPTIST.

Recognition services have been held at Kingsbridge, Devon, in connection with the settlement of Rev. W. T. Adey, late of Ealing.

Three new students came into residence at the Midland Baptist College, Nottingham, after Christmas, making the present number fourteen.

The church at Dudley has celebrated the first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. Edward Milnes. During the year forty-four members had been added to the church.

Services were held last week to commemorate the third anniversary settlement of Rev. H. E. Stone at Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's Wood. The public meeting was presided over by Gen. Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B., and interesting reports of church work were given.

The annual missionary services of the Rochester Church were held on Sunday, January 21, when sermons were preached by Rev. F. Harmon, missionary from China, deputation from the Baptist Missionary Society. On the following Monday a public meeting was held.

Mrs. Atkin, one of the oldest members of Highgate-park Church, Birmingham, has given £1000 toward the building of new schoolrooms. Since the church was opened, five years ago, the schools have been conducted on the old premises in Alcester-street, and this has been found to be a great disadvantage.

A church has been formed at Hamer-street, Manchester, by Rev. Dr. Maclaren, assisted by Rev. Carey Bonner (secretary of the Lancashire and Cheshire Baptist Association). For some years a successful mission work has been carried on amongst the working-class population of the district, and it was deemed advisable to make a fresh start this year with a properly-constituted church. Dr. Maclaren gave the right hand of fellowship to fifty-three members, and afterwards delivered an address upon church life and work. Mr. J. A. Jamieson was elected minister. A new chapel will shortly be erected.

The annual meetings of the London Baptist Association were held at Regent's Park Chapel on Tuesday last week. Rev. J. T. Wigner, the retiring president, in a few words relinquishing his post to Rev. W. Cuff, expressed regret that he had not been able to build a chapel at Bermondsey, though he believed that Mr. Cuff would be able to do so. The report stated that Archway-road Chapel had been completed, and arrangements made for the opening. The net increase of membership of the churches was 1199, being more than in the previous year by 281. Rev. J. Fletcher, of Commercial-road, E., was elected secretary of the Association, in place of Rev. F. A. Jones, resigned.

Calls.—Rev. J. Carille to Praed-street, W.; Rev. J. T. Schofield, of Waterbeach, to Weston, Northamptonshire.

METHODIST.

The property held by the Methodist New Connexion in the Hanley Circuit is valued at £30,000, the debts amounting to not more than £2,500.

The Bible Christian church at Penzance has been enlarged to accommodate 150 more persons. Many alterations have been made to the galleries and other parts of the building.

An interesting discussion on Deaconesses' work was held at a recent meeting of Primitive Methodist ministers in London. Papers by Rev. J. F. Porter and Miss Jones were read. The general feeling was in favour of multiplying agents of this class in connection with the London circuits. The phrase "Sisters of the People" was considered a more preferable designation than "Deaconesses."

Lozells-street Mission, Birmingham, established by Rev. James E. Clapham fourteen years ago, has been so successful that three sets of Board schools are now hired for work connected with the Mission; the congregation numbers 1200, the Sunday-schools 2300, the men's Bible-class 1100, the women's class 600. It has been resolved to erect buildings to cost £4000 to afford suitable accommodation.

On the occasion of the eighteenth anniversary of Rev. Charles Garrett's Wesleyan Mission at Liverpool, an encouraging report was presented. The income for the year amounted to £4761, and the expenditure was fully covered. The work is in vigorous operation, and includes the preaching of the Gospel, the rescue and protection of the young, as well as temperance, social, and rescue effort.

The scheme promoted by the London Central Mission for erecting a new central hall in Farringdon-road is meeting with encouraging approval in Method st circles. The scheme will necessitate an outlay of about £25,000. The need is felt of a large central Methodist hall in or near the heart of the metropolis, and this need will now be met, the site being easily accessible from every part of London, while the impetus to the work in Clerkenwell will be very great.

Mr. Robert W. Perks, M.P., presiding on Monday week over an aggregate meeting of Wesleyan Methodists held in connection with the annual festival of the Louth circuit, said that they wanted at least four of Mr. Champness's evangelists; and if they would select four villages—say, Marshchapel, Binbrook, Donington, and Wragby—they would want a sum of £200 a year. If they would raise half of that sum he would give £100 a year, for five years, to try the experiment.

Speaking at a public meeting at Reading, Rev. Dr. Waller, secretary of the Wesleyan Conference, said there are to-day 17,051 Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-schools in this country, an increase of 503 in ten years. Teachers number 129,457, an increase of 5067 in that time. The scholars number 948,508, an increase of 106,557, so that they had been adding scholars at the rate of over 10,000 a year for the past ten years. There are also 139,591 children in the Sunday-school who are church members, an increase in the ten years of 39,153.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Students' Missionary Society connected with the English Presbyterian College will endeavour to raise this year £500 for the erection of a school and orphanage in Singapore.

The Moderator of the coming Synod, Rev. Dr. Muir, of Egremont, has been provided with an assistant during his year of office; the choice has fallen upon Mr. David Connor, son of Dr. Connor, of Govanhill.

Mr. Arthur F. Taylor, M.A., who has been labouring very successfully at Didsbury, in connection with the congregation of Withington, Manchester, has been appointed assistant at Westbourne-grove, London.

Ninety-one members have been disjoined from Prospect-street congregation, Hull, to form the nucleus of the recently-sanctioned charge at Newington, in the same town. Prospect-street congregation, Hull, which has been without a pastor for some time, through the translation of Rev. J. G. Train to London, keeps well together, and carries on its ordinary services and evangelistic agencies with undiminished vigour.

Calls.—Rev. J. E. Adams, of North Leith, to Blairgowrie; Rev. A. Macmillan, of Martyrs Free, Paisley, to Blackburn; Rev. T. P. Milne, of Paisley, to Kilmarnock.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Friend gives the membership of the Society of (orthodox) Friends in England, America, and Australia, and a few scattered over Europe, as 105,874, which is an increase of over 2000 during the last two years.

At the "morning meeting" on Monday last, held as usual at Devonshire House, interesting accounts were given of the recent travels of Isaac Sharp in America among the Indians, and of his journey with Wm. A. Wall into Mexico, where he is now engaged among Friends' Missions, which keep growing in numbers and power.

In last week's Friend Alderman Wm. White, J.P., begins a series of "Reminiscences of Friends' First-day Schools," which promise to be at once instructive and stimulating. The adult school movement seems gathering in momentum and to have vast potentialities of blessing in it. To have the masses and classes blended may lead to the obliteration of the terms in the unification of all for the highest ends.

A few days ago The Times both inserted a letter from Wm. Tallack and devoted a courteous leader to it, on "An Inadequately Appreciated National Defence." The letter drew attention to the guardianship of Divine Providence in England's history, and deplored the absence of all reference to it in recent discussions on the Navy. It is a good symptom to find a leading journal dealing with the question at all. Europe would be immensely relieved by national disarmament.

At a representative meeting of Friends resident in Yorkshire, a minute was adopted in regard to the proposed addition to the British Navy. It stated:—"The reckless squandering of national resources has already brought some European States to actual bankruptcy, and others into a condition of grave financial embarrassment. In this country about £2 out of every £3 raised by Parliamentary taxation is already devoted to warlike expenditure, past or present. The rivalry of European nations in military armaments, which appears to have no limit but the resources of the State, is rightly looked upon by many in this country as an irrational and suicidal policy. Mutual disarmament rather than ruinous rivalry is surely the policy dictated alike by intelligence and by Christian statesmanship. The position of England eminently qualifies her to take the initiative in urging mutual disarmament upon the Governments of other countries."

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Miss Eva Booth is unable to fulfil her engagements, being laid aside through overwork.

On February 5 to 9 General Booth will visit Hull, Leeds, Newcastle, Sunderland, and Darlington.

The self-denial week for the districts left out in consequence of the coal strike is fixed for March 4 to 10.

An officer is searching out land and making arrangements for opening a shelter in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

An Anglo-Swedish captain stationed at Falun, Sweden, was arrested on a charge of vagrancy for asking self-denial aid. The charge fell through.

At the recent S.A. Congress in New York the 2000th auxiliary was enrolled, and the 2500th local officer was commissioned, showing the advance the Salvation Army is making the other side of the water.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth spoke at a meeting, held under the auspices of the Christian Social Reform League, in the Rectory-road Congregational Church, Hackney, on the 17th inst., on the formation of a Workhouse Girls' Aid Society.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

On Saturday, January 12, after a long and painful illness, Miss MARY ANN LEAR, late of 11, The Friars, Exeter, aged 69.—At Killala, co. Mayo, Mr. ROBERT EAKINS, an earnest Presbyterian elder.—Mr. H. BIRD, for forty-six years a Primitive Methodist local preacher in the Grassington circuit, aged sixty-seven.—At Sheffield, Mr. JOHN ASKHAM, a prominent Congregationalist, aged seventy-six.—Mr. J. ALDRICH, J.P., of Diss, for many years a leading member of the United Methodist Connexion, in his eighty-third year.—Mrs. W. BRACKETT, of Tunbridge Wells, for many years connected with the Mount Pleasant Congregational Tabernacle.—On January 18, at Torre Pellice, Mrs. CAROLINE BECKWITH, widow of a well-known benefactor of the Waldenses.—At Bermondsey, Rev. T. LIONEL WALTON, of the Wesleyan Methodist Settlement, after a brief illness.—At Weston-super-Mare, Mrs. BATCHELOR, wife of Rev. Henry Batchelor, Congregational Minister, aged sixty-five.—At Redford, Mr. G. K. ROBERTS, for forty-six years a local preacher among the Wesleyans, aged sixty-six.—At Abergavenny, Mr. HENRY THOMAS, for eighteen years deacon and for thirty years school superintendent of Castle-street Congregational Church, aged seventy-one.—At Kinross, N.B., on 25th ult., Rev. WILLIAM PETERS, aged seventy-four, for forty-nine years minister of the parish church.

Notices.

WILL M. Forester, of Richmond, kindly send her full address?

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—F. Wilde, Ferry Dining Rooms, 3, Nile-street, Woolwich; R. Holder, 31, Gloucester-road, Camberwell, S.E.; M. A. Watson, 38, Hughenden-terrace, Stratford; Jno. Paul, Lodging House Gospel Union, 20, King-street, City, Glasgow; E. C. Roper, 25, Gladstone-terrace, Battersea Park, London, S.E.; Corporal W. H. Green, 2nd Yorkshire Regiment, Bhamo, Upper Burmah; Geo. Harris, 63, Stacey-road, Cardiff; Owen R. Williams, 29, Water-street, Rhyl (Welsh tracts also); T. P. Davies, 19, Merchant-street, Bow, E.; J. T. Stevenson, 19, Bristol-gardens, Maida Vale, W.; Walter C. Chapman, 12, Burrell-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—H.W.P. B.E. L.S. R.S. F.D.W. A.H.G. H.T. J.C.C. J.E. E.W. J.S.B. R.W.W. W.H.P. W.B.D. W.F.H. S.F.H. F.A.G. W.N. J.P.W. R.H.C. A.E.S. R.M. M.F.C. E.L.F. T.A.D. M.H. M.G. J.L.H. D.M. R.S. A.H.W. W.M.R. J.F.M. S.G.G. H.T. J.H.M. J.D. H.J.F. W.K. E.B. W.H.B. H.E.G. D.B. G.J.H. L.H. D.R. R.W. C.A.S. J.R. R.W.B. H.E.B. J.P.T. F.K.S.B. R.A.W. J.E.L. T.M. R.T. G.A.O. J.E. EMcM. D.M. T.H.S. E.T.W. S.M.P. W.C.B. B.C. C.H.C. J.J.S. B.T. G. A.W.S. J.B. W.D. W.M.T. T.R. C.S. H.S. W.F. S.C.B. J.R. H.M. J.E. R.S. E.C.D. J.G. J.R.M. W.W. H.J.O. J.C. M.B. A.P. M.B. D. W.S. H.M.W. H.B

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Nearly 400 poor widows were last week entertained at the Temperance Institute, Southport, by the Mayor and the Temperance Society.

Last week, at a quarterly meeting of the Council of the Mid-Devon Temperance Federation, Captain Doxat, president of the Federation, gave a review of the present position of the temperance party.

A meeting of the Leeds branch of the British Women's Temperance Society was held last Wednesday, in the Mayor's Parlour of the Leeds Town Hall, at which a resolution was passed in favour of an industrial Home for Inebriate Women.

Sunday was observed as "Temperance Sunday" in Liverpool, sermons being preached at 150 churches and mission buildings in the diocese. "Temperance Sunday" was also observed at York Minster and other churches in that diocese, Canon Basil Wilberforce preaching at the Minster.

A temperance mission has recently been held at Stepney Temple, Commercial-road, E., under the auspices of the Wesleyan East End Mission and the John Petty Lodge of the I.O.G.T. During the week 120 were induced to sign the total abstinence pledge, and a good work done in rousing up any temperance soldiers inclined to doze at their post.

Mrs. Hunt, of the American W.C.T.U., says that the Union "has only six more States to win before the whole United States and Territories will be under compulsory temperance education, with their 65,000,000 inhabitants and 18,000,000 school children. Already in forty-four States and Territories the law says that there 13,000,000 school children should be taught as a part of their regular school education God's law of abstinence from alcohol and all narcotics, with other laws of health."

An eight days' Gospel Temperance Mission has recently been held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Gallows Tree Common, near Reading, by Mr. Sidney Wade. Earnest and stirring addresses were delivered each evening, and the mission resulted in the taking of upwards of thirty pledges. Gentlemen from Reading and the neighbourhood presided at the week-night gatherings, and a spirit of earnestness and enthusiasm prevailed throughout the mission. Impressive sermons were preached by "Dr." Wade on January 14 and 21, and it is hoped that a rich harvest will result from his labours.

The nineteenth anniversary of the South London Open-air Temperance Mission was held last week. The annual report stated that last season meetings were held each Sunday morning and evening, and attracted large audiences. Volunteers for conducting meetings were much needed in order to extend the usefulness of the Mission. Alderman Clements said there was no movement more important in its bearing on the future welfare of the working classes than the temperance movement. Probably there was no one present who was not aware of the evil caused by strong drink. Their duty as social reformers was to instil into men's minds the necessity of total abstinence.

The annual meeting of the Liverpool Women's Union and Shelter, in connection with the C.E.T.S., was held at Liverpool, the Lord Mayor presiding. The annual report was of an encouraging nature, especially in connection with the Women's Shelter for women-victims to intemperance. The Bishop of Liverpool pointed out that intemperance amongst women was increasing, and, to his mind, one of the most unwise measures that had been passed was the one by which grocers were granted off-licences, for it placed a great temptation in the way of women. The Bishop of London said it was deplorable to think that the sin was increasing. In his opinion, this was because the facilities offered to women for obtaining drink without publicity were increasing. The temptation to drink was, to his mind, stronger amongst those who lived by manual labour; and he thought that, as women had such great influence in the work, it was of the greatest importance that they should be ever ready and willing to take part in the work of rescuing men and women from the terrible curse.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

In connection with our own Forward movement God has further encouraged us by a gift of £1600, and by the offers of more young men than had previously been coming forward. If the Lord is about to send us a hundred manly and spiritually-minded young men, He will surely provide the £5000 needed for outfit and passage-money, as well as whatever may be necessary for support and working expenses.

We have also been encouraged by the kind promise of a friend to supply, as needed, the £5000 required for our Chefoo schools. Another encouragement has been received in a donation of £100 towards the £1000 needed to build a Sanitarium at Chin-kiang. —China's Millions.

[126]

MEDICAL TRAINING FOR INDIAN GIRLS.

At a conference of fourteen women medical missionaries held at Ludhiana on Dec. 20 and 21, it was decided to submit to the committees of the missionary societies occupying districts where Urdu and Hindi are spoken, a proposal for the establishment of an undenominational Christian Medical School for Eurasian and native Christian girls. The need for such an institution is strongly felt. Medical missionaries are among the most useful agents in the evangelisation of a country; and such evangelisation must depend largely for its development upon thoroughly trained native agents, working under the superintendence of European missionaries. Hitherto the supply has fallen far short of the demand. Native missionaries do not require the prolonged and expensive furlough which so often interrupts our work. Moreover they can live much more cheaply in India than foreigners can.

In order that these girls may prove effective evangelistic agents, it is essential that they should, during the period of their training, be under distinctly Christian influence. This is already the case at St. Catherine's Hospital, Amritsar, but, besides the fact that the accommodation there is limited, the education there given does not enable the girls to obtain a legal qualification, except in midwifery. This fact deters some from entering who would otherwise do so, and leaves them no alternative but to enter the Government institutions. The existing arrangements in Government female medical schools both for the boarding and tuition of the girls are unsatisfactory.

It was deemed desirable that the school should be attached to a Mission hospital which shall contain at least thirty beds, and that the school be provided with an efficient staff of lecturers, with the needful equipment. When the school is established, in addition to the school examinations, Government will be petitioned to affiliate the institution and admit the students to its examinations. Arrangements will if possible be made with the societies sending out lady-doctors to allow some to live at the school for at least one year, while studying the language, and to assist for a short time daily in English tutorial lectures. The various missionary societies will be asked to contribute towards the initial expenses and towards the maintenance of the school. After the working expenses of the school are provided for, a limited number of girls may be admitted on payment of £10 a year.

A provisional executive committee was appointed by the conference, with Miss Brown, M.D., Delhi, as secretary, and Miss Balfour, M.D., Ludhiana, as treasurer.

MILDMAY RESCUE WORK.

On Wednesday, Jan. 24, the annual friendly gathering of old girls, helped by the Borough branch of this mission, was held in the Haven, Trinity-street, Southwark. Over fifty were able to respond to the invitation of the Deaconesses carrying on the work. Many of them are converted and doing well in their situations, some having been in one place five years and more. During the year nearly 1000 letters were written and received, and some 700 visits made in the interest of the girls.

After a social tea and hearty intercourse, free and unrestrained short addresses were given by Miss Heath and Mr. William Luff, encouraging the young women to look to Jesus who is waiting to be their Saviour, and "a Friend who sticketh closer than a brother." The assurance of interest and practical love thus given is an untold help to these rescued and struggling ones.

RAGGED SCHOOLS, DUBLIN.

Friends of the late Miss English, Townsend-street, Dublin, who have been in the habit of contributing to the funds of the Lurgan-street schools, through Miss English, may like to know that the work so dear to her heart will go on as heretofore. The committee wish to say for the information of those friends whose addresses cannot be found, and consequently cannot receive the report of the schools, that God has graciously enabled them to close the account of the past year free of debt. The schools have suffered a severe loss in the death of Miss English, whose efforts for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the children were so unceasing and so blessed and owned of God. Help will be more than ever welcomed during 1894.

(Mrs.) C. A. Fishe, 8, St. Mary's-road, Dublin.
(Miss) D. Staples, 23, Upper Merrion-street Dublin.

SHERBORNE, DORSET.—Rev. R. B. Morrison, of Upper Parkstone Tabernacle, has conducted a mission here, at which much blessing has been given.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1894.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

C. and M. (Dec.).—Please say whose mission E. London.
M. C. N. (Dec.).—Kindly send name and address.

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Mr. Warszawiak's Work among Jews, New York—J. P. M. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| British and Foreign Bible Society—J. P. M., 10s.; B. J. W., £1 | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| Society Relief Persecuted Jews—Unworthy, £1; B. J. W., 10s.; C. B., £2; E. F., 10s. | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| J. G. Paton Mission Fund—Miss N. B., £2; C. S., 10s. | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| Tibetan Mission, Miss Taylor—Mrs. R. T., 5s.; G. L. D., 10s. | 0 | 15 | 0 |
| China Inland Mission—C. S., 10s.; J. G., £1; Considereth, £1 | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| Bible Institute, Chicago (Support of Student)—G. A. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Persecuted Stundists—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| South American Missionary Society—F. H. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Jewish Girls in Safed—Ye Did it Unto Me | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Pastor Chiniquy—E. W. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Poor Jews, Jerusalem—E. F., £1; A. A., 10s. | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| Zambesi Industrial Mission—Alpha, Clifton, 2s. 6d.; (Angoniland) B. J. W., 10s. | 0 | 12 | 6 |
| Miss De Broen's Work, Paris—V. B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Lewis's Homes, Paris—V. B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Church Missionary Society—V. B., £3; (Medical) V. B., £2 | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Nestorian Mission and Orphanage—For Christ's Sake | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Friend of Gemerek Pastor—For Christ's Sake | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| North Africa Mission—Considereth | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. A. G. Brown's Work (Poor)—W. E. M., 2s. 6d.; S. C. E., 10s.; S. E. G., 5s. | 0 | 17 | 6 |
| Rev. W. Cuff's Work, Shoreditch (Poor)—W. E. M. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| St. Giles' Christian Mission—S. C. E., 10s.; S. E. G., 5s.; J. H. S., 2s. 6d.; C. B., £4; C. X. C., 5s.; B. B., 2s.; C. L., H. T., and H. H., 15s.; A. F., £5; Eggs Sold, £1; F. W. R., 10s.; H. S., 5s.; E. H., 10s.; All for Jesus, 5s.; (Poor) W. E. M., 2s. 6d.; (Prison) S. S. S., £4 | 17 | 12 | 0 |
| Mr. Fegan's Homes—A. B. R. C., 5s.; Walter, £1; C. B., £2; M. E. L., £1 1s.; X. X. X., 10s.; C. F., £1; E. H., 10s.; (Poor) W. E. M., 2s. 6d.; J. A. S., 5s. | 6 | 13 | 6 |
| Clergy Distress Fund—L. C. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robin Dinners—A. L., 3s.; D. R., 5s. | 0 | 8 | 0 |
| Poor Jews, East London (Mr. Oppenheim)—M. H., 6s.; L. A. B., 2s. 6d.; E. T. L., £2; Home, 3s.; E. F., 10s.; E. J. M., 5s.; R. P., £1; X. Y. Z., 5s.; D. W., 2s. 6d. | 4 | 14 | 0 |
| Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—J. P. M., 10s. 1d.; F. H., 5s. | 0 | 15 | 1 |
| Destitute Children's Dinner Society—B. F., 7s. 6d.; A. B. R. C., 5s. | 0 | 12 | 6 |
| Present Distress in London—C. A. N., £1; Not More than Others, etc., 5s. | 1 | 5 | 0 |
| Gospel Van (Captain E. Moorhouse)—M. S. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Young Abstainers' Union—M. S. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. Wintle's Work, Pontymoile—A. S., 10s.; R. P., £1; All for Jesus, 5s.; (Poor) L. A. B., 2s. 6d.; G. C. F., 10s.; Watch, £1; C. X. C., 10s.; M. L., £2; X. X. X., 10s.; (Poor Man) M. E., 2s. 6d. | 6 | 10 | 0 |
| Society for Suppression of the Opium Trade—A. S., 10s.; H. M. L., £1; (Special Appeal) Watch, £2 | 3 | 10 | 0 |
| George Yard Mission—C. S., £1; M. E., 5s. | 1 | 5 | 0 |
| Mildmay Institutions—C. S. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Miss Weston's Work, Sailors—C. S., 10s.; Pce., 10s., V. B., £1 | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Friendless and Fallen—C. S., 10s.; M. E., 5s.; M. E. L., £1 1s.; V. B., £1 | 2 | 16 | 0 |
| Sailors' Welcome Home, Miss Child—C. S. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Dr. Barnardo's Homes—C. S., 10s.; D. R., 10s.; P. M., £1; A. B. R. C., 5s.; C. B., £5; F. H., 5s.; W. M. and A., 5s.; C. F., £1; Senex, 2s. 6d.; Miss B., £2 10s.; E. H., 10s.; (Deaconesses) (Relief of Poor) J. A. S., 10s. | 12 | 7 | 6 |
| Dock Labourers' Mission—C. S., 10s.; (Free Meals) J. H., £1 | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| Homes of Hope, Regent-square—D. R. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Free Breakfasts, &c.—D. R. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Christian Jews (Mr. Bernstein)—B. W., 6s.; C. F., £1; H. S., 5s. | 1 | 11 | 0 |
| Dinners for Sick Children—A. B. R. C. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Poor Jews, Whitechapel (Mr. Ehrlich)—Not More than Others, &c. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Anti-Opium League—Alpha, Clifton, 5s.; (Special Appeal) E., £1 | 1 | 5 | 0 |
| Anti-Opium Urgency Committee—O. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Gray's Yard Mission—S. C. E., 10s.; S. E. G., 5s. | 0 | 15 | 0 |
| Rev. J. W. Atkinson's Relief Work—Beta, 2s. 6d.; C. B., £2 | 2 | 2 | 6 |
| Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—M. E., 5s.; S. S. S., £3; F. W. R., 10s. | 3 | 15 | 0 |
| East End Work, Rev. G. B. Ryley—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. J. Rolfe Fisher's Work, Bow—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Christian Community—C. B., £2; S. S. S., £3; Alpha, Clifton, 2s. 6d. | 5 | 2 | 6 |
| North-east London Gospel Mission—C. B., £2; Alpha, Clifton, 5s. | 2 | 5 | 0 |
| London Samaritan Society—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Rescue Society—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Field Lane Refuges—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission—C. B., £2; E. H., 10s.; All for Jesus, 5s. | 2 | 15 | 0 |
| Homes Working Boys in London—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Homes Working Girls in London—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. T. J. Hazzard's Work, Bow—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| London City Mission Seaside Homes—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Horlock's Convalescent Homes, Southend—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Cripples' Nursery, Regent's Park—C. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mildmay Mission to the Jews—F. H., 5s.; G. W. W., £1; Considereth, £1; (Testaments) N. B. S., £2 | 4 | 5 | 0 |
| Salvation Army—E. M. K. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Wilkes' Rescue Work (Poor)—J. A. S. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney—M. E. L., £1 1s.; V. B., £1 | 2 | 1 | 0 |

(Continued on page 30.)

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

WARNING TO ADVERTISERS.—The greatest care should be taken in writing the address at the end of Advertisements. We also beg to call the special attention of Advertisers to the following Notice which appears in The Postal Guide:—"Letters addressed to initials or to fictitious names at any Post Office are not taken in, but are at once sent back to the writers."

LETTERS ADDRESSED TO THE OFFICE.—Advertisers who require their letters to be addressed to the office of this Journal will be charged an additional Sixpence for each Advertisement, and another Sixpence extra if letters are to be forwarded to their private address.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For Great Britain and Ireland .. | 6s. 7d. | per annum |
| For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. .. .. .. | 8s. 10d. | „ „ |
| For United States and Canada .. | 2¼ dols. | „ „ |
| Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY .. .. | 2½ dols. | „ „ |

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 4 | Copies monthly .. .. .. .. .. | 2s. | per annum. |
| 8 | „ „ .. .. .. .. .. | 4s. | „ „ |
| 12 | „ „ .. .. .. .. .. | 6s. | „ „ |
| 24 | „ „ .. .. .. .. .. | 12s. | „ „ |

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

WE purpose next week to give a portrait and sketch of Rev. S. MACNAUGHTON, M.A., Presbyterian Minister, Preston.

We have received a number of additional letters on "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost," mostly in confirmation of the Expository Note which elicited the discussion. On the other hand, we have received nothing definitely in reply, except that of Rev. James Gall.

Rev. John McNeill, whose brief but remarkable mission at Brighton is reported on a succeeding page, will sail from Southampton on Saturday next for the Cape, where he hopes to spend some time in Gospel work. We trust the Christians throughout South Africa will heartily co-operate with him. He will be accompanied by his singing companion, Mr. J. H. Burke. In the City Temple at noon, to-day (Thursday), and in the Metropolitan Tabernacle in the evening, Mr. McNeill will give his farewell addresses before leaving our shores.

Friends of foreign mission work will note that Miss Annie R. Taylor and her party of pioneers for Tibet say farewell at a meeting in Exeter Hall on the 16th inst. The occasion cannot but prove of great interest. It would seem that God has endowed our sister with a remarkable, childlike faith, and in the now circumstances in which she will shortly be placed, we shall not be at all surprised to find—as indeed she has found—that the promise is duly fulfilled, "If they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them."

Colonel Saunderson, some days ago, wrote a strong letter to The Times, championing the cause of the evangelists who are conducting open-air mission services in Cork. To this Mr. Maurice Healy has replied, calling in question the Colonel's statement of the case. The current number of The Christian Irishman says:—

We await with much interest the result of the recent action in reference to street preaching in Cork. . . Protestant opinion continues to be much divided on the whole subject.

There are two questions intimately connected with this subject, but widely different from each other. The first concerns civil and religious liberty; the other concerns the means by which the Gospel is to be promulgated, and the conduct of Christians when their testimony is refused.

We quote with entire satisfaction the following from The Daily Chronicle of last Monday:—"We are glad to see that at length the military authorities are urging the municipal authorities of garrison towns to purify the localities by the more stringent use of existing statutes. A letter from the Adjutant-General has already set the Town Council of Chatham actively and beneficially at work, and no doubt we shall soon hear of similar action at Plymouth and Devonport, Portsmouth, Dover, Sheerness, and other ports in which flagrant evils exist. But there are other towns, not technically garrison towns, in which a good deal may be done. We are thoroughly in sympathy with Sir Redvers Buller's motives; but why should we not have the benefit of his initiative extended to London? If the Licensing Acts and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, can be applied in Chatham, why not in the neighbourhood of the Strand, and Piccadilly and Oxford-street, and less known districts? The condition of our streets is simply shameful, and what is possible in the military ports is possible in the capital of the world."

We are rejoiced to observe that Mr. John Burns spoke plainly to the men of Woolwich on the drink question. The following extract is from a newspaper report:—

He also hoped that increased leisure would lead to the demolition of the damnable collection of drink-shops which stood between them and their work. The last time he came to the Arsenal, a dirty, barefooted little boy put into his hands, not the news of an eight-hours' day being conceded in France or Germany, but the result of a brutal prize-fight or a horse-race. "Men of Woolwich," concluded Mr. Burns, "I have earned the right to speak plainly to you on this point. I am sorry to say we have not got to fear so much the machinations of our employers or the indifference of the Government, but worse than these is the coquetting of the forces of reaction with the betting and gambling which are eating the heart out of Woolwich and Plumstead and the labour movement everywhere. I hope the eight-hours' day you have got may lead to the abolition of drink and betting, and to the extension of the brightness, contentment, peace, and happiness of every artisan's home in Plumstead and Woolwich."

Mr. Müller's efforts for orphans have stirred many to imitate his good example; the efforts of Pastor Bodelschwingh for the epileptics of Germany are beginning to stir Englishmen to do something for poor epileptics at home. Skipping's Farm, in Buckinghamshire, which is said to be admirably adapted for its purposes, has been bought, and preparations are already being made to fit it for its guests. "With its comparatively high elevation it is one of the healthiest spots in southern England. It is sufficiently remote from the railway line to secure the privacy and the quiet essential to its future inmates." The ground is being prepared for an orchard and the well deepened. We may, in a comparatively short time, hear that a small and modest beginning has been made. Of course the management is in the hands of a committee, on which, we hope there is some enthusiast who feels called of God to see that the work is done, and well done.

How many thousands of Christians frequently join in the petition, "That it may please Thee to show thy pity upon all prisoners and captives: We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord." But is there not a danger of gliding through a series of prayers and so missing the importance of the subject of the prayer? At the present time there are about 2000 Armenian prisoners suffering for Christ's sake, and we, as Christians, bearing them in mind, ought to "remember them that are in bonds as bound with them." British Christians who enjoy such freedom and privileges ought especially to pray "with all prayer and supplication in the spirit" for our Armenian brothers and sisters who are the prisoners of the Lord, that He may sustain them by his grace and deliver them by his power. We ought also to be ready, as the Lord may open the way, to use the means that He in his wisdom and providence may place within our power and opportunity for "the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

An esteemed correspondent, calling our attention to a recent imperfect quotation of 2 Tim. ii. 6 as "the labourer must be first partaker of the fruits," points out the distinction between the ancient husbandman and the modern labourer, and explains the "husbandman that laboureth" as specifically a tenant farmer. Attention to the context gives a different significance to the sentence, especially when proper emphasis is laid upon "that laboureth" and "first." Writing on verses 4-6, Dean Spence thus brings out the meaning:—

Not every soldier wins his commander's applause, but only the veteran who devotes himself heart and soul to his profession; not every athlete wins the crown or prize, but only he who trains with anxious, painful care; not every tiller of the ground gathers the earth's fruits, but only the patient toiler. So must it be in religious life.

In a word, the Apostle was not concerned about agricultural distinctions, but, inciting to zeal and perseverance, he showed that conscientious labour brings its due reward.

Dr. Sanday, in his Bampton lectures on "Inspiration," declares his impression that the criticism of the near future is likely to be more conservative in its tendency than it has been, or at least to do fuller justice to the positive data than it has done." This puts, in a few words, the true ground of complaint against much that is written in the way of criticism, which sees, or imagines it sees, a difficulty, and then forthwith gives all its strength to stating and urging the difficulty, while it takes little or no account of the "positive data" which ought, in all fairness, to have their due weight and consideration. Whether Dr. Sanday has himself carried out his own principle in his book we do not now inquire.

Dr. Sanday takes a similar position with regard to the New Testament. He believes that there is still much to be done; and he hopes most from the spirit which is not impatient for "results," which does not suppress or slur over difficulties in the critical view any more than in the traditional, which lays its plans broadly, and is determined to make good the lesser steps before it attempts the greater. If the Bible and all questions relating to it are treated in this calm, fair way, the spirit of doubt will receive a serious check, and the truth will all the sooner be manifest as true. Practical work will also suffer no delay, and Christian disciples will not be distracted and weakened.

Dr. Hugh Macmillan has one of his suggestive and spiritually stimulating papers in Thu

Thinker on "The Mark of the Beast." He says: "The marks to which the text (Rev. xix. 20) refers are the bestial marks that belong to the spirit of evil. It is the mark of sin in our souls which destroys the image of God within us, and reduces us to the level—nay, below the level—of the beasts that perish." In reply to the question, What is it that can remove the mark of the beast in man, and restore the image of God?" he very truly says, "We might well despair of the future of our race, if it were left to the force of natural evolution to work out the beast in man, and let the ape and tiger die. The regenerating forces of living Christianity can be trusted to raise and renew mankind." The whole article is an excellent illustration of what can be done to make the Bible fresh, instructive, warning and quickening, by simply letting it suggest and guide our thoughts.

---

"Are we on the way" (inquires a writer in Macmillan) "to a better resting-place for the spirit" than Francis of Assisi knew in his simple life, "by means of the mastery we are gaining over the forces of nature? Forty years ago the men of science believed so; even they, however, at last are losing hope. Is it possible, after all, that the day of the saints is coming?" If so, we do not think that they will resemble any but the best saints of old. A reaction from the present excessive toil, excessive pleasure-hunting, and excessive wealth-making of this age, would be a very natural thing, but we cannot believe that the cloister would be the place of retreat. Men can easily get relief by adopting simpler manners and a simpler life. Let the simplicity of life enjoined by the New Testament be adopted, and the time of the saints would be here in the truest sense.

---

The Century for this month declares that "in the State of New York especially, but in other States as well, there has been of late a great shaking among the political dry bones. In various sections both of the leading parties have been making efforts to purge themselves of disreputable elements, and to reorganise on lines of principle instead of those of plunder." Reform of municipal government is the demand. A warning note is raised for the deliverance of some easy souls, lest they should find that in standing by "party" they have really ranged themselves on the side of corrupt and discredited organisations, alliance with which must mean suspicion, and may mean dishonour." The testing of men often comes in these everyday things. How does corruption spread so fast and so far, but through, to say the least, the culpable indifference of Christians?

---

The New York correspondent of The Rock gives some striking facts from an "open letter" written by Rev. C. C. Penick, who was born in Virginia, has served six and a-half years in Africa, and is now the general agent of the commission to which work among the Negroes in the United States has been entrusted. The Negro population is one-ninth of the whole, yet it furnishes more than one-third of the prisoners, and more than one-third of all imprisoned man-slayers. "In the North the Negro develops into a criminal twice as fast as in the South." In the State of New York the Negro is only one in eighty-five of the population, but he is one in sixteen of prisoners, and one in thirteen of man-slayers. It may well be asked, "If Northern manners roll South, what then will the terrible amount of Negro crime be there unless it can be stayed or arrested?" We wish the "open letter" had pointed out the influence on the poor Negro of the poor and degraded white population from Europe.

---

This Bishop, however, has another picture to present, which is full of encouragement to those who seek to spread the knowledge of Christ. He says:—

In my entire life I have never seen a single criminal negro communicant of our Church, nor heard of but two. The six years I was bishop of our work in Africa we had some 6000 people attached to our congregations, and not a single arrest did I hear of, even of a member of the congregations.

---

An actor was lately urged to interfere with some amusements which were being provided by a Ritualistic church for the benefit of its funds. It was urged that much that was done was so similar to stage plays that it tended to diminish theatrical profits. "No," said the actor, "we shall not hinder what is training the young people to come to us, by encouraging a theatrical taste." May not the introduction of worldly amusements, with the motive of keeping young people to the church which provides them, have an effect directly contrary, encouraging a spirit of worldliness, and also weakening the spiritual force which alone can counteract it?

---

A similar remark was recently made by a Roman Catholic priest in a northern town. An Anglican clergyman had been delivering a lecture in which he had referred to the Romish Church unjustly, and the Roman Catholic priest was advised to contradict the statement. His answer was, "We shall not interfere with those who are doing our work so well."

---

Dr. Bavinck, to whose article in The Presbyterian and Reformed Review on the future of Calvinism in Holland we recently called attention, presents the following striking contrast between Christianity as it was and Christianity as it is:—

Formerly Christianity was pre-eminently religion, now it is chiefly morality. There was a time when the Gospel was considered a means of saving men, of giving them comfort in life and death; at present it is no more than an instrument used to equip man for his task on earth. Once heaven was represented as the final goal; now it is earth. In past time religion was an independent factor, whereas now it is merely taken into account for its usefulness in the moral conflict. Of old, religion was essentially mystical, a life in communion with God; to-day it is mostly moral idealism, a life in the service of humanity.

---

It has been said that the Parsees are called "fire-worshippers" from ignorance; that they regard fire and the sun as sacred, being the emblems of the great God, and that when they pray they turn towards the sun to remind them of Him. The like is said of the crucifix and other idolatrous symbols; but Scripture never takes this view. In the Tent of Meeting and in the Temple the worshipper faced the west, and one of the great abominations which Ezekiel saw was the priests worshipping the sun toward the east; they could not worship it without turning their backs upon the Temple of Jehovah.

---

There are heathens and heathens, as there are Christians and Christians. Some who are called heathen are feeling after God, and shall surely find Him, while to some who are called Christian He will say, "I never knew you." But this does not justify our levelling up heathenism and levelling down Christianity; levelling up Romanism and Mohammedanism, and levelling down Protestantism and the Reformation: to produce a religion of a neutral tint, which neither glorifies God nor saves men—a humanitarianism that exalts the manger above the cross, is ashamed of the precious blood of Christ, and promises the blessings of the Gospel to men who have not been born from above.

---

Mrs. L. T. Meade has published in The Sunday Magazine two interesting papers on Mr. G. F. Watts as "The Painter of the Eternal Truths," from which we learn, in Mr. Watts's own words, that the art of his work is the part he cares least about.

My intention has been, not so much to make a picture that will charm the eye, as to suggest great thoughts that will appeal to the imagination and the heart, and kindle all that is noblest and best in humanity. . . . The intellectual intention of my work is to give material expression to the character and scope of modern thought.

Following out his principles, he has, so far as modern thought is penetrated with Christian truth, given some valuable and useful pictures.

---

But it is just in the limitation and passing mood of "modern thought" that we think the painter has lost his way in the treatment of, at least, one great theme—death—the subject on which Mrs. Meade lavishes the most unqualified praise. To begin with, "modern thought" is by no means the equivalent of "the eternal truths." According to Mrs. Meade, this is "an over-tired age," and Mr. Watts has, therefore, pictured death as "the great consoler." He does not hide the "sterner aspect of Death's character," as in the picture of "Love and Death," but still the dominating idea is that Death is a "consoler." Now, is that true? Paul says, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law, but thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Death is an "enemy," but whether a conquered or a conquering enemy depends on whether the Saviour is trusted or not. Mr. Watts, it seems to us, has to go deeper and higher in his handling of this awful theme. Could he give us a picture with the face of the living Saviour smiling its welcome to the soul that is longing to be with Him, because it is far better?

---

"If you give the men better wages they will only get more drink and waste them"—so say some people. "If you shorten the hours of labour you increase the opportunities for doing wrong." The reply is obvious. "We must pay a right wage, and fix reasonable hours of work, whatever use a man may make of them; we are not responsible for his misuse, save in an indirect way; and he will never use them rightly until he has them to use." At the same time, we are bound to do all that we can to keep him from his vices.

---

Should not some supervision be exercised respecting the pictorial advertisements in our public streets? At this very time there are to be seen in the suburban streets of London—indeed wherever there are wide wall spaces—life-sized figures calculated to do moral injury to young people and others. If, unhappily, it is lawful to provide such exhibitions for those who pay to see them indoors, surely the proprietors have no right to force them on the attention of the public at large, women as well as men, and youths and maidens, and boys and girls, on their way to church or school. We hope the County Council and the Vigilance Society will look to this.

Discipline.

"Arise ye, and depart, for this is not your rest."—Micah ii. 10.

Has the Lord been "stirring up your nest"? Are you a child of his, redeemed by precious blood, accepted in the Beloved, on your way to glory? Then all is well. He has done it in tender love. You may have been in danger of settling down here, when everything was very calm, and comfortable, and prosperous. The Lord knew that, so as with one breath He has scattered your treasures, and written disappointment, it may be desolation, upon all.

Every stroke which comes from his hand is a needed stroke. All the trials of God's children are divinely adapted trials. "He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men, to crush under foot all the prisoners of the earth" (Lam. iii. 33, 34). Our blessed Lord has gone to prepare a place for us. He would have us not only "joyfully ready" when his call shall come, but ever standing with our loins girt, and our lamps burning, "like unto men that wait for their Lord" (Luke xii. 36).

We get settled on our lees, and so need the emptying from vessel to vessel. We become pot-bound, our souls cleave to the dust—so the Great Husbandman has to transplant us again and again. Our rest should ever be "rest upon the wing," but we are prone to seek it in our cosy, comfortable nest in the prison-house of this poor earth. Our eyes are not always like "doves' eyes," steadily penetrating through the gloom, and beyond the shadows, to "the land of far distances" (Isa. xxxiii. 17). We linger by the way, to pull the pleasant flowers and to admire them.

To hasten us on, and to empty our hands of the things which perish in the using, our gracious Lord has to make our path very uncomfortable oftentimes. Does He not mean his people to be a happy people? Yes, verily, "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord" (Ps. cxliv. 15). Does He not mean us to have comfort? Yes, divinest comfort. "I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you" (John xiv. 18). Blessed be his name. Though He may remove much which He sees to be only entanglement, the peace which passeth all understanding, the rest of soul only to be found in Jesus, the joy unspeakable and full of glory, are independent of every outward circumstance. These may be vastly increased, when the heart is free to enjoy them. To be weighted with earthly comforts may not only be a present loss, but also prove to be so at the end of the day.

Fulness to such a burden is
As go on pilgrimage;
Here little, and hereafter much,
Is best from age to age.

The presence of Jesus will make the desert to blossom as the rose, and transform the humblest hut into the very gate of heaven. When we were little children we used to sing:

Could we but stand where Moses stood
And view the landscape o'er,
Not Jordan's stream, nor death's cold flood,
Should fright us from the shore.

There was some truth in it. Were our spiritual vision more clear and steady and strong, we would not be such loiterers on the way; more steadfast looking unto Jesus, who has gone within the veil, and who waits to welcome us there, would quicken our pace toward the many-mansioned Home. "Draw me; we will run after Thee" (Song i. 4). When we first looked to Him our burden rolled away; by continued looking, every cord which binds our hearts to earth will be loosened and broken. We will stand free and ready to greet His appearing.

For ah, the Master is so fair:
His smile so sweet to banished men,
That they who meet it unaware,
Can never rest on earth again.
And they who see Him risen afar,
At God's right hand, to welcome them,
Forgetful stand of home and land,
Desiring fair Jerusalem.

We have a lovely picture of this in the Old Testament. In the light and gladness of the King's return, the faithful Mephibosheth is "content to let the world go by." Ziba is welcome to the coveted possessions, "Yea, let him take all" (2 Sam. xix. 30).

Dear child of God, if the earthly nest has been all disarranged and upset, hear through this a well-known voice whispering to you, "Arise ye, and depart, for this is not your rest, because it is polluted." There is a Home where everything will run smooth and straight, where there shall be nothing to hurt nor to destroy. No breaking up there, no interruption to the communion, for those who have entered in shall go no more out. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God" (Col. iii. 1).

Banchory. B. Campbell.

THE LAFORCE ASYLUMS.

Pasteur John Bost is at present in this country, seeking to rouse interest and sympathy on behalf of these important Asylums. On Thursday last, in the drawing-room of Lord and Lady Kinnaird, 10, St. James's-square, the pasteur had an opportunity of explaining the work to many influential Christian friends of every good undertaking.

Lord Kinnaird, in introducing the visitor, said that England takes a special interest in the spiritual welfare of France, and suffering always calls forth the sympathy of all kind hearts. These institutions should be helped by all Protestant countries. He had visited Laforce some years ago, and was greatly pleased and impressed with what he saw; the work at these asylums was distinctly a success in every way.

Pasteur Bost told briefly the story of the Homes at Laforce. There are nine different Homes surrounded by gardens and fields; cheerful, bright, and healthy. There are asylums for girls—First, those who have lost parents; second, for girls who are blind, infirm, epileptic, or imbecile. Then there are asylums for adults of both sexes, who are cripples, epileptics, or idiots. Lastly, there has been added an asylum for aged and infirm governesses, schoolmistresses, and another for aged servants. The total number in these Homes is 510; the expense being about 11d. a day for each inmate, the annual needs being about £9000. It is a work of philanthropy, seeking to cure disease; it is a shelter and a home for destitute girls, and it is a thoroughly Christian work. The greater part of the inmates remain for life in the asylums. Many cases come to them in bad health, and only grow worse. Others are relieved, and some are partially or entirely cured. Graphic and touching descriptions were given of a number of the inmates, whose minds, almost a blank, yet had responded to the patient training, and at length are able to do a little useful work at the institutions. Mons. J. Bost, the founder, came to England in 1848, and on his return opened the first home for forty inmates; gradually the work extended and grew; imbeciles and epileptics were sent and required separate homes. The grand aim is to train the inmates to be Christians; the rule of love is the rule in all these homes; the education is on English lines. There are no walls and restraints, like in many schools in France, it is a home and not a prison; all are under the influence of love, and no one tries to escape, but clings to the place as home. There is a church attached to the institutions, and two separate rooms for epileptics, so that the service may not be disturbed.

HOUSE OF REST, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—Mr. J. E. Mathieson gave an address on Friday last, at the House of Rest, on "The Coming of the Lord." On the previous Friday Miss Annie Taylor addressed a crowded meeting in the Pillar Room, and gave her experiences during her recent travels in Tibet.

DEALING WITH INQUIRERS.—1.

As the success of a mission largely depends upon the work done in the after-meetings and inquiry rooms, the following hints in this and a succeeding paper may prove useful to those engaging in it.

First, then, as workers for God, it is of vital importance to remember that our own spiritual life influences our words and works. To be helpful we must be holy. The priests had to wash in the laver of brass before they approached "the altar to minister, to burn offerings made by fire unto the Lord." And the command for us is, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." Winning souls for Jesus Christ is a gracious privilege, and a glorious possibility to all who are experiencing the joy of salvation, and filled with the peace and power of God (Psa. li. 12, 13; Acts xi. 24).

Then again, workers must have a clear conception of the work before them. They are expected to attend as many of the mission services as possible, bringing a Bible with them. They are not called to preach sermons. They have simply to keep their eyes open, prayerfully watching for souls. In the after-meeting, speak to any that appear anxious, and seek to bring them at once into direct contact with God. Don't lecture, don't argue, "meet all candid objections, but never engage in controversy." Point to the Word of God, get the inquirer to read aloud. Your words are of little worth, the entrance of God's Word gives light. The promise is, "My Word shall not return unto Me void." And God honours those who use and honour his Holy Word.

But wisdom is needed. "He that winneth souls is wise." Therefore covet earnestly the gift of wisdom; "ask of God that giveth to all liberally"; seek his help and guidance; commit yourself wholly to Him, and dare to believe that He is directing you to the right person, and giving you the most suitable message.

In dealing with the anxious, we must work with the Spirit of God. Never attempt to show the way of salvation until you have discovered the inquirer's one chief difficulty. Find out what God has been talking to him about, and follow on in the same line. No stereotyped method has been, can be, or ever will be, successful. Whenever possible have two inquiry-rooms. The importance of workers, if they are to be faithful, dealing only with persons of their own sex, cannot be over-estimated, or too often insisted upon.

Again, patience must be exercised. Don't be in a hurry to get a name for your notebook; and never run from one seeker to another. Take pains to do your work thoroughly well. Be in earnest. Remember the preciousness of the soul. To be the means of leading one into the light is to gain more than all this world can bestow. Note how patient Jesus was with Nicodemus and with the woman at the well.

The measure of your faith will be the measure of your fruitfulness. According to your faith be it unto you. Expect success. See to it that you do not tie the hands of Omnipotence, or put a fence of unbelief around the Holy One of Israel. As a worker your creed must be—"I believe in the Holy Ghost, who has power to do what I can only talk of; and I believe in the Word of God, which is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword . . . discerning the thoughts and intents of the heart." W. Monro Collings.

Gosport.

GOD IS LOVE.

Lord, when earthly friendship fadeth,
When the grave is wet with tears,
When the head is bowed with years,
And the path to cold death leadeth,
Saviour, be our love.

Though the friend we cherish dearest
Answer not our word of love,
Lean from thy great throne above,
In our sorrow be thou nearest;
Saviour, be our love.

When afar from home and friend,
Drawing laden souls to Thee,
Though that land our graves should be,
Lead us safely to the end;
Saviour, be our love.

E. Vyvyan Kingdon.

42, South Hill Park, Hampstead.

[123]

IN MEMORIAM: C. H. SPURGEON.

Special services were held last week in the Metropolitan Tabernacle in commemoration of the second anniversary of the lamented departure of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon. On Sunday morning and evening Pastor Thomas Spurgeon preached to large audiences, the texts being Acts xiii. 36 and Mal. ii. 6. On Wednesday evening a public meeting was held, and very largely attended.

Mr. Thomas Olney read a letter from Dr. Pierson, who, among other things, said:—On January 31, two years ago, you gave up, at the call of God, the greatest preacher of the age, a master genius of the pulpit. When one recalls that forty years of preaching, most of which was in connection with the great Tabernacle; when we think of his influence which has found its way to the ends of the earth; when we think of the power that he wielded in the simple preaching of the Gospel; when we think of that great church, with its unique Sunday-school and mission hall, the Orphanage with its 500 children, the Pastors' College with over 700 godly men scattered over the world; when we think of his weekly sermons, and the millions to whom Charles Haddon Spurgeon is by them now preaching—when we think of all this, it is impossible to estimate the beneficent results of that singularly useful life. Let the memory of this prince among preachers, this manly man and saintly saint, be cherished and fostered.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, who presided, asked Mr. Olney, when replying to the letter, to assure Dr. Pierson that the church at the Tabernacle entertained a high appreciation of his thoughtfulness, and a loving interest in him and his work. In the course of an address he spoke of his father's energy and fidelity, and read a touching message from Mrs. Spurgeon, who said:—"Tell the dear people to lay their precious memory of their beloved pastor as a thanksgiving offering before God. Tell them to remember the ministry of forty years, the crowds of converts, the abundant labour, the untiring devotion, the heroic faithfulness, the absolutely, stainless character of their glorified leader, and then to thank God who lent them such a treasure for so long a time."

Dr. James Spurgeon, in a short address, said that if the history of the Church, so far as he had known it, were written, it might be given in the words: "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." This was God's work through my brother, and I want to emphasise this fact in order that you may believe that your God is not dead. He is living, and means to continue the work. Illustrating this, the speaker remarked that a co-trustee of the Orphanage recently ordered some work to be done which seemed unwise as the funds were low. Going home, said Dr. Spurgeon, I prayed about the matter, and two days later there came from an anonymous friend £500. Another friend had, moreover, that morning sent to him desiring his signature for a receipt for an unexpected legacy amounting to £2,225. In that meeting, too, he had picked up an envelope which contained a hundred-pound note. Now, God sent these things. Let us give that God no rest until He makes the Tabernacle a joy, a praise in all the earth!

After some welcome words by Pastor Charles Spurgeon, an address was delivered by Dr. Culross, of Bristol, who spoke of the late Mr. Spurgeon as a gift of God to our generation. One of his achievements was to deliver the pulpit from conventionalism. Coming to London scarcely out of his boyhood, he discarded the pulpit twang and jargon, threw off the trammels of custom, and spoke straight out what was in his heart in the simplest and clearest language that he could command. The lesson he taught us is not to copy him, not to invent a new conventionalism, not that John Smith should try to be Charles Spurgeon, like a little man aping the swing and tread of a giant, but that John Smith should be simply John Smith—John Smith at his best, and nobody else.

Rev. James Owen, of Swansea, declared himself in cordial sympathy with the great preacher, whose simple Gospel is still the treasure of the Welsh ministry. There is no leaning towards rationalism. The early Christians adopted as an emblem of their faith an anchor; a suitable emblem for many teachers of the present day would be a weathercock, for every changing opinion influences them. The last speaker, Rev. D. J. Hiley, of Bristol, asked those who were grateful to God for Mr. Spurgeon's life and work, to show it by supporting the College, the Orphanage, and other institutions.

[134]

THE GREAT RECONCILIATON.*

We have special pleasure in drawing attention to Mr. Seeley's work on "The Great Reconciliation." There is no trace of desire to please by artistic effort; no sign of haste; above all no impatience of difficulties, no irreverence of tone, no arbitrary judgments. The entire treatment shows that it is the result of prolonged and patient mental incubation. It is a case of breadth of view combined with an intensive hold of the greatest of all themes, expressed in language clearly-cut, and too deep set in devotion to think of ornament.

A pressing danger in connection with man's treatment of Divine things is the belittling effect inseparable, more or less, from the human touch. The whole is so reduced in scale, or so partial and out of proportion in the presentation given, that the mind of the reader, or hearer, is very inadequately affected either by the greatness or symmetry of the theme. The chief merit of Mr. Seeley's work is the provision taken to discount this danger. The great reconciliation, as outlined by him, is grandly suggestive of the God-like, and of that manifold harmony and boundless reach which it must bear, being his sublimest work. If creation is for the glory of God, much more is redemption, and if the former has widespread declaration, how can the latter be cooped within narrow limits? The thought here is not new, but to work it out and find for it embodiment was no idler's task. "The Scriptures not only set before us a 'history of sin and redemption,' but they also in some degree reveal to us God's purposes, and so teach us to see in the turmoil of this earthly life a foreknown and permitted time of trial in which God is working out his grand and gracious designs in reference to man and to the universe" (p. 3).

The main position taken up and elucidated by this writer is that man has been under grace ever since the Fall—that his probation has been a probation of grace—but that "though man in general, and Israel more especially, were under grace, grace did not reign until Christ finished his work." There are three main divisions in this book, answering to the three parties concerned in the reconciliation—man, God, and Christ Jesus the Mediator; but a fourth part is added in which the results reached are applied with the view of attaining to a fuller knowledge of the truth in its harmony and completeness.

Part second, where the subject of reconciliation is dealt with in its Godward bearing, is in our judgment of especial value. Such knowledge may be too high, and certainly in its completeness is beyond us; but we cannot think that speculation is a sin when ballasted sufficiently by piety, or is otherwise than well-pleasing in the sight of Him who has redeemed us in Christ. What we need in dealing with many questions, which otherwise would be far better left untouched, is the Spirit's anointing. The ruin of most modern religious speculation is that the analogy of the human likeness to God is far too irreverently and inconsiderately pushed. Mr. Seeley is extremely sensitive on this score—a direction, indeed, in which excess is impossible. Hence he is continually feeling after God's transcendence, and this with the definite object of finding the key of solution. And the presence of this trait is most marked where there is the greatest call for it, as when he deals with the permission and use of moral evil by God. He takes care that the Divine equation, though it can never be fully comprehended, be indicated and allowed for. The result is distinctly invigorating to the spiritual life, both as tending to the illumination of the understanding and the culture of the heart.

Of unsanctified speculation in religion, the age has had more than enough. It is time for those to speak now who declare their Divine teaching by their unction and meekness. "If we measure Divine morality by merely human standards, we are almost certain to err. If we ever attempt to inquire concerning the morality of God's acts or purposes, we must do our utmost to include in our consideration those elements of the problem in which He differs from and transcends ourselves."

Omitting much of sterling merit, we would call attention to the chapter on "Christ our life—Is He our Father?" We regard it as an admirable treatment of what may be termed the Psychology of redemption. How much confusion exists as to what Christ gives for his people, and gives to them. Psuchê, or soul, is confounded with zoê, life's principle. "The distinction between the two is very obvious in the Greek of the Scripture statements concerning Christ's death. It is not said that Christ gave his life (zoê) for us in dying, although we doubtless express a truth according to our modes of thought when we say that He did so; but it is said that He gave his soul (psuchê) for us. Similarly it is not said that He gives soul (psuchê) to us, but it is said that He gives us life (zoê)." The conclusion arrived at is that in virtue of this life given, we become children of the Father in a far higher and fuller sense than was Adam, for the life given "is imparted to us from the Father for Christ's sake, and through Him and by Him and in Him."

James Douglas.

* The Great Reconciliation and the Reign of Grace. By Edward Seeley, Vicar of The Martyrs, Leicester. (Elliot Stock. 7s. 6d.)

A NOTE OF PRAISE.

As one of the many little united bands of workers in this great East London we desire to render our thanksgivings for the goodness of the Lord in preserving us from colds and in a measure of health whilst being your almoners during the past most trying weeks. Dearth of coals, stress of weather, and sickness, caused much sorrow, but we can testify that we heard no murmuring, but deep gratitude from the aged widows, men out of work, oppressed mothers, and young children; and blessing has so intermingled with trials that we can already look back and praise God for a fruitful winter.

Answers to prayer have been our daily experiences, and still are. Hardened hearts have been softened, light from his blessed Word has revealed his love, and we have had cause to rejoice over old and young brought to full decision.

The widows' weekly prayer meeting has been a great help and joy to us all. Very touching is it to hear, in the little company of from twenty to thirty, one after another pleading definitely for work, especially for men with large families. Women have signed the pledge, found charing or other employment, and have helped to pull through. Hundreds of families have expressed gratitude to kind friends for enabling us to assist them with soup, bread, or half a hundredweight of coal; also the thousand and more of warm garments, blankets, packets of tea, etc.

Our annual meetings have been seasons of refreshing from God's presence, times of decision, souls garnered within the fold, making all our hearts rejoice, and forget the toiling parts in beholding the new-born souls. His presence has been felt by those of our happy number who went to make glad the hearts of many suffering in the neighbouring hospitals, and the thousands living in the large workhouses of Mile End, St. Luke's, and Whitechapel, reaching them with the Gospel through our lanterns, by the voices of our nephews. Through our combined efforts, blessed of our God, about 10,000 have been thus cheered, fed, or warmed, and we offer our united thanks to the readers of The Christian.

Again, we find that death has brought to us the 57th sorrowful family of orphans, and daily appeals come from those desirous to find work in Canada. Letters from the Ontario Home tell of farmers calling daily, asking for boys and girls to aid them in their health-giving work in that land of plenty, whilst here we are over-populated, and have no openings for their willing hands. Passages, railway fares, outfit, and supervision, cost £10 each. In a few weeks the next party, God willing, will sail. We desire continued prayer for the thousands growing up into manhood and womanhood across the Atlantic, and for those now in training.

Yours on behalf of the needy,

Annie Macpherson.

Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E.

ALDERNEY.—Rev. R. Paynter, The Manse, Alderney, writes describing the prevalent spiritual ignorance and superstition of the dwellers on this island, and asks for help in keeping aloft among them the standard of the Gospel.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.—Miss Morley entertained on the evening of Tuesday week, the residents of the nine Homes at an "At Home" at Portman Rooms, Baker-street. About 700 were present. The evening's engagements were greatly enjoyed. The Dean of Norwich gave an address. Mr. Howard Morley, Mr. and Mrs. S. Hope Morley, Judge Meadows White, Colonel Forster, and Mr. John Shrimpton were present.

THE STORY OF THE C.I.M.*

Thousands who perused, with deep interest and much spiritual profit, Vol. I. of this marvellous story will rejoice to hear that Vol. II. has at length appeared. In a brief prefatory note the authoress tells how her own serious illness prevented an earlier completion of the work. "The story," as she well remarks, "of such a mission. . . . is a story without an end," for the Mission still shows every token of healthful growth and vigorous advance.

The present volume, beginning twenty years ago, comes down to date. Vol. I. dealt largely with the formative years when the foundation of the work was laid in the Eastern provinces of China. Vol. II. tells of the remarkable way in which God opened Inland China to the Gospel, of the growth and influence of women's work in the far interior, of extensive itinerations in regions previously untouched (or nearly so) by the missionary, and of answered prayer in regard to additional workers.

Starting with "Early Days in Chehkiang," Part I. affords marvellous illustrations of how the work developed in the coast provinces, and pushed forward into Gan-hwuy and Kiang-si. Then in Part II. comes the Che-foo Convention, when the gates of the west (that is, the interior provinces) were fast closed. Politically, it seemed hopeless to expect to gain an entrance; but Faith

> Laughs at impossibilities,
> And cries "It shall be done."

"Prayer," wrote Mr. Hudson Taylor, "had not failed; and in answer to definite prayer the way was gradually opened: as the missionary went forward obstacles disappeared. Part III. opens with the monk Valignani's longing cry, "Oh Rock, Rock! when wilt thou open?" and tells how it did open, how entrance was gained to the nine unevangelised provinces, Honan, Hu-nan (still closed to permanent work), Shen-si, Shan-si, Kan-suh, Kwei-chau, Kwang-si, Si-chuen, and Yun-nan. The stirring story of the various itinerations by Messrs. Cameron, McCarthy, Henry Taylor, and others, fills several chapters, which cannot fail to impress the reader as amongst the most thrilling pages of missionary adventure.

By way of illustrating the power of the Gospel in the remotest parts, the writer gives many incidents, such as the following:—

> Here is Tao-hsing, whose name means "Truth flourishing or triumphant." Evil and violence were once the only elements that flourished in his life. His house, a gambling hell, the haunt of the most abandoned, afforded him a lucrative business, plenty of companions, and fame as the leader of so notorious a set, and host at their acknowledged resort. To-day his old associates seek him in vain. Tao-hsing, by the grace of God, is a new creature. The rooms that once were scenes of sin are set apart for the preaching of the Gospel.
>
> "Will you not send an evangelist to our town?" is his one plea. "I will gladly give him a home and all the help in my power."
>
> Not far from him stand the two Laos, father and son. The young man, like Tao-hsing, has been notoriously wicked, so violent and ungovernable when enraged as to be a terror to the neighbourhood, in which he was known as "The Lion." Now the wondering neighbours ask, "What is it that has so altered his heart?" Earnest and consistent Christians, he and his aged father delight to testify to the grace of God which has wrought so great a change.

In Part IV. five delightful chapters are devoted to "Women's Work for Women"; but let Miss Guinness describe this section in her own words:—

> We have sought to indicate something of the need and darkness of the women of inland China, the experience of those who had been pioneers in bringing them the Gospel, the way in which that great country is now opened to the work of Christian women, and the pressing call for hundreds of such, as evangelists, for its, as yet, unreached millions. One question still remains:—
>
> "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"
>
> . . . . The time is short, the end is nearing. God has brought these myriad homes and hearts within our reach for some great purpose. What are our responsibilities to Him about it? And how do we discharge them day by day?

"The Story of the Seventy, 1881-84," "Dr. Schofield and Medical Missions," "The Cambridge Band," "The Coming of the Hundred, 1887," and "Our Last Six Years," occupy successive chapters in Part V. The writer gives in her final chapter an inspiring review of God's wonderful working in the whole history of the Mission, and closes with a very searching appeal that every reader should ask: "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

The two volumes will be widely welcomed as a notable addition to the missionary literature of the Church. The gifted authoress has thrown herself fully into her work, with the result that readers will be entranced by the charming style in which the story is told. We believe it will be greatly used of God in stirring a deeper missionary interest, and calling forth many to his service among the heathen.

* The Story of the China Inland Mission. By Miss M. Geraldine Guinness. Vol. II. (Morgan & Scott. Price 3s. 6d.)

THE C.I.M. FAREWELL.

Once more the director of the China Inland Mission has bidden farewell to his friends at home on the eve of his return to his beloved field of service in China. With him also go Mrs. Hudson Taylor and Miss Geraldine Guinness, who, now that her book is finished, longs to be back among the "dear women of China." In view of these departures a valedictory meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Friday evening, when the deep interest felt was abundantly shown in the great audience which really overcrowded the large hall.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor presided, and in the course of his opening address said: We meet together to-night to bid adieu to those we are leaving behind, and to ask prayer, not merely for those going out at the present time, but also for those new missionaries God has been pleased to send out.

A BUSY STREET IN CHINA.

During the year 1893, sixty-three new missionaries reached Shanghai, in connection with the China Inland Mission. There are others on the way bringing the number up to eighty-six by the time we reach China. We thank God for these, but still we see a growing need. We want your prayers that God would call forth suitable and qualified young men. At present we need, for our own work, at least 100 young men evangelists. I do not mean that ladies are not needed; but in addition we need 100 young men. If a few earnest hearts are stirred to cry to Him in this matter, can we have any doubt as to the issue?

We have to thank God for his goodness to us in China. Notwithstanding incitements to the anti-foreign feeling, the lives of all our workers have been preserved from violence. Again, last year was hot and unhealthy; but God spared his servants, and we never had a year when so few, proportionately, were removed by death. As we look at the map and realise the insignificant number, comparatively, who have heard the Gospel, we begin to see how great the need is. The Master is coming; the day for giving, for going, for toiling and suffering and witnessing, will soon be over; what account shall we have to render? God has blessed our work more than ever. A larger number were baptized last year than in any previous year, and the present number of candidates for baptism is larger than it was a year ago.

We thank God for the help of the past year. The income for 1893 was £7500 more than that of 1892. We are assured that when the Lord sends his servants into the field He cannot forget them. His servants are his children, and their interests are his. Should He thrust forth a yet larger number into the field He is able to sustain them.

Miss Geraldine Guinness opened with a touching reference to the illness of her mother and to the death of her cousin, Mr. McKittrick. Looking back on her own six years of missionary experience, she felt it was all matter of praise. Of course there were difficulties and discouragements, but God was more present and precious than words could utter. These six years had been a period of great advance in the China Inland Mission. God has been faithful to his own promises in every way. I thank Him I have been allowed to write

"The Story of the China Inland Mission," now completed. Returning to the mission field, I go in fuller hope and confidence in God, profoundly thankful that He has privileged me to be a missionary. Time is passing, opportunities are fleeting: are we all doing our part? God is moving on in the evangelisation of the world: are we with Him in this work? Remember how Jesus emptied Himself for our sakes: what are we doing? Are we emptying ourselves for the life of the world? God answers the cry of a lost world by giving Himself upon the cross. There were many ways open to Him, but He chose that way. Divine wisdom and Divine power are there, and He who went the way of the cross calls us to follow Him. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me." It is by surrendered lives that God works. Let us follow the emptied, crucified, risen Christ, and seek to realise the power of the Holy Ghost. Remember that his last words were, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature"; and his first gift (after He had gone up on high) was the outpouring of the Holy Ghost. If we receive the gift we will carry out the command. Are we ready for it? Are we ready to give and to suffer—to give till we suffer by it? In eternity we will serve God in many ways, but we cannot suffer for Him. If we ever do enjoy that privilege, it must be in this present life. May He give us to know the joy of real sacrifice for Christ's sake.

Dr. Harry Guinness read a letter of warm sympathy from his father, detained in Ireland by reason of Mrs. Guinness's illness, and added a few pointed words on the Lord's parting promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." Two cries he had heard when sailing on the Congo suggested to his mind important lessons. The man who threw the lead often called out "No sounding!" So in the experience of God's people and of his workers, when they let down the lead into the vast depths of Providence, there seems to be no bottom. But another cry he had often heard come from the outlook man—"All's well!" What a reassuring note! There may be "no sounding" the ways of Providence, but we rejoice to know that all must be well, for He is with us working out his own glorious purposes.

Mr. Montague Beauchamp said that it had been a new life to him since, nine years ago, he stood on the platform on the eve of his departure for China. He thanked God for journeying mercies, and for what he had seen in North China and in the Western provinces. He had been privileged to meet some very remarkable Chinese Christians, who had been wonderfully used of God; and he felt that to be the instrument of the conversion of even one such was worth a lifetime in China. Later on he was led to go to an entirely new part, a large province with only one station and no native evangelists. He had some encouragement at first, then came a time of deep trial, but God was in it all. Then he came face to face with the evils of opium smoking, having been called to three cases of opium suicide in one week. In dealing with these slaves of opium one feels how hopeless it is; nothing but the power of God can avail to give deliverance. I thank God that He gave great blessing in our work, and that now there is a vigorous little church in that city; sending forth men to witness in parts yet more remote.

Miss Annie R. Taylor, of the Tibetan Pioneer

Mission, spoke briefly on the example of our Lord in coming to seek and save that which is lost. Next week her own farewell meeting will be held, when, we feel sure, many will rally round her to commend her and her party to the Lord.

Miss Williams, who has just returned from China, told of work at Pao-ning, Si-chuen. There had been trying times, but God at length gave great blessing. After four and a-half years at Pao-ning this sister was sent to a country district, where the people were calling out for a teacher. Ere she had been there a month four families had cast away their idols. In due course eight were baptized, and now there are fifteen candidates. As showing the attachment of the people, Miss Williams described their affecting farewell and presentation of a memorial banner when she had to leave them. Since she had come home letters had been received telling of continued blessing in the salvation of some who were stirred to inquiry by reason of the excitement at her departure.

Rev. C. A. Fox gave as a parting message to those about to leave, the words, "Said I not unto thee that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" Here we see the value Christ puts on his own word, "Said I not to thee?" It was only a casual word, but He expected that it should be borne in mind. Then mark, "if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see." It is believe to see, not see in order to believe. Unbelief often hinders the manifestation of his work. Then it is all to the glory of God. If you go forth in calm reliance upon his word, you shall see souls raised from the dead into newness of life, and the glory shall be all his. What have we to do? First to roll away the stone; then, when dead souls come forth at his word, we have to loose the bandages and let them go; we have to help to liberate them from the bondage of old habits, customs, and prejudices. Mr. Fox closed by fervently commending those about to start for China to God in prayer.

PROGRESS IN SWEDEN.

Madame de Ramsay, of Wihhelmsro, Jönköping, Sweden, writes:—

"Well worth the earnest prayers and sympathy of English friends is the Samaritan Home in Upsala, founded by one of the Mildmay Associates among us, Fröken Ebba Boström. We may call it a Mildmay on a small scale, as it comprises a children's Home for forty little orphans, and a Home for girls in training for domestic service, to the number of twenty. All the buildings lie in a cluster shut in from the noise of the streets, and, though Upsala is our largest University town, it is astonishing how quiet and still it is behind those walls.

"The reader must not, however, confuse this quiet with that in Roman Catholic convents with enforced silence and conventional rules. It is very lively among the young, and the fifteen sisters, who work in and out of the houses in the town, have a busy, happy life. After a shorter or longer time of probation they are received among the band, if all the elder sisters consent. A costume like that of deaconesses' houses is then adopted, and a little friendly meeting arranged.

"The hospital, a beautiful building, was opened only a year ago; it has fifty beds, divided into flats for different classes, who pay different prices, but all are tenderly nursed and cheered in their varied sufferings, as well as led to the true Consoler.

"As letters come repeatedly, asking information about our work at Wilhelmsro, I may add that it goes on in the same way, in the same place, that since 1872 we have nursed 150 crippled and about fifty epileptic children, that have been brought as lambs into the fold, and many have gone out into the world as useful workers. The Bible and Prayer Union for Sweden, the Flower Mission in our town, the Christmas Letter Mission in Sweden, and Bible distribution at railway stations, at the soldiers' barracks, as well as Y.W.C.A., all go on, along with the daily home work, but working and pleading for the epileptic children steadily increase, and is my most pressing life work in my old age."

THEATRICAL EMPLOYÉS.—The tea meetings for Glasgow theatrical employés, which Mr. William Forbes began lately, are being continued by Christian friends in that city. At the meeting last week, addresses were given by Lord Overtoun, Revs. Dr. Reith and F. H. Roberts, Councillor McFarlane, and others.

THE OUTLOOK IN IRELAND.

By a Correspondent.

Public attention is at present concentrated upon the scenes witnessed each Lord's Day in the streets of Cork. It is rather a pity that political capital is sought to be made out of them, for the evangelists in Cork are sufficiently heavily handicapped already. As long as Ireland remains, as at present, the cockpit of British politics, the interests of religion are sure to suffer. Irish Christians, or more correctly Protestants, are sharply divided regarding the wisdom of street preaching in Cork. Several persons have taken the preachers sharply to task in the daily papers.

Of course, while Protestants adhere to the great principle of private judgment, it is monstrous for those who generally cultivate Laodicean lukewarmness themselves to try and obstruct those who have no object in view but the exaltation of Christ and the salvation of perishing sinners. Irish Protestants are so mixed up with Roman Catholics in trade that they are sorely tempted to try and serve both God and mammon. Such persons should at least refrain from helping the old enemy in his opposition to truth. Even St. Paul had made acquaintance with such, and his query in Romans xiv. is very apropos of certain Irish Protestants at present, viz., "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth."

Others have taken a very pessimistic view of the Irish missionary outlook because of the attitude of the Cork mob. Such men have not made a serious study of the Irish question. At the last Cork election priests were not alone pelted with mud in the streets of Cork, but some of them had their tall hats knocked off and kicked in the mire. Sensible men do not apply the wild performances of a mob to the well-disposed members of society. Street preaching is not yet understood by the lower orders in Ireland. Hence it is time to make them familiar with it. The patient endurance of the evangelists under dreadful provocation cannot fail to have its influence upon many of the on-lookers. Hence it is the plain duty of Christians to pray earnestly for the noble band of evangelists, that God may strengthen and sustain them and make them instruments of lasting good.

One of the events which Irish Christian workers will do well to make careful note of is the recent Encyclical issued by the Pope on the study of the Holy Scriptures. No such document has ever before issued by the Vatican. For many centuries the Church of Rome, nervously anxious to stem the tide of Protestantism, made it a leading feature of her policy to minimise the importance of the Bible, to exalt the Church, and proclaim the necessity of a living teacher and judge. At last she has begun to see the results. Roman Catholics in France, Italy, and elsewhere, taught from their infancy to look upon the Bible with contempt, have gone over to Rationalism by thousands and tens of thousands. Leo XIII. has become conscious of this, for he says:—"Our principal adversaries are Rationalists, who, basing their notions on their individual opinions, have rejected wholesale even the doctrines of Christian faith." Hence the present head of the Roman Church inculcates the necessity of studying the Scriptures with all the eloquence and all the fervour at his command. "We fervently desire," he says, "that a greater number of the faithful should undertake the defence of the Holy Writings and attach themselves to it with constancy. . . Jesus Himself was accustomed to appeal to the Holy Scriptures in testimony of his divine mission. He employs the Sacred Books to declare that He is sent by God, and God Himself. . . He opposes them to the Pharisees and Sadducees, and turns them against Satan himself, who impudently makes appeal to them. The Apostles were faithful to his word, and to the teaching of the Master, and they depended on the Holy Scriptures as a great means of action for spreading afar among the nation Christian wisdom, overcoming the stubbornness of the Jews, and crushing incipient heresies."

Thus in a long document covering twenty-four pages Leo inculcates the necessity of Bible reading. One other sentence is worthy of being quoted: "St. Jerome was right when he stated that ignorance of the Scriptures was ignorance of Christ. There one sees, vivid and animated, the image of the Son of God, and this spectacle in an admirable manner relieves misfortune, inclines to virtue, and invites to divine love."

Hitherto in Ireland the term "Bible-reader" has been a word of reproach among Roman Catholics. The head of their own Church now passionately exhorts them to become "Bible-readers" as soon as possible. The advantage which this Encyclical will confer upon the evangelist here simply incalculable. Hitherto the Word of God was taken out of the hands of the people by the priests, or they were refused absolution in the confessional if they persisted in reading it. This exhortation to a study of the Bible from the pen of Leo will be sure to silence the priests, or at least in a great measure to counteract their efforts. A translation of the document is published at a cost of one penny, and a more formidable weapon cannot be carried in the satchel of an Irish colporteur.

In connection with the work of the Connellan Mission, which is daily spreading its roots deeper and wider, the following extract from a letter just received from Captain Tonge, at present residing at Cannes, will be interesting.

"When here two years ago Lady Madeline and I got a Christian friend to translate into French extracts from the pamphlet 'Hear the Other Side.' These were distributed far and wide. Rather more than a year ago, as a result of reading the extracts, a young Frenchman preparing for the priesthood of the Romish Church, instead of becoming a priest became a colporteur, and is now engaged in carrying to his countryman the glorious news of a full and free salvation through Jesus Christ."

Another of Mr. Connellan's works has been translated into Italian by a Waldensian pastor, and more than forty thousand copies have been scattered among Italian Roman Catholics.

As an evidence of how sadly the Gospel is wanted in Ireland, let me relate a touching incident recently witnessed. After the meeting in Central Hall, Dublin, one evening, a young man walked up to the platform and asked if he might have a talk with Mr. Connellan. He was invited to the office of The Catholic, and there it transpired that, although nominally a Roman Catholic, he had been to no place of worship for sixteen years. When asked if he knew many Roman Catholics in a similar condition, he said, "If I had pen, ink, and paper, I believe I could write down the names of three hundred young men in the same boat with me." When asked how such men spent the Sabbath, he answered, "Drinking in bogus clubs and attending political meetings." This man is in a respectable position, and promises to be an instrument for leading many others unto righteousness.

How wonderful are God's ways. University honour-men in England, with an open Bible in their hands from their youth, and the best Christian surroundings, are playing with Rome's trinkets. Irish Roman Catholics who know Rome to her heart's core are leaving her when they can, and that in ever-increasing numbers.

"THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL."

Lady Henry Somerset's new paper is devoted to the elevation and increased influence of woman, and the progress of the race. It is bright and clever, genial and hopeful. It appears, however, to expect the elevation and progress of humanity and the amelioration of its wrongs through the operation of "the new spirit which is abroad full of light and leading." But the elevation seems to be that of the natural rather than the regenerate man, in the flesh, not in resurrection life, and the new spirit seems to be something other than the Holy Spirit—the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. We so entirely honour and sympathise with the object of The Woman's Signal, to benefit mankind, that we shall rejoice to find ourselves mistaken as to the means relied upon. But we should be untrue to our deepest conviction if we did not express our conviction that no spirit, except the Promise of the Father, the Spirit of the crucified and glorified Lord Jesus, has any chance in competition with the prince and god of this age, whether in his proper character of liar, murderer, and deceiver, or in the guise of education, art, and culture, or in the disguise of an angel of light.

HAMBURG.—The annual meeting of the English Reformed Church in this city was held on Wednesday January 31st, Rev. J. D. Kilburn, pastor. Addresses were delivered by various friends. The attendance was large and the meeting of a Spiritual and helpful character. Since last meeting three friends of the church have died, Baron von Oertzen, Rev. C. F. Werdemann, and Mr. Charles Barker.

Rev. John McNeill in Brighton.

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

In its physical aspects Brighton is a breezy place enough; but there is no great uncharity in saying that, normally, the spiritual ozone is scarcer. There seem to be many factors in the make-up of a high-toned seaside resort, that favour the sway of the world, the flesh, and the devil. All along its modern history, at any rate, Brighton has spelt fashion, frivolity, and carnality more than most places of its kind. Its easy contiguity to the great metropolis of the world helps to make it an attractive centre for those whose theory of life is summed up in the optimistic motto, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

To all such people the thoughts of God, of high spiritual ideals, of eternal responsibilities, and the Christ-life of self-crucifixion are a source of disturbance. Of course there must be a fair outward show of propriety, and for that an ample provision is found in the ornate ritual of what is called, with an apotheosis of sarcasm, the "High Church," which now reigns tolerably supreme in the recognised ecclesiastical circles of London-by-the-Sea. To be sure, there is, in such a large population, a great deal of the well-balanced life that does injustice to neither body nor soul, but it is overshadowed by the other. Into this modern Athens of the South there has come, during the bygone week, a fresh "snell" breeze from the heather hills, in the person of the Rev. John McNeill. Halting tropes and metaphors apart, this week of Gospel services in the Brighton Dome has been a season of unmistakeable refreshing from the presence of the Lord, through the labours of his gifted servant.

It is extremely difficult to speak of Mr. McNeill and his preaching without drifting into what looks like fulsome eulogy. If we had a few more like him the task would be easier. The fact that he is sui generis is both an advantage and a disadvantage when he enters a strange community. He is so defiant of current conventionalities and artificialities, that the custom-bound are scandalised; while, on the other hand, those who long for fulness of life, regardless of its strict form, fairly revel in their enjoyment of his ministry. Of the thousands who have flocked into the Brighton Dome day by day, and twice a day, to hear Mr. McNeill, during the past week, the latter class has certainly been the vast majority. Objectors and critics there may have been, but their voices have not been heard above the chorus of glad approbation. With considerable experience of such movements, the writer has never seen more appreciative and enthusiastic crowds hanging on the lips of a Gospel preacher. The assent of the hearers has frequently overstepped that well-established custom that banishes vocal applause from evangelistic assemblies. But these responses have been so spontaneous, and so creditable to the judgment, that no sensible person could find any fault with them. When heart speaks unrestrainedly to heart on the grandest of themes, why should there not be the answering and uplifting cheer? It is a distinguishing glory of Mr. McNeill's ministry that he brings to its service the whole of his manhood—a shrewd head, a trained intellect, a full-blooded heart, a richly poetic imagination, an irrepressible humour, a strong logic, an abounding vitality, all encased in a fine physique. He keeps back no part of the redemption price, but lays every God-bestowed gift at his Master's feet.

The beautiful Dome is seated, I believe, to hold close on three thousand people, and it was full at the first meeting. It was scarcely expected, even by the sanguine, that the afternoon gatherings would be large, but these fears were early disappointed. Be the atmosphere wet and raw, or full of the brightness of the dawning spring, the crowds were drawn all the same, to hear the old old story that is ever new; and that is peculiarly new in the attractiveness of its presentation by the anointed lips of this evangelist. All who have heard Mr. McNeill know how he especially finds in the Bible narratives themes that are pregnant with great spiritual and ethical lessons for the men and women of to-day. He does not seem to affect the revised version of the sacred Scriptures, but nothing could be fresher or more up to date than his expositions and interpretations. Yet he is severely orthodox withal: not an inch will he budge from the old ways, and the broadly built foundation that rests on the three pillars of Ruin, Repentance, and Redemption. This I regard as the most conspicuous service he is rendering to an age marked so largely by impalpable theory and airy speculation in matters religious.

Mr. McNeill has not only his own ideas of how to present the Gospel, but of how to let it do its work. His great aim seems to be to drive home the truth in his main addresses by reiterated blows, and with such dynamic force as to compel its regenerating entrance into the soul "while he is yet speaking." He does not therefore leave so much to the after-meeting in every case as we have been accustomed to in recent great movements. He is guided largely by the course of the Spirit's leading, as he recognises it. When the tide of power seems at the full, and there is a favouring breeze, he will have a second meeting; in which (to continue the metaphor) the storm-tossed soul may be gently piloted over the rocky bar of resolve into the peaceful haven of assured confidence and penitent trust. In the after-meetings, too, there have been melting seasons of united prayer, when the burdens of many hearts, for the conversion of loved relatives and friends, have been unbosomed in a word, and wafted to the mercy seat on the wings of silent petition.

Certainly there has been no more noteworthy or hopeful feature of these Dome assemblages than the large and steady attendance of ministers. On every occasion the front rows of the platform have shown a serried array of these spiritual leaders of the people. The meetings were convened under the somewhat sectional auspices of the Brighton and Hove Association of Free Churches. That, unhappily, restricted the attendance of Church of England clergy, though it did not prevent some of the warmer, wider souls among them from getting into the stream of blessing. The loss has been theirs who stayed away—and their flocks'. Those pastors who came day after day and night after night would be the first to recognise and be grateful for the object lessons they received in the holy art of effective preaching. I shall not soon forget the utter abandonment of delight shown by an evangelist who sat one evening in front of me, and who exclaimed, sotto voce, to his companions at the close of Mr. McNeill's address: "Why cannot we preach like this? God help us!"

With Mr. McNeill, as with most other evangelists, Saturday is generally a day of release from the exhausting work of the platform. This time, however, the committee decided that as the mission was all too brief, Saturday could not be regarded as a dies non. An afternoon and an evening meeting were held. The day was exceptionally fine, and the breezy Parade looked its best, but the Dome was almost full at 3.30, and crowded at night. From which one gathers that times and seasons, even in pleasure-loving Brighton, are of no account when the pool of blessing is stirred by the heavenly messengers, and those who realise their spiritual impotence are within hail.

One afternoon Mr. McNeill gave his famous exposition of the twenty-third Psalm. So full was the stream of refreshment, and so rich the music of this discourse, that the people must needs press forward at the close, to grasp the preacher's hand and utter a few broken words of thanks. At almost every succeeding meeting he had to hold a similar levée.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS

were in all respects memorable. Thrice during the day the Dome furnished the thrilling spectacle of thousands eagerly listening to the words of the preacher, that were truly as goads fixed in a sure place by the Master of assemblies. The attendances of the day could not have been far short of ten thousand. At 9.30 a.m. there must have been over 2000 people present. Mr. McNeill took for his theme the story of the "three candidates for the kingdom," as recorded at the close of Luke ix. The first man was too impulsive to wait for a call from Christ, and he needed to have his enthusiasm tested by a view of the darker side; if he was to follow Christ he too might have nowhere to lay his head. The second man had an excellent excuse, as it seemed, for postponing obedience to the call; he needed to be taught that the claims of the Gospel are the first and most imperative of all. The third man required also to be shown the dangers of delay, and of putting the feelings of kinsfolk in front of plain duty. These aspects of truth were admirably and powerfully applied, not only to those present who had never answered the Gospel call, but to those who are fertile in excuses for avoiding active service for the Lord. It was altogether an inspiring hour.

In the afternoon, to a vast audience of women, Mr. McNeill preached with rare felicity and skill from the narrative of the woman who in her extremity touched the tassel of the Saviour's robe and was healed; and was in turn sought out by Jesus, that her personal confession might secure his personal adoption of her into the aristocracy of heaven. Much pathos was mingled with the blunter forms of exhortation, and the great congregation seemed fused into one apprehending and responding unit. At night the same process was to be witnessed passing over a mighty throng of men, to whom the preacher, now winsome in tone, and anon severely admonitory, addressed the double command of our Lord to the man with the withered hand, "Stand forth in the midst," and "Stretch forth thy hand." No after-meetings were held on these occasions, but the eye of faith sees a largesse of result from such grand and importunate settings forth of the Saviour and his service.

On Sunday evening the evangelist found an opportunity for giving some sledge-hammer blows at strong drink. Speaking of the man whose withered right arm had been restored, he said he was sure that the new hand would never be used to grasp the intoxicating cup. Then came a vivid picture of the cattle being driven to the shambles, stopping at the door as they sniffed the blood of their slaughtered predecessors, and having to be forced over the threshold. Let every man whose members have been redeemed by the Lord Jesus Christ, if he is tempted to cross the threshold of a hotel bar or a public-house, remember that there he can smell the life-blood of his fellow-men slain by the drink. This gruesome but apt illustration was told with such dramatic force and fire that no one who heard and saw it could ever forget it.

The service of Gospel song has been a marked element in the meetings. Once again the unique power of these simple themes and bright tuneful melodies to rouse and to impress, has been demonstrated. A large choir, intelligently and heartily handled, led the singing, and the occasional intervention of the evangelist, who is highly musical, helped to quicken the co-operation of the audience. Two young ladies contributed solos, sweetly sung.

The closing meetings of Monday can only be noted in a sentence; many felt that the best wine was kept to the last. The day was one of persistent drizzle, but the attendance at the Dome was little affected. The afternoon address, on "Christ Stilling the Tempest," was perhaps the most telling and comprehensive of all Mr. McNeill's utterances. The closing address in the evening, on "Work out your own salvation; for it is God that worketh in you," etc., was a splendid finish to the work of this never-to-be-forgotten week.

---

The reports of the mission in the local press have been on the whole singularly appreciative. The Sussex Daily News gave, on some of the days, a well-digested summary of the sermons; so that many Gospel truths, clothed in language of startling plainness and force, would be read by thousands who could not be got by any bribe to go and hear for themselves. The Brighton Gazette says:—

"In importance, the present revival ranks with that which broke out in the town during the visit some years ago of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. That a comparative stranger to Brighton, such as this rugged, though eloquent, Scotch divine, should succeed in filling the largest building in the town with crowds hungering to hear the proclamation of what is styled 'a simple Gospel,' is a startling commentary on the twisted condition of our theology. John McNeill's mission in Brighton at the present juncture is to tell a simple story, old as the hills, to bring men back to the first elements of faith, and generally give them a spiritual emetic that shall ease them of the tangled growth of abstruse technicalities of the Higher Critics. He is a preacher of great power and convincing earnestness, one who has evidently graduated with honours in the school of humanity; a stalwart, manly Christian of the muscular type, possessed of a frank, open countenance. The secret of his success as a preacher is his intense spirituality, immense earnestness, an abiding horror of shams and hypocrisies, combined with a taking and simple style of oratory, bold imagery, great incisiveness of speech, and an inimitable manner of forcing right home with smiling and engaging insistence the most pointed truths."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 11.—ECCLES. IV.

The constantly recurring words, "under the sun," point the moral of this book. We shall never be able to satisfy man's nature with anything that is under the sun. Only God, and the Heavenlies, the living Saviour and his love can become in us a spring of water leaping up to everlasting life. If this be wanting, we are perpetually going to the well to draw and thirst again; or we are hewing out for ourselves broken cisterns which can hold no water.

Solomon here complains of some of the evils which frustrate man's pursuit of happiness apart from God.

Oppression (1-3).—A weary consciousness of all the oppression which is going on in the world, and which we cannot remedy. The only cure for this is to be found by standing knowing that God will certainly adjust the bitter wrongs of time.

Envy (4-6).—We must strive against the spirit of rivalry by asking for the perfect love which the Spirit of God alone can impart.

Loneliness (7-12).—Without company even wealth cannot satisfy. Ties of nature, friendship, and religious society give a zest to even a poor man's life, which the miser with all his wealth forfeits. It is of the greatest importance, not only in ordinary life, but in the pilgrimage of the spirit, to have fellowship; and there is no fellowship like that of Jesus Christ, who lifts us when we fall, chafes us when we are chill with cold, and succours us when Satan would prevail.

The weakness and follies of old age (13-16).—Here Solomon makes a statement which had a remarkable fulfilment in the story of Jeroboam. Ver. 14 may be rendered, "Out from the house of bondage he goes forth to be a king; while he that is born in his kingdom is poor." So Jeroboam, "Solomon's servant" (1 Kings xi. 26), became a king, and Rehoboam, born in his kingdom, was impoverished by the loss of the ten tribes.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12.—ECCLES. V.

Some divide the book here into a second part because the style is more direct. Practical precepts now follow to the end of the book.

The House of God (1-7).—1. The foot denotes the walk. The Oriental takes off his shoe when he enters the sanctuary. They who mind their goings best profit in worship. Be reverent. Draw nigh to hear. Avoid the sacrifice of fools, which is thoughtless formalism, mere ritualism, and is evil in God's sight. 2. We should be very careful how we utter the words of solemn devotion. Many do so hastily in hymn and response, which their lives belie. 3. As dreams betray over-pressure of business, so do flippant voices in meaningless repetitions betray the fool's heart.

Often in this world wrong goes unavenged (8-9).—But the wrong shall be righted ultimately; if not here, hereafter. As the judge is over the magistrate, and the king over the judge, so God is higher than the highest king. The distinctions between man and man are more in appearance than in fact. We are members one of another, and the king must starve without the toils of the peasants.

Things cannot satisfy the heart (10-12).—The more we have, the more we want. There is as much care in keeping what we have, as in winning it. The wealthy millionaire, anxious at every wind that rattles his windows, envies his labourers that receive their weekly wage, and sleep free from care.

Wealth (13-17).—What has taken years to get, may be lost by a single misadventure, and the man who has simply lived to make money, has nothing to show as the result of his life-work. When it is gone he spends his days in darkness, mourning and vexation. Lay up treasures in heaven. Build up a noble character that will shine brightly in poverty and earthly loss.

God's gifts (8-20).—Let us always connect God's gifts with the Giver. Then they will do us no harm, and we may enjoy them to the full all our days. The brevity of life ceases to become a subject of complaint for him who lives deeply, truly, and intensely while he lives. God answers him in the joy of his heart (R.V.).

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 13.—ECCLES. VI.

1.—In this chapter the preacher dwells upon some of the evils which mar the life of man, and rob it of happiness. 2.—Often when men are on the point of reaping the harvest of a life of toil, they suddenly lose the power of enjoyment. Round them the richest viands, but no sense of taste; flowers, but no smell; love, but no power to reciprocate. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness." 3, 4.—Mere length of days is not life. Seek that your soul be filled with God. It is a matter of small concern then what becomes of the body after death.

5, 6.—Better not to have been, than to have missed the chief end of life, which is God; for, in addition to the loss of life's opportunities, there is the penalty for its sins. 7, 8.—The desire for earthly good increases as we try to satisfy it. A poor man who knows how to walk—i.e., to conduct his life—will have more real blessedness than the thoughtless spendthrift. It is better to enjoy the good that lies before us, that God has given, than to let desires wander for what may elude us. The less joy of fact is more satisfying than the greater joy of imagination.

10-12.—From this point, and for the remainder of the book, the preacher answers the question "What is the chief good?" The whole round of human life may be summed up in the word "Man" or "Adam." (R. V. marg.) which means "red earth." Our life is as a shadow, and though we live never so strenuously, we are soon forgotten. We cannot influence coming days, and men forget our name, though, like the Pyramids of Egypt, our memorials remain (James iv. 14). How we need to turn from the weary round of human life, to cry, Lord lift Thou up the light of Thy countenance upon us.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14.—ECCLES. VII.

These words sound pessimistic (1-6), but they are on the line of our Lord's beatitude, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." It is perhaps easier to walk with God in sad and difficult hours than when life runs easily. The evil and injustice (7-9) around us, blinding the wise and causing extortion and oppression, are hard to bear. But let us be patient and wait to see God's end. We must not judge by an unfinished scheme. In praise of wisdom (10-12).—To ask certain questions shows a lack of wisdom and a doubt of God. Character is better than estates. It is a defence, and promotes our true life and well-being. But all noble character must be founded upon the one foundation, which God has laid, which is Jesus Christ.

You cannot alter God's dealings (13, 14).—The crook in your lot cannot be straightened by your anxiety. Be patient, and you will find at the last no reason to find fault with aught that God has done. The worldling's judgment of men (15-18).—As he watches them he thinks that righteousness is an impediment to true success. He therefore dissuades from overmuch righteousness, though he equally dissuades from overmuch wickedness. These words must be taken as the creed of the children of the world, who nevertheless really believe that those who fear God, will somehow come out best. Be wise and you will be strong (19-22).—Do not be too jealous of your reputation, men do not always say what they really think. The eavesdropper hears no good of himself. Tales told to you of others mean about as much as those told of others by yourself.

This was the ambition of Solomon (23-29).—He wished to find out the exceeding deep, and he discovered that wickedness is foolish and mad; and that there are ties and fellowships which are bitterer than death. We are told that he had three hundred wives, and seven hundred concubines, but amongst them all he found no woman who realised his ideal. What a confession is this of the evils of polygamy! The man amongst a thousand is the man Christ Jesus, all others have something of the stoop in them, though man was made upright.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15.—ECCLES. VIII.

1-9.—Despotic government.—A serene and tranquil heart will cast sunshine on the face, and soften its hard and austere expression. 2.—We should honour the powers that be, because ordained by God. It is by his ordering, as included in the very constitution of our nature, that kings reign, and princes decree justice. How much more should we obey the command of Jesus, the true King of the soul. 3, 4.—True of the despot, but much more true of the Lord Jesus; where his word is, storms hush, devils go forth, the lepers are cleansed, the dead are raised. 5, 6.—Go on steadfastly in well-doing. However great the perplexity and misery around, to do right is the clue out of the maze. We who love God know that there is a time coming when God's judgment shall adjust all difficulties and make right all wrongs. The misery of mankind is all the greater because there is no expectation of the coming of the King and the inauguration of the Millennial Age. 8.—The wicked man cannot evade or postpone the day of account. He cannot retain his spirit. It must go to stand before the God that gave it, who summons it. His wickedness shall not deliver him. The tyrannical ruler at the bar of God will discover that he has done hurt to no one so much as to himself.

10-17.—The postponement of judgment.—Men of the world presume from the delay of deserved penalty, and imagine that it will not come. But it is none the less inevitable. 10.—Righteous and wicked alike die and are buried. 11-13.—"They see not the smoke of the pit, therefore they dread not the fire."—South. Men do not realise that God's long-suffering is intended to lead them to repentance; whilst it exercises the saints in faith, patience, and perseverance. 14. The anomalies in our condition are very great, but God has permitted vanity to inhere in the present state of things, that men may learn to seek their true life within, where good is never disassociated from blessedness, or evil from misery. 15.—This was not Solomon's final verdict. And it is the result of his own reasoning, but evidently not of the inspiration of God's Spirit. 16, 17.—With all our endeavour, though it cost us sleepless nights, we cannot understand all that is, afoot around us. It is best, then, to fulfil our daily duty, in the name of God, and leave all else to his wise providence.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16.—ECCLES. IX.

Whilst there is life, there is hope (1-6).—These verses seem very fatalistic, but we must remember our Lord's warning against supposing that the Galileans who perished at Siloam were greater sinners than others (Luke xiii. 1-5). The event which comes to all must be therefore limited to the ordinary workings of God's providence in the world. In outward matters there is a great similarity in the lot of all men. 3.—The great difference which obtains between the wicked and the righteous is within—madness or the peace of God. 4.—Life is sweet, but to have the life of God throbbing within the heart, this is best. See that thou art joined to the living Christ. 6.—This is the verdict of the materialist. Solomon seems to have passed through this phase of thought, in his quest for the chief good.

The conditions of a happy life (7-10).—Be sure, first of all, that you are accepted in Christ. 8.—Compare Rev. iii. 18, where white garments and anointing oil occur together. The whiteness which comes of the blood, and the oil of the Holy Ghost. 9.—See that the home-life is ever kept pure and lovely, by the grace of the Holy Spirit. 10.—Live earnestly and strenuously, because when once the portal of death is passed, there can be no return to put right anything which has been left wrong.

Time and Chance (11-12).—There are other laws affecting the life of man than those which we should expect. For some reason the prizes of life are withheld from those who would seem to have fairly won and deserved them. The materialist imputes these varieties to "time and chance," whilst the child of God sees that character, and faith, and the determining providence of God, must be taken into account in considering the anomalies of human condition. The Lord hath chosen the poor and weak things of this world to confound the wise.

The parable of the little city (13-16).—There is a striking parallel to this in 2 Sam. xx. 15-22. But the mystic meaning seems to refer to Christ's work for the soul. The little city may be our world, or the heart of man. The great king is Satan. But Jesus, who for our sakes became poor, is our Deliverer, though, alas! too often forgotten by us.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17.—ECCLES. X.

1.—Very small things spoil the symmetry and beauty of an otherwise lovely character. We notice such things first, and remember them longest. 2, 3.—The heart in Scripture is the seat of affection, and of the inner life (Prov. iv. 23). To keep it at the right is to have it in hand for consultation before action. To keep it at the left is to be swayed in action by feeling rather than deliberation, by emotion than principle. And the life animated by emotion and feeling soon declares itself as a light and frivolous one. 4.—Keep thy place in subjection; better bear than retaliate. 5, 6, 7.—Those who are really rich and noble are often degraded to menial positions. Often the servant of a nobleman has been the more noble of the two. 8, 9.—Evil comes home to roost; with what measure you meet, it shall be measured to you again. 10.—As the sharpening of an axe saves the woodcutter much superfluous exertion, so wisdom, in directing our actions, saves one from expending strength and energy in vain. 11.—The R.V. marg. suggests that the slanderer is as a serpent that bites before it is tamed. 12, 13, 14.—A foolish man will soon betray himself in his speech. You know so little, be slow to speak, swift to hear. 15.—The city to which, with all his labour, the fool cannot find his way is that spoken of in Heb. xi. 10. The wise reach it, Psa. cvii. 7. 16, 17.—The word may be rendered youth, and is used of Reboboam, 2 Chron. xiii. 7. It seems to anticipate his folly and fate. To eat in the morning, thus spending the precious early hours in carouse and not in work, is the sign of a dissolute and self-indulgent life. 18.—"One cause of the decadence of Spain has been the inveterate habit of saying manana (to-morrow)." 19.—Delitzsch translates the first clause, "Meals they made into a pleasure." This gives the key to the whole. Meals, wine, and money have their use as a means, but the self-indulgent make them their end and aim. 20.—The words that we speak in the chamber are proclaimed on house tops. It is almost certain that unkind things said of others will come to their ears. Beware! The walls listen! Birds carry tidings!

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18.

GOD'S JUDGMENT ON SODOM.—GEN. xviii. 22-33.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 25.

SCRIPTURE uses the destruction of Sodom as a type and prophecy of future judgment. See Luke xvii. 28-30; 2 Peter ii. 6-9; Jude 7. And lest it should be thought that so terrible a judgment could only fall on those who sinned as grossly as Sodom did, we are reminded that guilt is always measured by privilege. Capernaum (Matt. xi. 23, 24), and all those who hear and reject God's message (Mark vi. 11) will fare even worse than Sodom did.

Before the judgment fell, Abraham was made acquainted with it. His three visitors, though described as men (2), were heavenly beings, and one of them was the Lord Himself (14-17). It is the first recorded instance of God appearing to man in a human form. Why was Abraham favoured with this visit? Because he was one of the friends of God. Compare 17-19 with Jno. xv. 14, 15.

The judgment only fell when Sodom was ripe for it. The language used (20, 21) represents on the part of Sodom most fearful guilt, and on the part of God infinite patience and long-suffering. He appears as one reluctant to strike, and eager to discover anything that may justly delay or prevent the destruction. The investigation only made the sin appear the greater (xix. 9-11). God is always righteous in his judgments. The sword never falls until the cup of iniquity is full.

Mercy mingled with this judgment, and was manifest in the warnings that preceded it. Long ago Sodom seemed ready for destruction (xiii. 13). Why did not judgment fall then? Because God would give them space and opportunity for repentance. By the attack of the four kings, and Abraham's noble work of deliverance (xiv.), the presence of Lot, "a righteous man," in the city, and now the visit of the two angels (xix.)—God warned the people. Man's course to ruin is a kind of steeplechase, in which he leaps over apparently insuperable barriers.

And in sparing Lot, the mercy of God exceeded all that Abraham dared to ask. It would have appeared not unjust to Abraham if any number of righteous less than ten had been destroyed with the city. God found only one, and could not destroy the rest until that one was safe (xix. 22).

God's message was ominous to Abraham. He knew something of Sodom's guilt; feared that its doom was certain; and sought to interpose on Sodom's behalf. Tradition describes the place of his intercession as one from which, through a ravine, one could see the hills around the Dead Sea, and could look down almost to the bottom of the valley where the doomed cities lay. On this same spot Abraham stood the following day (xix. 27, 28), and saw with a sad heart the terrible evidence of the cities' destruction.

The motives prompting his intercession were (1) concern for the people of Sodom. He could offer no excuse for their sin; but he remembers that he had once risked his life for them, and cannot now think of their doom without pain. (2) Concern for Lot. Not that Lot had showed much kindness towards Abraham. But faith always works by love; and love is unselfish and forgiving. (3) Zeal for God's glory. How would so terrible a judgment impress the surrounding nations, before whom Abraham was God's witness? To have Him dishonoured was the most painful consideration to Abraham (Golden Text). With every true intecessor this is the most powerful motive (Numb. xiv. 13, 14; Josh. vii, 9; Jer. xiv. 21).

The features that characterise his prayer are these:—(1) Deepest humility (27, 30-32), which is the invariable accompaniment of nearness to God. (2) Great persistency. His mouth was filled with arguments. Receiving one request, he made that the reason for presenting another. Beginning with fifty, he reduced the number to ten. And why did he stop there? Did he not feel morally certain that Lot's long residence in the city would have led at least ten to righteousness? (3) Recognition of a principle of the Divine Government. Matt. v. was not yet written, but Abraham has learned that the righteous are the salt of the earth. The tares are spared for the sake of the wheat (Matt. xiii. 29).

Was his prayer answered? Yes; for Lot was spared because "God remembered Abraham" (xix. 20). Be as Abraham, one of God's intercessors now. They influence the ungodly most mightily who meet with God in intercession on their behalf.

When the judgment comes, of which this is a prophecy, people will be found answering to the various classes who were connected with Sodom. The whole-hearted, like Abraham, separated unto God; the half-hearted, like Lot, saved, yet so as by fire; the double-minded, like Lot's wife, who could not give up Sodom's treasures, though she would escape its doom; and the mockers, who scoffed at the idea of judgment, and were destroyed while they mocked. To which class do we belong?

For the Young.

BERYL'S STORY.

My dear young friends, this is no make-up story; I knew Beryl well from frequent, sometimes daily, association with her, and what I shall tell you will be inside the truth. Beryl was a dull-looking, awkward-mannered girl of fifteen when I first knew her. Her father was dead, and she lived with her godly and loving mother and grandmother. She had some very high-flown ideas; among others one possessed her that she was to regenerate the world by means of her pen—she was to be a great authoress, and a poet!

I had to read all her productions—no light task, I can assure you—and found in them all a wild, wilful ignoring of everything Christian; indeed, she openly denied the truth of God's Word, and even questioned the existence of the Deity Himself. You wonder why I read her immature, impossible, often blasphemous productions? I was praying for her, and felt I would do anything to win her to Christ.

One day I felt impelled to speak to her longer and more earnestly than usual. She was in a more than usually rebellious mood.

"How long are you going to continue this fight against God?" I asked. "He may not give you much longer, and how about the end, then?"

"Oh," she replied, "I know you wish me well, but it's no use. I mean to go on till I am satisfied here!" She touched the region of her heart. She was only a young, inexperienced girl, but she suffered deeply from heart-hunger, a longing to lose herself in one greater and nobler than herself, and to be at rest. Perhaps you know the feeling? I did, and I pitied her.

"Dear," I said, "only God can do that for you. I shall pray more than ever that your eyes may be opened to behold Him, and that the wonderful intellectual knowledge you have of the Bible may be the means of bringing you to his feet. He will do it, and soon."

"Things cannot go on like this," she said, desperately. "I am wretched. But I will be wretched for ever rather than become a slave to the doctrines of Christianity."

I did not argue with her, nor contradict her; she knew my love for her began and ended in the Saviour, and she understood it, for she loved me with a chivalrous, young-girl devotion sometimes accorded to women; and I was glad, and thoroughly believed in her. She knew this. Among ourselves we used to call her Shakespeare; someone had given her the name as a would-be poet, and it clung to her. I said to a friend:—

"Shakespeare has been. Poor girl, she is very miserable."

"She deserves to be," said my friend, "flying in God's face as she does. Something awful will happen to her."

The words jarred. I knew the tender love of the Good Shepherd for this straying lamb, and a great cry went up to Him from my heart, strong in trust in Him.

"Oh, my Father, touch this child's heart by any means—use me if Thou seest fit—though I do not know how I can be used to bring her to Thyself!"

That night I received a thick package from Beryl; it was a manuscript, written in her unformed hand, and the language was more than usually high-flown and violent in defence of her pet theories. There was a note to me enclosed; in it were these words:—

"I must know life, I must win fame in the world. I cannot give these up, so I cannot be a Christian."

I did not write her a line in reply. I just sent her a little picture I had in my room. She had often seen it. It was the "Light of the World," by Holman Hunt.

Two days after this Beryl came to see me, but I did not know it, for I was very ill, delirious in fever, having been seized on the night I had sent my picture to her. Some weeks later she was allowed to see me. She had never missed a day in calling during my long illness, and I saw she was not the dull-looking, awkward Beryl of a few weeks before.

"Oh!" she cried, "I ought not to be so happy and you so ill; but I am just as happy as Christ can make me."

I could not speak, the joy was almost too much. I held out my hand, and burst into tears of happiness.

"During all your illness," she continued, "you thought of me; you prayed for me, you spoke, as you thought, to me, and one day when I called they told me you had repeated nearly all night long the same words: 'Tell her that God is love. It is not giving up, for life is in Him—it is receiving.' I went home and thought about the words 'God is love,' until they seemed to burn into my soul. Someone had that day pinned a piece of paper to my pillow, on which I read: 'God is angry with the wicked every day.' 'It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.' I had felt angry about this, and resolved to forget the words, but I could not, until your unconscious message was given me, and I could remember nothing but 'God is love.' They had told me there was a change for the worse in you, and you might die. I wanted to pray to ask God to spare you, but I remembered how often I had made light of his name. I was in an agony of mind; almost unconsciously I flung myself upon my knees, and before I knew I was asking Him for pardon, and pleading his own words, 'I will in no wise cast out.' All the beautiful promises that I knew so well, came crowding upon my remembrance, and then the words, 'I shall be satisfied when I awake with Thy likeness,' flashed upon my soul, and I knew, I knew I had forgiveness! It was morning before I rose from my knees, and when I looked out at the dawn struggling through the darkness of night over all the sky, it seemed as if I was looking at my own soul of a few hours before. I seemed to know so much now, above all that God was love, and I was quite satisfied, more than happy here!" She placed her hand over her heart; but I had seen it in her eyes, her air; heard it in her voice; knew it from the whole bearing of the late defiant, rebellious girl.

No, she never became an authoress or a poet; she began to fit herself at once for home-missionary work, and after a medical training, devoted her life to those who, struggling along under a burden of sin and despair, never stop to think that "God is Love."

G.

THE BEST I CAN.

"I CANNOT do much," said a little star,
"To make the dark world bright;
My silvery beams cannot struggle far
Through the folding gloom of night:
But, because I am part of God's great plan,
I'll cheerfully do the best I can!"

"What can be the use," said a fleecy cloud,
"Of these few drops I hold?
They will hardly bend the lily proud,
Though caught in her cup of gold:
Yet I am a part of God's great plan,
So my treasures I'll give as well as I can!"

A child went merrily forth to play,
But a thought, like a silver thread,
Kept winding in and out all day,
Through the happy, golden head:
Mother said, "Darling, do all you can,
For you are a part of God's great plan!"

She knew no more than a glancing star,
Nor the cloud with its chalice full,
How, why, and for what all strange things are;
She was only a child at school:
But she thought, "It is part of God's great plan,
That even I should do all I can."

So she helped a younger child along
When the road was rough to her feet,
And she sang from her heart a little song
That we all thought passing sweet:
And her father, a weary, toil-worn man,
Said, "I, too, will do the best I can!"

Our best? Ah, children, the best of us
Must hide our faces away,
When the Lord of the vineyard comes to look
At our task at the close of day:
But for strength from above, 'tis the Master's plan,
We'll pray, and we'll do the best that we can!

THE CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Cheetham Hill, Manchester, Feb. 8; Ripley, Feb. 9; Shenley, Feb. 12; Watford, Feb. 13; Tollington Park, N., Feb. 14; St. Andrew's, New Kent-road, Feb. 15; Reading, Feb. 18; Derby, Feb. 20 and 22; Boulton, Feb. 21; St. Alban's, Liverpool, Feb. 25 to March 4; Mr. S. J. Hewlett (with Rev. T. Longstaff), St. Michael's, Ipswich, Feb. 10 to 20; Y.M.C.A. Hall, Ipswich (for Juniors), Feb. 24 to 27; Mr. G. Goodman, Highbury Hill Baptist, to Feb. 11; St. Matthew's, Chelsea, Feb. 25 to March 2; Mr. E. Hughes, Congregational Church, Greenwich, to Feb. 9; Home of Industry, Bethnal Green, Feb. 26 to March 2; Mr. Josiah Spiers, Llandrindod Wells; Mr. H. Falkner, Luton, Feb. 18 to 20; St. Paul's, Finchley, Feb. 22.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., Feb. 11, Mark ii. 1-12; Mon., 12, ii. 13-28; Tues., 13, iii. 1-19; Wed., 14, iii. 20-35; Thurs., 15, iv. 1-12; Fri., 16, iv. 13-29; Sat., 17, iv. 30-41.

GREAT REVIVAL IN BROOKLYN.

For three weeks special evangelistic meetings under the auspices of the Central Committee have been in progress, and have resulted in the conversion of many hundreds in all parts of Brooklyn. Twenty-four churches of various denominations are holding Gospel meetings nightly. Besides these there is a central noon meeting at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, which is attended by from 1200 to 2000, and is addressed by Rev. Geo. C. Needham, and Rev. H. M. Wharton, D.D., of Baltimore. Fourteen evangelists and Gospel singers from various parts are at work, some holding three and four meetings daily. The Mayor, who is a Christian, has granted permits to some of the evangelists and pastors to preach in the streets, and this has been done. The weather being very mild for the time of year, hundreds have gathered to listen, and some conversions have taken place under the celestial canopy. Mr. Moody was expected for Tuesday last, 6th inst.

The New York Times gives two or three columns of reports daily, which has spread the news, and now other cities are catching the fire and are starting meetings. Dr. Dixon, and Dr. Gregg (successor to Dr. Cuyler) are the moving spirits, full of faith and power; both are the pastors of influential churches, and are unexceptionably Evangelical in their teaching. There are 20,000 men out of employment, many of whom have been fed with the bread which perisheth as well as with the bread of life.

The New York Independent says: "The evangelistic campaign in Brooklyn, already mentioned in these columns, is moving forward in a most encouraging way all along the line; and the hearts of many pastors are full of joy at the bright prospects. The work is under the direction of a central committee, including members of many denominations, of which Dr. David Gregg is chairman. Meetings have been held every day at noon in the Y.M.C.A. hall, and the attendance has ranged from 700 to 1200, in spite of snow and mud. These meetings have been remarkably interesting, and have demonstrated all the wisdom of the committee in concentrating all their working forces here, and in engaging the large hall instead of a smaller room. Stirring addresses have been delivered by evangelists George C. Needham, H. M. Wharton, Ferd. Schiverea, Thomas Needham, Arthur Crane. A number of city pastors have also taken part, and shown their sympathy by their presence on the platform. It is hoped that Mr. Moody, fresh from his work at Providence, will also be present. The singing of the Gospel has been an attractive feature in these gatherings, and many hearts have been melted as inspired truths have been borne in upon them on the wings of song from consecrated lips. Every afternoon several hundred people have gathered for prayer and testimony in the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church. The meetings have been led by Dr. Partington, and Rev. Messrs. A. H. Moment, John E. Lloyd, John Humpstone, and Jesse W. Brooks. The topics have been timely and chosen by the committee. Monday, 'The Baptism of the Holy Ghost'; Tuesday, 'The Spirit of Self-sacrifice'; Wednesday, 'Christianity for the People'; Thursday, 'Public Confession of Christ'; Friday, 'The World for Christ.' Simultaneous meetings also took place in the First Reformed Church, Bedford Avenue, participated in by various pastors of the city, and were largely attended. Every evening Rev. H. M. Wharton, of Baltimore, has preached in the Washington Avenue Baptist Church, five churches uniting in the services. Meetings have also been held in the Reformed Episcopal Church of the Reconciliation, three churches uniting. George C. Needham has preached every evening in the Sixth Avenue Baptist Church, and his brother Thomas in Jamaica, Long Island, four churches uniting. Arthur Crane has held meetings every night in the Greene Avenue Baptist Church, and Ferd. Schiverea in the Bethesda People's Congregational Church. Dr. A. C. Dixon has been helping Dr. Wharton in the Washington Avenue meetings, and his assistant, the Rev. S. V. Robinson, has preached in the Greenwood Baptist Church and the Central Presbyterian Church. Various churches of other denominations are also united in the movement, and applications are coming in from other pastors anxious to co-operate with the Central Committee and share in the blessings of this campaign. The tide is rising."

FROM TANNA, NEW HEBRIDES.

The Presbyterian Record, of Montreal, publishes a deeply interesting letter from Tanna, the island in the New Hebrides where Dr. Paton first settled. For twenty-three years Rev. Wm. Watt and his wife have toiled with earnest devotion and cheering results. There are two stations on the island, Kwamera and Port Resolution, and the missionary alternates between the two. Writing under date June 12, Mrs. Watt says:—

"We were so glad to be at Kwamera again and away from Port Resolution House, which being some distance from the sea, and surrounded by dense vegetation, is very hot, while, Kwamera being on the ocean beach, we can get any breeze that was going.

"Thus we entered hopefully on our work there, but, alas! the people seemed twice dead, nay, plucked up by the roots. True, there was much sickness, and many were very ill, but that alone did not account for the thin congregations and the small classes which grieved us from day to day. Many things have led to this state of affairs. In 1889 several of our lads were taken away to Queensland in a labour vessel; then death took away a goodly number of our best people.

"For ten days Mr. Watt was very weak, and had all the symptoms of remittent fever; then he began to recover, but oh! how slowly. Fortunately I was able to nurse him, but I did long for civilisation, with its comforts, and for friends, with their help and sympathy. He was only one week well when I took ill on March 10. I had been more or less ill from March 2, but I fought against it, as we had some work on hand I was anxious to see finished; but from March 10 till April 7 I was completely laid aside, and was brought very low. Many a time while we were ill, and often since, have we said, 'What a blessing it was we were not both ill together, else there might have been no one left to tell the tale.'

"Notwithstanding all our sickness, we managed to get printed seven new hymns, bringing our hymnal up to 95. We added them to our hymn book, and bound about 250 copies. At Port Resolution we have introduced four of the new ones, accompanied on our Mason and Hamlin baby organ, and the effect has been very encouraging. Without doubt our Tannese have an ear for music, and, if under training, would prove good pupils. 'Go sound the trump on India's shores,' they sing with great gusto, and a paraphrase of the Saviour's words as recorded in Matt. v. 43-48, and sung to the tune 'Barrow,' has proved a great favourite; but the greatest favourite of all is a translation of 'Thou didst leave thy crown and thy kingly throne,' sung to the tune that hymn is set to in Moody and Sankey's collection. We practise morning and evening, and we pray that the saving truths thus committed to memory may prove good seed sown on good soil.

"At Port Resolution, unlike Kwamera, we have good meetings daily, and on Sabbaths nearly all the population attend the services. Much Scripture knowledge is being acquired, and we earnestly desire an outpouring of the Holy Spirit to quicken their hearts and apply the truth to them; for though the people here thus fear the Lord, they serve their own gods, and cling to their heathen customs with a tenacity worthy of a better cause. Many heathen customs have been given up, and the grosser heathen ceremonies are things of the past, but there is still much to be undone before real progress in Christianity can be reported."

A CHILD of ordinary capacity and destitute of property, but converted to God in childhood, is frequently worth more to the Church than ten wealthy men converted at the noon of life.—Dr. John Todd.

THE UPPER CONGO.—Rev. W. Poole Balfern, of Bopoto, Upper Congo, writes to the Baptist Missionary Society:—"We are expecting Mr. and Mrs. W. Forfeitt by the Peace, or some other steamer, in about three weeks, but it may be a month or even six weeks. I shall then go home on furlough, in accordance with regulations. Our new chapel is a great success, and I have nowhere seen on the Upper River—and I have already seen them all—such congregations. The bushfolk are also coming down to our school, and, although not brilliant, it is a great thing to get them under our influence."

The Evangelist.

LIGHT IN GOD'S LIGHT.

By Rev. Dr. BALGARNIE, Bishop Auckland.

I remember many years ago paying my first visit along with a young artist to the National Gallery in Trafalgar Square. We passed along the rooms admiring what we thought was beautiful, and criticising rather freely what did not seem to come up to our standard of excellence. We came at last to the suite of rooms specially set apart for the famous "Turner Collection." I had been looking at one of the historical pictures of that celebrated artist, and could not help confessing to a feeling of surprise and disappointment. The groups of figures before me seemed to be little better than mere daubs of paint; light and shade seemed to have been flung upon the canvas with a clumsy, if not with a careless hand; and "What people could find in that picture to admire and wonder at," I said to my friend beside me, "I am at a loss to conceive." "Ah!" he said, "you are not looking at it in the right light!" and he led me back a few paces and said, "Look at it now; that is the proper standpoint from which to see it." And never till that moment had I been conscious of the amazing difference which a few steps backward or forward could effect in viewing Turner's great works. Everything had changed with the standpoint. The blue waves seemed now to roll and break in living masses of foam against the sides of the ship; the smoke of battle seemed to belch out from the guns as if the reality were before you; and you could almost fancy you saw the men upon the deck trembling with rage and desperation as their great captain, the hero of Trafalgar, fell. My feeling of disappointment was immediately exchanged for that of boundless admiration now that I had come to view the work from the standpoint of the author.

Now, what was my mistake as to these pictures is the common error of hundreds and thousands of onlookers at other things—they cannot be persuaded to look at them from the right point of view. They select their own standpoint, and will see things in their own light. Hence so many of the misjudgments, misunderstandings, discrepancies of opinion that prevail in the world. When one brother falls out with another, and uses strong and uncharitable language as to his conduct, when men form themselves into sections and parties and contend so bitterly for their own opinions, when churches and congregations come to misrepresent and decry each other's doctrine and discipline, the great secret that lies so often at the bottom of the quarrel is this, that they are looking at the objects of dispute from opposite, or, at least, from different points of view.

But, as in the case of the picture I have spoken of, there was only one standpoint, and that the artist's, from which this great work could be properly seen, so in the spiritual and moral world there is only one standpoint from which divine truth can be discovered, and that is the Creator's. It is only in God's light that we can see light clearly. Fortunately for us, however, this grand standpoint is in some degree reachable; for with Christ is the fountain of life, and in his light we see light (Ps. xxxvi. 9). The cross becomes our standpoint. Taken by the hand by the Spirit of Truth, and led to put our trust in Jesus as the Saviour of the world, we immediately begin to look at things in a new and better light. Sin in all its blackness, redemption in all its fulness, immortality in all its blessedness, and heaven in all its glories, are some of the mysteries brought to light in the Saviour's incarnation: "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men."

MEXICO.—A correspondent, "K. F. T.," writes to us:—"I thank you for all the trouble you have taken to get me tracts and illustrated papers. You would feel repaid if you could see with what avidity they are received. I inquired of one young man, who asked for a tract, 'Are you a Roman Catholic?' He answered, 'No,' and then, with hesitancy, 'Yes,' adding, 'but I want to know.' This showed that he knew the character of the tracts I was distributing. To-day a young man asked for a tract, and after reading it came and thanked me very warmly. Oh! that there were any number of evangelists who could go about teaching these seekers after truth! A good Government is being made here, but the priests keep the people as ignorant as possible, and many of the best Roman Catholics are protesting against this, and upholding the municipal school."

The Late REV. JOHN GREEN,

ORGANISER OF THE GOSPEL MISSION TO LIGHTHOUSES AND LIGHTSHIPS.

THE story of him whose name heads this sketch is one to stir the heart. The work by which he was most widely known, and by which he will be chiefly remembered, was his unique mission to keepers of lighthouses and lightships. He has written an imperishable record upon the hearts of those whose friendly beacons guide voyagers over the wild and stormy deep. In his own sphere he has never been surpassed, and rarely has there been a more gracious, beautiful, and self-denying life.

John Green was born of godly parents at Billingsley, Salop, in 1839, and early became the subject of deep religious convictions; but not until he was nearing manhood did he find true peace in Christ. He joined the Baptist Church at Bridgnorth, and became a teacher in the Sunday school; but soon commenced to preach to the poor miners at Chorley, a small village near his house, and many conversions were the result. In 1863 he entered the Pastors' College, and in 1867 accepted the pastorate of the historic church at Stogumber, Somerset. There, amidst the beautiful scenery of the Quantock and Brendon Hills, he laboured most successfully for three years. His gentleness of spirit, amiability of disposition, and zeal for the Master's cause greatly endeared him to his people. But the work, congenial as it was to himself, proved too much for his weak frame and sensitive spirit, and he was compelled to resign his charge.

After three years of inactivity, although with only partially restored health, he accepted a call to the pastorate at Broughton, Hants. There he laboured with marvellous diligence in the Lord's service, and the Word did not return void. But from the beginning to the end his consecrated and hopeful spirit was contending against physical weakness. At the end of four and a-half years, to the deep regret of a warmly-attached people, it became evident that for him the public work of the ministry was ended. It seemed as if his warfare was accomplished; for he knew that he must remain an invalid for life.

Undaunted by disease, his earnest spirit yearned for usefulness, and it is gratifying to be able to describe, in his own words, the inception of what proved to be his life-work. In a letter some years ago to Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, who helped him most generously by gifts of sermons, he wrote:—"I was reading the account of the dear President's pastoral silver wedding, when a remark of Dr. Stanford's on the immense circulation of the sermons suggested to me that I, too, could do something by distributing them through the post. Having a number of unbound copies, I began to send them to invalids, and to persons prevented by duty from attending God's house; but addresses soon failed me, and then the case of the lighthouse-keepers, like a gleam from one of their own towers, flashed across my mind. Here lay my work; this to me was very clear."

No sooner was he convinced that another sphere of work was opening to him, than, with characteristic devotion, he made such preparations as would enable him to make full proof of this new ministry. The belief that no mission was organised to the lighthouse-keepers gave an additional charm to the work; for, like the Apostle Paul, he desired to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond, and not to boast in another man's line of things. He at once provided himself with Admiralty lists, maps, charts, and much informative literature, and commenced to send Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, The Christian, and other Evangelical literature, to the lighthouse men around the British coasts. But finding that they were better supplied than he had supposed, while not neglecting them, he extended his operations to the western shores of the North Atlantic. The lonely dwellers on the inhospitable rocks of Labrador, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and the islands in mid-ocean were soon surprised and gladdened by manifestations of Christian sympathy and spiritual interest from some unknown friend. His modesty at first caused him to send his packets anonymously; but at length his burning desire for usefulness overcame his reserve, and he wrote earnest, loving letters to his far-away flock.

By this means, he discovered many of the Lord's hidden ones in those out-of-the-way places. But on the part of the men, much natural curiosity was excited in reference to their correspondent. Many letters reached him, which, while full of gratitude, were not without personal inquiry. "Who and what are you?" writes one. "Are you related to my wife's friends? How came you to know my address?" And then followed expressions of thankfulness, in the true language of the heart, for the soul-refreshing messages which had been received. Mr. Green soon discovered that his field of labour was filled with a unique interest. His correspondents wrote interesting descriptions of the rocks upon which they lived, the characteristics of the islands in the vicinity, the numbers of lives saved by their instrumentality, their personal privations and winter experiences, their spiritual condition, their family joys and sorrows, their hopes and fears, and their desires and prayers. It is almost impossible to conceive the monotony of their lives. In some cases a ship is seldom seen to pass, and provisions cannot reach them for many weeks together, while some have no mails between October and March! Says one, "It is ten months since my wife has seen a woman, and eight months since I have heard a sermon."

(From a Photograph by Mr. J. S. Barnes, Lewisham High Road, New Cross, S.E.)

Mr. Green soon became well acquainted with the habits and surroundings of his scattered flock; and where he found godly men he stirred them up to carry forward his work by distributing the sermons and tracts to those living upon adjacent islands. He had a special gift for epistolary correspondence, and his letters were treasures to those who received them. His "unknown, yet well-known" friends greatly valued his labours on their behalf, and a deep spiritual interest was created, and strong bonds of sympathy were formed. One tells him of a long and severe illness he has had, the nearest doctor being 120 miles away across a stormy sea; but "the Great Physician was in constant attendance." Another, after referring to his loneliness, says: "I find that the dear Saviour is always near." Yet another, after describing the dreariness of his lot, the isolation, the incessant roar of the waves, breaking like thunder upon the base of the lighthouse, remarks: "I hope I may ever be duly impressed by my surroundings, and never forget Him who holdeth the waters in the hollow of his hand." Thus, in these lighthouses, surrounded by the wild waste of waters, and almost entirely cut off from the outer world, there live men of faith and prayer, whom God is training for eternal fellowship with Himself.

The ministry of Mr. Green was almost world-wide. It extended from the Shetlands to the Scillys, from the east coast of England to the west coast of Ireland; in Canada and the United States from Lake Superior to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, from Newfoundland to the borders of Mexico, and from California to British Columbia. In some cases Mr. Spurgeon's sermons have been sent to station employés on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to men at some of the Hudson's Bay Co.'s ports, to the Canadian frontier police, and to new settlers in Manitoba. He also cast the beams of Gospel light upon the hearts of the lighthouse-keepers of the Australian, New Zealand, and Tasmanian coasts, and from the Antipodes, as well as from numerous places in the New World, there flowed to the invalid worker at home streams of gratitude and blessing.

The task of keeping in touch with this host of correspondence often induced painful weariness, and brought on spasmodic attacks of the disease which, during fifteen years, kept Mr. Green a prisoner in one room, but to the last the grand compensation was his, "My grace is sufficient for thee, my strength is made perfect in weakness." In his case, God's grace shone out in no sombre hues; but, combining with rare qualities of heart and mind, lit up his life with unusual attractiveness. He possessed an excellent memory, much general information, and a fund of humour and geniality, and evinced a lively interest in all the topics of the day, and the work of God in every part of the world. The peace of God filled his heart, and he knew no fears. His last few weeks were painful to himself, and to those around him; but like many who have watched and waited long, the Bridegroom's footsteps fell on his quick, expectant ear, before those nearest were aware of his call. He passed within the veil on the morning of January 4, to receive his welcome and reward.

The keynote of his whole character was sympathy. Sympathy quickened his teaching, enabled him to realise the needs of his hearers, gave his ministry an indefinable aroma of freshness and acceptability, and drew to himself the loving confidence of men in every clime whose good he sought. His removal is a great loss, and he will be missed and mourned in both hemispheres and in every zone:—

> What's done is what remains! Ah, blessed they
> Who have completed tasks of love to stay
> And answer mutely for them, being dead!
> Life was not purposeless, though life be fled.

He laboured in much weakness, but accomplished much. Before his death he had the joy of knowing that others were taking up his work, so that it would go forward after his decease. In the United States many earnest Christians have espoused the cause of the lighthouse men, and in Adelaide the Y.M.C.A. has formed a committee to send Gospel literature to the lighthouses of South Australia. This knowledge was a great comfort to him as his strength declined and his end approached.

True love to Christ is ingenious, and delights to express itself in new forms of service. The mission to lighthouse-keepers which Mr. Green carried on all the long years of his invalid life, showed the inventiveness of love, and what can be done by an earnest spirit under most unfavourable conditions. One less devoted would have excused himself from service, and comforted himself by the reflection, "They also serve who only stand and wait." But in his estimation, to serve Christ was life's highest end and brightest joy. He now rests from his labours, and his works do follow him. We close with his own prayer: "May these inhabitants of the rock all learn to sing the song of redemption; and the isles waiting for his law soon be led to trust in the arm of the Lord."

G. T. Ennals.

RICHARD WEAVER AT WOOLWICH.

We have been enjoying "showers of blessing." A fortnight ago, while reading the life of Andrew Bonar, I came upon the text (Jeremiah xxxiii. 3), "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things which thou knowest not." I felt it was a text for the mission, a promise given by God; and that night 200 of us united to plead the promise, and we can bear witness that it has been fulfilled in our experience.

Richard Weaver came on Jan. 21, and remained with us until Feb. 1. The meetings were large, as many as 3000 on Sunday evening, Jan. 28, and 1200 each night during the second week. We believe the results have been great. We have 190 names of those who have been spoken to about their souls, and we are hearing daily of some who received the message, but did not stay to the after meeting. A Romanist writes to say he is looking to Jesus only. We know of three drunkards who have come to the Cross for pardon and power. Four young men in one house have consecrated themselves to Christ and his service. A policeman, who had been a backslider, was walking about not knowing how to spend the Sunday morning, saw the people going to the chapel, and resolved to follow them. The Lord has forgiven his backsliding, and blessed his wife and daughter. A young man went home rejoicing in Christ, and told his sister what the Lord had done for him. She was ill in bed, but determined to go the following night, as it was the last of the mission. The doctor called, and advised her not to go, and sent another doctor, who confirmed his opinion; but she could not be persuaded. She arose, and came to the meeting, and that night the message of salvation was as water to the thirsty. "Her thirst was quenched, her soul revived."

We are grateful to Richard Weaver for his services. Although weak in body, he preaches with much of his old vigour and power, and the Lord works mightily by him. His experience is unique, and the stories of the triumphs of the Gospel, which he has seen with his own eyes, confirm the faith of believers and awaken the careless to "call upon the name of the Lord." Pray that the river may continue to flow, ever deepening and widening, until many are led to exclaim, "Water to swim in."—Yours sincerely. J. Wilson, Baptist Minister.

Woolwich.

THE GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

On Monday was celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. At seven o'clock nearly one thousand persons sat down to a substantial meat tea, provided by Mr. Charrington at his own cost, and which has become an annual institution, not only in celebration of the mission anniversary, but of his own natural birthday.

The public meeting was presided over by the Hon. Granville Waldegrave. Mr. E. H. Kerwin, in giving a brief report of the progress of the mission since its commencement, looked back with great pleasure to the time when it started in a little hayloft over a stable, lighted with paraffin lamps. The work has developed into one of the largest, if not the largest, evangelistic missions in the world. The only thing at the moment to be regretted was the absence of the beloved superintendent, Mr. F. A. Charrington, who was away on the Continent for the benefit of his health.

Briefly describing the work, Mr. Kerwin said the building had been opened for 6500 consecutive nights, and he had been associated with Mr. Charrington from the beginning, but he could not overlook the splendid work done by those who had from time to time assisted them. Last Sunday night the hall was literally packed from floor to ceiling, hundreds having been turned away for want of room; and afterwards, when some 800 believers were remembering their Lord's death, his heart went out in gratitude to God, and he was led to say, "What hath He wrought? There were some hundreds of them rescued from a life of sin and degradation; 395 persons applied last year for membership, making a total of 3361 since 1876. There are people all over the world testifying to the love of Christ and his everlasting kingdom, that were first brought to the knowledge of the Saviour in the Great Assembly Hall.

Some time ago they were able to purchase a large hall only a few doors from the present one, which they intend altering to suit the requirements of a children's hall, where they can deal with the children separately. They have already a Sunday-school of over 1400 children. Mr. Kerwin intimated that it was his desire to have this hall finished and ready for occupation by the time Mr. Charrington returns, so that he might have the wish of his heart gratified and his mind relieved of a great burden.

Addresses were delivered by Mr. R. C. Morgan, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun., Mr. Thomas Richardson, and Mr. Geo. Nokes.

WILLESDEN HALL, WILLESDEN LANE.

The first anniversary of the work carried on by the Evangelistic Mission in this hall, was held on Wednesday, the 31st ult., when large numbers attended. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided at the evening meeting, and Mr. C. Russell Hurditch (director of the Evangelistic Mission), gave an interesting and encouraging report of the work accomplished during the past twelve months. Both amongst old and young God had been giving much blessing. In concluding his statement, Mr. Hurditch said he could not remember any branch of the mission which could show such good results as this one in so short a time. The chairman then gave a stirring address on "Encouragement in God," and earnestly exhorted the workers to press forward in their good work, taking courage from the past fruitfulness of their labour for Christ. Brief addresses were also given by Messrs. R. Burn, Garrioch, Bilson, Hucklesby, and Rev. J. Gritton, D.D. The N.W. London Evangelistic Choir sang several songs and solos, and added much to the interest of the meeting.

TRUST IN GOD.—The better God is known the more He is trusted. Those who know Him to be a God of infinite wisdom will trust Him farther than they can see Him (Job xxxv. 14); to be a God of almighty power, will trust Him when creature confidences fail, and they have nothing else to trust to (2 Chron. xx. 12); and to be a God of infinite grace and goodness, will trust Him though He slay them (Job xiii. 15). Those that know Him to be a God of inviolable truth and faithfulness will rejoice in his word of promise and rest upon that, though the performance be deferred and intermediate providences seem to contradict it. Those that know Him to be the Father of spirits, and an everlasting Father, will trust Him with their souls as their main care; and trust in Him at all times, even to the end. —Matthew Henry.

A LANTERN SERVICE.

DESCRIBING in The Methodist Times a Sunday evening lantern service by Mr. Nix at Wardour Hall, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse says:—

From my vantage-ground I was able to study the congregation before the gas was lowered. The first thing that struck me was the large number of men—two out of three were men. The service commenced with a hymn led by the brass band. Prayer followed, then another hymn, next the lesson, and then the collection, for we never have a service on Sundays or weekdays without a collection. "Last year," said Mr. Nix, in announcing it, "the people of Wardour Hall raised over £500." Then came a long list of notices for every day of the week, prominent amongst which was the goose club. This year there were not less than 800 members.

The text was announced—The wages of sin is death. The gas was lowered, and the first scene was thrown on the screen. A simple and racy talk about wages, the word that next to mother and home was most often used and most talked about. The lad was standing at the desk on the Saturday afternoon taking his first wages. "No shillings were ever so large, so bright, so sweet as those." Wages was not a gift, a reward, but what was earned by the man himself. And of sin the wages was death. It had been so all the way down through the world's history. Then came the scene of the Fall, of the Flood, of Achan in the camp. Then followed New Testament illustrations of the truth. To-day it was true. There came a story from his own mission work—of one who had come to that very hall, a man with everything in his favour, a gentleman of good position in one of our Universities. But he took to drinking. Step by step he went down. There he stood in the dock at the Old Bailey, sentenced for crime, into which he had been led by drunkenness. Then followed the picture of a village maiden, pure as the flowers that bloomed around her; she comes to London. With her, too, as in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the downward course begins at the public-house. Step by step the drink leads her until she shivers an outcast, homeless, in the bitter winter night. And there follows the last sad scene—she lies dead on the river bank. The wages of sin is death.

Then came a picture of the Crucifixion. There, alone, filling up the whole scene, was the Christ upon the Cross, the great Deliverer who has died in our stead, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God. In softened tones and very tenderly the preacher told of his great love. Then came a pause, and whilst the harmonium was played very softly a solo was sung:

> When I survey the wondrous cross
> On which the Prince of Glory died,
> My richest gain I count but loss,
> And pour contempt on all my pride.

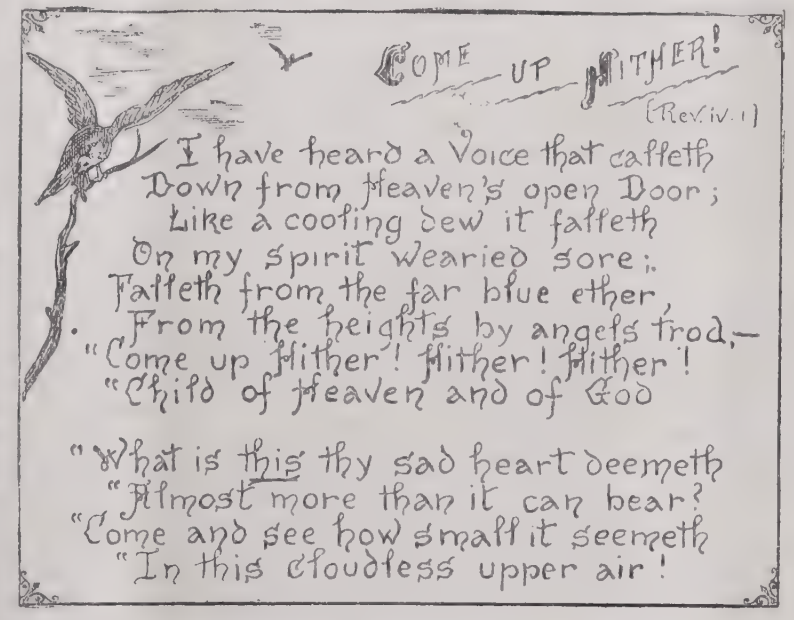
Emotionalism may have its perils, as every other ism has for that matter, if pushed to an extreme. But if it is good to be hushed, and melted, and subdued, and thrilled by that infinite love of the Crucified, then I cannot conceive of any way in which that good could be more perfectly accomplished.

I have been thinking over the deep impressions of that service since, and it has seemed to me that very much of the power of a lantern service lies in the fact that the hearer is isolated. Great cities are what they are because men are lost in the crowd. Nobody knows, and nobody heeds, so it does not matter what a man does, so far as any public opinion is concerned. But in that darkness of the lantern service you are alone. You have lost your refuge in the company of others. Anybody can say "us miserable sinners," because it means mostly other people. But it is altogether another thing to say, "I have sinned." It is wonderful how that separate and individual responsibility is brought home to one in a lantern service. That in itself is an incalculable gain.

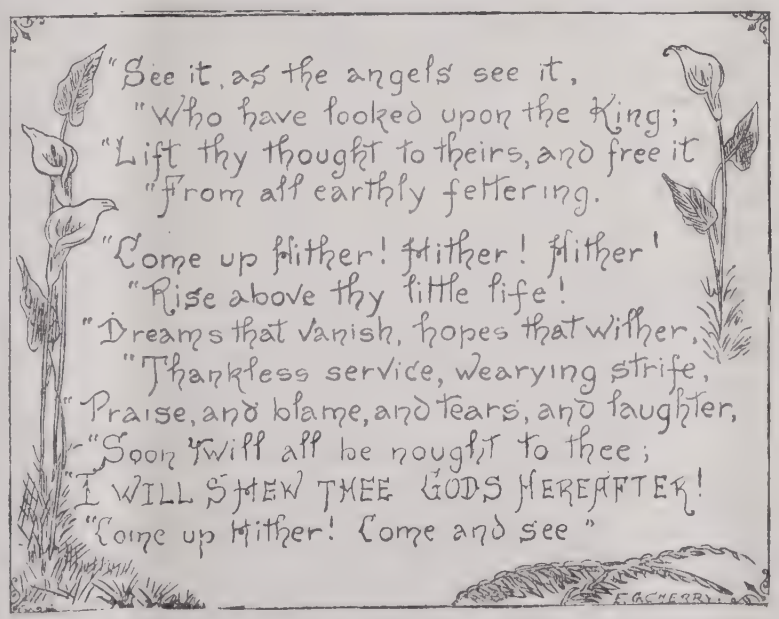
Then, in being spoken only, the truth comes in driblets, and needs half-a-dozen faculties to perceive it. But in the picture it is flashed before the eye, complete at once. Old folks and children are not the only ones who find that the truth of a picture is more easily laid hold of than the writing which explains it. Then, too, it goes deeper and sticks. As I have often said, there are no holes at the back of the head to let it out. That which is heard has to be kept carefully, or it is soon lost; the ears have no doors to shut it in. And looking at the picture in the darkness, the strong light thrown upon the screen seems to engrave it upon one's mind. I myself have been haunted by that picture of the Crucifixion, and do not think I can ever forget it. And was not this the method of the Master? Did He not say, "Hearken, behold"? Was it not constantly coming from his lips, "Behold, behold"? The parable was but a picture. There, as they sat in the open air, was the sower going with short, quick steps over the furrows, flinging out the seed.

The Romish Church has known how to use with tremendous effect this power of the eye. But because Rome uses it must we needs cry out against it? Let us give up eating and drinking because many rogues and vagabonds have lived that way, and therefore it must be bad! We can use pictures without worshipping them, and are losing one of the mightiest powers to bless and help men in not trying more to get at the heart through the eye. The power of a picture is well known, and greatly used by the children of this world: who are, alas! wiser in their generation than the children of light.

I can think of nothing that could be more blessed than to have that picture of the crucified Saviour flashed on a screen in the full gaze of our great thoroughfares, east and west, and underneath it the inscription: He loved me, and gave Himself for me. As many on that Sunday evening rose up and went into the inquiry-room to seek Him, I felt assured that it would be an easier thing to find Him, and trust Him, because He had been so lovingly and visibly set before us.



COME UP HITHER!
(Rev. iv. 1)
I have heard a Voice that calleth
Down from Heaven's open Door;
Like a cooling dew it falleth
On my spirit wearied sore:
Falleth from the far blue ether,
From the heights by angels trod,—
"Come up Hither! Hither! Hither!
"Child of Heaven and of God
"What is this thy sad heart deemeth
"Almost more than it can bear?
"Come and see how small it seemeth
"In this cloudless upper air!



"See it as the angels see it,
"Who have looked upon the King;
"Lift thy thought to theirs, and free it
"From all earthly fettering.
"Come up Hither! Hither! Hither!
"Rise above thy little life!
"Dreams that vanish, hopes that wither,
"Thankless service, wearying strife,
"Praise, and blame, and tears, and laughter,
"Soon 'twill all be nought to thee;
"I WILL SHEW THEE GODS HEREAFTER!
"Come up Hither! Come and see"
E. C. CHERRY

[Extracted from THE HEART'S EASE SERIES of 4 pp. Leaflets. By Miss E. C. CHERRY. Tastefully printed on tinted paper, and suitable for enclosing in the modern square envelope. In packets at 6d. and 1s. (London: Morgan & Scott.)]

IMPERIAL MISSION HALL, HANLEY.

GOD has wrought wondrously on our behalf in permitting and enabling us to deal with obstacle after obstacle during a period of several years, so that last autumn saw the signing of the trust deed and the establishing of this central mission of the Potteries upon a permanently satisfactory basis; and the good hand of our God upon us was strikingly seen in his bringing about this result just before the trade crisis, which otherwise might easily have completely overwhelmed us.

In the paralysis of the past few months we have struggled on with the current burden, receiving thankfully such contributions as our impoverished people and outside helpers could afford, and the old year closed upon us showing a balance of £20 or £25 to the bad, which will presently be twice that amount. Renewing of heating apparatus also is just now costing us nearly £50. Meanwhile, as if to prove that the Divine smile was upon us, we have been privileged to spiritual signs of a most cheering sort, and our report for the past month gives a record of sixty anxious inquirers publicly dealt with in our various services.

A large effort, involving the raising of £300 or £400, is now before us, and to this we are pledged, so as to clear off a current deficit, together with the amount advanced by friends months ago. The local depression is such that we are once more compelled to ask co-operation from sympathisers at a distance who appreciate aggressive Christian effort, and who understand what it must mean at present in a district like ours to have £9 per week to raise for expenses of work before salaries of agents are considered at all.

Openings for spiritual and social enterprise abound on every hand, and we continue to avail ourselves of such of these in rescue work, sick visitation, children's services, cottage meetings, &c., to the full extent of our power; but crippled means sadly restrict our efforts in a field of labour "white unto the harvest," and practically illimitable in extent.

We earnestly ask your prayers, and such help as your readers may be prompted to send will be gratefully received.

AMBROSE WOOD, Regent House, Hanley, Treasurer.
LANCELOT MIDDLETON, Superintendent.

IN THE EVIL SEQUENCE of this world an evil thought may soil thy children's blood.—Tennyson.

AFRICAN MISSIONS VISITED.—20.

By Mr. D. A. HUNTER.

I have now to tell you of a visit paid to the Gordon Memorial Mission, Umsinga, Natal. This mission was founded some twenty years ago in memory of an elder brother of the present Governor-General of Canada, who was accidentally shot while studying at Cambridge, with a view to himself becoming a medical missionary in South Africa. His noble life-purpose was not allowed to die with him. His family conceived the happy idea of perpetuating his memory by giving effect to that life-purpose, so that "he being dead yet speaketh."

A sum was set aside for the expense of a new mission station, and to Rev. Dr. Dalzell, an ordained medical missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, was entrusted the selecting of a locality, and the direction of the new enterprise.

Dr. Dalzell, accompanied by his wife, made a long waggon journey from Durban, as far as the Spelonken in the Northern Transvaal, but the spot ultimately chosen is in the Umsinga division of Natal, close to the border of Zululand.

Here a farm was purchased, and missionary operations begun. The white doctor's skill got noised abroad among the heathen around, distrust and prejudice gradually gave way, and those who came for healing of the body, heard of the Great Physician of Souls.

Leaving Maritzburg by the night train, I was landed next morning at Dundee coalfields, from whence a forty mile drive brought me to the Gordon Memorial Mission, just in time to see the young people of the training schools, before they went away to their homes for the Christmas vacation. There are at the head station some thirty Zulu boys, who live in Dr. Dalzell's house. His sisters-in-law, the Misses Lorimer, who work as honorary missionaries, have charge of the girl boarders, some thirty-five in number.

Both boys and girls have lessons together at the Station school, conducted by J. W. Blair, from Aberdeen. After school hours, they all get trained in industrial work—the boys in workshop or field, and the girls in more housewifely occupations. Mr. Moir, who formerly captained a company of the Boys' Brigade in Aberdeen, has formed these Zulu boys into the 1st Natal Company, and is endeavouring to smarten them, and develop their intelligence, by means of drill.

I was privileged to be present at the school prize-giving, where various exercises, such as reading and recitation, both in English and Zulu, were gone through. These young people recited the whole of the 1st Epistle of John in Zulu, the one continuing where the other left off.

There are some ten out-stations connected with this mission, scattered over a very wide district. To one of these I rode with Dr. Dalzell. It is on the top of the Biggarsberg, some twenty miles from the Gordon, and is called Overtoun, after Lord Overtoun, who generously subscribes towards the necessary funds for working it. Mr. Mundell, who is in charge, has nearly completed a nice little schoolhouse.

At each of these out-stations, most of which are in charge of native evangelists, day schools are carried on, so that over 400 boys and girls are receiving instruction.

Every morning "the maimed, the halt, and the blind" gather around the surgery door, and have their sufferings attended to. Several hospital rooms are in readiness for serious cases which require special nursing.

I was greatly interested in the services, both on Sunday and at the prayer-meetings. On Sunday morning, we had as our subject, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" and, in the afternoon, Dr. Dalzell spoke from "Go ye into all the world." Five of the boys signed the missionary volunteer pledge, after we had had a quiet little talk about it in the evening, and they had thought it over.

The hope of evangelising Africa is through Africa's sons, trained and directed by Europeans, and one longs to see a larger proportion of the boys and girls from all these training schools devoting their lives to this work.

---

MR. TOM HORROCKS conducted last week a "Gospel Temperance Mission" at the Town Hall, Christchurch. He had large audiences each night. Several pledges were taken.

THE AFRICAN WEST COAST.

A visit has recently been paid by Rev. Wm. Hughes, principal of the Congo Training Institute, Colwyn Bay, N. Wales, to the West Coast of Africa. The object of the visit was to seek to establish, along the West Coast of Africa, industrial centres or schools for the religious training of African youths and for industrial work. From these institutes, from time to time, only a few, picked, promising youths will be selected for higher training at Colwyn Bay Institute, where, in due time, they will be fitted to become skilful artisans, and then return to Africa as evangelists or native preachers. These, being fluent in their own language, able to endure the severity of the climate, acquainted with the customs and habits of the race, may prove useful pioneers to carry the Gospel even into the interior of Dark Africa, and to labour where no white man could expect to live and flourish.

Mr. Hughes sailed from Liverpool in June last. He has recently returned, after great encouragement, and efforts crowned with abundant success. During a short stay in the Liberian Republic he was enabled to affiliate the Rick's Institute with the Institute at Colwyn Bay; also, to commence a school for girls called the Russell Institute, after the name of a great friend and cheerful benefactor. Both at Calabar and the Cameroons Mr. Hughes had a hearty reception from the natives.

Arrangements have been made for the establishment of the Pembroke and Glamorgan Institutes at Victoria and the Cameroons respectively. The Alfred Jones' Institute is now also a permanent establishment in New Calabar. Sir Claude Macdonald, Her Majesty's Commissioner for the Oil Rivers, rendered kind assistance.

Frequent letters received from native youths confirm the warm interest taken in this new scheme by West Africans. Each institution will be provided with an able instructor for the various branches, and it is confidently hoped that this grand Christian industrial scheme will yet tend through trained native agency under God to chase away speedily the blackness of the long-prevailing night that still brands this magnificent continent with the epithet "Darkest Africa," and native agency win Africa for Christ. John B. Brasted.

LEPERS IN INDIA.

In a recent letter, Rev. Thos. Carmichael, Church missionary, Annfield, Rambagh, viâ Saharanpore, N.W.P. India, says:—

"Since we came to reside here in 1889, I have, in company with my wife, travelled over the hill district of Jaunsar, Bawar, around the military hill sanatorium of Chakrata, preaching the Gospel to the wild hill people in their villages scattered over these lofty mountains. Whilst doing so we found many lepers in various stages of the disease, some but slightly tainted, others with swollen heads and ears, with fingerless hands and toeless feet, and otherwise much disfigured with this dreadful disease. The whole population of Jaunsar is stated to be 50,000, and yet I was informed when in Chakrata that there are amongst them no fewer than 300 lepers.

"As we climb into their rocky fastnesses, and invade their secrecy with the Gospel, we cannot be oblivious to their physical sufferings, and especially to this horrible scourge, before which all human remedies seem to be powerless. I have been told of two villages in that district in which there are sixty to eighty lepers. One would fain believe this to be an exaggeration, but if there were twenty only it were sufficiently distressing. Can you do anything for them?"

All information as to work among Indian lepers can be obtained from Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

---

PLYMOUTH.—The Guardians have again been discussing their workhouse beer bill, which, after a substantial reduction, has been growing larger.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—On Thursday evening a meeting of the "Christian Harbour Lights" was held in the society's institute, St. George's-street. Mr. George Lampard presided, and gave a brief address founded on the Saviour's compassion for the distressed. Rev. G. J. Hill explained the work of the Christian Harbour Lights, and Mrs. Hill gave an impressive address. Testimonies were given and pledges taken, and the proceedings throughout were of a helpful character.

NOTES FROM OVER THE SEA.

At this writing Mr. Moody is in Providence, Rhode Island, engaged in his mighty work. He reaches out into the large cities adjoining, and the largest halls are not sufficient to hold the congregations. One method is always planned by our loved evangelist to attract those who might for a time keep aloof; that is, the singing. Messrs. Sankey, Stebbins, and Jacobs are assisted by a trained chorus of some five hundred voices. Messrs. Whittle and Bliss are also working in the same State, and the results, as usual, are wonderful.

The work of reform in different cities is being prosecuted with vigour. Gambling at horse races is especially singled out by some of our best and strongest men as a point of attack. Our legislatures are appealed to to enact laws for the suppression of pool-selling, and in our own Massachusetts Legislature the gamblers are preparing for the legalisation of their nefarious work. Rev. Dr. Chas. H. Parkhurst, of New York, wields the lance with unabated vigour, and is one of the most zealous, sure, and fearless of modern reformers. As usual, he will in the summer, after his hard, yet magnificent, work, seek the mountain heights of Switzerland for renewed strength. His wife, who is the president of the McAll Mission in the United States, will accompany him.

Rev. C. E. Greig, of Paris, has arrived after a stormy trip across the Atlantic, and will visit our leading cities in the interest of the McAll Mission, giving daily addresses for six weeks, and then return to his loved work. S. E. B.

Northampton, Mass., Jan. 20.

PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS.

A CHRISTIAN'S COMMENTARY.

When the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.—Acts. i. 2.

Spirit most holy, Thou
Sole fount of truth and bliss,
Without whom nothing strong
And nothing holy is;
As in the morning of its birth,
Visit and bless the labouring earth.

Brood, holy Dove Divine,
On this chaotic night,
The formless void inspire
With order, love, and light.
Breathe a great calm, and at thy sway
Let rude anarchic wills obey.

Shake the dry bones that lie
In Death's sepulchral reign;
Come, wind of God and blow,
Blow on the myriads slain.
Let quickening nations feel the breath
That dissipates the power of death.

Rush suddenly from heaven,
In second Pentecost
Of sound and fire, to stir
Thy Church, O Holy Ghost:
Faith, fervour, unction, utterance give;
And midst the years thy work revive.

Leading and Light to Thee,
And Thee alone, belong;
Without whom nothing is
Holy, and nothing strong;
Who still proceedest from the Throne
Of God, and of the Lamb, alone.

All-holy Paraclete,
Pure breath of God, and prime,
Soothe the rebellious moods
Of our disordered time;
Come as the Wind, the Fire, the Dove,
With sevenfold grace the world to move.

H. J. R. Marston, M.A.
(Late Fellow of Durham University).

Icomb Rectory, Stow-on-the-Wold,
Epiphany, 1894.

[Price 3d. a dozen. To be obtained from the Author.]

---

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—The committee held a meeting on Wednesday last at the Wesleyan Chapel, Liverpool-street, when Rev. W. E. Codling, superintendent-minister, and Rev. Reeves Brown addressed the forty-five women present. They all belonged to the class sought. Two left for a refuge at once, and four others promised to come to the office next day to see Mr. M'Cree, the secretary, at the office in Red Lion-square, W.C.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE APPROACHING JUBILEE.

The fact that the Young Men's Christian Association, founded in the City of London fifty years ago, has already been established in 5158 towns—small and large—throughout the world, indicates clearly that a successful method was adopted by its founders.

The modus operandi during these fifty years, has been that converted young men have associated themselves together for mutual encouragement, and have sought by means of the united testimony of life and word to win their fellows to the knowledge and acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour.

The jubilee of the Association is to be celebrated in June next, on the occasion of the thirteenth international conference. Two thousand delegates from twenty-three countries are expected to gather in London on Friday, June 1. They will be welcomed in Exeter Hall, and a more public reception will be arranged later in the evening. Saturday will be devoted to conference; addresses on "The work of the Holy Spirit," will be delivered in English, French, and German by Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, by Pastor Appia (Paris) and Pastor Krummacher (Berlin) respectively. On Sunday afternoon a Bible Reading will be given in Exeter Hall by Rev. F. B. Meyer.

This Sunday, June 3, will form an important feature in the public arrangements. All the clergy and ministers in England and Wales are being invited by the English National Council to unite in the commemoration by preaching a special sermon to young men on that day, and, where practicable, to give a collection towards the Jubilee Fund of the Council. A circular requesting such co-operation on the part of the ministers is being posted this week. It is signed by the president and vice-presidents of the Council and by representative men in connection with each church; by the Venerable Archdeacon of London, Dr. Sinclair; by Rev. Henry J. Pope, President of the Wesleyan Conference; by Rev. James Muir, D.D., Moderator-elect of the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England; by Rev. T. M. Morris and Rev. George Short, President and President-elect of the Baptist Union; and by Rev. George S. Barrett, President of the Congregational Union. The proposal is also supported by the following commendation from His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury:—

Lambeth Palace, S.E.
January 27, 1894.

My Dear Sir,—I am much interested to hear of the way in which it is proposed to celebrate the thirteenth "World's Conference," and the jubilee commemoration of the Y.M.C.A. in June next. And I wish God speed to all such united effort as the Association represents for Christianising and assisting young men.—Believe me,

Yours very faithfully,
E. W. Cantuar.

George Williams, Esq.

Monday forenoon and afternoon will be devoted to the proceedings of the conference, and the evening to a public reception. Tuesday again will be occupied by the conference until evening, when, by invitation of the Dean and Chapter, a jubilee thanksgiving service will be held in St. Paul's Cathedral, a special sermon being preached by the Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Ripon.

On Wednesday (jubilee day) a thanksgiving meeting will be held in Exeter Hall in the forenoon. In the evening a grand Jubilee gathering will be held in the Royal Albert Hall, South Kensington. This building will accommodate between 4000 and 5000 guests. During the evening a selection of music will be performed; a display of gymnastic feats will be given by several representative teams.

Stereopticon views of important Association buildings throughout the world, together with the portraits of prominent workers, will be exhibited. Brief addresses will also be given by chosen speakers.

Thursday will, according to Conference custom, be devoted to an excursion—a pleasant change after the confinement and mental strain incident to a prolonged conference.

This will be the largest and most representative conference ever held in connection with the Association. An interesting feature in the proceedings will be the arrangement for dining the delegates en masse—a daily dinner party of unsurpassed dimensions. By the courtesy of the City Lands Committee of the Corporation, a site has been freely granted on the Thames Embankment for the erection of a pavilion, containing an area of more than 22,000 square feet.

The prayers of God's people are earnestly besought that this occasion may not only result in drawing to the important work of the Association the attention and adequate support of the Christian public, but that it may prove to be a testimony to the world of Christian fellowship and unity, and the means of salvation to thousands of young men. That God may be glorified in the commemoration is the earnest desire of the Y.M.C.A. workers.

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. J. H. Sanders has resigned the secretaryship at South Molton to enter medical mission work. The roll now stands at 130.

New associations have been formed at Upton Park, Hanley, Ryhope, Ledbury, and one Irish centre; those at Penarth and Workington are in abeyance.

The Association at Buda-Pesth has invited the International Conference to meet there, following the assembly in London in June. The conferences are held, as a rule, once in three years.

The Cape Town Y.M.C.A. Committee earnestly call the attention of young men in this country to the over-crowded condition of the labour market in South Africa, with the view of dissuading emigration on their part.

The Tunbridge Wells Association held its annual meeting on Wednesday, Jan. 24. There was a crowded attendance. Hon. P. Carteret Hill, president, and Mr. J. H. Putterill gave an address on the work of the Y.M.C.A.

Upwards of 200 young men accepted the invitation of Mr. W. H. Seagram to an international social reception in the rooms of the Hackney Y.M.C.A., on Thursday last. Addresses were given by members of several countries, Continental and Oriental.

The quarterly paper of the Scottish Executive tells of success in nearly every field of Association activity. The members are encouraged to go forward, strong in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, and willing to be used by Him in the work that lies nearest to their hands.

The Scottish Associations have placed another soldier of the Cross in the foreign field. The Leith Fellowship Union is to be represented in China by Mr. Alexander Menzies (formerly of Perth), towards whose support in connection with the China Inland Mission £50 a year is subscribed.

There was a large and representative gathering at the monthly meeting of the National Executive on Friday afternoon. Among several important questions discussed was that of the possibility of closer relations being established between the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. The counsel were unanimous in the opinion that no organic union of the Associations was possible, but a resolution was arrived at to further consider the subject, as it was generally felt that the two organisations might with great advantage co-operate much more fully than hitherto, at special seasons and for special purposes.

The Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christendom writes:—The Young Men's Christian Association owes its splendid building and appointments, which are first-rate, principally to Mr. James Stokes (of America) and to M. Alfred André (of Paris). The latter was a fruit of Reginald Radcliffe's visit to Paris in 1861. It was a thrilling incident, when in a gymnastic hall in that blessed and subdued tumult of a real revival meeting, when souls were being born of God, the evangelist, who had just then no interpreter, said: "André! Tell them what the Lord did for you yesterday"; and the first simple testimony was given to the Lord's power to save, with the simplicity of a new-born soul. How many other Christian endeavours, carried on with success to this day, were the outcome of the three weeks' visit of that evangelist with his friend Shuldham Henry, who last New Year's Day was called up higher.

An international social reception was given on Thursday evening at the rooms of the Hackney Association, in Mare-street, to members of the Dutch, French, German, and other Y.M.C. Associations. About fifty Germans, twenty Frenchmen, twelve Dutchmen, and a sprinkling of other nationalities were present. The secretary of the Hackney branch welcomed Mr. Seagram and their foreign brethren, and announced that next June would be celebrated the jubilee of the Y.M.C.A. In honour of the fiftieth anniversary an international conference, lasting a week, would be held. There would be a thanksgiving service at St. Paul's Cathedral and meetings at Exeter Hall. Various gentlemen spoke for France, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and India, reporting the progress of the association in their countries. One of the most interesting was a native of Koordistan, Mr. Oshoo K. Jahn, a Nestorian Christian.

GOD'S SEED will come to God's harvest.—Rutherford.

LIVERPOOL CHURCH MISSION.

The first week of this general mission has proved encouraging. There is abundant evidence that God is owning the Mission, and blessing it to the salvation of souls. The number of churches taking part in the Mission is seventy-five, and the number of missioners one hundred. The addresses to business men at St. Nicholas's, by Rev. W. H. Aitken, and at St. George's, by Rev. F. S. Webster, are being attended by a goodly number of merchants and traders, and also of clerks. The attendance on the first day was small, but each successive day afterwards the numbers went on increasing. At St. Catherine's, Edge Hill, the awakening has been remarkable. One evening, at an after-meeting, hands were held up in all directions by seekers after salvation. Last Saturday afternoon the Bishop of Liverpool delivered an excellent address in St. Peter's Pro-Cathedral to the missioners and the parochial workers, of both of whom there were a considerable number present.

A Liverpool contemporary says:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, the celebrated mission preacher, has been delivering addresses to business men in St. Nicholas's in connection with the Mission. The services have been of brief duration, lasting only half an hour. But those who are acquainted with Mr. Aitken's manner and style of preaching, know full his wonderful capacity in giving utterance to a vast amount of weighty and important truths, even in the short space of a few minutes. For special ability in giving addresses to business men there are few preachers who can equal Mr. Aitken. He has a business argumentative way about him which men of commerce can appreciate and understand. He appeals to the intellect while he is probing the heart, and as he proceeds onwards and corners those who are amongst the unconverted of his hearers, he opens up God's grand plan of salvation, and urges with thrilling force and tremendous earnestness the importance of immediate decision for Christ.

Rev. T. E. Cleworth is the missioner at St. Luke's, a thoroughly out-and-out working church, the vicar, Rev. J. T. Madden, being widely known as a devoted worker. Here, as in several of the other churches, the attendances have been large, the interest very marked, and the blessing most evident.

BOSTON MONDAY LECTURES.

A correspondent writes:—Rev. Joseph Cook began his nineteenth yearly course of lectures in Boston on January 22. The attendance was, perhaps, as large as in former years, which is of itself a suggestive proof of the hold of Mr. Cook on the American public. The moral and spiritual tone of the Boston lectures has always been strongly evangelical and counteractive of the liberalism of New England.

It is hoped that the present course will maintain this high level, though yesterday's lecture, which was a vigorous defence and justification of the Parliament of Religions at Chicago, seemed to strike a lower tone.

THE Y.W.C.A.

At the annual meeting of the Hereford branch it was reported that during the year two members had proceeded to the foreign mission field. Addresses were delivered by Revs. H. Askwith, J. Meredith, W. L. B. Janvrin, Havergal Shaw, and Mr. C. B. Cox.

In the Woman's Signal for last week there is the first instalment of a discussion on the proposed amalgamation of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. Mr. F. A. Atkins leads off strongly in the affirmative, and he is supported by several writers; while others (including Mr. George Williams) decline to express a definite opinion.

The growth of the Glasgow Young Women's Christian Association is truly marvellous, as may be seen from the fact that whereas only seventy persons were present at its first social meeting fourteen years ago, the annual gathering this year had to be accommodated in the City Hall. At this annual meeting the audience applauded a lady for her singing of a sacred solo, and this the chairman objected to as too much of a "worldly" demonstration, and suggested that "Hallelujah" might be shouted.

GENERAL MELLINET, the doyen of the French Army, who has recently died at the age ninety-five years, had all his life abstained from stimulants. He was healthy and vigorous to the last.

Letters to the Editor.

THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST.

We have received a number of letters on "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost," and insert a selection from them below. First, we give the main portion of one by Rev. James Gall, of Edinburgh, who has written at some length on a grammatical issue which we hold to be beside the main question. Our venerable brother criticises the R.V. rendering of Acts xix. 2, and apparently contends for the A.V. translation. He says:—

"Our Anglican friends who hold that baptism is God's ordinance by which we are to receive the Holy Ghost, are opposed to any translation that would imply that He could be received in any other way; and therefore they adopt Alford's view, that 'believing' includes all its accidents and accompaniments (see Alford on Eph. i. 13), and that it must include baptism. They, therefore, interpret Paul's question as 'Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?' (see Alford on this verse). Their objection to the authorised version is that it is not grammatically correct. This is a very strong assertion, for what better translation can there be of a Greek past participle than an English past participle? Pisteusantes is the Greek past participle, and having believed is the English past participle. What could be better or more literal?

"It is well known that the only way to ascertain the meaning of any word or phrase in Scripture is to observe the use that the Holy Ghost makes of it in other places, and I mentioned in my first letter that 'This phrase of an aorist participle combined with an aorist indicative occurs in every page of the New Testament, and that not once in a hundred times are the two events simultaneous.' I deny that, grammatically, the participle is simultaneous with the indicative. The interval may be longer or shorter, a moment or fifty years, but there must be an interval. The birth and the baptism are neither simultaneous nor identical. This is a fundamental truth.

"Those who deny this, and seek to discourage their brethren from striving to be endued with this miraculous power of convincing the world of sin, and righteousness, and judgment, take upon themselves an awful responsibility. When God gave us his Son, He gave us life and all the beauties of holiness, which needs no supplementing; but He gave us no propagative power, so that Noah preached for 120 years without a single convert. But with the gift of the Holy Ghost He gave propagative power, so that in one day the baptized Church gathered into the kingdom 3000 souls. The Spirit has been quenched ever since the Romish apostasy, and now I give my parting testimony, that until the Church again receives the baptism of the Holy Ghost, the conversion of the world is an utter impossibility."

On this we raise no question, although several are suggested. We would remark, however, that "R. C. M." and Mr. Gall are in perfect agreement on the grammatical point. "Having believed" (past participle), "received ye?" (past indicative), has been preferred as a rendering by "R. C. M." Therefore, on this no further discussion is needful. The real question is: Is receiving the Holy Ghost necessarily consequent upon believing on the crucified and risen Christ?

---

Dear Sir,—On a question of such importance as the above, perhaps I may be permitted to say a word—and in the first place we may ask—What does the phrase mean? Mr. Gall has, I think, given the clearest and most Scriptural explanation of the twofold work of the Holy Spirit; (1) the indwelling Spirit, given to every believer when regenerated, giving him new desires and power to walk aright before the world as an example and to work within the Church (only, I think, as regards discipline); and (2), the clothing spirit, enabling him who receives it to work outside the Church, i.e., to evangelise (and also, I think, to do edifying work within it; see Luke xxiv. 49).

The parable of the Talents (Matt. xxv. 15), etc., where there are differences in the amount of the gifts, seems to point to the latter, and that of the Pounds (see Luke xix. 13), where at the start each receives the same amount, points to the former.

Again, when, after his resurrection, our Lord breathed on his disciples (Jno. xx, 22, 23), and said "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," He gave them authority to exercise discipline within the Church, but none to work outside it, until, at Pentecost, the Holy Spirit descended to earth, where He now is residing as a person.

Here, then, we recognise differences, and as illustrations of these differences may be named Saul and Balaam, clothed with, but never indwelt by, God's Spirit. Also Samson, whose clothing left him when he had betrayed God's secret to Delilah.

It is, however, of great importance to recognise the close connection between the graces and gifts of the Spirit. The former is in the Greek charis, the latter charisma, which is the word used for "gifts" in 1 Cor. xii.; and these gifts are not one only, viz., that of preaching with apostolic power to the unconverted, but many. In verse 8 we have (1) the word of wisdom, (2) the word of knowledge, (3) faith, (4) gifts of healing, (5) working of miracles, (6) prophecy (including preaching), (7) discerning of spirits, (8) tongues, (9) interpretation of tongues. Again in verse 28 we have (1) apostles, (2) prophets, (3) teachers, (4) miracles, (5) healings, (6) helps, (7) governments, (8) diversities of tongues.

The word charis first occurs in Luke i. 30; ii. 40-52; iv. 22; vi. 32, 33, 34; and in this 6th chapter, "What thank have ye?" shows that the word means "favour to the unworthy."

The word charisma shows that the gift is closely connected with grace, charis.

Let us also carefully read Jno. iv. 13, 14, where Jesus says to the woman of Samaria, "the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well (fountain) of water springing up unto everlasting life"; and Jno. vii. 37 to 39, "He that believeth in me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water."

Having considered so much, do we not need to ask ourselves the question whether we are using what we have already got in such a manner—I will not say to such an extent—as to justify us in asking God for an increase of the evangelistic gift?

Is not the need much greater that we should wait on Him clothed (figuratively) with sackcloth, our Bibles open at Jno. xvii., for a spirit of willingness to obey teachings contained in it, for which our Lord so earnestly prayed?

Have we any desire to accept and conform ourselves to the whole of the teaching of the Bible? Do we not rather, one body or another of Evangelical professing Christians, give a flat denial to some part of its teaching? And when brought to bay on this particular point, talk of "non-essentials," or say "That is controversial matter," as if Satan would allow any point of importance to go uncontroverted. I might name a few of the more prominent of such points in the Evangelical Church, but refrain from doing so in this place.

It will suffice for us to remind ourselves that the object of this dispensation is to call out living stones from the world, through the evangelist, and to shape and fit them together into the living temple of God, through those having other gifts; also to bear witness to the world, and not to make a Church of it—in other words not to convert it. The absence of this witness is one very great hindrance to the work of the Gospel, and this witness is absent owing to the neglect of solid teaching of converts and want of unity (through the truth) on the part of the Church as a whole.

Our Lord (Luke xii. 50) said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with."

In conclusion, and to answer the question at the beginning of this letter. As the Holy Ghost who descended at Pentecost is still present, have not all believers this baptism for service? I think so; but all have not the gift of the evangelist, and never were intended to do this work in their own persons. But if nothing else, they may be helps; if neither prophets, pastors, nor teachers. And this view I commend to the prayers and thoughts of your readers.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, M. A.

London, S.W., January 30, 1894.

---

Dear Sir,—I thank you most warmly for your Expository Notes on this subject, one upon which I believe there always will be a divergence of opinion amongst true children of God. The result of both interpretations as seen in the Christian life may often be very much the same, but we must none the less endeavour to ascertain the mind of God on so important a point.

Shortly after my conversion twenty years ago, I was privileged to attend a series of Bible readings in a private house, conducted by Rev. Jas. S. Fox, and I can never thank God enough for his clear and practical exposition of Scriptures bearing upon this matter. We were studying the Acts of the Apostles and saw how, while the Word of God was being preached, the Holy Ghost fell on those who believed, the presence of the Holy Ghost in the believers was shown by unmistakable evidences. Never do we hear of these converts (except in the case of the Samaritans upon whom it is specially recorded that the Holy Ghost had not fallen) being asked whether they had received the baptism of the Holy Ghost. In my own case I knew that nothing but the power and presence of the Holy Ghost in my heart could have made of me so new a creation. Though so very far from what I might have been, yet everything was made new; what was before gain I now counted loss, and what could this be but the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace? I believe it is absolutely impossible for anyone to be converted and not—in conversion—to receive the Holy Ghost into the heart, though very possibly the convert does not know himself that what he experiences is the direct result of the Holy Spirit's working.

But those who think with you do not, as Mr. Brooke says, feel that they need not trouble about receiving the Holy Ghost. They covet earnestly the best gifts—they long for deeper draughts of that Living Water. Having felt the Spirit's power, they know there is more and more to follow even in this life, and yet more deeply still will they drink above, "where to an ocean fulness his mercy doth expand." They value as highly as Mr. Brooke the opportunities afforded by Keswick and other similar gatherings, but they do not go to receive a baptism from God. They go to surrender themselves, and by the power of the Holy Spirit within them to obey the Divine command, "Be filled with the Spirit."

If teaching generally were more full on the subject of conversion, many more would enter sooner upon their priceless inheritance, and many weak ones would be spared the painful doubt as to whether they had received the Holy Spirit or not. By applying one or more of the Scriptural tests (e.g., love to the brethren), they would know whether they were born again or not, and, if born again, they would know that the Holy Ghost was present, and ready to occupy every recess of our hearts, as we on our part were ready to open them to his indwelling presence. Those who have not been so privileged in early teaching may be converted, and yet be ignorant of the fact that the Holy Ghost, is in them (unless they have believed falsely), and not yielding to his influence their lives may become dwarfed. Then, when they come under the influence of Keswick, they are led to yield themselves up to God more or less absolutely, and they then experience for the first time the power of the Holy Ghost whom they have so long "quenched."

Pardon the length of this letter. I regard and love Mr. Brooke as one greatly favoured by God, and taught of the Spirit, and delight in the privilege of listening to him from time to time; but he would be the last to claim infallibility on this or any other point. Though some Scriptures seem at first sight to support his view, yet none are opposed to yours, unless we admit that all "disciples" are true believers, which is not the case now, nor has it (I think) ever been so; even of the first twelve one was Judas. Again thanking you for your "Notes."—Yours in Christ, Disciple.

Reading, January 28th.

---

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to make a few observations on this subject, in addition to those which you have already inserted?

The infirmities of age, under which your respected correspondent Mr. Gall writes, in The Christian, January 25, preclude criticism of his remarks upon the scholarship of the Revisers and others, and also render it needless. Your readers can only wish that he may be kept in the peace of God which he enjoys.

In the letter of Mr. Gourlay, the question is asked: Why is it that some Christians enjoy the Spirit in Pentecostal fulness, and others evidently do not? With regard to this question, I should like to ask, whom does he mean by Christians who enjoy the gift of Pentecostal fulness? Does he mean those who say or imply this of themselves? If so, I think the very fact of their doing so would show that they are not filled with the Spirit, but are deficient in one of the chief fruits of the Spirit, namely, humility.

Or does he mean those who do not thus speak of themselves, but who exhibit in their lives such meekness, such self-denial, such humility, such love, such earnestness in working for Christ, that others are compelled to say of them, that they enjoy Pentecostal fulness?

If the latter be the sense meant, and I take it that it is the only true and worthy sense, then the way to attain to this is no new-fashioned way, discovered in the nineteenth century, but the way that has been adopted by the brightest of God's saints all along: the way that is laid down plainly in Scripture, namely, by looking out of self and trusting to Christ, through whose strength, we are assured, we can do all things, and without whom we can do nothing; by praying, as Paul prayed for believers, that we may be "strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man;" by seeking to yield ourselves to his gracious influence, by avoiding all that tends to quench it, and by drinking the "spiritual milk" of God's Word that we may grow thereby; for growth in grace corresponds to being more and more filled by the Spirit. By such means, and only by such means, can a life be lived which we may take as a proof of enjoying Pentecostal fulness.

Doubtless the world abounds with Christians who live below their privileges, who fail to realise the full benefit of the baptism of the Spirit, which, according to our Lord's promise, they received when they became believers, as has been shown by "R. C. M." and others. We may be thankful that attention is being drawn to this deficiency in these days; but, on the other hand, we need all of us to take care that we do not fall into the snare of spiritual pride and self-satisfaction, or be led away by unsound theories.

JOSEPH TANNER.

THE JEWISH PRIESTHOOD.

DEAR SIR,—In Mr. Fenton's article on the Jewish "Feast of the Tabernacles," in THE CHRISTIAN of Jan. 25, it is stated that the twenty-four courses of priests were for a fortnight's service each. This seems to be an error. Each course is considered to have served for one week, coming in on the Sabbath and going out on the following Sabbath. See 2 Chron. xxiii. 8, as compared with 1 Chron. xxiv. Also see article "Priest" in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible. —Yours, &c., H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

REPLY BY REV. G. L. FENTON.

The argument for the birth of Jesus Christ in September was avowedly taken from an article in The Phenix, Vol. I., A.D. 1707, entitled "Christ's Birth Mistimed. Proving that Jesus Christ was not born in December," by R.S. The statement to which Dr. Grattan Guinness takes objection runs thus in the original: "Begin thou thy reckoning from Abib or March, giving and allowing to every lot or course of the twenty-four courses of the priests one fortnight, for there were twenty-four courses of priest, and but twelve months; therefore every priest must needs serve a fortnight for his course, for twenty-four fortnights make twelve months." "R. S." (a Hebrew scholar, whoever he was) must have had the passages in Chronicles before him. It would seem, therefore, that he regarded the expressions as not inconsistent with his theory of bi-sabbatical courses.

"A SERIOUS QUESTION" SOLVED.

SIR,—I can add my testimony to that of your correspondent, "One Tenth," that if every Christian would give to the Lord's work some regular proportion of his income there would be no lack of funds for agencies of every kind, at home and abroad. Thirty years ago as a young man I resolved to set apart not less than a tenth of my income as a glad offering to God of that which He enabled me to earn. It was not a large sum then, but has increased more than twentyfold since, and all through the thirty years it has been a great delight to contribute regularly and increasingly to numerous Christian efforts, whereas had I not given proportionately I feel sure I should have considered that the claims of a large family would not have permitted me to afford anything like so much.

I have also done a good deal of collecting for various objects, and have invariably known at once the few persons who conscientiously give in this manner from the cordial reception I met with, and their ready and liberal response, it being simply a question with them as to what amount of the Lord's portion they should devote to this or that object; while the majority of Christians, alas! though living many of them in great comfort and luxury, and spending freely on dress, begin at once to speak of their many expenses, badness of trade, and numerous charitable demands, and end either by declining to contribute at all, or produce a tiny sum, more as a personal favour, than as an offering to the Giver of all. To realise the deep joy and privilege of giving, a certain proportion of the income must be set aside as specially the Lord's.—Yours faithfully, J. B.

THE SUGGESTED "WORKERS' UNION."

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of February 1 you call attention in "Notes and Comments" to a very important matter affecting the future interests of many humble workers in connection with various Christian societies, or otherwise, for whom little or no provision is made, when old age or a permanent breakdown of health occurs (London City Mission excepted).

If some scheme were organised with an influential committee, who themselves would subscribe a sufficient sum to form a nucleus, then call together the secretaries of Christian institutions, these could furnish the number working under each society, and ascertain the names of those wishful to "co-operate" by making partial provision for themselves, to be supplemented from a central fund. The subject, no doubt, bristles with difficulties, but a solution is possible, and might be based upon (1) years of service; (2) age and condition of health; (3) amount paid into Pension Fund, etc.

A certain number of years must elapse—say five—before any subscriber could become a recipient, so as to allow of sufficient capital to accumulate. This would ensure a sound financial basis, unless a wealthy committee subscribed a large sum to meet special cases. I have no doubt many will be glad, if afforded the opportunity, of subscribing to a fund which aims at mutual help in time of need. With the hope that such an agency may be started and prosper, and thanks for your kindness in ventilating and mooting the subject.—Yours faithfully, A WORKER.

"THE COMING REVOLUTION."

DEAR SIR,—The great difficulty in explaining the Socialist hope through the columns of a newspaper is the necessity for brevity. If, therfore, I am obliged to leave several points liable to misconception, I trust that my friendly critics will not conclude that a satisfactory explanation is not forthcoming. In "Cantab's" friendly remarks I have nothing to take exception to, except his misquotation of John iii. 19, which, whatever the actual facts of the world to-day, does not state that men "love" darkness, because their deeds "are" evil, but that on the occasion stated they "loved" it, "because their deeds were evil."

I heartily accept Mr. Douglas's assurance that he did not wish to give Christian Socialists pain, but I must again ask him, when he says that his picture is presented "in the very words with which Socialism has supplied" him, to write Social-ists and not Social-ism.

Social-ism is a principle, and a movement. There is no authoritative text-book of it to be quoted. The only one that I, as a Christian Socialist, recognise as such is the recorded teachings and example of my Master. The majority of things said and done in the name of Socialism, like the majority of things said and done in the name of Christianity, have very probably met with Christ's disapproval; but it does not thereby follow that the principles either of Christianity or of Socialism are at fault.

In our own land the "tide of Socialism" is, I believe, "flowing Christward"; if in other lands it is not so, "Christians" are to blame for it. When almost all sections of Christians have, by their conduct, declared "You can serve God and Mammon," what wonder is it if Socialists, abjuring the service of Mammon, fly also in ignorance from that of the Christ whose followers they find owning allegiance to their sworn foe? With Mr. Douglas's closing sentences I quite concur, except that I should say that "the Christian hope centres," not "in the Coming King," but in the coming of the King. If Christ be not a present King, "let us eat and drink," for all endeavour, Christian and Socialistic, must be a vain thing. It is for the reality of the Kingdom of Christ that Christian Socialists contend.

As to the principles of Social-ism there is, I believe, no material difference between the various bodies of Socialists, and no difference, I believe further, between Socialists on the one hand and Jesus Christ on the other, if his plain words be not explained away.

As to the methods of Social-ists, there are all kinds of differences, some being as opposed to the methods of Christ as light to darkness, though not more opposed, perhaps, than many of the methods adopted by "Christians" for the furtherance of Christianity. As to the great principle of Socialism, I know, as I said before, no authoritative text-book to quote. I might quote several maxims from the New Testament from which it could be fathered; but I think no Socialist, whatever his school, would dissent from this statement, which I pen off-hand:—The fundamental principle of Socialism is, that Privilege, unaccompanied by wholly equivalent duties to society, is morally degrading to the privileged, and results in the degradation of the unprivileged, morally and physically; and, therefore, no form of society is sound in which Privilege exists, otherwise than as a reward to the individual (but not to his descendants also) for specially laborious, responsible, or distasteful service to his fellows.

But both "Cantab." and Mr. Douglas seem to feel that the terrible fact of sin makes all approach to the Socialist—and that is the Christian—ideal impossible except for isolated individuals. I do not see how such a position can be held except in the very face of New Testament teaching. Is it nothing that, when the teachings and example of their Master were freshest in their recollections, when the wonderful gift of the Holy Spirit had been just received with most remarkable demonstrations of power, when the eyes of the disciples were most constantly fixed on the ascended Lord, the Apostles should have instituted and directed the largest experiment on extreme Socialist lines that the world has, I suppose, ever known? Nineteenth century "faith" requires us to believe that the very first result of the gift of the promised "Guide into all truth," to the still unsullied Church was—a great failure and a grand mistake! I could sooner believe all the miracles of the Romish Church! Christ declared his work to be two-fold, not only to save individuals, but to save the "cosmos," or, as we should say now, society.

Sin partakes largely of the characteristics of disease, only all sin is highly infectious. While sin therefore can, no more than disease, be annihilated in the present dispensation, its more virulent and contagious forms can, like those of disease, be reduced to a minimum by the creation of surroundings unsuitable to their development.

This is the object of modern Socialism, and this was, I believe, the object of Christ when He founded the communistic circle of the Twelve, and when he laid down, in the Sermon on the Mount, one social precept after another for the regulation of his "Kingdom." That the members of this Kingdom were to be regenerated men goes without saying; that they were to form, isolated by their principles and customs in the very centre of a capitalistic society, a regenerated community for every purpose of life living in a regenerated atmosphere, is the truth that Post-Reformation Christianity appears to me almost wholly to have missed. I believe in the socialising of the world by means of the Christ-ianising of the Church. My complaint, as a Socialist, against modern evangelism is that its aims stops at the individual, and that it ignores the Gospel of the Kingdom. My fear, as an Evangelical Christian, is that, if Evangelical religion assumes an attitude of opposition to the principles of Socialism, it will prove the ruin, in our times, of both Socialism and Evangelical Christianity.

Dover. HENRY BAZETT.

THE PURITY MEETING IN CALCUTTA.

SIR,—In your issues of Dec. 28 and Jan. 4 are two letters to which I trust you will allow me to draw attention, as they bear on a very important subject, viz., the purity question in India, that land of woman's degradation. Mr. Joseph Alexander, in his letter in your issue of Dec. 28, writes in the most eulogistic terms of Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, and the prominent part he took in that great meeting in Calcutta. Mrs. Dyer in her letter in THE CHRISTIAN of Jan. 4 takes objection to this eulogy, because this Indian gentleman occupied an important judicial position in the case of Lutchminnin at Patna, and "The Age of Consent Bill" in its passage through the Legislative Council. Now, to those of us who can remember India thirty or forty years ago, and the position an Indian gentleman like Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter would have then occupied, had he taken up that attitude, it must be perfectly clear that an immense advance has been made in the cause of "Social Purity" in India, when a meeting like that to which Mr. Alexander alludes, could have been held in the Town Hall in Calcutta! and the highest ranks of Indian society so well represented at it. To me it seems the first important protest from the upper classes of educated Indian gentlemen against the degradation of woman in India, and when a movement, on the lines of this purity campaign, as laid down by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., emanates from those occupying the position of Sir Romesh, we may be assured it cannot rest there, but under the fostering care of enlightened educated men in the highest social position, must bear fruit in the not distant future.

Whatever Sir Romesh's actions or opinions have been in the past, he now stands, in my opinion, committed to a line of action on this important question which must work an entire revolution in the Zenana system, where the relations between the sexes call for such a thorough reformation as will enable the future nobility of India, from their earliest associations with their female relatives, to treat them with that consideration and respect which is inseparable from the restoration of woman in the East to the position which God intended her to occupy, and which she has held with such benefit and blessing in Christian countries like our own.—Yours faithfully, ROBT. PRINGLE, M.D., Brigade Surgeon.

4, Granville-park, Blackheath, S.E., London.

---

THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, presiding at the annual meeting of the Winchester Diocesan Branch of the C.E.T.S., spoke of the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday, saying that he thought Saturday night was more dangerous still.

OPORTO.—For some time an interesting work, in connection with the Portuguese Reformed Church, has been carried on at Rua do Visconde de Bobeda, near S. Lazaro, Oporto. Situated in a densely-populated quarter, the opportunities for work are very great, but adverse circumstances and want of means have sadly hindered progress. The number of adherents is increasing, while the interest excited amongst outsiders has grown greatly during the last few months. A school for boys is carried on, where, if the space allowed, and there were sufficient teachers, hundreds of boys might be brought up with a knowledge of the Gospel. As it is, sixty boys, big and little, are taught by one master in a not over large room, and many applicants are refused admission. There is no girls' school, and, sad to say, even the daughters of members receive no Gospel teaching. A fund has been started for buying ground on which to build a girls' school and to enlarge the one for boys. The schoolmaster's salary and occasional extra expenses of repairing the school-house, &c., have been paid by the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society. No debt of any kind will be incurred. As the Lord provides, so will the work develop.

FRED. W. FLOWER.

No. 118, Rua do Barao de S. Cosme, Oporto.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

The deputation this year was Dr. Bruce and Rev. A. Elwin, of Hangchow, China, who preached and spoke to large gatherings. The annual meeting.

Wesleyan Home Missions were represented on Sunday week in Oxford, when the anniversary was held, and Rev. J. Loxley attended as a deputation, and gave an interesting account of his work as a missionary among the soldiers at Aldershot.

The annual meeting of the Oxford branch of the British Women's Temperance Association was held last week. Mrs. T. H. Green, widow of the late Prof. Green, of Balliol, presides over this branch, which is doing good service. A Gospel Temperance Mission is now being arranged for, and will be held shortly.

Last summer, the Archbishop of Canterbury was prevented from fulfilling an Oxford engagement by reason of the death of a brother. But last Sunday he was enabled to fulfil it by preaching at St. Mary's. There was an immense congregation, and a sermon on Humility, entirely characteristic of the Archbishop. In the evening he spoke at Hertford College in aid of the Mission to Assyrian Christians, in which he takes so deep an interest. The Dean of Christ Church and Sir Charles Turner also spoke.

A meeting was held on Tuesday week at St. Mary Hall in connection with the Guild of St. Matthew, the subject being "The Living Wage." Rev. Prof. Shuttleworth, of King's, London, presided and spoke, and Mr. Herbert Burrows also addressed the meeting. Without necessarily endorsing all the views propounded, it may be safely said that such meetings serve the admirable purpose of calling the attention of young men in Oxford to the pressing social problems of the day, and of compelling such to face them earnestly.

Canon Christopher's Missionary Breakfast on Saturday was once more a great success in numbers, representation, and interest. The number present was nearly 300; the representation was indicative of the large-heartedness of the Canon, who had "clergy and ministers of all denominations" present, while the interest centred in Dr. Bruce, whose yeoman service in Persia is so well known to the missionary world. Canon Christopher's breakfast is always the first meeting of the C.M.S. anniversary at Oxford, the next three days being taken up with sermons and meetings.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Sunday the University sermon was preached by the Hulsean Lecturer, Dr. Mandell Creighton, Bishop of Peterborough.

The Vice-Chancellor has appointed Rev. J. E. Welldon, Master of Harrow, to preach the Ramsden sermon on Whit-Sunday.

Among colonial and missionary bishops expected to visit England this spring are Bishop Smyth, of Lebombs; Bishop Scott and Bishop Moule, of China; and the Bishop of Rangoon.

Professor Ryle read a paper before the "Quærists" Society in Queens' College on Wednesday evening, on "The Inspiration of Holy Scripture." It was candid and reverent, and listened to with deep attention.

Rev. Silvester Horne, of Kensington, gave a most interesting lecture in Victoria-road Congregational Chapel on Tuesday evening on "The Independent." He boldly exposed the bitter action of the English prelates to these early and faithful adherents of Congregationalism.

Annual sermons were preached in five Cambridge churches on Sunday on behalf of the Missions to Seamen. Rev. F. H. Webb-Peploe, preaching at Holy Trinity in the morning, gave most interesting personal reminiscences of the excellent work being done on the Tyne.

An influential meeting was convened at the Guildhall on Saturday afternoon, presided over by the Lord Bishop of Ely, to give information about the aims, work, and progress of the Church House, Westminster. Among the speakers were the Bishop of Peterborough, Professor Jebb, and Professor Ryle.

The Cambridge Auxiliary of the Church of England Young Men's Society seems to be in a flourishing condition. The yearly report read at the annual meeting on Thursday is highly encouraging. The religious element is well to the fore. The mission conducted by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of North Brixton, last March was fraught with much blessing. Rev. H. C. G. Moule's fortnightly Bible Class still does good and constant service.

On Monday evening, at the usual meeting of the Cambridge Missionary Union, in the Henry Martyn Hall, the Rev. J. G. Garrett gave a highly interesting account of his work in Ceylon. Though this branch of the foreign field is believed to be the best manned, the need still for workers is nothing less than "awful." The avenues of human resource being so frequently closed in the mission field, there the lesson of simple confidence in God is best shown.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The Endeavourers at Christ Church, Birmingham, entertained, on Monday, a number of poor children to tea.

The members of the Yorktown C.E. Society have opened a room in a poor part of the town for work among neglected children.

The Endeavourers at Burdett-road, E., who are very enthusiastic in missionary matters, set apart one evening a quarter as missionary night.

The Mount Pleasant Society, Swansea, lately entertained 250 poor children to tea. After a number of bright testimonies, Rev. James Owen addressed the guests.

Many Christian Endeavourers observed Friday as "Endeavour Day," the C.E. movement being thirteen years old that day, having been inaugurated in Williston Manse (U.S.A.), on Feb. 2, 1881.

The C.E. Society, London-street, Basingstoke, at its monthly consecration meeting, held on January 31, admitted three new active members. The weekly meetings are felt to be increasingly helpful.

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew thus tersely defines the functions of two Christian Associations. "The Y.M.C.A. is the recruiting station of the churches. The Society of Christian Endeavour—doing the work in the interior of the church—is the citadel of the Christian camp inside the lines."

Since last April, after a special mission held by Mr. George Clarke with much blessing, a branch of the Christian Endeavour Society has been steadily growing and working at Christchurch, Hants, with over 130 active members and about 50 associates. A real spirit of prayer and testimony is evidenced by members consisting of all Evangelical denominations in the town.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Lord Overtoun has given £1250 to endow a bed in the Glasgow Royal Infirmary.

One of the most respected ministers in Ayrshire, the Rev. John Connell, of Dreghorn Free Church, celebrated his jubilee last week.

It was but meet that Lord Overtoun should preside at the anniversary of the Rutherglen Evangelistic Institute, which is actively aggressive, as his large chemical works are in the Royal burgh.

The Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society is doing a good work among seamen in the port by visitation, the distribution of literature, and the provision of reading rooms, gospel services, etc.

The memorial stone of the new Deaf and Dumb Institute for Glasgow and the West of Scotland, which is to be a fine building at the corner of West Regent and West Campbell Streets, is to be laid today by Lord Overtoun.

Dr. Marshall Lang, in concluding the series of lectures on "Pastoral Theology," which he has been giving in the University of Glasgow to the students and others, impressed on his hearers as the great elements of ministerial success, spirituality, courage, and holiness.

Mr. S. Evans, the head of the evangelistic work carried on in the Globe Halls in the east-end of Glasgow, has opened a tea-and-coffee palace, where the poor can be supplied with a cup of tea or coffee, with bread-and-butter, for 1d., and a bowl of soup for ½d. He has appealed for subscriptions to carry out this benevolent design.

Glasgow is about to have two notable accessions to its Free Church ministry. Rev. John Hall, who has made a distinct mark as a preacher in Cullen, has accepted a call to the Paisley-road Church in Glasgow; and it is understood that Rev. J. Paterson, of Belgrave Church, London, will fall in with the invitation to the pastorate of the White Memorial Church in the northern city.

In the Christian Institute, Glasgow, last week a well-attended meeting was held for the purpose of hearing Rev. R. H. Dyke, principal of the Training Institute at Morija, give an account of the triumphs of the Gospel in Basutoland, South Africa, in connection with the mission carried on by the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society. Lord Overtoun and Dr. Marshall Lang commended the work, which was described at length by Mr. Dyke.

Lord Provost Bell, of Glasgow, has thrown himself very heartily into the effort to increase the contributions to the benevolent institutions of the city. At the annual meeting of one of these, the Sick Children's Hospital, it was reported that the expenditure had exceeded the income by £1,007. He commented severely on this, and hoped the day would never come when the people would be taxed to relieve the distress of misery and illness.

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

Though unconnected with the above Society, we are well aware of the blessing it has been to our country. For many years its agents have been owned of the Lord in leading sinners to the Saviour, and in bringing about gracious awakenings in many parts of our land.

Its evangelists belong to different branches of the Evangelical Church, and are men well suited to the work, and who seek to co-operate with the ministers of religion in the districts where meetings are held.

It is with the greatest regret we have learned that, owing to the condition of affairs in Ireland, many who hitherto have cordially supported the Society are no longer able to do so, and at present the work has been threatened with a serious crippling of its usefulness by a financial deficiency of £700. Some of its subscribers have, however, doubled their subscriptions and brought this down to £500; but if outside aid be not given, the staff of labourers must be diminished.

This threatened crippling comes at a time when, more than ever, all the agents are urgently needed. Doors are opening, and the people are ready to hear.

We therefore venture respectfully to appeal to all the friends of Evangelical truth, who are longing for the time when Ireland shall submit to King Jesus, to come to the aid of this Society, and so enable it to continue without diminution the blessed work upon which in so many places the Master has set the seal of his approval.

R. J. Hamilton, J.P., Donegall-place, Belfast.
Thomas Sinclair, D.L., Tomb-street, Belfast.
H. M. Williamson, D.D., 7, Windsor-gardens, Belfast.
Henry Montgomery, M.A., 3, Lower-crescent, Belfast.

We cordially append our names to this appeal, and commend the Society to the sympathy and support of friends in England who seek the evangelisation of Ireland.

H. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park.
Marcus Rainsford, Belgrave Chapel.

IRISH NOTES.

A new Baptist church is about to be erected at Limerick at a cost of about £2000, and of this sum nearly £750 is in hand.

The Ulster Hospital for Sick Children is an excellent institution, and last year did a vast amount of good to the children of the poor.

Dr. Harry Guinness delivered a medical lecture last week in Dublin to over 1000 young men, and received nearly £200 for mission work.

The Sligo Congregational Church, of which Rev. Wm. Newman Hall is the pastor, has just observed its 103rd anniversary, and is in an encouraging condition.

At present two Presbyterian missionaries are needed for India and three for China. Two young ministers have placed themselves at the disposal of the Board of Missions for the purpoes.

The income of the Irish Baptist Home Mission for the past year was £2360, of which more than half was subscribed during the quarter ended December 31. It takes £3000 a year to carry on the work.

In order to arouse increased interest in mission work, a series of conferences has just been held in various Presbyterian Churches in Belfast, several congregations in a district being grouped for the purpose.

The Women's Temperance Association is doing a splendid work in Dublin among shopgirls, telegraph messengers, and cab and carmen, for whom it arranged during the year drawing-room meetings, garden parties, and pleasant amusements.

It is proposed that Mr. Thos. Sinclair, J.P., should be elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church next June. If this suggestion be adopted, as is not unlikely, Mr. Sinclair will be the first layman on whom the honour has been conferred.

A new mission house has been opened at No. 11, Florence-street, Dublin, by the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Among the Jews. A place of this kind was much needed where Hebrews could meet and converse with the missionary and use a reading-room, etc.

ANYONE CAN TEACH the clever, the interesting, the industrious. We teachers exist, I say boldly, for the dull, the idle, and the ungrateful. We exist for the hewers of wood and drawers of water, that they may hew their wood more cleverly, and draw their water more conscientiously.—Dr. Welldon.

OBITUARY.

REV. W. P. NEWELL, PARIS.

OUR French contemporaries record with sorrow the death of Rev. W. P. Newell, American pastor, for some years resident in Paris, aged fifty-five. A native of the United States, where he for a time laboured as a pastor, Mr. Newell took up residence in France about thirteen years ago, became warmly attached to the country, and devoted himself to all operations in the highest interest of the people. He was ever ready to help the work of the McAll Mission and the Société Centrale, while to young men and women from America his house was a veritable home from home. Among these in fact he carried on an Evangelical mission, with services in the English language.

MISS ALICE SPOFFORD.

Many workers for Christ, both at home and abroad, will feel they have lost a friend by the death of Miss Alice Spofford, who, for many years, was associated with Miss Anna Boobbyer in the various branches of Christ's service of which her house is the centre. Thousands of books have been lovingly prepared by her for the "Sailors' Book-bag Mission," and followed up by unceasing prayer; so that in a wide diversity of languages and circumstances, the sailors have been enabled to hear of Christ. And the workers in home and foreign mission fields, who have been nursed by her in hours of weakness and weariness, will thank God for the noble and unselfish life in which she embodied her testimony for Christ and her love for fellow-saints. After four months' patient, uncomplaining suffering, this dear worker was called to be with Christ on the 24th of January, and on the 27th her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery of Malvern. The service was conducted by Mr. Broadbent, of Birmingham.

MRS. GEORGE KERRY.

The honoured secretary in India of the Baptist Missionary Society had but returned to his field of labour at Calcutta, when a heavy blow fell upon him in the death of his dear wife, who passed away on January 11th. It is now nearly thirty-eight years since this devoted missionary left with her husband for India. For nearly the whole of this period she has had the Intally Orphan School under her care, an institution which was begun in 1820, and was one of the very first schools for the education of Bengali girls. When Mrs. Kerry entered upon her duties circumstances had so affected the institution that only two children remained. The numbers, however, rapidly grew until fifty or sixty children were being boarded and taught. Very many of her pupils are now teaching in Zenanas and Hindu schools. "In the death of this excellent woman," writes a correspondent, "a true mother in Israel is lost to the mission, as many a young European missionary on his entrance upon his work experienced Mrs. Kerry to be. Much sympathy will be felt for her bereaved husband."

MR. EDWARD BRITNOR, MANCHESTER.

The Independent Church and Sunday Schools at Oldham-road, Manchester, have sustained a serious loss in the death of Mr. Edward Britnor. Early in life Mr. Britnor entered the service of the late Mr. John Rylands, where he soon worked himself up to a position of importance. Ultimately he left Mr. Rylands to commence business on his own account, but a mutual regard was long cherished between them, and the influence of Mr. Rylands upon the character of the younger man has been often acknowledged. Under the faithful ministry of Rev. James Bedoll, Mr. Britnor entered upon his work as a teacher, contemporaneously with Rev. Dr. Macfarlane, of New Guinea fame, and Rev. David Hutton, of India. Some thirty-two years ago Mr. Britnor became secretary of the schools, and for upwards of twenty-six years discharged the duties of superintendent. He also served the church as its treasurer, and at the time of his decease was senior deacon. His ready sympathy, his largeness of heart, his wise counsel and unfailing attention to duty, together with his love of Evangelical truth, made him a pillar of strength to his fellow officers and staff of over fifty teachers.

MRS. ARCHIBALD ORR-EWING.

We have to record with deep sorrow, the departure on Sabbath last, a few weeks after her confinement, at Kiu-Kiang, China, of Mary Elizabeth, the beloved wife of Mr. Archibald Orr-Ewing, and eldest daughter of Mr. Robt. Scott. No particulars have reached us beyond the telegram containing the painful intelligence, but the following letter has a pathetic interest which our readers will appreciate. On Sept. 24, 1863, the day of Mary's birth, her father wrote to a relative a letter commencing "The Lord gave." Shortly before her twenty-first birthday that letter was sent to her, upon which she wrote the following to her father; her mother having died when she was twelve years old:—

My Dearest Father.—I feel this sheet of paper, nearly twenty-one years old, to be almost a sacred thing. Your dear hand on the day of my birth inscribed the words, "The Lord gave." Through nearly twenty-one years, no father could have been kinder, tenderer, and more patient. The Lord has not asked for me back again to Heaven yet, but I have clearly heard his voice in my heart, calling me to China to spend and be spent for Him. I am ready and willing, yea longing to carry the good news to those who are sitting in darkness and truly in the shadow of death. Their great and terrible need calls for speedy and immediate help, and there is no way in which I should so well like to celebrate my twenty-first birthday, as to have you to tell me that you freely give me back again to the Lord for China. I trust never to take any step in life without your full consent, for I am fully alive to the value of your counsels. But as your first-born, I should love to go and do what I can. I know I am weak and foolish in myself, but I do trust in God, and believe that He would go with me, and stay behind with those I love best. What can I more say? You know the sad facts of the case as well as and better than I can do, and now I only ask if you will finish the verse in this way on my twenty-first birthday which was begun on my first.

I hope you won't be grieved with me for writing this, but the needs of China have pressed for some time so heavily on my heart that I felt silence would be guilty and unbearable, and as you told me:

China's as near to heaven
As Britain's favoured shore,
And soon we'll meet in glory,
Where partings are no more.

And God will go to China
With those whom He sends out;
And nothing shall befall them
But what He brings about.

So, trusting in the Living God,
We have no cause for fear,
For He will ever present be
The lonely ones to cheer.

And Christ will be with those who go,
And comfort those who stay,
Till He brings us all to meet again,
In his own blessèd way.

MARY E. SCOTT.

Birchwood, Dedham, Colchester,
July 28, 1884.

On to China, with her father's full consent and blessing, she went, and three years later married Mr. Archibald Orr-Ewing. Their connection with the China Inland Mission, both before and after their marriage, has been alike valued by themselves and their fellow-members.

THE IRISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

THE annual meetings of the Irish Temperance League were held in Belfast last week, and were, taking them all in all, probably the most successful that organisation has ever had. The attendance was larger than it has been for several years, and included representatives from various parts of the country, and more attention was given in the different conferences and discussions to the consideration of Band of Hope work. The meetings opened with a Band of Hope conference on Monday evening in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, at which Mr. Bonner, of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, gave an interesting address. The annual business meeting was held on Tuesday morning in the Chamber of Commerce, under the presidency of Mr. L. A. Browne, when a very encouraging report was submitted by the sec., Mr. Wm. Wilkinson, and an interesting address delivered by Mr. Leif Jones, of Castle Howard. A monster demonstration was held in the Ulster Hall on Tuesday evening, at which addresses were delivered by the Moderator of the General Assembly, Mrs. Hawkes, of Bristol, and several others. On Wednesday the annual breakfast meeting was held in the Lombard Café, when addresses were delivered by Mr. L. Jones on behalf of the United Kingdom Alliance; by Mr. J. Collins, who represented temperance work in Australia; by Mr. T. Robinson, of the Scottish Permissive Bill Association; by Mr. J. Bonner, of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union; by Mr. Malcolm Smith, of Iowa, and others. Conferences on opposing licences and working Bands of Hope were also held, and the meetings closed with a conversazione in the Exhibition Hall on Wednesday night. The anniversary throughout was marked by an earnest enthusiastic spirit, and cannot fail to tell beneficially on temperance work during the year.

A NEW DEPARTURE has lately been taken by the Northampton W.T.A.U. on the lines of Pleasant Sunday Afternoons for Women; an admirable idea, and calculated to become a channel of much spiritual blessing.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE Bradford Auxiliary of the C.E.T.S. reports forty-one junior and sixteen adult branches in full operation.

Wings, the organ of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, gives in the current issue a portrait and delightful sketch of the late Mrs. George Thomas.

A United Band of Hope Conference was held last week in the Y.M.C.A., Belfast. The spirit shown, and the addresses delivered, indicated a thoroughly vigorous and effective work.

The National Temperance League appeals earnestly for help in the "W. I. Palmer Memorial Fund," to be devoted to the furtherance of temperance effort to which his life was devoted.

The Lord Mayor has granted the use of the Mansion House on Friday afternoon, March 9, for a meeting on behalf of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, and has consented to preside on that occasion.

Great success is said to have attended the ten days' mission recently held at Rugby. The full report breathes again the air of the days when Gospel temperance missions played so important a part in temperance work.

Mr. Keir Hardie, M.P., maintains that the day is at hand when labour clubs will require to face the question whether or not intoxicating liquor, with all its attendant dangers, should be sold within their walls. His experience is that wherever liquor is a curse follows.

The Blue Cross Temperance League met lately in Paris; it has 1,500 members, one-third of which were formerly inebriates. The increase in public-houses is rapid—in 1888 there were in France 360,000; last year's returns give 440,000! The Congress had 50 delegates; the president of the International Committee, M. Rochat, was there.

The Manchester Board of Guardians have passed a memorial to the Home Secretary asking him to introduce a bill to amend the Inebriates Acts of 1879 and 1888. The principal amendment recommended was one to give magistrates the power to commit to a retreat for not more than two years a person who had been convicted of drunkenness three times in one year.

Lecturing on "Drink and Burns' Anniversaries" in the Gilfillan Memorial, Dundee, on Sunday week, Rev. David Macrae condemned the practice of associating drink with Burns' anniversaries. He maintained that the custom did not honour but dishonoured the memory of Scotland's bard, and blotted out one great lesson of the poet's chequered life and premature death.

On Friday, February 16, the South and West Hampstead W.T.A.U. will hold a conference of ladies at the Bijou Hall, Hampstead, at 4 p.m. Lady Battersea will preside, and the Conference will be addressed on the Licensing Laws by Mrs. Septimus Buss; on the Medical Aspect of Total Abstinence, by Dr. Robertson Day; on Servants and Total Abstinence, by Mrs. Finlay; and on Temperance Work for the Young, by Miss Coles.

The Leeds Working Men's Temperance League, at its annual meeting last week, showed good work for the past year. The need for women workers was strongly urged. The great meetings on Woodhouse Moor and the Vicar's Croft had been very successful. Speaking at the annual meeting, Rev. James Watkins maintained that the unearned increment of the public-houses had been built up out of the demoralisation, the ruin, and the shame of the men, women, and children in the midst of whom these houses exist. Were we to hold our hands because certain men, in the face of the clearest possible warning, had made a bad business investment? There was not a single right of property affected by this movement. The bill did not propose to touch a single deal board or a tenpenny nail; it did not propose to rob any man of his property.

THE BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.

THIS Orphanage, which was established after the famine which devastated Asiatic Turkey in 1874-75, has been instrumental in succouring a large number of orphans of both sexes, and many of these are now imparting to others, either as teachers in other schools, or as heads of families, the evangelical truths which they have been taught.

Under its founder, Rev. G. Baghdasarian, an Armenian educated in Germany, who is ably assisted by his wife, a Christian lady from Switzerland, the Orphanage is still doing a noble work in Bithynia, and deserves the sympathy and calls for support from those of God's people who wish to elevate the standard of religious truth in Bible lands. Help will be thankfully received by Rev. W. Essery, hon. sec. of the Bible Lands Mission, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London. J. R. VAN MILLINGEN.

21, Moray-place, Edinburgh.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas, who has been taking part in the mission in Liverpool, will preach in his old church, All Saints', Langham-place, W., on Sunday next, the 11th inst.

Pastor C. W. Cremer, agent of the Société Evangélique de France, is in this country. Friends may address him, care of Mrs. Walker, Clinton Villas, Pelham-road, Wimbledon, S.W.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, whose valuable services at the Metropolitan Tabernacle endeared him to thousands, has, it is stated, been immersed. He is at present working with Dr. A. J. Gordon, Boston.

Rev. J. D. Bate reports from Allahabad that he has taken his passage for England in the P. and O. steamship Mirzapore, timed to arrive in London on May 9. He comes for needed rest, but hopes also to speak on missionary affairs.

Mr. Thomas Mathieson, so well known in Liverpool for his good work and noble generosity, is, we regret to hear, lying in extreme weakness. A short time ago it was feared he was at the point of death, but some improvement has been observed.

Rev. Charles Garrett, whose work in Liverpool has been so abundantly used of God, and who is now in his sixty-eighth year, has lately been in somewhat feeble health, and feels compelled to decline many outside calls upon his strength and energies.

Rev. F. A. Jefferd, of Bolobo, Upper Congo, writes to Mr. A. H. Baynes: "Although not shattered completely, I am prostrate for a time, and as this is the second turn of hematuric fever that I have had, it is wise, I think, that I should retire from the field for a time."

Rev. William Arthur, the veteran author of The Tongue of Fire, has now permanently taken up his abode at Cannes, and is much improved in health. He devotes his leisure to literary pursuits, but continues to take the deepest interest in all matters affecting the work of Christ.

Mr. James B. Wookey preached morning, afternoon, and evening on Sunday at St. Peter's Wesleyan Chapel, Leeds. The chapel, which accommodates 2000 persons, was densely crowded at the evening service. The Gospel was faithfully preached, and collections taken on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's Homes and the Joyful News Mission.

Mr. J. Theo. Isaac sailed on Friday for Egypt, having been ordered by his doctor to start at once. He hopes to return to London on March 6. Meanwhile Mrs. Isaac is acting for her husband and carrying on the correspondence of the Strangers' Rest. Much prayer is asked that the voyage may prove the means of restoring him to health.

Rev. Francis Paynter, together with Revs. W. Houghton and W. S. Standen, have started for the Continent to hold a series of conventions in France and Italy. The following are the arrangements: Cannes, February 8-14; Nice, February 15, 16; Mentone, February 18-21; Bordighera, February 22, 23; San Remo, February 24, 25; Florence, Feb. 28-March 2; Rome, March 5-9.

Mr. John Currie, the Scotch evangelist, returned to San Francisco on Thursday, December 21, and on Sunday afternoon, December 24, spoke to a large audience of young men in the Y.M.C.A. hall, giving some interesting facts about his work in Scotland. He is a favourite with our young men (says the Y.M.C.A. Messenger), and is always sure of a large hearing when he appears before the Association. Mr. and Mrs. Currie will take up their residence in Oakland.

Miss Grundberg, whose work in Russia we described some time ago, started on Friday on her return to St. Petersburg, believing that the Lord's call has now come to her to rejoin Miss Wennberg, who has been carrying on the work of the Baby Home. Miss Grundberg has been greatly touched by the kindness shown her during her stay in this land, and trusts the interest aroused will be maintained. Mrs. Moore, 102, Regent's Park-road, London, N.W., will gladly receive and forward communications. These may also be sent direct to Miss Grundberg, 27, Flugoff Pereoulx, Viborg side, St. Petersburg.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a mission by William Grove in Newcastle.—For a special mission being held by Rev. James Oatey in Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Shepherd's Bush.—For the moving of God's Holy Spirit during a four weeks' mission in Haltwhistle.—For blessing on a mission at Nottingham, February 11-19, by Mr. Henry Lakin.—For a week's mission at the Free Church, Benson, near Wallingford, Berks, by Rev. W. Stott and Mr. J. Crofton Rainey.—For a week's mission to be held at the Free Methodist Chapel, Chelsea, from Feb. 11, by Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society.—For a blessing upon public meetings of the Protestant Reformation Society, Feb. 13, at Brighton, and 20th inst. at Colchester.—For blessing on a Gospel mission at Rainham, Essex, from February 11th to 18th, conducted by Mr. J. Wood, of the Evangelisation Society.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. William Forbes closed his evangelistic services in Glasgow last week, and subsequently gave several addresses in Edinburgh.

Wareham, Dorset.—Mr. David Newell, evangelist, of Banbury, has concluded a week's mission in the Oddfellows' Hall. A large number came to hear the Gospel, and several confessed Christ.

Ireland.—Successful Evangelistic services have been held in Castleblayney by Rev. John Sanderson; in Darkley by J. Vance and J. T. Tweed; and at Lisburn by Messrs. Griffin and Beech, mission car evangelists.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie has closed an eight days' mission at Uckfield, in which considerable interest was manifested in visiting from house to house. No less than five mothers of families were found who had been led to Christ.

Belfast.—A remarkable work of grace, which seemed to begin spontaneously, and without any external aid, has been in progress in the Methodist Church, Crumlin-road, Belfast, for the past few weeks, and has already resulted in the professed conversion of several persons.

Chipping Campden.—A three weeks' mission has been held in connection with the Baptist Church here, attended by much blessing. The pastor (Rev. G. H. Harris), his brother, Rev. W. J. Harris, of Winchester, and Rev. A. W. Leighton Barker, of Evesham, have been the missioners.

Mr. W. Chester Turner is in the midst of a great revival at Eakring. On Sunday evening, after an earnest address, between twenty and thirty left their seats and came out seeking salvation. Believers also have been blessed. Sinners are still crying for mercy. The work has spread to surrounding villages.

Mr. T. W. Canning, of the Evangelisation Society, has commenced what promises to be a successful mission in Cupar Fife, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. of that town. The advertised meeting-place proved too small for the first meeting, and the large audience had to adjourn to the adjoining church.

Mr. Wm. Grove has concluded a three-weeks' mission at Mr. Quarrier's Homes, Glasgow, with much blessing. On Sunday week he commenced a mission at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Although the weather has been rough and wet, the people have come out in good numbers, and there are already signs of God's presence.

Mr. Richard Weaver, having closed at Woolwich, began on Sunday a fortnight's mission at Malden Hall. The first day was with great power. The hall was overcrowded, an overflow meeting had to be held, and there were many anxious souls. This veteran evangelist would be thankful for much prayer on his behalf.

The Brothers Weaver have concluded an eight days' mission in the Evangelistic Hall at Carluke, N.B. From beginning to end the attendance was large, and God's presence was much felt in the meetings. Several professed conversion, while others who had been backsliders were restored, and Christians were quickened. W. D. M.

Aspley Guise.—A fortnight's mission has been held in this village from January 21 to February 4, by Mr. John Stanger, from the Evangelisation Society. The meetings have been well attended, and on each Sunday night many had to go away, as the mission room was packed to overflowing. Mr. Stanger has now conducted three missions in this village, and his preaching has led to many blessed results.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has, during the past fortnight, conducted a very successful Gospel Temperance Mission in the Wesleyan Chapel, Springbourne, Bournemouth. His graphic delineations of life among the gold diggers of Australia, and of the strange characters who were brought from gambling and drunkenness to God, were the means of bringing many to forswear all connection with the drink, and, we cannot doubt, also to decide to follow the Lord.

Mr. Gerald Coultas has been holding meetings in Worksop, Sheffield, Salford, Manchester, and Sussex. The Lord has graciously owned his servant at these places. The Word was quick and powerful, sinners were brought down in penitence before God, and saints were built up in the spiritual life. Mr. Coultas is now holding a month's mission in the Assembly Hall, Cubitt Town, and would desire an interest in the prayers of God's people for much blessing.

Bristol.—The meetings held in this city by Mr. Henry Varley have been greatly blessed. Thousands have come to the services in various parts of the city, and the deepest interest has prevailed. The afternoon Bible readings have been seasons of instruction and refreshing. A profitable All-day Conference at Bethesda Chapel closed the Mission. Mr. Varley has gone to Taunton, where he commenced special services last Lord's Day. Thence he goes to Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Rev. Robert Balgarnie has closed a most successful mission at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Waterloo, Liverpool. The minister (Rev. J. J. Muir) and the elders supported Mr. Balgarnie heartily all through. The church was used for the two Sundays, January 21 and 28, and the new hall of St. Andrew's for the week-days. A large number of persons, chiefly among the young, were gathered in, and it is expected that the additions to the communicants' roll and the membership of the Christian Endeavour Society will be considerable.

Raglan, Monmouthshire.—The Abergavenny Y.M.C.A. has been holding an eight days' mission in this historic village. The services were conducted by Mr. E. Fennel and Rev. Chas. Ayliffe. The Association sent over relays of helpers every night. Many villagers showed deep impressions. Some have been led to make a decision for Christ, and a backslider of nineteen years has been brought back. All the services have been with power, and much good is likely to accrue to the churches from the efforts of those concerned in the mission. W. Rose.

Spencer's Wood, Reading.—Mr. James Eyres has concluded a fifteen days' mission in the Congregational Chapel. The work from the first was owned of God, and the audiences were large. The services were times of great power and blessing, both to God's own people and to the unsaved. Many decided for Christ, both in the chapel and their homes, the whole neighbourhood being moved by the power of the Holy Spirit in a remarkable manner. The farewell meeting was packed to excess, and was a memorable time, several persons deciding for Christ at its close.

Mr. David Rea, from Ireland, commenced about the New Year a course of evangelistic meetings in Aberdeen. Many Christians meet daily, beseeching the Lord for blessing. The interest in the Gospel is deepening and widening every day. St. Katherine's Hall, in which the Gospel meetings are held through the week, is sometimes taxed to its utmost limit. The large circus (said to hold about 3000) was secured for Sunday evening meetings, and each time it has been packed. Christians are being revived and drawn together, and backsliders are being restored. Quite a number have professed faith in Christ. The meetings are still going on, and the interest increasing.

Newtownhamilton, co. Armagh.—Miss Smith and Miss Bax have concluded a fortnight's special services in this small country town, which is inaccessible by railway, has 800 inhabitants, with twenty-four houses licensed for the sale of drink. The Presbyterian Church was kindly lent for the services, and in spite of very severe weather and dark country roads the congregations were very large and exceptional; such an interest in mission services had not been shown since the revival of 1859. Many testified to having received Christ as their Saviour. Prayer is asked that the work may continue; also for Ballymena, where the ladies intend to begin a mission in about a fortnight. G. E. R.

The Church Parochial Mission Society engagements during February include:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, at St. Bede's, Liverpool, Jan. 27 to Feb. 12, and St. Stephen's, Tonbridge, Feb. 17 to March 5; Rev. W. St. Hill Bourne, at St. Paul's, Beckenham, Feb. 7, 14, 21, and 28, St. Mark's, Bromley, Feb. 8, 15, and 22; Rev. W. Bryan-Brown at Christ Church, Westminster, Feb. 10 to 19, and at Pembroke College Mission, Walworth, Feb. 24 to March 5; Rev. A. J. Harrison (Evidential missioner) at Northampton Feb. 11 to 16, and at Otley, Yorks, Feb. 26 to March 4; Rev. Canon Lester at Western, Stafford, Feb. 21, and Fenton, Stoke-on-Trent, Feb. 23; Rev. R. D. Monro, at Clandown, Feb. 7, 14, 21, and 28, Burnham Feb. 8, 15, and 22, Axbridge Feb. 9, 16, and 23, Paulton Feb. 13, 20, and 27; Rev. J. Morris, M.D., at Holy Trinity, Tewkesbury, Feb. 10 to 26; Rev. E. B. Russell at St. James's, Higher Broughton, Manchester, Feb. 7 to 12; Rev. R. Wood Samuel at St. Augustine's, Bermondsey, Feb. 9 to 19; Rev. Jas. Stephens at St. Bede's, Liverpool, Jan. 27 to Feb. 12, Gleadless, Sheffield, Feb. 13 to 22, Wold Newton, Feb. 24 to March 2.

SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY.—The Lord Mayor presided on Wednesday week at the Mansion House over a meeting in aid of this Institution. Captain Mainland stated that the Society annually relieved about 10,000 mariners and fishermen and their dependents, or a total number of nearly 460,000 persons since the Society was founded, fifty-five years ago. The demands upon it for assistance at the present time were pressing and exceptional, owing to the late disastrous gales. The details now available from the Society's 1000 stations relating to operations involved by these gales put the sufferers directly assisted at 911 mariners and fishermen and 993 widows and orphans, or a total of 1904, involving a cost of about £4000 over and above the usual average relief, the vessels immediately concerned being 143. The Lord Mayor earnestly commended the claims of the Society "to yet more extended public support in furtherance of the organised relief of maritime distress among mariners and fishermen and their bereaved families throughout the kingdom." Mr. J. C. Stevenson, M.P., Rev. Styleman Herring, Mr. George Lidgett, Mr. H. W. Maynard, and Captain le Clerc afterwards addressed the meeting.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

BISHOP PEARSON has been appointed Vicar of Leek.

A missionary conference, in which various church societies will take part, is being arranged for May 23—June 1.

The guarantee fund of next year's Church Congress at Exeter, about £4000, is practically secured, £3800 having been subscribed.

The Bow and Bromley Institute was crowded on Friday week in connection with the Church Pastoral Aid Society. The speaking was powerful, the audience were enthusiastic.

St. Mary's, Beverley, vacant by the removal of Canon Cuirk to London, has been offered to Rev. John Charles Wellesley Burnaby, Rector of Etton, near Beverley, and accepted.

Among colonial and missionary bishops expected to visit England this spring are Bishop Smyth, of Lebombo; Bishop Scott and Bishop Moule, of China; and the Bishop of Rangoon.

The vacancy at St. James's, Holloway, which has caused some anxiety, has at length been filled by the acceptance of the charge by Rev. E. Grose Hodge, of Leicester, an Evangelical and able preacher, and a warm temperance worker.

Rev. Dr. Wynne has been celebrating his twenty-eighth anniversary at Christ Church, Parkgate. He announces that the Archbishop had offered him preferment near York, and the matter is receiving his serious and prayerful consideration.

Rev. S. A. Alexander, Reader of the Temple, preached on Sunday week at Hornsey Parish Church specially to young men. The church, which seats about 1300 people, was crowded, many being obliged to stand. The sermon was on "The Calling of Life."

The second of a series of lectures was given in the Guildhall, Worcester, on Thursday week. The subject was "Sacramental Confession," which was treated by Rev. Henry Sutton. The first part of his subject was to prove how widespread and deeply seated Sacramental Confession is now in the Church of England. And his second part was to show how very contrary such a doctrine is to the principles of the Church of England—in her Prayer-book, Homilies, and Articles.

The annual report of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, affords evidence of vitality in the work, the various organisations being in a flourishing condition. The open-air pulpit, erected to the memory of the late Canon Cadman, has fully answered its expectations. "Services were held, as long as weather permitted, on Sundays at 3 and 8.30. On Mondays lectures were given by gentlemen connected with the Christian Evidence Society, and on Tuesdays by advocates of the temperance cause."

A correspondent writes:—The Bishop of Marlborough lately opened Brunswick Chapel as a station of the Church Army. The service was distinctly Ritualistic, the choir vested in cassock and short surplice; the priest (so the bishop called the clergy) who played the organ wore a cassock, surplice, and hood. The congregation rose as the choir and clergy entered the chapel—as in Ritualistic churches. One feature in the service was that the bishop, clergy, and choir, during the intoning of the Creed, turned to the altar, not to the east, the altar being at the north end of the chapel. Better far that the chapel had been closed than that it should have been turned into a nursery for propagating Ritualism. Mr. Carlile is making a fearful mistake in allowing such Ritualistic practices in a chapel where Evangelical and Protestant worship has been for years conducted.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new mission has been commenced at Hawkenbury by the Staplehurst Church.

Dr. Simon gave last week, at Sheffield, a thoughtful address on the relation of Christian life and doctrine.

Owing to ill-health, Rev. F. W. B. Weeks has received from his church at Eastbourne a three months' leave of absence.

The annual meeting at Burdett-road showed that the work is being steadily maintained in spite of the exceptional difficulties of the past season.

The Dewsbury P.S.A., managed by a joint committee representing the three Congregational churches of the town, has been most successful, so far.

The Bradford Sunday School Union and Y.P.S.C.E. have secured Dr. Parker's services to conduct an Evangelistic mission in Bradford on February 19, 20, and 21.

Rev. J. Hallowes has conducted an eight days' mission at the Tyndale Church, Gloucester, from January 13 to January 21. The services were much appreciated, and several were brought to decision for Christ. Mr. Hallowes will conduct a second mission at the same church from February 25 to March 4.

South Hackney Church, Victoria Park-road, N.E., seems to have entered upon a successful career. Up to within three years and a-half ago the cause was languishing, although the students of Hurley College kept the services going. About that time Mr. Henry C. W. Newell took charge of the cause as an evangelist, and much success has attended his labours.

The annual meeting of London-road Church, Derby, was held last week. The church, which four years ago, at the commencement of the present pastorate, was at its lowest ebb, with a small membership and a smaller congregation, and a dilapidated chapel, is now a beehive of ministering industry, with over a dozen organisations and a Sunday-evening congregation varying from 800 to 1000, and an addition of 53 members during the year is an evidence of the consolidation of its forces.

Last week Mr. Guinness Rogers closed his interesting series of Merchants' Lectures on "The Word of God." Having dealt with the historical aspect of the faith, the speaker concluded, Men talk of religious books, and want to regard the Bible as one amongst many, but there is this great and grand difference—they were dead, while the Bible was living and powerful, and occupied a unique position. It was idle to talk of being able to explain the Bible. Let its critics explain its marvellous power on all sorts and conditions of men. There might be difficulties to be solved, but whatever happened they had this granite rock of fact, "We know that this Bible is the Word of God, for no book could do the work it accomplishes unless He was in it." Storms had raged round it, and were raging, and yet it still stood, and would stand, in spite of all the turmoil and change of life. Thousands of arrows had been pointed at the gem, but it stood to-day as man's choicest heritage.

Calls.—Rev. W. R. McAllease, of Hyde, to Dalkeith: Rev. J. E. Evans to the Tabernacle, Skewen; Rev. T. Hughes to Nazareth, Pontlottyn; Rev. A. D. Martin to Avenue-road, Southampton; Mr. Thomas Richardson, to Rotherhithe Free Church, as successor to Mr. S. Golding.

BAPTIST.

A new church is being erected in High-street, Lewisham.

Old King-street, Bristol, reports 413 members and flourishing Sunday-schools.

A missionary in Japan is translating Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, week by week, for the native preachers.

A special mission is being held this week and next in the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle (Bloemfontein-road, W.) by Rev. James Oatey.

The Baptist Churches in North-East Lancashire gave earnest consideration, at their conference last week, to the needs of the villages.

Mr. W. Y. Fullerton, so long known as one of Mr. Spurgeon's evangelists, has now entered on his new pastorate at Melbourne Hall, Leicester.

A conference of churches in North Staffordshire has been held at Longton. Rev. G. Buckley introduced the question for discussion, "How to Promote Baptist Principles."

Devonshire-square Church, Stoke Newington, reports 119 admitted to fellowship during the year; during the two years of the present pastorate 266 have been received. The membership numbers 765.

An association has been formed at Sheffield with the object of carrying out the Forward Movement chapel-building scheme launched at the Union meetings by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, of Norwich. It has been decided to erect a new chapel in the Hillsborough district.

The Evangelical Preachers' Association in connection with the Baptist and Congregational Churches of North London has for its president for 1894 Rev. J. R. Wood, who lately delivered the inaugural address, taking for his text Acts xxvi. 16-18, and his subject "The Preacher": (1) his authority, (2) his message, (3) his method, (4) his programme.

A meat tea was given last week to 300 men and women in connection with the Lodging-house Mission, John-street Chapel, Theobalds-road. "Twenty," writes a correspondent, "signed the pledge, and three have left the streets for rescue homes. During the year other pledges have been taken, and five have professed conversion, two of whom are now members of the church, and working in the Mission."

In connection with the work of the Baptist Missionary Society, a meeting was held at Honor Oak Church, Dulwich, on Monday evening, to bid farewell to Miss A. Aldridge, who is about to sail for Shanghai to engage in mission work. Among the speakers who advocated the special claims of Chinese women and girls were Mr. A. Baynes, Miss Angus, Miss Aldridge, Revs. J. Turner, J. Alex. Brown, and J. T. Briscoe.

Calls.—Rev. John Spencer, of Arbroath, to Lower Sloane-street, Chelsea; Mr. T. G. Hunter, to Hallfield, Bradford; Mr. E. G. Lovell, of the Pastor's College, to Blockley.

Resignation.—Rev. J. T. Knight, Congress-street, Cardiff.

METHODIST.

A new chapel has been opened at Combe, Oxford.

Rev. G. Hooper has conducted a fortnight's mission at Peterborough.

Mr. W. Moyle has concluded an interesting mission at Castle Donnington.

A Free Methodist Council has been formed for Huddersfield, Holmfirth, and district, with Rev. B. J. Tungate as president.

The Wesleyans, who have conducted services in Burra Isle, Shetland, for sixty years, have just opened a chapel and school.

Rev. T. R. Holtby, of Pocklington, after a long and painful illness, is steadily gaining strength, but is not likely to be able to resume work for a time.

Simultaneous mission services held in London have been remarkably successful, the meetings at Stepney Tabernacle being especially well attended.

The annual meeting of the students at the College, Didsbury, was held last week. Good work was reported on, and vigorous addresses delivered on missionary matters.

A Women's Wesleyan Union has been formed at Leeds. Its constitution is similar to that of the Methodist Council, and is composed of the ministers' wives and women elected to represent each circuit.

The mission in the Balearic Isles, Work and Workers says, is suffering from bitter persecution, and a letter from Rev. Franklyn Smith indicates that it may be necessary to make strong representations upon the subject at Madrid.

The New Connexion Home Mission Fund call attention to the fact that the income has increased by £257, as compared with two years ago. But even with this increase the fund is unable to meet the legitimate and urgent demands upon it.

The Barotze King, Lewanika, has given consent to the missionaries connected with the Primitive Methodist Zambesi Mission to settle and work among the turbulent Mashukulumbine tribes. He has also sent some of his chiefs to direct and guard the mission party on their journey, and to introduce them to the people among whom they are to labour.

At the last meeting of the Primitive Missionary Committee, a further communication was read from the Foreign Office in relation to the closing of the mission day-schools by the Spanish authorities at Fernando Po. The determination of the Missionary Committee and the action of its agents are kept carefully in harmony with the laws of the Spanish Government bearing upon the case. It is fully expected that a satisfactory settlement will be reached.

In the various halls of the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission, not less than 3000 hear the Gospel every Sunday evening. The Boys' Home is so full that it is impossible to put in another bed, and so far from being pauperised by the help given, they had contributed last year out of their earnings about £1000 towards the support of the institution, being nearly one-half of the total expenditure. The Girls' Home is proving in its degree not less successful.

The London Wesleyan Central Mission held on Tuesday week a series of meetings in connection with its anniversary. Interesting accounts of the work of the Sisters were given at the afternoon meeting held in St. John's-square Chapel, which is the recognised headquarters of the mission. The great evening meeting was held in the Holborn Town-hall. A report was presented of the work, and addresses were delivered by a number of speakers, including the president of the Wesleyan Conference, the chief missioners, and Drs. Waller and Stephenson.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new chapel is being built in Jubilee-road, Llandudno.

A social gathering of the North London Choirs is fixed for the 17th inst. at Regent-square.

At the annual meeting of Broad-street congregation, Birmingham, reports of an encouraging nature were read.

Rev. R. Stewart, of Gateshead, has just concluded a successful lantern mission at Trinity Church, Bishop Auckland.

The annual meeting of Dudley Church was held on Jan. 24, when cheering reports were given by the various workers and office-bearers.

Peel-road Church, Bootle, reports an income of £1413, and there is now in hand £883 for the proposed new church. The membership exceeds 400.

At the evening service on Sunday week at St. Andrew's, Birkenhead, Mr. David McCallum, an aged member of the congregation, was seized with illness, and died before medical aid could arrive.

At the annual meeting of St. Andrew's Church, Nottingham, it was stated that during Rev. R. Cowan's ministry the membership had increased from 99 to 318, last year's addition being 18.

Rev. J. B. Meharry, of Crouch Hill, says in his "Monthly Notes" that he has set his mind upon a guild of men and women for laying hold of newcomers, and taking prompt action for their capabilities for work, and for stopping any leakage. He is determined "to turn the church into a palaestra (exercise place), for it has too long been only an auditorium (a hearing place)." Amongst the many vigorous agencies at work in connection with the church, a playroom is open one night weekly on the mission premises. Some 150 children avail themselves of the boon, and remain for three hours.

Calls.—Rev. A. Osborne, of New South Wales, to the Martyrs' Church, Dundee; Rev. D. W. Macdonald, of Leith, to Free High, Dumbarton; Rev. T. Simpson, to Stromness; Rev. A. B. Dykes, of Gorebridge, to Dalmeney-street, Edinburgh; Rev. J. Bissett, of Buckhaven, to Lochee-road, Dundee; Rev. R. Millar, of Cleggan, to Letterkenny.

Resignation.—Rev. R. Williams, of Dolgelly.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth conducts Holiness meetings in the Exeter Lower Hall every Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth wants strong healthy young women to train as nurses in connection with her rescue operations.

The S.A. has undertaken the distribution of soup supplied to the poor of Portsmouth by the City Corporation. It is purposed to extend the premises already occupied by the Army in that town by taking over an adjoining hall and soup kitchen.

Arrangements have been made at the Blackfriars Shelter for the reception of the "dosser" on Sundays. The largest room has been thrown open free of charge for use as a reading room, well warmed and lighted, and supplied with plenty of good literature.

Commissioner Howard successfully opened the Sheffield Citadel on the 27th ult. The building will seat 1800 people, and the juniors' hall 300; there are four stone staircases and five different means of exit. The entire premises, including land, cost £25,000; of this sum the land and citadel took £7,500, of which the corps has raised £946.

The first three months have just concluded of the new quarters in Tichfield-street opened in connection with the midnight work in Piccadilly. During that short time there have been 856 interviews with persons of the class being sought out, 144 visits paid to their homes (thirty-three of these being immoral houses), seven suppers have been given, at which the attendances have numbered 240, and thirty-seven cases received and helped in various ways to leave their life of misery and sin.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Dalyell-road, Stockwell, on 25th ult., Miss MARY ANN TIMMINGS, aged 84, for years a devoted worker at Weighhouse and Claylands Chapels.—At Wandsworth, Mrs. C. RICHARDS, late of Chester, and well known as a faithful Christian.—At Portmadoc, on 26th ult., Rev. T. H. PRICE, a useful minister of the Gospel.—At Hall Weston, Rev. WILLIAM HAWKINS, aged 67, a Baptist minister.—At Walton, Mrs. WARD, aged 75, widow of an honoured minister.—At Leicester, on 25th ult., Mr. GEORGE LEACH, aged 74, who will be greatly missed at Victoria-road Chapel.—At Croyde, Mr. W. QUICK, for many years a faithful helper in the Lord's work.—At Oxford, Mr. C. F. DODSON, for forty years preacher, leader, and Sunday-school superintendent.—At Houghton, Mr. R. ELFORD, for forty-six years a servant of Jesus and labourer in the Gospel.—At Mid-Calder, Rev. ANDREW DUNCAN, aged 74, for many years minister of the U.P. Church.—At Uddingstone, on 31st ult., Rev. J. M. MACLACHLAN, minister of the Free Church.—At Donabate, Dublin, Rev. R. BELL BOOTH, vicar of Donabate, co. Dublin, aged fifty-four years.—At Garnavilla, Glin, Rev. T. PYNE WELDON, rector of Kilfergus, co. Limerick, aged sixty-seven years.—At Belfast, Mr. Jos. JNO. MURPHY, aged sixty-seven, formerly a member of the Society of Friends, but for many years an active worker and prominent member of the late Church of Ireland.

Notices.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—W.S. A.A. L.B. C.W. W.D.M. E. de R. W.L.T. W.R.E. T.G. A.M.C. T.B. F.W.F. A.W. H.N. W.R R.W.B. A.S. W.C. M.S. S.A.C. J.D. C.W.O. M.S.H. G.W. C.A.W. C.S.T. T.H. H.B.B. R.C.P. A.McP. R.R. J.J.S. J.W.A. M.M.H. C.S.R. W.M.L. J.B. J.L. H.J.F. A.W. G.C. J.G. C.L.W. P.K. R.M.W. J.M.G. D.W.S. H.C.S. R.B. G.H. W.H. T.C. A.F.F. L.S. G.W. R.B. W.B. J.S. T.A.F. F.G. L.M. J.G. G.L. Mrs. S. J.K. E.W. N.H. E.G.F. S.S.M. M.B. C.R.H. B.T. L.A. T.F.W. N.F.D. D.M.L. A.J.M. J.L.A. R.P. E.B. A.M.W. C.F.J. G.A.C. W.W.L. E.S. W.T. A.E.P. A.P. T.C.B. W.H.T. E.A.C. E.C.T. A.C.W. R.J.W. E.S.O. G.E.R. E.W.B. T.S. S.S.S. W.L.H. J.S. J.B.M. J.P. A.G. Dr. O. C.J.P.P. A.P.P. J.W. J.H.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Miss M. Clark, Emerald Hill, Wantage; S. S. Parkes, Cowling Hill, vid Keighley, Yorks; Pastor Fras. Greville Eland (for Soldiers), Athlone, Ireland; Rev. W. Smith, The Manse, Melksham, Wilts; A. E. Howard, 3, Kay-street, Hackney-road, E.; Charles Snell, Welbeck-street, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Notts; Joseph Sowden, Lower Green, St. Blazey, Cornwall; John Clayton, 22 Whitehead-street, Aston, Birmingham; Alfred Hartley, 1, Jacob-street, Camp-road, Leeds; W. H. Allen, Nailsea, Somerset; George Birnie, 26, Pelops-street, Kirkdale, Liverpool; A. Allen, 85, Cameron-street, Liverpool; Rev. L. Abramowitch, The Parsonage, Orbost, Victoria; Miss Fanny Courtney, 11, Chapel-row, Gosport, Hants; Reginald M. Waterhouse, 24, Norfolk-road, Dalston, N.E.; E. T. Groome, 74, Newington Green-road, N.; R. Roberts, The Rest, Mortlake; Thos. Stonestreet, Rough Beech, Edenbridge, Kent.

SOME EXCELLENT PHOTOGRAPHS of Rev. John McNeill were taken last week by Signor Martinucci, of Brighton. Many friends there and elsewhere will be glad to possess themselves of such a memento of the evangelist.

The Book World.

MISS CUSACK ON CONVENT LIFE.*

Miss Cusack writes clearly and forcibly, and tells an interesting story full of facts and statements which prove the gross iniquity of the Roman Catholic system. The value of her book would be greatly enhanced if she would judge somewhat less severely those whose witness against Rome differs from her own; and Protestants would be more likely to heed her story, and make use of her testimony, if she did not make such serious charges against them. The statement that Protestants want, not the truth about convent life, but sensational stories—the grosser the better—is simply untrue, and Protestant sympathy is not likely to be won on behalf of one who makes such statements.

Mr. Walsh, of The English Churchman, and Mr. Wainwright, Pastor of the West Cliff Tabernacle Church, come in for a measure of castigation for having ventured to call in question the wisdom of Miss Cusack in publishing a severe criticism of Miss Golding a few days before a public meeting at Bournemouth, at which Miss Golding was to read her defence. Neither Mr. Walsh nor Mr. Wainwright questioned any statements of fact Miss Cusack had made, nor denied her the right to have opinions of her own; but both agreed that the publication of Miss Cusack's letter at such a time greatly increased Miss Golding's difficulty, and was, therefore, not wise. The expression of such an opinion appears, in Miss Cusack's view, like a "Protestant Inquisition."

The charges Miss Cusack makes against Rome are hardly less severe than those which she criticises. Here are some:—

> The statements made by Roman Catholic saints are such fearful reading as to the corruptions of the priests in their times, that the most ardent Protestant could not say worse of them (page 82).

If it be objected that these words refer to the past, then a few pages later, while defending the purity of Roman Catholic women in England, notwithstanding the confessional, Miss Cusack adds:—

> They [English Roman Catholics] know nothing of its effects in other countries where Rome has more power; and where she has power evil is tolerated, if it is not encouraged (page 86).

The same fact is stated again in other words on page 88.

Hear Miss Cusack's reasons for leaving Rome:—

> I believe that I was at last led to sever my connection with Rome from a painful and extended experience of the gross immorality of the whole system. I found that the more power Rome had the less moral her people were! In England, where the restraining force of public opinion deprives Rome of all immunity for which she clamours, she is something very different from what she is in Mexico, or in France, or in the United States (page 166).

Our readers will not forget that it was in France mainly that Miss Golding got her experience.

And while denying Miss Golding's statements as to poisoning, Miss Cusack quotes and endorses the following statement made by the late Mr. Suffield, once a priest, afterwards in the Unitarian Church:—

> In ordinary matters I trust them [priests] as good men . . . . . .

But, he adds,

> Men, ordinarily kind and good, would be quite disposed to order me to an unhealthy foreign priory, where sickness and the climate would enfeeble mind and body (pages 172-3).

Miss Cusack's facts seem in our judgment to give strong confirmation of Miss Golding's testimony. We are at a loss to understand why she denies it.

In dealing with convent vows Miss Cusack is strangely contradictory. Referring to the active Orders, we are told that—

> The sisters, far from being enticed to take vows for life, are not allowed to do so. . . . A sister must make her vows over again every year, and she is nominally (our italics) free to leave at any time when the year's vows have expired. . . . No sister can have the least scruple about her vows when they are only yearly, as the obligation ceases when the year is ended, nor is she under the slightest obligation to renew her vows (pp. 101-2).

This seems to make Miss Golding's charges utterly untrue. How could the influence of her vows be such that even after her cruel treatment she felt—not that she wished to return, as has been falsely, reported, but that she must return?

An incident Miss Cusack gives, and evidently believes, may explain it:—

> A sister came to me while I was in Jersey City, New York, and asked my help, which I gladly gave her. She had been many years, I think twenty, in a convent, where the sisters made yearly vows. A new superior had been appointed, who treated her cruelly, as I was treated by the Kenmare sisters. She was neglected in sickness, over burdened with work, and condemned to almost perpetual silence. Still she wished to remain and end her days in "religion," fearing the terrible judgments which Rome threatens on those who abandon their vocation, even though she professes to release them. Her teachings of the heinousness of this sin are carefully prepared so as to frighten those who might contemplate such a step (pp. 103-4).

Miss Cusack, notwithstanding such facts as this, denounces Miss Golding for fearing the consequences of abandoning her vocation. Other contradictions upon the same subject could be pointed out.

We regret that a book, otherwise calculated to help the cause of truth, should be marred by these defects. Miss Cusack is an important witness when she states facts which she has herself met; but she is not reliable in her criticism of the reported experiences of others.

* The Truth about Convent Life. By M. F. Cusack (formerly the Nun of Kenmare). (Marshall Bros. 2s. 6d.)

[152]

---

Stambourne Manse; or, Religion Among the Lowly, is an essay in plain verse by the venerable John Cooper Houchin, pastor of the Congregational Church, Stambourne, Essex. (1s. Suckling & Aldom, 19, City-road, E.C.) The pages have a charm of their own, and gain peculiar interest from the fact that the author had a hand with the late Mr. Beddow and Mr. C. H. Spurgeon in the preparation of "Memories of Stambourne."

The Epistles of St. Peter. By J. Rawson Lumby, D.D., Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. (Hodder & Stoughton, 7s. 6d.) This is the thirty-sixth volume of the Expositor's Bible, and is one of those which Evangelical and spiritual men will prize. It is happily free from the rationalising tendency which characterises much pretentious literature which professes to be expository. While the results of scholarship are evident, there is no parade of it; there are no critical pyrotechnics. It is the work of a man of God who has heard and heeded the precept of the Apostle of whom he writes, to "Feed the flock of God," and he does it in the spirit of a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed. The many interesting and sometimes difficult passages in these Epistles are treated wisely, always with a view to edification, and through the mind to the culture of the heart Godward. The author evidently believes, with Peter, that the Flood was universal, and that the Kosmos, once destroyed by water, is reserved for destruction by fire, that a new heaven and earth may succeed, which the trail of the serpent shall no more defile. Some of the comments might with advantage have been amplified; but as it is it will be a valuable help to all preachers and teachers of the Gospel.

---

Mr. John Kensit has issued in a penny pamphlet the sermon recently preached by Archdeacon Sinclair, in memory of Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, the lamented vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury.

The Women's Protestant Union Monthly Paper has begun a new feature—a series of articles, "Quiet Times with God's Word," specially for the use of members of Rev. Thomas Richardson's Bible and Prayer Union. The Monthly Paper is sent to members of the Women's Protestant Union, details of which may be had of the President, Mrs. M. H. Arbuthnot, Plaw-Hatch, East Grinstead.

PORTSMOUTH AND GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.

In connection with the late Henry Cook's work at Gosport, a fortnight's special Gospel services have been held by a Mission band of soldiers, led by Mr. J. Cleall. The watermen and fishermen of the town who never attend any place of worship were one evening invited to tea, and by this means a good number were brought in to hear the message of God's love. Several crews from ships in the harbour were also brought ashore to attend the meetings. The Holy Spirit's power has been manifest, convincing many of sin; backsliders have been restored, and God's children strengthened and refreshed.

It is plainly seen that God is with the little gathering of his people in this place, old and young are all united in one desire to see Him glorified in the salvation of precious souls. It is more than ever felt that this important work must be carried on both at Gosport and round the coast with the Mission steamer, Good News. Prayer as well as practical sympathy is asked in this work of extending Christ's kingdom. English tracts, books, etc., are much needed. Parcels should be addressed to Mrs. H. Cook, 47, Stoke-road, Gosport.

---

BITTER CRY OF MONMOUTHSHIRE. — Several readers of The Christian who have strengthened my hands in ministering food to the distressed iron and tinplate workers, accompanied their gifts by sympathetic inquiries as to how long these works were likely to remain closed. Will you kindly allow me to inform them that the repeal of the McKinley Tariff Act by the American House of Representatives last week (which reduces the import duty from nine shillings to about four shillings per box) will restore the tinplate industry to its normal state of prosperity. The repealing of this Act will not be completed until the Bill passes the Senators, yet the uncertainty of the tariff legislation being past, orders will shortly be booked, and though we shall have to continue this formidable fight against poverty and starvation for some weeks longer, I believe that the middle of March will see the end of this distress, and bring us brighter and happier days.—Thos. M. Wintle.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1894.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Persecuted Stundists—Mothers' Meeting, Hampton, 11s.; T. O., 10s. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| China Inland Mission—E. E. S., 10s.; John xiv. 1, £10; H. E., 5s.; E. W., 10s.; H. C., £1; B., £2; A. M., 10s.; G. C., 10s.; R. B. H., 10s.; C., £10; Missionary Pence Association, £1 2s. 6d. | 26 | 17 | 6 |
| Society Relief Persecuted Jews—R. O. S., £1; I. M., £2; A. M., 10s. | 3 | 10 | 0 |
| Sailors' Rest, Constantinople—M. S. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| London Missionary Society—H. E., 5s.; Missionary Pence Association, 16s. 9d. | 1 | 1 | 9 |
| Rev. O. Michelsen's Work, Tongoa—Breeze Hill C. E. S. | 5 | 2 | 6 |
| British and Foreign Bible Society—T. O., 5s.; Will, £10 | 10 | 5 | 0 |
| Congo Balolo Mission—A. P. C., £1; B., £2; A. M., 10s.; Missionary Pence Association, £1 17s. 3d. | 5 | 7 | 3 |
| J. G. Paton Mission Fund—Sympathy, 10s.; I. M., £5; B., 10s.; Missionary Pence Association, £1 14s. | 7 | 14 | 0 |
| Church Missionary Society—E. T., 10s. 6d.; G. C., £1; E. W., 10s.; (Uganda), C's, £1 | 3 | 0 | 6 |
| Tibetan Mission (Miss Taylor)—I. M. | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Deaconesses House, Jamaica—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 9 | 10 |
| Mr. Warszawiak's Work, New York—B., £1; A. M., 10s.; Missionary Pence Association, 7s. 6d. | 1 | 17 | 6 |
| Mr. Moody's Work—B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Central African Mission—B., £1; Missionary Pence Association, 4s. 4d. | 1 | 4 | 4 |
| Free Church of Scotland (Nyassa)—C.'s | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Broussa Orphanage—C.'s | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Poor Jews, Jerusalem—Home | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| North Africa Mission—C., £10 10s.; Gen. xviii. 14, Jer. xxxii. 17, 5s. | 10 | 15 | 0 |
| Assyrian Mission—M. A. R. P. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Zenana Bible and Medical Mission—C. L. T. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Baptist Missionary Society—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 19 | 9 |
| Qua Iboe Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 1 | 0 | 7 |
| Missionary Bureau—Missionary Pence Association | 4 | 0 | 2 |
| South London Missionary Training Home—Missionary Pence Association | 2 | 5 | 9 |
| Mission to Lepers of India—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| South American Missionary Society—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 1 | 1 |
| Evangelical Church, Italy (Bari)—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (Montreal)—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 4 | 4 |
| Kurku and Central Indian Hill Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Mission to Khonds of Orissa—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Free Church of Scotland Livingstonia Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 3 | 3 |
| Si-gnan Medical Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 4 | 6 |
| Poor Jews, East London (Mr. Oppenheim)—J. F., 2s. 6d.; M. S. T., 2s. 6d.; (Free Meals) E. H., 5s. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Free Meals, Breakfasts, &c.—J. F., 2s.; C. L. T., 10s. | 0 | 12 | 0 |
| Old Ford Mission—J. F. | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Christian Blind Relief Society—J. F., 2s. 6d.; L. Y., 10s. | 0 | 12 | 6 |
| London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews—A. W., 7s. 6d.; J. A. G., 5s. | 0 | 12 | 6 |
| Present Distress in London—E. E. S., 10s.; L. T. S., £2 | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| Salvation Army—R. O. S., £1; C., £10; (Work in Japan) Missionary Pence Association, 2s. 6d. | 11 | 2 | 6 |
| Halfpenny Dinners—J. G., 1s. 6d.; C. L. T., 10s. | 0 | 11 | 6 |
| City Workwomen, Mrs. Fisher—H. M., 2s. 6d.; S. H. B., 1s. | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| Liberator Relief Fund—E. C. B. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| St. Giles' Christian Mission—E. C. B., 5s.; L. Y., £2; H. E., 5s.; B., 10s.; (Poor) C. S. R., 10s.; Agnes, 3s.; A. W., 10s.; (Prison) G. C., 10s.; South Kensington, 10s.; H. P., £1; (Refuge and Night Shelter for Women) C.'s, £1 | 7 | 3 | 0 |
| Poor of Victoria Docks, Rev. S. Smythe—E. C. B. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Field Lane Institutions—E. C. B. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| George Yard Institutions—L. Y., £4; Bath, 10s. | 4 | 10 | 0 |
| London City Mission—L. Y., £5; Bath, 10s.; T. O., 5s.; E. T., 5s.; B., £1; A. M., 10s.; Miss D., 10s.; C., £5 5s.; E. E. N., 10s.; C. L. T., £2 | 15 | 15 | 0 |
| Dr. Barnardo's Homes—L. Y., £2; J. F. S., £1; T. O., 5s.; A. M., 10s.; G. C., £1; O'C., £3; Will, £10; Sympathiser, 10s.; C., £5; C. L. T., £5; (Poor) L., 10s.; C. S. R., 10s. | 29 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Fegan's Homes—L. Y., £2; H. P., £1; O'C., £3; J. B. H., 10s.; C. L. T., £5. | 11 | 10 | 0 |
| Friendless and Fallen—L. Y., £1; G. C., 10s.; C. L. T., £1; (All Night Refuge) C.'s, £2 | 4 | 10 | 0 |
| Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission—L. Y., £1; A. M., 10s.; O'C., £2; (Orphanage) Thankoffering H., 5s. | 3 | 15 | 0 |
| Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—L. Y., £1; H. P., 10s.; C.'s, £1; C. L. T., £1 | 3 | 10 | 0 |
| Mrs. Smyly's Birds' Nest Mission—L. Y. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—L. Y., 10s.; B., 10s.; A. M., 10s.; E. P., 5s.; W. S., £1; (Night Shelter and Rescue Work) B. R., £2; (Children's Home) B. R., £2 | 6 | 15 | 0 |
| Miss Weston's Work—L. Y., 10s.; A. M., 10s. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Irish Church Missions—H. E., 5s.; A. M., 10s. | 0 | 15 | 0 |
| Railway Benevolent Institution—Bath | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Pure Literature Society—Mrs. L. M. C. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thames Church Mission—Mrs. L. M. C. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Royal Infirmary for Scrofula, Margate—Mrs. L. M. C. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Association Free Distribution of the Scriptures—B. R. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. T. Jackson, Clapton Mission, Relief of Poor—E. O. T. | 4 | 0 | 0 |

(Continued on page 30)

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

Warning to Advertisers.—The greatest care should be taken in writing the address at the end of Advertisements. We also beg to call the special attention of Advertisers to the following Notice which appears in The Postal Guide:—"Letters addressed to initials or to fictitious names at any Post Office are not taken in, but are at once sent back to the writers."

Letters Addressed to the Office.—Advertisers who require their letters to be addressed to the office of this Journal will be charged an additional Sixpence for each Advertisement, and another Sixpence extra if letters are to be forwarded to their private address.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For Great Britain and Ireland .. | 6s. 7d. | per annum |
| For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. .. .. .. | 8s. 10d. | „ „ |
| For United States and Canada .. | 2¼ dols. | „ „ |
| Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy .. .. | 2½ dols. | „ „ |

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 4 Copies monthly .. .. .. .. | 2s. | per annum. |
| 8 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 4s. | „ „ |
| 12 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 6s. | „ „ |
| 24 „ „ .. .. .. .. | 12s. | „ „ |

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

WE purpose next week to give a portrait and sketch of the late Mr. Thomas Shuldham Henry, Evangelist.

Many Londoners will have the opportunity on Sabbath next of hearing two well-known Scottish preachers. Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of Aberdeen, will occupy the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church in Kensington Park-road, Notting Hill; while the preacher at the Marylebone Presbyterian Church will be Rev. John Robertson, of Free Gorbals Church, Glasgow.

In a second letter to The Times on the street preaching in Cork, Col. Sanderson effectively replies to Mr. Maurice Healy, and shows that many of the latter's statements were without foundation. The disturbances last Sabbath were of a more desultory nature than formerly, owing to changes in the programme of the preachers; but the crowd showed great hostility toward any one suspected of sympathy with the preaching. The police, it must be said, did their utmost to protect the evangelists.

A minister says that his holiest and happiest moments of service are when he meets inquirers in his vestry, and directs them to the Saviour. For this joy he would surrender everything else. It is the joy of the husbandman, who has long patience for the fruits of the earth. Mr. Whitmee, of Samoa, in a letter from which we have quoted elsewhere, says:—"For the first time in my life I had begun and ended a day talking to contrite sinners, and I think the joy of my heart could be compared only to a mother's joy when she hears the first cry of her new-born babe and knows it lives." Ministers carry in their breasts many a story of sin and shame; they carry also the sweet memory of the very hour when some souls first saw the Lamb of God.

We only ask our readers to note the condition of the parties who are entering upon a struggle with regard to the London School Board; we reserve all comments. The present religious compromise is upheld by Nonconformists of all schools; it is assailed by High Churchmen. The upholders of the compromise are said by their opponents to be in favour of Socinian teaching, though men like Dr. Parker earnestly proclaim their Trinitarianism, but object to have it supported by compulsion. The assailants of the compromise are called the "priestly party" by their opponents. The Press of London, Tory as well as Liberal, with the exception of The Times, which is neutral, is against the "priestly party."

The Rock speaks very truly of the conflict which has broken out in the London School Board with regard to the teaching of religion:—

It cannot be doubted that much, if not all, the opposition Mr. Riley has aroused has been inspired not by latitudinarianism, or even by antipathy to the Church at large, but by a wholesome dread of Ritualistic and Romish, or, as one speaker frankly put it, "Jesuitical machinations."

And what do the Romanists wish? They wish to have public money for the propagation of Romanism. At a meeting of the Roman Catholic Association at Westminster Town Hall, the following resolution was adopted:—

That this meeting of what is called the Catholic Association requires that all education should be Christian, and demands that all (Roman) Catholics be allowed a just share of the rates for the maintenance and support of their schools.

The "conscience clause" will have small chance amid this storm.

A general mission, by direction of Cardinal Vaughan, has been opened in the Archdiocese of Westminster, and 140 priests have come to London "to endeavour to bring back negligent Catholics to the practice of their religion." The Jesuits are the most numerously represented order, and, judging from the advertised names of preachers, a large proportion of the preachers are other than English. The High Church papers have taken no notice of the mission, but The Rock has sounded an alarm. Are High Churchmen silent because they hardly know what to say? or because they think it wiser not to draw public attention? Is it explained by what is said by the London correspondent of The Birmingham Daily Post?

The number of converts to Roman Catholicism since the beginning of 1894 has been unparalleled within recent years; and one of the more prominent priests at the pro-Cathedral at Kensington is the authority for the statement that arrangements are being made for the reception of six other clergymen into the Catholic Church.

The Catholic Times remarks, in a leader on "The Great Mission in London":—

We hear and have heard much of the necessity of winning England back to the faith. How many of us forget that the power to extend the Kingdom of God lies within us, and that we do not employ it to the full extent and in the proper spirit. Before we display zeal for the diffusion of truth amongst others we should see to it that in principle and action our own lives harmonise with the Gospel we would spread—that we are truthful, charitable, just, devoid of jealousy—in a word, good average Christians.

The writer then proceeds to deal very plainly with some of the sins of London life, which have recently attracted so much attention:—

If the state of society in the metropolis be considered, it must be admitted that a trumpet-tongued appeal is required to recall it to the observance of God's ordinances. In truth, if we examine the lives of those who compose it we perceive that, whilst they have a veneering of Christianity, they are in reality little better than pagan. The Christian Gospel commands mutual charity, trust, and helpfulness. In actual life many men seem to imagine that their species was created to enable them to prey upon it. They live and thrive by extortion, deceit, and fraud.

When we read these words we could scarcely believe our eyes, for we had just finished reading "Motley's Rise of the Dutch Republic," most of it for a second time, and had a vivid impression of a Church which had inspired, condoned, sung Te Deums for, some of the vilest sins against God and man. Could this be the same Church? Then we bethought ourselves of "Ranke's History of the Popes," and remembered how the Reformation reformed the Romish Church within its own borders. Thanks to Protestantism, we cannot any more see the scandals which shocked the consciences of our fathers. With all the paganism which lurks in many Romish festivals, and all the unscripturalness which harbours in Romish doctrine, there must be respect paid to morality.

At the funeral of Rev. F. J. Ponsonby there were some suggestive circumstances. The funeral may be said to have begun on the night before the interment. At 9 o'clock, "after evensong had been plainly said, the body was brought into the church, which was densely crowded, mainly by working men, many of whom were moved to tears. As the body was borne up the nave, the opening sentences of the Burial Office were chanted. The body was placed in the chancel between three large lighted candlesticks on either side. A number of psalms, the Magnificat, some antiphons and versicles, were recited, and a remarkable collect was used, in which were the words, 'Receive our humble petitions for the soul of thy servant Frederick John which Thou hast commanded to pass out of this world.'" Friends and parishioners watched the body all night, and on the following morning there were four celebrations of the Holy Communion, largely attended by the poor of the parish and friends. It is often said that the working people of England will never go over to Popery; but this Papistical service shows how they may be gradually and insensibly led astray.

Referring to an address by the Bishop of Truro on Conversion, in which he speaks of Paul's conversion as "sacramental," an esteemed correspondent writes:—

Is it not marvellous and sad beyond expression that such teaching can be given by those in authority in the Established Church of the land? Bishop Gott no doubt considers that if Stephen had mildly invited Saul to be baptized into the name of Jesus, he would have consented to this "sacramental conversion"! and given up the idea of stoning him. Marvel of marvels, that a doctor of divinity and a bishop cannot see that Saul must have been previously converted to God, and all his thoughts about Jesus must have undergone a complete revolution, or he would never have obeyed the exhortation of Ananias to arise and be baptized (into the name of Him whom he had so hated and persecuted) and wash away his sins, calling on the name of the Lord. Alas! the uninstructed and indifferent read these things or listen to them, and because they drop from the lips of one who claims official authority as a teacher, they are laid hold on as an excuse for not obeying God's command, 'Repent and be converted.' 'Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of Heaven' (Matt. xviii. 3).—R. W. B.

The Quarterly Review contains an article on "The Progress and Prospect of Church Missions," which is based on a mass of missionary literature gathered from all sides, which is written in a spirit of warm and generous sympathy with missionary work, and which, while evidently the essay of a State Churchman, does not ignore the efforts and sacrifices of men and women of other denominations. The writer says that "it would seem to be the height of folly to sneer at missionary effort, and the mark of culpable ignorance not to know what is doing in this noble field of human enterprise. Those who now speak scornfully of missions are simply behind the age." Looking to the future, he observes that there must be deep searchings of heart as to what the form of church order is to be. "No reasonable Churchman would wish to see a slavish reproduction of Anglican ceremonial or standards; but are the miserable divisions of Protestantism to split up Christianity the wide world over as they are weakening it at home?"

We hope not; but in order to prevent that result two or three things should now be kept in mind and acted upon. (1) There should be no overlapping; no man and no society should go upon another man's or another society's line of working. (2) There should be no assumption of superiority on the part of any man or of any society. Divisions are often made by the pride of those who think themselves to be somebody. (3) If all missionary work is carried forward in a spirit of humble and sincere desire for the salvation of men and for the glory of God, the question of church order will right itself. It will be best settled by being indirectly settled.

In the "Expositor's Bible" series Rev. H. C. G. Moule has supplied a valuable work on the Epistle to the Romans. Anticipating a formal review, we extract the following definition of inspiration, which is one of the wisest and most pregnant we have met with. We commend it to our readers as an answer to many sceptical objections on the one side, and a corrective of inaccurate statements occasionally made on the other:—

> He who chose the writers of the Holy Scriptures, many men scattered over many ages, used them each in his surroundings and in his character, yet so as to harmonise them all in the Book which, while many, is one. He used them with the sovereign skill of Deity. And that skilful use meant that He used their whole being, which He had made, and their whole circumstances, which He had ordered. They were indeed his amanuenses; nay, I fear not to say, they were his pens. But He is such that He can manipulate as his facile implement no mere piece of mechanism, which, however subtle and powerful, is mechanism still, and can never truly cause anything. He can take a human personality, made in his own image, pregnant, formative, causative, in all its living thought, sensibility, and will, and can throw it freely upon its task of thinking and expression, and behold, the product will be his; his matter, his thought, his exposition, his word, "living and abiding for ever."

It is with a feeling of relief and satisfaction that we see the House of Lords has adopted clause 54 of the Parish Councils Bill, which provides:—

> No meeting of a parish council or of a district council, or of a board of guardians, shall be held in premises licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquor, except in cases where no other suitable room is available for such meeting either free of charge or at a reasonable cost.

This was done, notwithstanding the strong speech of Lord Salisbury against the clause. The Archbishop of York, familiar with the feeling in the North of England in favour of the local veto, spoke up well for the right side, and so did the Bishop of London. Gradually we shall get the public-house pushed into its right place, i.e., outside all our public and social life. Parliamentary candidates cannot hold meetings in public-houses, and masters may not pay workmen their wages there. The churches are also awaking to their duty to draw all clubs and benefit societies away from the public-house to the schoolroom. We know a church with a large school which allows each political party to hold its meetings in the school at a small cost, so that public opinion in the neighbourhood may have free and full expression.

The Leisure Hour, in an interesting article on "How the People of Germany live," says that the German hours of labour are decidedly long, frequently exceeding fifteen hours a day; the diminution in the length of the working day has only been obtained by strikes. "Sunday work was once far from uncommon, but as the law now stands employers cannot compel their workpeople to work on Sundays and holidays, except in cases where work cannot be suspended. Holidays are fixed by the State Governments in accordance with local custom or religious belief." No female can be employed in a factory after half-past eight at night, or before half-past five in the morning. All factories where women are employed are registered, and no overtime is allowed to exceed eighty hours a year.

In Germany, children under thirteen cannot be employed in factories; even if over thirteen they must first be freed from school attendance. Children, however, are often employed at home, where the law cannot reach them. "In the Taunus villages, you will find children of three years old and upwards busy threading needles and putting on elastic bands for the net-makers and glove-makers. Thüringian match-makers will keep their children at work from midday on Saturday until two o'clock on Sunday morning, and after two hours' rest will start them again until church time." The State is more merciful to the children than are their own parents; hence the agitation which is made for the application of the factory laws to home industries. One can only guess how fierce must be the pressure of competition where parents are so cruel.

The spirit of caste—extremely strong and everywhere prevalent in Germany—is not due to the influence of wealth, but rather to the Army. "The highest social law is the preservation of honour, which in case of insult or calumny can only be vindicated by a duel, which again may only be fought by a member of so-called society." A revival of pure religion would be the most effectual remedy for this social complaint; and yet how difficult it is to blend together in our English churches those who are professedly brethren. We dare not throw stones!

Dr. Bruce, in the introduction to his book on "Apologetics," has a very striking passage on the difference between the point of attack on revealed religion in the last century and this century:—

> The eighteenth century traced the origin of all positive religions to conscious fraud; the nineteenth century refuses to believe that any religion had its origin in fraud. The former levelled down all positive religions to one low moral level of imposture; the latter levels up all positive religions to the same high level of sincere, though it may be mistaken, hallucinated conviction. Broadly speaking, the distinction thus taken between two ages is well founded. Whether the modern method of disposing of the miraculous be more successful than that which it has superseded is another question. Deceivers, or self-deceived, such are the alternatives.

So complete a change in the view taken of Christianity ought to be made to tell hardly against unbelief. Men must be in great need of something to say, when they begin by saying that Christianity is a fraud, and end by saying, "No, it is all sincere, only it is mistaken.', In the one case they praise the clever head which could devise such a system, but at the expense of the conscience; in the second they praise the loving over-believing heart at the expense of the intelligence of believers. For ourselves, we see little to choose between them. Neither need we pay any attention to them, were it not that the nineteenth century view is sometimes preached from pulpits, and so preached as to destroy all zeal for the diffusion of the Gospel. If all religions be sincere, and so far good and true—for these qualities are always associated with the first in the popular mind—why should we trouble to preach the Gospel to them that have not heard it? Perhaps the current objection to the Gospel is more insidiously dangerous than the gross and openly hostile view of the last century.

The utterance of the words of the Gospel in the ears of every heathen during the next ten years is well within the power of the Christian Church. But even this would be no adequate fulfilment of the command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." They must believe the messenger before they will believe the message. Jesus won the heart, the confidence, of the woman at the well before He said, "I that speak unto thee am He." Immediately she left her waterpot and went and invited the people of her city: "Come, see a man that told me all that ever I did; is not this the Christ?"

He won the heart of the man born blind, so that when, later on, Jesus asked him, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" in spite of the Pharisees and of his parents he answered, "Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on Him?" In other words, "I believe in you, whoever you are, and if you tell me who is the Son of God, I will at once believe on Him," and so he did. He would believe anything that Jesus told him, because Jesus had won his heart.

When men believe in us as the Lord's messengers, they will believe the Lord's message from our lips. See Haggai i. 1, 12, 13. Not without significance the Scripture says: "The word of the Lord came by the hand of Haggai" (i. 1, mar.). It is not only what is said, but who says it. Compare 1 Cor. iv. 1; 2 Cor. throughout; Gal. i., ii., and vi. 11, 14, 17. Years have been spent in preaching without apparent fruit. But Christ's ambassadors were living the Gospel all these years before the people, winning their confidence; and at length came the reaping time. When the prepared soul says, "Here am I, send me," and the Lord answers, "Go thou," the personal pronouns are emphatic. It needs time for the Lord's messengers to accredit themselves as object lessons to the people. Then they will hear them gladly, and hang upon them to hear them, as they did upon the Master. But this winning of hearts cannot be arithmetically calculated.

It is said of Matthew Henry that "when he wanted a faith of assurance, he lived by a faith of adherence." Yet there are not two faiths, but different degrees of faith—the faith which begins, and always begins, in adherence to Christ, and then grows into assurance. We first lay hold of Christ in his Word, and then the hold gives us an assurance that we have grasped One who is able to save to the uttermost; properly speaking, faith is only adherence, and assurance the effect of adhering.

A Homily for the Times.

By Rev. W. CROSBIE, M.A., LL.B., Nottingham.

"They went up into the upper chamber."—Acts i. 13.

The meeting in that "upper chamber" was the model prayer meeting, the pattern for all the ages. And the prayer that rose from that prayer meeting was a new thing in the history of the pleadings of men. Prayer like it had never been offered on earth, nor heard in heaven, before. It had characteristics which made it differ from all previous communion between man and God.

In the first place, it was prayer in the name of Jesus. And that was a new thing. The mediation of the Lord Jesus was not a new thing; it dated back to the Fall; but prayer distinctly and consciously in the name of the Lord Jesus was a new thing—prayer in the terms, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, He will give it you; hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name; ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." The Lord Jesus had just entered within the veil, the Great High Priest; He had ascended his mediatorial throne; and his name was being named in the songs and hallelujahs of glorified saints and holy angels. To Him every knee in heaven was bowing; a name was given to Him above every name. And for the first time his name was being named in the prayers of earth, and urged as the great and only plea. For the first time the formula which gives prevalency to all our prayers, "For Jesus' sake," was being uttered by human lips; and for the first time was winging human petitions to the heart of the Father.

In the second place the prayer was the expression of one definite desire. There was perfect unanimity among the praying ones. "They were all with one accord in one place." With one accord! There were a hundred and twenty disciples, differing in temperament, in intelligence, in taste, in idiosyncrasy, but they were "all with one accord." No individuality was destroyed, but all individualities and varieties were wrought up into a unity; and the principle of the unity, or the unifying principle, was the desire for the Holy Ghost. A promise had been given to them, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence"; and a command had been addressed to them, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high"; and upon the promise and the command they stood, inspired with a common purpose, animated by a common feeling, breathing a common prayer, all the materials of the prayer being in the promise and in the command.

In the third place the prayer was persevering, expectant prayer. "These all with one accord continued stedfastly in prayer." Continued stedfastly! There was no fickleness in the prayer. The prayer was not commenced, and then given up. It was not a spurt or a spasm. "These all with one accord CONTINUED STEDFASTLY"! They prayed, and they waited; and they waited, and they prayed. Days passed away, and the blessing came not; but they continued stedfastly. The delay was a test, but the faith was mightier than the test; and the test only revealed and educated and developed the faith, and so prepared for and vastly increased the blessing.

On the tenth day the blessing came. And the tenth day was as the first day. The spirit of prayer had not flagged, but had become more intense. And there was no absentee from the meeting for prayer. There was no place empty. "They all continued stedfastly"! Oh, these words, "CONTINUED STEDFASTLY"! Could we but get them translated into our praying, and into all our service for Jesus! "These all with one accord continued stedfastly in prayer." "And when the day of Pentecost was now come, they were all together in one place"; and the promise they had long pleaded, and still pleaded—absorbed in it as to them the thing of greatest moment, as the most desirable of all things—was fulfilled, the Holy Ghost was poured out upon them, the very floodgates of the infinite ocean of life were opened—and they are open still; and in that great hour, one of the greatest hours of destiny, the Christian dispensation was inaugurated, and the Church of the Lord Jesus was born.

The blessing of Pentecost is our greatest want. It is the supreme necessity. It is the all-availing and all-efficacious remedy:—THE LIFE OF GOD IN PENTECOSTAL MEASURE. And the blessing of Pentecost, so much needed, may be ours, and may be ours in the measure of Pentecost. It is our own fault that it is not ours. Only let there be prayer like the prayer that preceded Pentecost—prayer answering in all essential respects to the prayer that preceded Pentecost—and we too shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost—immersed in the Holy Ghost—all the inner chambers being filled with the Holy Ghost, and all the outer being wrapped about with the potencies of his all-mightiness. Than that there is nothing more certain, either on earth or in heaven. The rising of the morrow's sun is not more certain, is not so certain, for "He hath magnified his Word above all his name." It is easier for Heaven and earth to pass, the vast material creation and all the ordinances thereof to vanish like a shadow or a dream, than for one tittle of the law to fail. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my Word shall not pass away."

Engraved as in eternal brass
The mighty promise shines.

"Ask," therefore, "and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." "Ye shall call upon Me, and ye shall go and pray unto Me; and I will hearken unto you; ye shall seek Me, and find Me, WHEN YE SHALL SEARCH FOR ME WITH ALL YOUR HEART."

REV. R. BALGARNIE AT BOURNEMOUTH.

A WEEK'S mission has just been conducted at Richmond Hill Congregational Church. Rev. J. Ossian Davies on Sunday morning, evidently with a very full heart, gave God thanks for the showers of blessing they had received. Some of them felt, he said, as if they had experienced a second conversion. Very tenderly he prayed for those who had taken part in the meetings, especially for the converts; and not less tenderly for those who had kept away.

His text was from Luke xv.—the joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth. The conversion of a soul is no isolated event. If the joy of the shepherd over one sheep, lost, sought, and found, could not restrain itself from expression, was it to be expected that heaven should restrain the expression of its joy at the repentance of a sinner? Many of those present had shared that joy during the past week. Mr. Balgarnie had said, "Either they make too much of conversion in heaven, or we make too little of it on earth."

Subdued in manner, rich in matter, wise in counsel to the saints, intense in pleading with the indifferent and undecided, the sermon proved that however great the blessing, none had entered more deeply into it than the pastor of the church. This being so, the work may be expected, with God's continued blessing, to be permanent.

"SHAKING OUT A REEF."

By the good hand of our God before us, we are full to overflowing at the Royal Sailors' Rests, Devonport and Portsmouth. The only difficulty is, not to persuade men to come, but to keep pace with the crowds that throng our buildings.

I shall be most thankful to add one hundred beds at Devonport, which will give us about 500 beds there. The way in which I am enabled to do this is wonderful in itself. Some years ago, four or five low public-houses stood on the opposite side of the street. On the falling in of the leases, they were pulled down, and handsome houses of business erected; one of these has come into my hands on a long lease, and here the hundred beds will stand.

On this very site lived publicans that used to rail at us, tempt our men, and vow that they would break our windows; and now we are, by God's goodness, in possession! I ask nothing for the building, as we shall defray the rent ourselves, but I ask for one hundred £5 notes or cheques, to enable me to buy the beds complete.

Again, at Portsmouth, I trust this summer to raise another storey, with fifty more cabins, upon the main building. A young seaman was talking earnestly to me in the coffee-bar a few evenings ago. He said, "Mother, you know all about us; it's heart-breaking to be told there are no more beds here; we are driven to debauchery; we are safe here, but the streets are awful." Here again we must pull hard together. Fifty gifts of thirty guineas each would build and endow these cabins, and the donors' names on brass, or any other inscription chosen, would give each kind giver an ownership.

I might go on to speak of the immense need of a larger Gospel Hall at Devonport. The present one is crowded out, and we are forced to limit the attendance; a larger hall would double the congregation and, I hope, double the blessing.

A bluejacket, occupying the honourable position of chief petty officer, addressed the boys last Sunday afternoon, on his way to a foreign station. After singing, "Does your anchor hold?" he said, "Boys, nearly twenty years ago, I was here a boy like yourselves; I signed the pledge at that table, and afterwards gave my heart to Christ. He has kept me ever since; all my success in the Service is due to his grace, and I do bless Him every day for the Sailors' Rest."

Lady Henry Somerset, writing of a visit she paid a week or two ago to the Sailors' Rest, says:—"Cheery, inviting, exquisitely clean, but with nothing of the dreary scrubbed-up look of an institution, the Sailors' Rest is the model of what such a place should be, a home in every sense of the word, with a mother's touch on everything, and a mother's love through all—everything betokened the personal supervision and care given by Miss Weston and her untiring coadjutor, Miss Wintz. The cabins, with their brass plates, spoke eloquently of those that commemorated their own sorrow by bringing brightness into the lives of others." I shall be glad to receive the help always so kindly and generously given. I would in all cases ask for the prayers of God's people for their fellow workers.

AGNES E. WESTON.

Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

On the evening of February 6 a very pleasing meeting was held at the Women's Home of the Mission, 25, Drury-lane, W.C. The girls present were those who had been found by the police at night in the streets, destitute and homeless, and brought to the Home. They had not committed crime, but at one time they stood upon the very verge of it. The contrast from what they were when received into the Home, to what they were at the meeting on Tuesday evening, was great indeed.

At the close of the meeting rewards were given in the shape of Bibles, hymn-books, and articles of dress. Several of the girls spoke with reference to the kindness shown them while inmates, and expressed their thanks for the situations found them after passing through the six months' probation. Presents in some cases had been given by mistresses in whose employ the girls had given satisfactory service for twelve months.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. Staff, Miss Sergeant, Miss Ling, the matron, Mrs. McLean, and Mr. Wheatley.

"A DANGEROUS EXPERIMENT."

It was Monday afternoon—Mrs. Naggs' "mending day," and she and a friend or two were stitching and talking as fast as fingers and tongues would let them. Mrs. Naggs had very strong, definite ideas of her own—she would allow no scandal to be talked in her house if she could prevent it; indeed, there was a polite fiction abroad that Mrs. Naggs preferred "intellectual conversation," when she could get it. The latter was not often possible, but by way of something unhackneyed and original, young Mrs. Bligh—who had lived all her life in the country, and now tried to have it believed she was town-bred—broached the subject of yesterday's sermon. She knew the conditions—no scandal. "I always did admire Dr. Fullblast," said she, "and yesterday he was better than ever. I thought of you when he touched on servants."

"My dear," replied Mrs. Naggs, "you haven't known our good Doctor long enough to pass an opinion on him yet; and as to your thinking of me yesterday—I wonder what you mean!"

"Well, you know, the Doctor said they evidently thought more of their servants in commandment times than we do now, and you have such dear, original ways of treating yours."

Young Mrs. Bligh was not successful with her maids. She never kept them longer than a month, and each succeeding sample was, at first, an unheard-of, never-equalled paragon; but before the end of thirty days she was not fit to live—everything the vilest of the vile, from her back hair to her boot heels.

"Don't talk to me about original ways, and call yourself honest!"

Mrs. Naggs, though she never let the sun go down on her wrath, was sometimes of an explosive nature, and gave her mind freely to all sugar-coated talkers, but always to their faces. "Don't talk to me about 'dear, original ways,' when you know I only treat my girls like ordinary human beings, as I should do."

"I wondered at Dr. Fullblast taking that text, the last commandment, and when it came to 'nor his maidservant,' I could not think how he was going to get out of it. Fancy anyone 'coveting' Mrs. Rigby's maidservant! Or mine, for the matter of that!"

The speaker was a large woman—Mrs. Harrow—who was familiarly called "Compass" behind her back, because she had only four points, or topics of conversation. They were—her husband, her children, her servants, and herself.

"No scandal!" cried Mrs. Naggs. "I'm afraid I've not much patience with you people who make rods, and then cry out when you're scourged. When my Anna came to me she was untidy, dirty, not over truthful, inexperienced, hasty in temper and tongue; and now you would not find a greater treasure of a servant; and why?"

"Your sweet ways, dear," said Mrs. Bligh, unmeaningly.

"Not a bit of it, and you know it. No, she just saw that, whatever she did, I treated her as I would have treated a daughter. When she worried me I just cried, 'Lord, some of thy patience!' When she disappointed me, I prayed for faith; and when she did things right, or even when she did them wrong, but I saw she was trying to please, I just praised her, thanked God, and took courage."

"Ah, what would you do with my Maria?" asked young Mrs. Bligh. She felt this was a poser.

"Treat her as I treat Anna. She is flesh and blood, and she's not too old to learn if you know how to teach. These young things come to us untrained very often, and they have been taught by experience that they are only wanted for what they can give in return for a hard wage. They never expect love; the most they ask is a reasonable mistress and fair wages. This is not how we ought to treat our fellow-creatures in the sight of God."

"Oh, come to talk like that, I'm done," panted Mrs. Harrow. "I fancy myself loving my little dirty slut of a 'Melia!"

"No names! I tell you what I will do for one month; if my Anna is agreeable to it, I will lend you Anna and you shall lend me 'Melia. I shall treat 'Melia as a daughter, and I'm not afraid that Anna will disappoint me while she is with you," said Mrs. Naggs. "Are you willing to do this?"

"We—ll," drawled Mrs. Harrow, "I hardly know. Your Anna won't find my place like yours, and your place will ruin 'Melia for mine again, if she consents to come back. Why, you give Anna a sort of bed drawing-room, don't you?"

"She has a nice room, as good nearly as my own, and her bed is curtained off by day, and the rest of the room is cosy, and fitted up so's she can spend some happy times in it. I made her do a great part of the smartening of it herself, just to help her when she comes to have a home of her own; she has a nice little set of bookshelves and books. I chose most of them for her, but I can trust her to choose for herself now. Then she has a little lounge for days when she's tired after helping with the wash, or the spring clean, and a little cupboard with shelves, so's she can keep her room neat, and she has a window-box for roots, and a screen, which is useful in a room in a dozen ways."

"Why, dearie me," exclaimed young Mrs. Bligh, "you've made a fine lady of her! Mrs. Harrow won't know how to treat her."

"I'm thinking," said that lady, "that I wouldn't mind changing places with Anna! Seems to me she's better off than I am."

"Anna's no 'fine lady.' She has to work, as is right, and to work well. I keep no dawdling or impudent lasses about me. I try them, and if there's good metal in them, I try to make it shine and ring. But, surely, if we Christian mistresses don't know how to treat the other women's daughters we take into our homes, where's the good of being a Christian, anyway?"

Mrs. Naggs vitalised her Christianity by practising it, even in the kitchen. She kept none on hand just for parlour or Sunday use. "I've no time," said Mrs. Harrow, "to stand teaching a servant. Besides, talk about treating them as Christians—I've tried it, and it never answers. They get to know as much as oneself."

"Oh, Anna knows more of some things than I do," said Mrs. Naggs, quietly. "I go to her often when I'm in a tangle—she gives me real help over my girls' class. But, then, she can't cut out as well as I can; so I'm teaching her that. We have good times when we're working together after tea, for Anna's an intelligent girl, and she's beginning to think out things for herself."

"Well, you do beat all!" simpered young Mrs. Bligh. "I keep out of my girl's way as much as possible. I think familiarity breeds contempt. That class does not understand why we stoop to be kind to them—they begin to take liberties."

"My dear," said Mrs. Naggs, laying her hand gently on young Mrs. Bligh's wrist, "my dear, you're all wrong. Familiarity and contempt are not words we use in connection with our sisters and daughters; we do not 'stoop' when we are doing our duty—we are raised, ennobled. The 'maid-servant' comes in the same list as the 'wife' and the visitor. She may take a different place in the house—she does—but treat her properly, and she will understand this, without being made to feel it as a degradation. My Anna is as important to the well-being of the home as I am. She knows it, and values her position."

"Then I suppose we are both bad mistresses, and our girls are gems, only we don't see it?" concluded Mrs. Harrow, somewhat bitterly.

"No," said Mrs. Naggs, "only neither mistress nor maid has remembered that the words, 'Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another,' were meant for her, and for daily practice." . . . . .

The month was more than over, and the friends were again met in Mrs. Naggs' parlour; it was mending-day, and no scandal. "I never saw such a change in anyone as there is in 'Melia,' said Mrs. Harrow, "and she's so polite—she can't do enough."

"And did you find Anna any help to you?" asked Mrs. Naggs; she was having a quiet little triumph all to herself.

"A perfect treasure! I couldn't go back to the old ways now. Anna taught me how to treat a servant. I felt compelled to treat her properly; she was so satisfactory in every way—so self-respectful, such a lady. Her manner did it. And I can see 'Melia is going to be like her. We take as much pride in 'Melia's room now as we do in our own. I quite love the girl, and I think she's beginning to love me!"

"The change is not only in 'Melia, it is in yourself, too," was Mrs. Naggs' reply. "You trust the Lord to keep you faithful; you are working for Him, therefore. This means a hidden dignity of heart which prevents hasty blame, unjust views, all friction."

"Yes," said poor young Mrs. Bligh, "I must take a leaf out of your book. I was afraid Anna's going to Mrs. Harrow would be a dangerous experiment, but I did not know it for the same house when 'Melia opened the door to me this morning."

"No, my dear; go to the fountain-head. Don't take a leaf out of my book, I can't spare it—but go to my Master's book, and begin to put into practice, by his help, this commandment: 'Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a Master which is in heaven'" (Col. iv. 1). Emrie Gee.

OUR POLICEMEN.

At the corner of a quiet terrace, in the heart of busy London, there stands a large house, which, though a public institution, is very little known, but from which flow streams of light and blessing throughout our own country and also into far distant lands. The work commands a wide range of usefulness. The house is the Police Institute, the headquarters of the International Christian Police Association. This work, which sprang from quite a small beginning eleven years ago, has spread with rapidity, and is being carried on very quietly and simply as a direct spiritual agency throughout the United Kingdom, and in America, Japan, China, and other countries.

It may be asked, Why do policemen need an institute and an association exclusively for themselves? To which we reply—Policemen need friends. They have many enemies, not only those with whom the law compels them to deal, but others to whom the blue coat is not a welcome sight, and who are ever ready to find fault with men whose patience and good temper are often taxed to the utmost. The nature of their calling forbids them to mingle much with others, and makes them and their families almost a separate clan. Policemen need sympathy and kindness. Exposed to many hardships and dangers in the execution of their duty, they frequently meet with accidents, and a large number are always on the sick list.

Obliged to mix in scenes of sin, policemen are surrounded by temptations, and require a stronger arm than their own to keep them right. More often seen outside than inside our places of worship, and seldom able to attend ordinary meetings, they have few opportunities of spiritual help. At the Police Institute these various needs are met. There they have a restaurant, dining-room, and reading-room, to which they resort in their hours off duty. Classes and meetings are arranged at convenient times, and there they find loving friends, ready to help and cheer them. Many a man has been led to Christ within these walls, and gone forth into the stern cold streets, his heart aglow with the love of Christ, becoming himself God's messenger to those sunk in misery and sin. The Lord has of late been working very wonderfully, and many touching instances could be told of how He has broken down hard hearts and "gotten Himself the victory."

There are also lodgings for men sent up to London, who, being often strangers in the great city, are very grateful for comfortable accommodation. Special efforts are made to reach the young men just entering the force as recruits, many of them from country homes suddenly exposed to the worst temptations of London life, and amongst these there has been great encouragement. Under this roof, is the office for "On and Off Duty," and a book-room for other publications. From here also, ladies go forth to visit the families and the sick men in the hospitals. Friends are welcome at any time to see the Institute, and any help towards the large expenses will be gratefully received.

The rent is very heavy, and the payments of the men do not in any degree meet this. But it is hoped that those who owe so much to the bravery and courtesy of the guardians of our homes, who so efficiently maintain peace in this large city, will be led to take part in this work by their prayers and gifts. Any communications may be sent to Dr. A. B. Stoney, 1a, Adelphi-terrace, Adam-street, Strand, London.

"DAWN IN INDIA," the organ of the Christian Literature Society for India, is a half-yearly periodical (3d.) which deserves the attention of all students of foreign missions. The part for January takes account of a large variety of work, and the illustrations help the reading matter. Particulars of the Society and its work, as well as copies of Dawn in India, may be had from 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

GLIMPSES OF OPIUM-DENS.

A MISSIONARY of the L.M.S. entirely endorses the following letter which he has received: it was written last October:—

As I have been asked to testify before the Royal Commission on Opium, which is to visit India, I have been looking into the matter somewhat the past week, and you may be interested to hear some account of my observations. On Friday evening I sallied forth after dark, with one of our Brahmin Associate members, Varadacharlu, who is a leader in the Ind. Order of Total Abstainers and in the Ind. Social Reform Association; also with the native Christian editor of The Eastern Star, W. Raju Naidu.

First we went to Mofuschkhan's garden, in Blacktown. In a dark narrow lane, in a miserable little hovel, we found a "den," filled with smokers. There were at least thirty smokers inside, seated on the floor in every nook and corner, and in the street, in front of the door, there were at least a score more. A letter, which appeared in the Mail, a few days previously, had called attention to this resort, and put the police on their best behaviour. I have no doubt that in this way, by extra vigilance, they will now make it harder to secure evidence against the traffic which Government is directly promoting for purposes of revenue. At the entrance stood a constable, at the other end of the passage leading to the courtyard was a Mohammedan sub-inspector of police, and in the centre of the courtyard the police inspector of the district, a Brahmin. One of these officials told me that these smokers' dens are to be found everywhere throughout Madras, although a pretence has been made the past year that they were suppressed. But this officer went on to say, it is impossible to abolish the resorts so long as Government continues the sale for purposes other than of medicine. The smokers in this den said that they bought their opium in the next street, but I have no doubt it was being supplied on the premises, as stated by others to one of my companions on a former visit when the police were present.

I entered into conversation with some of the smokers. One old Mohammedan, a coolie, who said he had used the drug for forty years, and who had been loud in his defence of the drug a few days previous, on being asked whether he would allow his children to use it, said vehemently "I would kill them if ever they touched it." Another Mohammedan, a coachman, said he had been smoking two or three years; he earns 8 rupees a month, and spends one fourth of that for opium.

There was not one who would say a word in favour of the habit, but having got into it, they all declared they were powerless to leave it off. "If this is stopped," said several of them, "three-fourths of us will die." They described the effect of discontinuing its use to be "pains like cutting with an axe."

While we were interviewing them, the police officer announced to the proprietress, who proved to be a Mohammedan woman seated behind a purdah (screen) of cocoanut leaves only a few feet from us, that if she did not clear these fellows out of her house he would take her, Gosha woman though she was, to the police station. Then one by one the inmates sneaked out, until we were left almost alone. And when we went out, there were certainly sixty or more men in front of the door, waiting to resume their pipes as soon as we had taken our departure.

From there we drove away about three miles to the north, to Washermanpet, where after many windings through dark lanes we found another den of a still lower type, in a Parcherrie (village where Pariah outcasts live). Here immediately adjoining the opium shop was a shed in which—in direct violation of the licence—the opium was consumed, and here we found all sorts of natives, Mohammedan and Hindu, high-caste and low-caste, and no caste.

On interrogating one of them by interpreter, I was surprised to hear another man sitting in the circle next to me speak up in English, and when I asked him where he learned that language he replied, "At the Christian College." And at the same time, another, a young Hindu behind me, spoke up also, and said he, too, had been a student of Miller's College. Various occupations were represented—vendor of scents, clerk, peon, punkah-puller, coolie, &c.

With one accord the smokers at this place replied that they were powerless to stop the habit unless the sale were stopped. Some of them spend their whole time in this shed. One said he had not been out of it for three months; formerly he was employed in the High Court, but for several years he had done no work, and lived upon what his companions in misery gave him. Indeed, there were several of this sort, one a veritable skeleton, nothing but skin and bone. I bought a pipe from one of them for three annas (about five cents); it is simply a small cocoanut shell, with a long stem and a short one, in the end of which the drug is placed. In an inner shed, the entrance to which is not four feet high, I found another group, who seemed to be high-caste Hindus.

In all their deep degradation, these men were still attempting to maintain their caste. When one of my companions, a Christian convert from a respectable caste, touched the leaf on which one of the smokers had some food, the man became furiously angry, and said his food had been "defiled." This fellow seemed to be frenzied by the opium, and he was about the most depraved man I have yet come across; his whole mind seemed to be defiled, and I was glad I could not understand his language; he said he had been smoking for fifteen years. In this shed were men who had not been away from that resort for months, who were doing nothing unless it were begging in order to get money to obtain opium; one poor chap, the skeleton, was being supplied with food by his mother and brother. He was scarcely able to walk. A group of them gathered round and pleaded to have the temptation put out of their reach, as they declared they had no power whatever to give up the habit, while there was a chance of getting the opium. I asked one of them what the effect would be on the length of their life if they kept it up; they replied, "If we would otherwise live fifty years, we will die at thirty, if we use it." "And what then?" I asked. "We don't know," was the reply, "who can tell? God only knows, and who can know God?" "I do," I replied and went on to tell them of Jesus, my Brahmin friend helping to interpret what I was saying. At the mention of the name of "Jesus" one man said he had heard of Him. "Do any Jesus men come here to smoke?" I asked. Some said "No." But one man declared there had been a Christian Pial (Verandah) school teacher, "but he don't come since he came to know God," some of the others explained.

Going around to the front, I entered the Government licence fountain whence this stream of misery was flowing. I asked for the licence, and as by the light of the one candle in the place I read "licensed to sell an intoxicating drug, not to smoke in the shop or in the premises adjoining," the smokers at the adjoining shed were looking through a large hole (big enough to put one's arm through and touch the chest containing the drug).

The worst of the business is that the Indian Government not only licenses the sale but is itself the manufacturer and dealer in this death-dealing drug, and tries to take credit for virtue in restricting the consumption of it.

DAVID MCCONAUGHY, Gen. Sec. Y.M.C.A.

Madras, Oct. 15, 1893.

---

Rev. E. O. Williams, of the China Inland Mission, Pacheo, Sz-chuan, China, wrote on November 20, "After dark I was called out to an opium case, outside the West Gate. Thank God, by the aid of the hypodermic syringe, I was able to save the poor woman's life. But oh! what an awful house! Opium was being sold at the door, men lying down smoking opium just inside. Then I was shown into the master's room, who is in the military yamin, and there was all his opium apparatus spread out on his bed ready for use, and in an adjoining room was his sister-in-law who had tried to take her life with the accursed drug. I felt the devil was master there. This little city is terrible for its opium-smoking, both by men and women."

---

MEXICO.—Mr. Henry Taylor, formerly of Gibraltar, is now witnessing in Mexico. Not yet able to use the Spanish language, he embraces opportunities to distribute Evangelical literature. In a recent letter Mrs. Taylor says:—Every time we give away tracts or booklets, whether illustrated or not, we are quickly surrounded by a crowd of people with hands extended. When the supply is exhausted, they reluctantly leave us; so great is the desire for them, that money has been offered in payment! Mr. Taylor's address is 307, Plazuela San Fernando, City of Mexico.

BLESSING IN MADRAS.

WE have just been holding a series of "Meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life," which have filled our hearts with thankfulness and hope. The meetings were arranged by the Madras Missionary Conference. They were the first of the kind ever held in this city, but the general feeling is that they will not by any means be the last.

They continued for four days, beginning with January 4. Rev. H. D. Goldsmith, who presided at the first meeting, and in whose church the convention was held, said that he felt that though the church had never been consecrated ecclesiastically, it was certainly consecrated now in the truest sense by the fact of Christians of all denominations being gathered in it to seek unitedly the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit. Two meetings were held daily. At the first of these the subjects bore on Christian experience, at the second they were concerned with Christian service; the vital connection between the two being forcibly emphasised by several of the speakers. Again and again it was pointed out that what was needed for a richer Christian experience and a more effective Christian service is the fulness of the Indwelling Spirit—not a blessing merely, not even "the blessing," but the very Blesser Himself to take up his abode in our hearts and fill us to overflowing. Several of the missionaries of Madras gave addresses, besides Dr. H. Soltau, of Ootacamund. The convention terminated with a praise and testimony meeting, at which a number of persons spoke of blessing received, and a missionary meeting in the Memorial Hall.

All this was a good preparation for the week of universal prayer, which began on the following day. Truly the "good measure pressed down and running over" ran over from one week into the other. The spirit of prayer was poured out in a remarkable manner, leading to great directness, simplicity, and freedom in supplication and intercession. It was like the dawn of a new day, and the breath of a new life, and the note of a new song. It deepened in many hearts the conviction, which is growing among us, that God is about to bless us here in Madras and throughout South India "exceedingly abundantly," and that we are on the eve of greater things than we have yet seen. Will your readers remember us sometimes in their prayers?

We are looking forward to the visit of "David," the Tamil evangelist, who commences a mission here on February 1, and we are also shortly to have with us Revs. Edgar N. Thwaites and Martin Hall (C.M.S.), who have come out to India from England, and Mr. George Soltau, of Tasmania. The thought of these helpers prompts us to sing—

Reinforcements now appearing,
Victory is nigh.

And yet our eyes are not upon men, but upon God.

Madras, January 18. R. J. WARD, L.M.S.

---

HOMES OF HOPE.

ONLY those who hear the appeals that come to us for aid can adequately realise their urgency, or the pain of turning a deaf ear to the cry for help, either from the young woman near the dreaded hour of maternity, or the penitent fallen woman, asking for a place of shelter and repentance. Others there are, children in years and experience, the victims of man's cupidity and crime, who have been injured, outraged, and debased without remedy or restoration, for whose aid the Homes of Hope are ever open.

For all these the committee plead with the Christian public, that in giving of their abundance, they may include in their gifts those whose miseries are alleviated by the work. In proportion as they are well supported, the committee are enabled to afford relief to the supplicants.

W. HORNIBROOK, Secretary.

4 to 6, Regent-square, W.C.

---

RIO DE JANEIRO.—The hon. secretary of the Rio branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society writes to say that the Sailors' Home on shore has been kept open, and the Sailors' Bethel moored in the harbour has been often used during the revolution by seamen. But as the Bethel was exposed, being in the line of fire, the officers of the English fleet took up moorings and towed her out of danger, so that the good ship, bought and fitted up at the cost of some £500, is preserved for the benefit of our seamen.

TRANSFORMATION IN MADAGASCAR.

BY S. BACKWELL FENN.

One dark cloudy night, about fifty-six years ago, with heavy clouds looming, and thunder booming in the west, some twenty or thirty Malagasy cautiously crept out of the city of Antananarivo. They were not all together, but proceeded in little groups of twos and threes, emerging from different parts of the town by various and often unfrequented paths. As they quietly walked along but little conversation passed between them, for they evidently wished to avoid observation, and their faces were almost entirely covered by their "lambas." Every now and again one or another turned nervously round to assure himself and his companions that no one was dogging their steps.

Could we but trace all these various little groups we should notice that notwithstanding the circuitous and often unfrequented routes followed, they were all going in an easterly direction. By-and-by the town is left, and they pick their way across the rice fields in the valley below. As we said, the night is dark, the rice fields, too, are full of water, for it is the wet season, and the little embankments dividing the rice fields from one another are narrow and slippery. Many a stumble and fall into the mud is endured good-naturedly by our pilgrims as they press on.

Presently the rice-fields are all passed, and they commence the ascent of the hills on the opposite side. The various groups now begin to approach each other, and are evidently directing their steps to one particular hill to the north-east of the town. It is a weird and desolate spot. The summit is one of the public execution grounds, and is named "The Place of Beheading." Just below it many a little heap of stones denotes a roughly-dug grave, where some wretched criminal or castaway slave has been hurriedly buried. But the summit is not their destination, for, see, they are nearing a curious round excavation about half-way down the slope of the hill. It is about forty feet in diameter, and seven or eight feet deep, and looks something like a large ox-pit. Soon one, and then another, of these little companies reach the lonely spot, and after cautiously giving the password, descend, and, squatting on the ground, talk freely to each other, and wait for later arrivals. At last, by about ten o'clock, over thirty have assembled, and the business that has brought them thus secretly together is about to begin.

Who are these, and what are they doing here? Are they outlaws or conspirators? Is it some foul plot they are concocting, or are they some lawless band of robbers? Let us listen, and we shall soon find out.

Hark! Slowly and softly a hymn of praise rises to heaven out of that lowly pit, and then a young man stands up in their midst, and in earnest passionate words prays God to help and sustain them and their brethren; prays that they may be kept faithful in this their extremity; and that if it be the Divine will these days of cruel persecution may soon pass away; prays for those already in prison, some of whom are about to be publicly speared or hurled over precipitous rocks; prays, too, for their foreign teachers, who have been obliged by the heathen and persecuting Queen to leave them. Some are heard to sob during the prayer, for one has a brother and another a beloved father in the clutches of the cruel monarch. The prayer ended, an older man arises, and after quoting a few verses of Scripture from memory, pours forth a simple but earnest exhortation. Could we understand his words, we should, I fear, conclude that he is very ignorant, and many of his statements are not exactly orthodox or fact; but we must remember that he is only just emerging from heathendom, and that his teachers have all had to leave—truly a little flock without a shepherd.

Now the storm breaks upon them, and they are soon drenched to the skin, but still they remain, and another song of prayer and praise rises more lustily than the first, and the inclemency of the elements seems only to fire the warmth of their hearts the more. They are quite safe to-night, for who would venture out in such weather as this?

The service is over, and about midnight, they creep back to the dark city as they came. Yet not as they came, for though cold, wet, and weary in body, their hearts are all aglow with renewed warmth, zeal, and strength, for the fierce trials that await them.

This is one of Madagascar's first churches.

A few yards below this round excavation is a little enclosure with a humble hut in which live a poor man with his wife and family. They, too, are Christians, and in a little hole below the floor are carefully wrapped up and hidden a few precious books that have escaped the wholesale destruction ordered by the Queen. They are the Bible and two or three volumes of "Pilgrim's Progress." Every now and again a friend and brother comes to visit this family, and the priceless treasures are unearthed and read.

And thus the great pit and the humble hut are used secretly as places for worshipping God by the poor persecuted Christians for several months. At last, however, their gatherings are discovered, and all is over. Some have been caught, and some will suffer martyrdom for Christ's sake.

Over half-a-century has passed since then. Let us again visit the same spot. What changes have taken place!

The hill is there as of old, but is no longer used as an execution ground, and instead of "the Place of Beheading," the hill-side is now called "Isoavinandiana," or "The Delight of the Queen."

The old pit is still there, but partly filled by the washings from the hillside; and yonder, too, is a portion of the old mud wall denoting the enclosure round the hut above mentioned. But that is not all. The slope of the hillside has been levelled, and on the site has been erected a large, fine, mission hospital, with accommodation for seventy or eighty patients. Here, also, are the residences of the lady superintendent and one of the doctors; also cottages for married nurses and the friends of patients from a distance. The barren ground, too, is changing its aspect, for a garden has been laid out in front of the hospital, and hundreds of young trees are now growing in the compound round about. The large pit is not in the hospital compound, but just above it, in that of the Malagasy house-surgeon, Dr. Ralarosy, who has bought the land and built his house there.

So much for external appearance; let me now recount a little of the work that is carried on in this interesting place.

This, then, is the hospital and headquarters of the Medical Mission, supported by the F.F.M.A. and the L.M.S. I say headquarters, for there are also two dispensaries in the city, and one in the country, worked by this Mission. The hospital is a new one, and was publicly opened by the Christian Queen on August 13, 1891. It is far larger and more convenient than the old one in town, now given up, and has already accommodated as in-patients over 2000 poor sufferers. There are two large men's wards, two women's, and one children's; also several private rooms for those who can afford to pay for them. There is also an out-patients' department, with waiting-room, consulting-room, and dispensary, and on one side is a spacious lecture-room for the students.

(To be concluded.)

TO SERVE.

To sit with folded hands
Brings to no waiting soul the joy of life;
In hard, yea, weary labour, and in strife,
Rather than peace it stands.

Peace waiteth farther on,
But 'tis a battle-field we first must tread;
By our great Captain of salvation led
Hardly is victory won.

Rest shall come by and by,
And none can taste the joy of rest untired;
What wages earns the servant who is hired,
If all at ease he lie?

Not for reward alone,
This law is given that we must up and do;
By all who would be strong and happy too,
Must strenuous work be done.

The unused hand is weak,
How can its nerveless fingers grasp the lyre?
Silent its music ever if we tire
When first its sweet chords speak.

All stagnant life is death,
But follow thou the Master on his way,
And thou shalt never be of death the prey,
E'en as the Master saith.

Extracted from a volume entitled From Advent to All Saints, verses suggested by the Epistles and Gospels, by J. E. A. Brown. (Griffith, Farran, Okeden, & Welsh.)

WORK AMONG FRENCH PRIESTS.

What is known as the Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis is a deeply interesting agency carried on by our friends in France. It does not exist for the benefit of unfrocked or disgraced priests, but for the guidance and help of such as, through compulsion of enlightened conviction, wish to leave the Church of Rome. While efforts are made to evangelise the French people in general, it is important not to overlook the hosts of men who are Roman Catholics simply because their parents were, and who unfortunately became priests before their minds had been informed or their judgments awakened on religious matters. There are in all parts of France priests who have lost any confidence they ever had in the Church of Rome, but, except some friendly hand is extended to them, they cannot step out into Gospel light and liberty.

The new report, just issued, shows that with a sum of £400 ten priests were assisted last year, some being sent to college, others launched upon business careers. These men came out of the Church boldly and alone, in spite of friends and to the pain of their colleagues. They have to endure persecution at the very start. They are not without personal influence, however; in fact, a Jesuit turning Protestant causes disorder in an entire congregation, and people cannot but be set thinking. An oblat de Marie, who for weeks was applauded in ten cathedrals, suddenly entered a Protestant theological seminary, and the event was such a thunderstroke that the whole church fled to the shrine of the Virgin to cry in consternation "Holy Mary, what does this mean?" There are two or three thousand churches in France without priests; there would be more, if disappointed priests, who have come to know the Gospel, and secretly approve Protestant principles, could assert their independence and come out from Romanism.

Professor L. J. Bertrand, the director of this work, is glad to report an accession of new sympathisers, one of whom, resident at Cherbourg, writes: "Send me ex-priests who merit your confidence; I will lodge them, and instruct them for two or three months, while we evangelise together the working-men and rural population." In a letter to us M. Bertrand says:—"There is at the present time a great movement among the priests of France, and I have letters from all parts, and even from Rome, jesuitically defying me to give names and addresses. All the same, well-known priests, first canons, abbots, professors, and seminarists, write to me: 'Go on with your work. You have chosen the best way for a religious reform, which we all want in France. Put fire to the very nest. As soon as you succeed, you will see that if we love and adore Christ we hate the Church. But what can we do? We know nothing of the world; we are fit for nothing in the world; and the Concordat says explicitly that a Roman priest cannot be a Protestant pastor without his B.A. degree, and four years at the Protestant Theological Seminary! The aim of the Concordat was:—French Protestants, you shall disappear. Now it means:—Revolted Roman priests, you must submit to your bishop, say Mass in which you do not believe, hear the filthy questions and the filthy answers of the confessional, or——starve. You say, and we say, that this is more than exasperating. That is true. But how can we get out of the pit if you do not succeed in finding us a situation in business, or suitable work in the Protestant Church? Thousands of French Roman priests would leave their Church to-morrow if they were sure not to be obliged to beg for their daily bread. Protestantism spends thousands of pounds sterling in evangelisation. Why does it not spend £2,000 for us Roman priests, and then we might provoke in France the religious movement which you spoke of in your last report?'"

M. Bertrand has the active co-operation of MM. Réveillaud and A. de Rougemont. The agency may be the means of "discovering" some powerful evangelists; for, it is satisfactory to note, the promoters recognise the peculiar influence which godly evangelists, converts from Romanism, might exert even in the most priest-ridden parts of France.

M. Bertrand is now staying at 21, Upper Woburn-place, London, W.C. He will be happy to send reports or furnish further information regarding the work.

TALK HOPEFULLY TO CHILDREN about life and possibilities; you have no right to depress them because you have suffered.

REV. JOHN McNEILL'S GOOD-BYE.

MEETINGS IN LONDON.

This evangelist had a very hearty send-off by many London friends on his departure for service at the Cape and the Antipodes. Two largely-attended meetings were held on Thursday last as announced, when Londoners had such a taste of Mr. McNeill's pulpit fare as only left them longing for more. That they will not be able to have for some time, as Mr. McNeill expects to be absent from our shores for the best part of a year.

The City Temple was crammed to excess on Thursday at noon by a congregation that was greatly interested and moved by the famed evangelist's address. He spoke on the three candidates for Christian discipleship of whom we are told in Luke ix. It is quite a hopeless task to attempt a reproduction in cold type of the spirit of Mr. McNeill's utterances. The personality of the speaker enters so largely into his address that he inevitably suffers from being reported. Suffice it to say that his analysis of the different moods and motives of would-be disciples, as illustrated in this New Testament narrative, was masterly, and very sharp in its personal application to the circumstances of to-day. At the close of the sermon Dr. Parker uttered some characteristic words of commendation, and in the name of the immense concourse bade Mr. McNeill God speed on his Gospel mission to our colonial friends.

Another vast assemblage greeted Mr. McNeill in the evening at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. It was a great tribute to the popular gifts of the evangelist to see such a gathering on a week evening, listening to the message of the Gospel. But it must be confessed that such discourses as that which Mr. McNeill gave (on the 23rd Psalm) are very rare. If they were common there would be little chance for those who seek to rob the ancient Scriptures of their hold on the minds and hearts of men. Some notes of an address by Mr. McNeill on this "Nightingale Psalm" were given in our columns in March, 1892, but the form of the exposition has developed since then, especially in its illustrations. Many of these are borrowed from personal experience, and the applications to the cases both of saint and sinner are very charming and skilful. The preacher was greatly helped on Thursday evening, and seemed to move the audience at will—now to laughter, now to tears. The homely Psalm must henceforth be doubly dear to all who heard this address.

During the evening Mr. J. H. Burke, who had only arrived from America a few hours before, sang a Gospel song. He has now companied with Mr. McNeill as singer for over two years, in Scotland, Ireland, and Chicago, and goes with him on this round-the-world tour.

The evangelists left London on Saturday forenoon by the "Castle Line" express from Waterloo. Mr. McNeill's eldest son goes with them as far as the Cape of Good Hope, with a view to establishing his health. A goodly number of friends were at the station to say a last good-bye and wish the departing friends a heartfelt God speed. They sailed from Southampton on Saturday by the s.s. Drummond Castle.

THE BRIGHTON MISSION.

On Thursday evening a meeting for praise and testimony in connection with the recent Mission in the Dome was held in Rev. J. B. Figgis's church, North-street. The church was crowded, and many gave vocal testimony to blessing received; while many others stood in token of having found the Saviour during the meetings at the Dome. Addresses were given by Messrs. Norris, Geale, and Lane—all local pastors—and by the Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon. It was a very stimulating and gratifying occasion.

The Brighton workers are meeting with cases of decision that were not made known while the meetings were in progress. Some of these are of unusual interest. Rev. E. L. Hamilton, of Bath, is following up the Dome Mission by meetings in one of the churches, and other friends are sustaining the special interest awakened.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—A gift of £1000 is promised to the Missions to Seamen, on condition that £3000 in addition be raised in the next three months, towards a special fund, which is greatly needed at this time.

JEWS AND THE GOSPEL.

PERSIA.

The Jewish Intelligencer for February contains a very interesting report from Mr. Norollah of an itinerating tour among the Jews in Persia, where, at the present time, the Lord has opened a great door, and effectual, for the preaching of the Word to Israel, and also to Islam. At Senneh (in Kurdistan), all the heads of the Jewish community called upon him at his lodgings, and Mr. Norollah informed them that he had come to tell them of the first advent of their Messiah. The following day he visited the Chief Priest of the Moslems, and had a conversation with him in the presence of two Jews. The same evening, a rabbi brought him an old Christian liturgy in Hebrew, and asked what it was. He had found it in the library of his father, with two New Testaments and many tracts, which he said he had read with much care, and was now convinced of the truth of Christianity.

On the morning of the Sabbath Mr. Norollah attended the large synagogue, and after the reading of the Law and the Prophets, the rabbi invited him to enter the pulpit and address the congregation, consisting of about 500 persons! At the close of the sermon, which was listened to with marked attention, a Jew said to the missionary, "If Christianity is what you explained to-day, it is not contrary to the Word of God." At Kermanshehan also Mr. Norollah received a very friendly welcome. He writes:—"As the Jews are not Talmudists, and consequently not fanatical, missionaries can reach them easily, and a worker could live amongst them without any trouble." On the Sabbath no less than twenty Jews, instead of going to their synagogue, visited Mr. Norollah, and listened for two hours while he expounded to them Romans x.

A few weeks ago a letter from Pastor Yonan, of Oroomiah, was quoted in The Christian, in which he stated his opinion that converted Jews make the best missionaries to Mohammedans. An interesting commentary upon that statement has just been supplied by recent news from Persia, and we are thankful to learn that two Christian workers, one a converted Jew and the other a converted Mohammedan, have lately been working and witnessing for Christ together, in connection with the C.M.S. work in that country. This fact is the more interesting when we call to mind the cruel persecution which the Jews have undergone at the hands of the Moslems in Persia, and the hatred which has so long existed between the two peoples.

RUSSIA.

Mr. Nelam, a recently-appointed agent of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews at Berditschew, in South Russia, has opened a depôt in that town for the distribution of the New Testament, and reports most encouraging results. As already noticed in a previous issue of The Christian, there is a mass movement of the Jews toward Christ in South Russia, and the large demand for the New Testament proves the existence of an increasing spirit of inquiry, which is very remarkable. One Jew said, "If I were to become a Christian I should take this book in my hand and go to the Christians, and ask them if they are aware what a precious treasure they have, and tell them how they tread it under foot." This man has since told Mr. Nelam that the Gospel has lit such a fire in his heart that he does not believe he will be able to remain a Jew much longer, and in a letter just received by Mr. Wilkinson it is stated that he has immersed himself in a brook three times in the name of Jesus! Through his instrumentality Mr. Nelam received an invitation from a "majib" (Jewish preacher) to attend one of the largest synagogues in the town. The invitation was readily responded to, and while seated in his place prior to the commencement of the service, the missionary, much to his astonishment, was requested by the convert already referred to, to come into a side room, where he found a group of twenty or thirty Jews who were "desirous of hearing something of Christianity."

The missionary gladly availed himself of the opportunity, and had the joy of testifying to his brethren of the true Messiah, and was enabled by the grace of God so to answer the gainsayers that they were compelled to admit that Isaiah liii. 11 could not refer to the nation, but to Messiah, and he was then able to turn to his hearers and press upon them the claims of Jesus; after which he returned to his place in the synagogue, and remained for the majib's sermon.

SOUTH AFRICA.

After leaving Oudtshoorn Messrs. Day and Malbert, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, proceeded to Port Elizabeth, where they received but little encouragement in their mission from the Christians, except from the Brethren. Finding no means of obtaining meetings through the aid of the churches, the evangelists were compelled to hire a room on their own account, but, though the meetings were freely advertised, there was but a sparse attendance. One very encouraging feature, however, was the presence, out of a score of persons, of fifteen Jews. An opportunity was afforded at the close of this meeting for those who wished to speak to do so, and three Jews responded. One cause for thankfulness was the courteous reception accorded to the missionaries by the rabbi, on whom they called, and with whom they conversed during an entire morning. Speaking of Christ, the rabbi said: "I acknowledge him to have been great indeed; his was a mind so vast that I can quite understand his exciting the envy of the stupid bigots who crucified him." At the close of the conversation one of the missionaries assured him that the whole difference between his position and theirs lay in the answer to the question, "How can a man be justified in the sight of God?"

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

Richard Weaver's meetings at Malden Hall are crowded every night, with overflows on the Sundays, while at Willesden Hall we are cheered with large audiences and deep spiritual interest in Mr. Geo. Hucklesby's meetings. We would ask readers of The Christian to join us in thanksgiving for this, and in prayer for still greater things.

We are still finding much distress both in the East and North-west of London, where our staff are chiefly at work. We rejoice, however, to add that we have much cause for encouragement and praise to God in happy soul-winning work in the various halls of the Evangelistic Mission both in London and the country.

The following are a few cases out of many that have been investigated and relieved by the lady visitors connected with the Evangelistic Mission during the past fortnight:—

1. "Husband out of work for weeks. No firing during the bitterly cold weather. Regular attendant at meetings."

2. "Husband out of work eleven weeks. Only wood burning in grate. Baby ten days old. Three other children."

3. "Husband been ill with rheumatic fever four months. Returned to work this week. Baby three weeks old. Three other children."

4. "Husband and wife out of employment six weeks, with aged mother and sister incurably ill; without food or fire."

5. "Bricklayer (out of work some weeks) and wife with eight children, sickness and dire need."

6. "Messenger, long ill and unemployed, with eight children, some ill, and some recently buried."

7. "A young married couple. Husband out of employment six weeks. Without food or fuel."

8. "A father, ill for nearly whole of past year, some weeks in hospital. Known to the editor as an industrious man, but earning a precarious living at odd jobs. Lately bereft of his wife."

9. "Woman with three children. Much physical suffering. Outdoor patient at hospital. Husband only in occasional work."

10. "Christian woman, converted at Willesden Hall, whose husband has had no regular work for two years."

C. Russell Hurditch.

164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood.
London, N.W.

IN THE NEW HEBRIDES group the work of the Gospel is going forward in a very cheering manner. Rev. R. M. Fraser tells of wonderful progress on the large island of Epi, and from other parts similar reports are received.

THOSE WHO WOULD FASHION and guide the souls of men, will surely become more and more convinced that their efforts will be futile, unless they begin to learn at the cradle of little children how education may aid nature.—Compayré.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18.—ECCLES. XI.

1.—The allusion is to the custom of casting seed on fertile lands saturated by the early rains, which would return to the sower in the autumn with large increase. The Speaker's Commentary explains it thus:—"Show hospitality, even though a return of hospitality may seem improbable." We refer it especially to Christian usefulness. The more you give, the more you get. The five barley loaves come back to you in the twelve baskets. 2-4.—The thought of coming evil makes the worldly man selfish, as he prepares his hoard to meet it, but the same thought leads the righteous to give. If we are always watching the signs around us, our actions will be spasmodic and irregular. We must go on doing our duty to others, irrespective of wind, or rain, or cloud. Determine what it is right to do, and do it. All character tends to permanence—this is the lesson of the fallen tree.

5, 6.—Life is full of mystery. We are so ignorant of the reasons of things, that our only hope of influencing others, or doing real work in the world, is to continue scattering precious seed, sowing in the morning and persevering till night, leaving results with God. It may be that the seed sown under the most unpromising conditions will prosper to a miracle, because God doeth all. 7, 8.—These words lack the hope of the Christian. For him there is the glad and certain outlook to an ever-brightening eternity. Sweet to him will be the light of Christ's face, and a pleasant thing to weep no more. But to the ungodly there comes the outer darkness which will veil all. "Be glad while you may, if your conscience lets you," we may say to the ungodly, "but remember the days of darkness, which are inevitable." Amid the verdure of spring, do not forget that there must be an autumn.

9, 10.—The tendency of young manhood is to self-indulgence. At first this brings gladness, but its certain outcome will be God's adverse judgment here and hereafter. Obey conscience, which is the judgment of God within thee, and thou wilt have no reason to fear the judgment of God without thee, since thy Judge will be thy Saviour.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 19.—ECCLES. XII.

The chapter should begin at xi. 9, with the words "Rejoice, O young man," etc., as the subject begins there, which goes on to xii. 7. The young must remember the judgment-bar of the future, and there is no such way of preparing for it as to remember the Creator. If God be a guide of our youth, evil days will never come, or the years of bitter pain, and even the old age described in the words that follow, will be aglow with a beauty of its own.

2.—The darkening eyesight. 3.—The trembling arms, the bowing knees, the decaying teeth. 4.—The compressed lips, the light sleep of the aged, the faltering voice. 5.—The dread of climbing, the difficulty of walking on a plain path, the white head figured by the blossoms of the almond tree, the shrivelled body recalling the fable of Tithonus in very old age changed into a grasshopper, and all desire at an end. 6.—At last death comes; a lamp hung from the roof by a cord of silk and silver, is dashed to the ground, so the skull, which answers to the golden bowl, and the spinal cord, which answers to the silver cord, cease their functions. A pitcher made to let down into a fountain by a rope wound round a wheel may be suddenly broken, and so the heart no longer performs its work of circulating the blood. 7.—Solomon clearly believed in immortality when the spirit goes back to God. 8.—What a sad view this is of the close of life. How different to 2 Cor. v., where the glad spirit anticipates the house not made with hands, and realises that though the outward man perish, the inward man is being renewed day by day. What matter that the house falls to ruins, if the tenant is living vigorously and happily otherwhere.

8-12.—The writer identifies himself with the author of the Book of Proverbs, who we know was Solomon. We should not only ponder, but seek out truth. Order is essential for the right communication of thought, and acceptable words must be sought for. 11.—Oh to speak so that our words may pierce deeply the heart, and be fastened in the memory, given by, and proceeding from, the Spirit of the Good Shepherd. 13, 14.—These concluding words contain the lesson which the vanity of a worldly life teaches. Leave God out, and all is vanity, therefore let us fear Him as children who trust and dread to grieve. The recognition of God and the keeping of his law are the secret of right living, but this is impossible except to those who know Him in Jesus Christ, and have been regenerated by the Holy Spirit.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 20.—SONG OF SOLOMON I.

There is a striking contrast here to the tone of unrest and dissatisfaction which characterised the previous book, where all things savoured of vanity and vexation of spirit, and ended in death. Here a person is presented whose love satisfies the soul, and whose name, "as ointments poured forth," draws forth love.

The Soul's Longing, 1-4.—The soul has no need to name her love. Only One can satisfy her. She wants not love alone, but its expression. For wine never so exhilarated the body as the sense of Christ's love does the soul. And spikenard never made air so fragrant as the unveiling of his name does to our spiritual sense. But, ah, how slowly we move; we need the strong drawing of the Holy Ghost. We need bringing in the King's own self. The closer we come, the more we know, the more we shall rejoice.

The Soul's Confession, 5-7.—The dark tents of Kedar's wandering tribes, made of black goat skins, as contrasted with the splendid pavilion of the king, are an image of our estimate of ourselves, as we draw nearer his peerless beauty. Scorched of the sun, whilst keeping the vineyards of others! (R.V.). But though unworthy, we cannot be turned aside, we must needs find where He is, that we may spend the rest-hour in the sultry heat, beside Him.

The Soul's Counsellor, 8.—When we cannot find Him whom our soul loveth, let us keep in the track of his flock, and beside the shepherds' tents. Attendance on the means of grace will probably lead to a meeting with the Shepherd and Bishop and Lover of souls.

The Soul's Intercourse with her Love (9-17).—The tenderest passages between twin hearts, when compared with that spiritual intercourse that subsists between Christ and his Church, is as moonlight to sunlight. We have no desire to press these words too literally, but to take from them the general impression of fellowship which each loving heart may have with Jesus Christ. 9-11.—He compares his beloved to the richly caparisoned horse, and perhaps alludes to the Egypt from which she was redeemed by blood. 12-14.—She thinks of Him as a scent-box filled with liquid myrrh, or as the odorous flowers of the henna, culled from Engedi famous for aromatic shrubs. Jesus is disinfectant from sin as well as precious. 15.—He says that she is fair, because of the beauty He had put on her, and that her eyes are gentle, innocent, tender as doves' are. 16, 17.—And she is content to find her home amid the green bowers of nature, with the interlacing boughs of cedar and fir for ceiled roof.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21.—SONG OF SOL. II.

The soul's intercourse with her immortal Lover still flows on, and nature is laid under contribution to furnish its choicest emblems, for this is indeed the mystery of love, that it projects itself into the outward and the visible, and finds everywhere hues borrowed from itself.

1.—The Soul.—The rose contrasted with the apple tree, courts the ground, and casts her fragrance upwards. So whilst we think of Christ towering above us as the apple tree, we think of ourselves as mere shrubs and flowers, owing all our beauty and fragrance to the sun. 2.—The Lord.—He sees us not as we are, but as we shall be, when our character is lily white, but He sees clearly the present contrast between ourselves and our companions. Art thou Christ's lily? See that thou dost not degenerate into a thorn.

3.—The Soul.—To her Christ is as the well-laden apple tree, which may stand for the golden citron, or orange-apple. Such shadow from the heat, such lusciousness in the fruit! And then in his company she passes to the cedar summer house, where she resigns herself to endearments too tender for words. 7.—The Lord.—There are times when He screens the soul from all annoyance, and all the atmosphere of the life is as still as when the hunter is stealing up upon the gazelles and hinds. "When He giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?"

8-19.—Waking Moments.—There are high days in the history of the soul-life, when she awakes as nature from her winter sleep, and in the rapture that pulses through every vein she finds a counterpart with the intoxication of the spring glade "when every bough is a choir, and every bank is deep inset with flowers. These experiences are associated with some new revelation of Jesus Christ. "The voice of my Beloved, behold He cometh!" "He showeth Himself through the lattice." Darkly, not face to face. And then through the vineyards in blossom, through the thick covert of the glen, away to the clefts of the rock, until the cool of evening, such is the experience of days when the shadows flee, and mountains of division no longer intervene, and Christ reveals Himself as not to the world.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22.—SONG OF SOLOMON III.

1-4.—The Soul's Confession. The Lord withdraws sometimes, not because we have grieved Him, but in order to lead us to live by faith, and not by sight; on what He is, rather than on the delights He gives. Then we seek Him in vain, and even the watchmen are not able to help us in our search. Such trials to our faith are but for a little while, and then we find Him, or are found by Him. We hold Him, as weakness always holds strength.

5.—A Time of Rest and Peace. In this chorus, repeated from ii. 7, all intruders are bidden withdraw, that none may dare to break the sweet peace that comes to the restored enjoyment of the love of Christ.

6.—The Bridal Procession. In procession the Bridegroom and Bride are seen coming up from the wilderness in their litter surrounded by mighty men. The car of state is also introduced and described (9). It is thus that Christ and his Church are passing up from the wilderness of this world escorted by the armies of heaven. All joy is there, and strength, and glory. The crowns of universal power, the universe itself, may be laid under contribution to provide material for that triumph, in which the soul which is well with Him shall share.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23.—SONG OF SOLOMON IV.

4-7.—The Lord.—He sees his perfect comeliness which He put on her (Ezek. xvi. 14), and his words of loving praise humble the soul still lower in the dust. What the beauty of the wife is to her husband, that our moral beauties are to Jesus. "In whom I am well pleased." "Accepted in the Beloved." The silken hair of the goat, the spotless whiteness of ewes, the crystal seeds of the pomegranate, the shields that hung around the tower of David like necklaces on a bride's neck, the fawns feeding among the lilies, these are the emblems which convey the lover's ardent thought. Does the Lord depart? Can He tear Himself away from one so fair and dear? Not for long. He has gone to Paradise, with its mountains of myrrh and hills of frankincense, only till the everlasting day shall break.

8-15.—The Lord's Invitation.—"From the heights of Lebanon, Solomon says that Shulamith his bride shall along with him look down from where lions and panthers dwell. Near these beasts of prey, and yet inaccessible by them, she shall enjoy the prospect of the extensive pleasant land, which was subject to the sceptre of Him who held her safe on those cliffs."—Delitzsch. Thus we are seated with Christ in heavenly places, and look down the ages on his certain triumph. 9.—The loving soul can give pleasure to its Lord. 10.—Better the love of the redeemed soul than the wealth of creation. 11.—The words we speak to Jesus are precious to Him. 12.—We are hidden from man, but well known and loved by Him. 13, 14. He calls these ours, but they are his, caught from companionship with Him. 15.—Rivers flow from those who receive from Him his Holy Spirit.

16.—The soul sighs for the breath of the Holy Spirit, that all its hidden stores may pour out to please and satisfy its Lord. The north wind of trial or the south wind of mercy are welcome, if they can make us more fragrant for Him.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24.—SONG OF SOLOMON V.

1.—The Lord.—In the closing verses of iv. she said, "Let Him come." Whilst she was yet speaking He heard, and came. "I am come." There is nothing which we prepare for Jesus' delight that passes unnoticed.

2-8.—The Soul's Lament.—Can this be she, who a little while ago sang her love? How is she thus, and why these plaintive laments? Ah! He came, and stood without, and she kept Him standing till the night dews drenched his head. She was too indolent to obey his summons, and lay wrapt in slumber. But why did He not force the door and enter? He might have done so, but such is not his way. He stands at the door and knocks, till one shall open the door and bid Him enter. Thus, often we fail to respond to the summons of Jesus to service or fellowship. And instantly a cloud comes over the soul. Our beloved is gone, leaving the memory of what He was. Then, when we open, He is gone. It is weary work then. The watchmen can have but little sympathy with the soul that has treated the Master with such neglect. And she asks the prayer and intercessions of those who know Him well, and are free of his audience-chamber.

9.—The Challenge.—Let us so speak of our Lord that others shall begin to say: Who and what is Jesus that He is so much to thee?

10-16.—The Soul's Reply.—He is white in his peerless manhood, red in his mediatorial robe. His head shines as burnished gold. His locks are black in manly strength. His eyes gentle and full of melting love. His cheeks as balsam, yet men spat on them. His lips dropping sweetest words. His hands as gold, his nails as beryl. His body bright with radiant glory and girt with the sapphire girdle of royalty. His legs strong as marble, and his sandals of gold. His bearing tall and erect as Lebanon among mountains. His very breath fragrant as the breeze of summer. Thus nature is laid under tribute. Her choicest emblems are gathered, but all fall short of conveying the reality of Jesus Christ.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 25.

THE TRIAL OF ABRAHAM'S FAITH.—Gen. xxii. 1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Heb. xi. 17.

THIS was the severest trial of Abraham's faith. All that he has met before has been a training for this. Ishmael was banished when Isaac was about three years old. From that time the course of Abraham's life has been marked with no special event. It must have been a startling message that came to him demanding such a sacrifice as this. Isaac was about eighteen or twenty years old.

"God did tempt Abraham" (1). Not in the sense of enticing him to sin. See James i. 13. The Golden Text explains it by saying, "Abraham, when he was tried." He was put to the test in order that his faith might be strengthened, and that by his obedience to this apparently impossible command he might be an example to all who are the children of Abraham through faith.

1. THE SEVERITY OF THE TRIAL.—The message of God (2) seems designed to impress Abraham with a sense of the difficulty he had to meet. Isaac was the dearest object of his heart. Already he had given up his country, and kindred, and father's house—Sodom's wealth, Lot's companionship, and Ishmael, his first-born. Only Isaac was left: and he was loved all the more tenderly because he was now his "only son." God puts his finger upon him—can Abraham yield him up to God? No other son could be what Isaac was. Remember that he was the child of promise, that for years Abraham hoped against hope for the fulfilment of the promise, and that at last his birth was nothing less than a miracle. To part with such a son was a trial beyond any we can endure.

Isaac was necessary to the Divine promises.—The obedience of faith with which Abraham has met God's previous commands has been rewarded by many and precious promises. Not only the innumerable seed, but the Saviour through whom all the families of the earth were to be blessed, was included. But the Word of God has connected these promises inseparably with Isaac (xxi. 12; Heb. xi. 18), so that the death of Isaac seems to render them void. Without Isaac there can be no seed for Abraham, and no Christ for the world. Would God be unfaithful to his word?

The most painful part of it is that Abraham must himself offer Isaac as a burnt offering (2). To him the command could not appear quite so strange and unnatural as to us, for he was familiar with the offering of human sacrifices in connection with idolatry. But he had not thought of God as capable of requiring any such sacrifice. It would appear horrible and cruel in Sarah's judgment, and would destroy the value of Abraham's witness against the idolatrous rites practised by others. Abraham must become a priest, plunge the knife into the heart of his son, and see him reduced to ashes upon the altar!

II.—ABRAHAM'S OBEDIENCE (3-10).—The command came probably in the night. Abraham obeyed promptly. God said "now" (2), and Abraham "rose up early" (3), and made his preparations for the strange journey. He obeyed without questioning. He neither asked others what they thought, nor argued the matter with himself. The best kind of obedience is that which does God's will "without asking any questions." His obedience was constant. Three days he journeyed before he reached the place of sacrifice, but his determination never wavered. The touching incident which took place as he and Isaac journeyed alone (7, 8) did not cause him to falter. And the sacrifice was as good as made. So far as Abraham was concerned the surrender was complete. Picture him first explaining to Isaac that he was to be the victim, then building the altar, and laying on the wood, binding his son as a willing sacrifice, taking the knife, and lifting it to strike! God considered the sacrifice as actually made (12, 16); therefore He stayed the falling blow, and found a substitute (13).

What rendered such obedience possible? "By faith" (Heb. xi. 17). Abraham made no mistake, as some have suggested. His faith saw God, not Isaac. "We will go and worship" (5). The gift was not nearly so great as the Giver. The faith that sees God can do impossible things. His faith left all consequences with God. If God gave the command He made Himself responsible for all the results that might follow. The promises were as much to God as to Abraham; therefore Abraham can obey and leave God to extricate him out of this difficulty, as He has done out of difficulties in the past. It was faith in the God of resurrection (5, Heb. xi. 19). The birth of Isaac had been a miracle of resurrection (Rom. iv. 17, 18). If need be, God can perform another similar miracle now.

The typical character of this story should not be overlooked. How vividly it presents to us God's greater love in giving up his greater Son for those who did not deserve his love!

For the Young.

TRUST.

WALKING along the esplanade of a seaside town where I was conducting mission services, I noticed a crowd of people. Standing in the midst was a little unknown girl, weeping bitterly. But, although she was lost, and wanted someone to take care of her, yet she was far too much afraid of the great, big, kind policeman who was questioning her to give a satisfactory account of herself. Presently, at the suggestion of the policeman, I agreed to take charge of Lizzie until her friends were found. "Now," I said, "you must take my hand and not be afraid, and together we will look for your mother." Suddenly, much to the surprise of the crowd, she slipped her tiny little hand into mine, and, looking up through her tear-bedimmed eyes, said, "Yes, Lizzie will trust you, and she won't be afraid."

Now, have you ever thought that the Lord Jesus wants you to say to Him just what Lizzie said to me? He has had it written in his Word, "I will trust and not be afraid" (Isa. xii. 2). But let us take our text letter by letter and form an acrostic.

T.—The Time to Trust: It is a true proverb which says, "There is no time like time present." Beware of By-and-by, To-morrow, Presently, and Not yet. They are bad companions, and have ruined many boys and girls. Look at the clock, or, if you are the happy possessor of a watch, take it out of your pocket, and before you replace it, write the correct time in the little space that I am leaving; for now (at ———) is the time to trust Jesus. Then having begun, go on to trust in Him at all times; for we can never be so placed that it would be out of place to trust in the Lord.

R.—The Result of Trust: When the startled and awakened gaoler inquired the way of salvation, the prisoners, who just before, instead of grumbling and groaning, had been praying and singing praises to God, said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." So we note that salvation is the result of trust. And as soon as you take the lost sinner's place and trust the lost sinner's Saviour you will become the child of God, and be filled with joy and peace in believing.

U.—The Utterance of Trust: What does trust say? I was conducting services on a mission vessel at Torquay. When we were leaving, some friends came down to say Good-bye, amongst them was a little girl who could not walk up the ladder. Lifting her up I said, "Trust me and don't be afraid." "I will trust," she replied, "but I'm afraid I shall be a little bit afraid." That was not the language of trust, but of doubt. Faith says, "I will trust and not be afraid."

S.—The Secret of Trust: Now, I am to tell you a secret; and, unlike others which you are obliged to keep to yourself, you can repeat it to everyone you know. But, first of all, let me tell you a story. At a service on the Birchington sands I asked the children if they could trust their schoolfellows. "No, not one of them," emphatically replied a bright-eyed little girl. You say, "How sad." Yes, but then she had not been at school long enough to know them. Now what is the secret? "They that know thy name will put their trust in Thee, for Thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek Thee" (Psa. ix. 10).

T.—The Triumph of Trust: We all like to be on the winning side. And God has never been defeated. He is the God of victories. The first song in the Bible is a song of victory. "I will sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously, the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea" (Ex. xv. 1). But that victory which the children of Israel thus celebrated in song was but the picture and prelude of a far greater and more glorious one which the Christ of God was to win. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain! He who became obedient unto death has overcome death; once He was the victim led as a sheep to the slaughter; now He is the victor crowned with glory and honour. More than eighteen hundred years ago He defeated the devil, triumphed in the time of temptation, and won the battle for us, when He was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities. How wonderful that the triumphant Saviour, the Lord of heaven and earth, should call poor defeated sinners into partnership with Himself to share his victories and overcome in his Name!

Trust Jesus, go forth in his strength; then through life you will be an overcomer, and hereafter hear his voice calling you to sit with Him on his throne. Who will say—

Jesus, I do trust Thee—trust Thee without doubt;
Whosoever cometh Thou wilt not cast out:
Faithful is Thy promise, precious is Thy blood—
Thou my soul's salvation, Thou my Saviour God.

Gosport. W. MONRO COLLINGS.

THE CHILDREN WE KEEP.

THE children kept coming, one by one,
Till the boys were five and the girls were three,
And the big brown house was alive with fun,
From the basement floor to the old roof-tree.
Like garden flowers the little ones grew,
Nurtured and trained with the tenderest care;
Warmed by love's sunshine, bathed in its dew,
They bloomed into beauty, like roses rare.

But one of the boys grew weary one day,
And, leaning his head on his mother's breast,
He said: "I am tired, and cannot play;
Let me sit awhile on your knee and rest."
She cradled him close in her fond embrace;
She hushed him to sleep with her sweetest song;
And rapturous love still lighted his face
When his spirit had joined the heavenly throng.

Then the eldest girl, with her thoughtful eyes,
Who stood "where the brook and the river meet,"
Stole softly away into Paradise
Ere "the river" had reached her slender feet.
While the father's eyes on the graves were bent,
The mother looked upward beyond the skies;
"Our treasures," she whispered, "were only lent;
Our darlings were angels in earth's disguise."

The years flew by, and the children began
With longing to think of the world outside;
And as each, in his turn, became a man,
The boys proudly went from the father's side.
The girls were women so gentle and fair,
That lovers were speedy to woo and win,
And with orange-blossoms in braided hair,
The old home was left, new homes to begin.

So one by one the children have gone,
The boys were five and the girls were three;
And the big brown house is gloomy and lone,
With but two old folks for its company.
They talk to each other about the past,
As they sit together at eventide,
And say, "All the children we keep at last,
Are the boy and girl who in childhood died."

Selected.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

A five days' mission to young people has just been held in the new Lecture Hall connected with Greenwich-road Congregational Church, by Mr. Edward Hughes, whose bright and apt addresses will long be remembered. Mr. Toye's orphans were present at two services, and were most interested hearers. Much prayer has been made to God, and as a result of prayer and earnest work some have already come forward asking for fellowship with the church.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Andrew's, New Kent-road, Feb. 15; Reading, Feb. 18; Derby, Feb. 20 and 22; Boulton, Feb. 21; St. Alban's, Liverpool, Feb. 25 to March 4; Mr. S. J. Hewlett (with Rev. T. Longstaff), St. Michael's, Ipswich, to Feb. 20; Y.M.C.A. Hall, Ipswich (for Juniors), Feb. 24 to 27; Parkeston Schools, Harwich; Mr. G. Goodman, Harvey-street, Hoxton, Feb. 11-18; St. Matthew's, Chelsea, Feb. 25 to March 2; Mr. E. Hughes, Home of Industry, Bethnal Green, Feb. 26 to March 2; Mr. Josiah Spiers, Llandrindod Wells; Mr. H. Falkner, Luton, Feb. 18 to 20; St. Paul's, Finchley, Feb. 22.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., Feb. 18, Mark v. 1-20; Mon., 19, v. 21-34; Tues., 20, v. 35-43; Wed., 21, vi. 1-13; Thurs., 22, vi. 14-29; Fri., 23, vi. 30-44; Sat., 24, vi. 45-56.

MR. NEWTON JONES, of the Sunday School Union, conducted a mission in connection with the Congregational Church, Dorking, from Feb. 3 to 8. Services were held for both children and adults, at which the attendances were good. Especially was the blessing of the Lord manifested amongst the children, many of whom, it is believed, were brought to Christ. The teachers in the school were very much cheered by numbers of their scholars led to decision. The work will be followed up by the formation of a Society of Christian Endeavour.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—By the will of the late Mrs. Harrison, a sum of £1000 has been left in trust for the publication and dissemination of the controversial works of her late husband, the Rev. Dr. Harrison, well known as an able and staunch supporter of the principles of the Reformation. This trust, which also includes about 1700 volumes and pamphlets, has recently been handed over to the committee of the Protestant Reformation Society.

National Penitence.

The first of a series of sermons on Social subjects under the auspices of the Christian Social Union, was delivered last week at St. Edmund's Church, Lombard-street. Canon Scott-Holland was the preacher, the subject of his discourse being "National Penitence." The church was packed.

Canon Scott-Holland said: What sort of citizen are you; what kind of neighbour have you been; do you rob, do you lie, do you remove your neighbour's landmark; have you perverted the judgment of the widow, or fatherless, or stranger; have you smitten your neighbour secretly; have you taken reward against the innocent; have you been unmerciful to the helpless; have you extorted any gain from the weak and ignorant; have you used craft or force to win your own end; have you ground down the poor; have you been greedy of gold; have you wrecked the bonds of marriage and of the family for your own evil passion; have you poisoned the moral atmosphere by your negligence; have you sinned against the brotherhood by slander and malice and falsehood? If so, and if this is still your portion, then you lie under a curse, the curse of God. You are banned and barred. There is no getting any further into the consolation or the gifts of the spiritual life. The curse is on you, your spiritual life is blighted, your soul is in prison, your strength is sapped, your claims, your rights, are all stripped off you, you are a marked man, you will not belong to the company of those who go up into the sanctuary of God, you are cast aside, branded, set apart a felon bound hand and foot under a doom. You must purge yourself of the crime if you are to enter the ranks of the royal citizens of the kingdom who have passed out of the darkness of the curse into the light of divine society. This is the godly discipline which you profess through the Church your desire to restore. You must be prepared to join with your deliberate "Amen" with the whole assembly in pronouncing your own curse on all such social sins.

But you will say, "This rough plain speaking misses its aim after all by its very rudeness; it belongs to primitive, to barbaric days of early Judaism, when men sinned with a strong hand, with a brutal frankness; they went at it with a cart-rope. But now only professed criminals act like that." Of course, we should not be here in church if we were not ready to lay our ban on murder, stealing, and adultery and extortion. Is it not rather cheap? and has it not something foolish about it to stand up here and thank God that we are not like those wicked

PUBLICANS WHO LIE, AND CHEAT, AND ROB?

That is a very pertinent question, and if we had nothing in view but our own separate individual lives it might be difficult to recognise the bearing of the curse upon ourselves. My brethren, we none of us stand alone; each is a member of a class, of a set, of an interest, of a trade, of a church. And nothing surely is more noticeable and more startling to all who are anxious over social miseries, than the discovery of the selfishness, the recklessness, the cruelty with which a class, or a set, or an interest, or a trade, or even a church, is capable of acting. We do in the mass as no one of us would consent to do on his own responsibility, nay, what each one of us would hotly repudiate. We know how easily it happens in the case of a company or a board! The responsibility for the action has no fixed lodgment. It has no seat in the judgment hall, no court of appeal, no one knows exactly with whom the responsibility lies; it is shifted from shoulder to shoulder until the last man, finding no other to whom to pass it on, drops it quietly off into some ditch, and it is no one's business to note its disappearance. There is no audit on the side of conscience. Everybody believes that somebody else is looking out that nothing is wrong, or else they settle down to the belief—a very practical belief—that morality is not the affair of a company, or of an industry, or of a corporation. In the familiar and most wicked phrase, "a company has no conscience." Such societies must seek their united interests. They could not spend their time in inquiry as to how their neighbour will be affected by their action, they have enough on their hands already in determining the conditions of their own success, which is their sole proper business. How can a railway company or a joint stock bank have moral obligations beyond the elementary principles of honesty, without which trade could not exist? How could they be saddled with duties to their neighbour as well as to themselves? We choke down the sense of horrible discomfort when we find that we have reaped profits from a course of action which had sweated down some miserable workers into infamous conditions of toil and life, or had made homes for these unknown and impossible through the long hours that we have mercilessly imposed upon them, or have given them over to a heartless death under chemical poison, through sinful neglect of the precautions which a touch of human nature would have made imperative. It may be that we have depended for our dividends upon our casual and unorganised labour which was inevitably bound to demoralise all who were concerned in it, or have got rents from slums which were a sanitary disgrace and a moral degradation, or from public-houses which fattened on the hideous drunkenness which their blazing gas and roaring heat fed nightly into fever.

Ah! is there any room here for a plain straight curse on the sins that are open, on the sins that are legalised, on the sins that are savage? Yet these are sins which we in some corporate capacity too often aid and abet. As we review the ugly roll of wrong let us seriously ask ourselves, Is it against others and in no way against our own shamefaced selves that we to-day pronounce, "Cursed are they that make the blind to go out of their way, cursed are the unmerciful, the covetous, the extortioners, cursed are they that put their trust in man and make not God their defence." We sin through the responsibility of companies, or through becoming TOOLS OF A SYSTEM.

Take commercial speculation—the national money market. The men engaged in it are honest, kindly, excellent, who would not do anything not legitimate according to the rules of business. Yet the system that has been created by their concerted effort, what of it, what of its effects? How blind, how regardless, how inhuman may its working be, how far it may carry us from all conceivable relations to commercial responsibility. As a system it has taken advantage of others' ignorance, of others' stupidity, of others' infirmities, it has reaped gains from others' vanity and greed. Its normal work has been to exaggerate all the fluctuations and disasters of the money market, driving them into unnatural excess in order that the rapidity and extravagance of the variations might heighten the proportions of profit. It has done its utmost to stamp down that which was showing signs of weakness, though that weakness might be temporary or accidental, so as to make recovery for it impossible. It has run up that which was promising to some unhealthy or inflated prominence, and then has hastily deserted it before the terrible recoil followed which its own exertions have made inevitable, leaving the disaster to break on the foolish and ignorant who did not have the wit to understand that they were following a leader who would be found to have withdrawn when the crisis came.

Alas for the wreckage that lies strewn on every shore of this wild and savage sea; alas for the stranger and the widow and the orphan engulfed in a fate of which they never understood the risk; alas for the broken heart of the man whose savings and whose happiness have been the stake which another man, while he himself was unaware of it, has laid and has lost on some desperate odds. My brethren, as we look round on the English money market to-day, dare we say there is no meaning for us in the curse on "him who removeth his neighbour's landmark," on him who is unmerciful, and on him who maketh the blind to go out of his way?

Again, class interests and professions. These two commit gross sins from which any individual member of them would instinctively shrink. There is a horrible momentum which a vast profession or class acquires, a moment to accumulate self-interest. Always a profession makes in the main for what is best for itself; it sustains an increasing pressure in the one direction, which pushes its own way forward with the blind weight of a tide. It cannot as a body regard any other interest but its own; it is inherently selfish. Year by year, bit by bit, it will go on piling up its resources; it never loses a step once gained; it never misses an opportunity for great and solid advance; it thrusts aside what obstructs, it beats under what is weaker than itself. It all happens by the sheer force of the situation. No one person exactly intends it, only each will do on behalf of his class what he would never dream of doing on behalf of himself; and this volume of united selfishness is ever rolling on. So it comes about that a great and sound profession, such as that of the lawyer and of the clergy, has again and again arrived at a point where it stood convicted by the outraged conscience of its fellows, and the most inhuman injustice, selfishness, cruelty, greed, and ambition. So a propertied class has before now come to build up its stability on the most monstrous oppression. It has tolerated criminal miseries at its very door without seeming to see that they existed. A class, a society, has no eyes to see what its own prosperity costs to others, and thus it is that these social crimes have been committed. Yes, and thus it is that the Church, founded in mercy, and pity, and loving-kindness, knit together in the love of the brotherhood, in the unity of the spirit, in the bond of peace, as an organisation, as a national institution, yielded to the and has suffered itself to become a very byeword.

IMPULSION OF ITS OWN SELF-INTEREST,

Is there not evidence enough before us on every side far and wide to make us suspect ourselves, to alarm, to stagger? We all feel so innocent, so well-intentioned, so right-minded. Why, then, this passion of wrath which rises into our ears from those that suffer? Why this sullen war and hate all round us? Why, in merry England, our fair motherland, the home of freedom, this dark terror that hangs over us? Why this awful cloud of misery? Why do we fail to look our brothers in the face as the weak around are crushed, and the old are forsaken, and the bitterness of division grows sharper and more terrible? Why, above all, is it that this Church of ours, this Church of England so dear to us, so rich in her Catholic inheritance, so inwoven into England's story, so tingling with English blood: a Church, too, so teeming with activity, so fervent, so alive with zeal and prayer and worship—why is it that she should show herself to the masses of English workers in country and town, now at the very crisis of their fate, as the symbol of all that is aloof from their life, cold to their aspirations, suspicious of their aims, helpless in their needs, the type of all that is privileged and propertied, and jealous and unsympathetic, and everything the least like Christ? Surely there is wrong here, such wrong that brings with it a curse, deep, and large, and grave! We can find no such wrong in ourselves. No; but we are members of the society which is thus at enmity with itself, of the nation which is embittered by these heartburnings, of the Church which so wofully fails to interpret and justify to the people the goodness of God the Father, the compassion and joy of Christ, our King.

Look out over our nation at large to-day, and behold there the evil to which our selfishness continues the sorrows and hates for which we are responsible. Let us take up our public burdens. That which dishonours England is our personal dishonour, that which puts Christ's Church to shame must lie heavy on our souls. Let to-day be a day of national humiliation for presenting to God so disheartening a result of Christian civilisation as that on which our eyes sadly fall. Why have we sinned away our national peace—our national confidence in the name of Jesus? Why has the curse fallen on us—the curse of a divided house, the curse of nameless fears, the curse of cureless ills, of miserable impotence, of darkened counsel, of paralysed judgment, of blighted hope? Into each separate soul these questions must pierce like barbed arrows that cannot be withdrawn; only according to the measure with which each solitary conscience of ours takes hold of these things as matters of personal concern, will the day of remedy dawn. Therefore it is that you and I are charged to face these two tremendous arraignments. Therefore it is we blow the trumpet in Zion, and sanctify a fast, that each may ask himself with trembling anxiety, "Can it be that I, as a member of a profession, of a class, of a church, of a nation, have indeed ministered to this curse? Can it be that unawares I have wrung my gain out of the weak, I have shifted my neighbours' landmark? Have I aided in perverting the judgment of the fatherless and the widow? Have I made the blind to go out of the way, have I joined hands with the unmerciful, the extortioner, the covetous, the drunkard, the adulterer? If I have, God be merciful to me a sinner; be merciful to the nation and the church that has sinned in me!"—Daily Chronicle.

REV. SAMUEL MACNAUGHTON, M.A.,

PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER, PRESTON.

CANADA has given freely of her sons to the ministry of the Word. The Presbyterian churches in Scotland and in England have found it to their advantage to draw from this fruitful source of supply. The Canadian, from his early life and training, usually possesses in a marked degree the quality of adaptability, so that he very readily adapts himself to the conditions of life in this country. The bright, buoyant Canadian atmosphere is, no doubt, favourable to ardour and intensity, and large capacity for work.

The subject of our sketch was born in Pictou County, Nova Scotia. This county is peopled almost entirely by descendants of Scottish Highlanders, and has proved to be a fruitful nursery for the Presbyterian ministry. Mr. MacNaughton's ancestors came from Breadalbane, Perthshire. His maternal grandfather was born at Gairloch, in Ross-shire. His father has for many years taken an active part in Temperance reform.

Mr. MacNaughton, after passing through a very remarkable religious experience, early gave himself to the Lord. Like Samuel of old, he had been dedicated to the Lord by a pious and devoted mother. After a long period of intense anxiety and groping in the dark, he entered into glorious light and liberty—an experience that made him strong for life. This early experience is given as follows in his recent work, "Lily and Leander; or, the Secret of Success in Service":—

In answer to my yearning cry,
I felt a glorious Presence nigh;
No tongue can tell, nor words convey
Ev'n glimpse of glory seen that day.
The Presence my whole heart did fill,
And whispered softly, "Peace, be still."
And now there rolled, as sea-waves roll,
A wondrous peace in on my soul.
A hushed, strange Presence filled the room,
And my sad soul did quick illume.
At once there came a glorious light,
To mind and heart, where erst was night.
The sun in glory it outshone,
It bade all doubt and fear begone.
'Twas heavenly glory all around,—
A stillness, yet a low, soft sound—
Sweet music, like of angel choir;
Within, a strange, refining fire.

While yet in college the subject of our sketch took an active part in Temperance work, and thus gained a valuable experience in platform speaking. He made himself thoroughly familiar with the literature of the Temperance question, and won the Grand Division Prize, open to all Nova Scotia, for the best essay on "The Duty of the Christian Church in Relation to Temperance Reform." He was twice elected to the office of Grand Chaplain in the Sons of Temperance.

In his college curriculum he won distinction in Latin, Greek, French, mathematics, metaphysics, logic, and chemistry. While attending the classes in the Theological College, Halifax, he carried off the Bayne Prize, open to all students, for the best examination in New Testament Greek. He also won prizes in Hebrew and in Old and New Testament Introduction.

After graduating with distinction in Dalhousie College, Halifax, Mr. MacNaughton accepted the position of Head Master of Guysborough County Academy. Here he entered eagerly into evangelistic work in conjunction with several Wesleyan ministers. A revival was the result, business being almost suspended for several weeks. Many came in from the surrounding country, and carried back with them the blessings of salvation.

(From a Photograph by Mr. Arthur Winter, 36, Fishergate, Preston.)

After his first session in the Theological Hall, the young pastor was engaged at Fall River, Halifax County. Here, too, there was a gracious revival, and the evangelist obtained further experience in dealing with souls. Although pressed by several congregations in the Maritime Provinces to become their minister, Mr. MacNaughton determined to come over to Edinburgh to pursue his studies at that famous centre of learning. He arrived in 1874, immediately after the memorable visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Possessed of a powerful voice and great energy and capacity for work, he was greatly in demand at the numerous mission services that were kept up in Edinburgh after Mr. Moody's departure, speaking frequently at two, and even three, meetings on the same evening.

During the summer of 1875 he was assistant to the venerable Dr. Ingram, of the Free Church, Unst, Shetland, who was then in his 100th year, and had for his colleague his son, aged sixty-seven. The revival wave had been spreading northwards. In June special services were commenced, and were held every night until October. More than 300 professed to have found peace during the services. So great was the earnestness of the people that the fishermen, after hauling up their boats, would be seen running to the church so as to be in time for the meeting.

During his residence in Edinburgh Mr. MacNaughton, among other books, wrote "Joy in Jesus: Memorials of Bella Darling," which in a short time went through several editions, and which has been signally blessed in leading souls to Christ. His "Wines of Scripture; or, Total Abstinence the True Temperance" (now in the fourth edition), written while in Edinburgh, discusses all texts bearing on wine or strong drink, and is a very handy handbook on the subject.

In 1877 he settled in Preston, in the endeavour to revive a lost cause. During his first year there he was, as Acting Chaplain to the Troops, chaplain to the 84th Regiment, in which his two great-grandfathers were officers during the American War of Independence.

In 1885 he published "The Gospel in Great Britain," in which, in twenty-four lectures, he traces a pure Evangel, outside the Church of Rome and opposed to it, from the time of St. Patrick down to John Wesley. It is now in the second edition.

Mr. MacNaughton has during his entire ministry conducted a Men's Bible Class, in which he endeavours to help thoughtful young men in a sympathetic way with doctrinal difficulties. The outcome of this experience was a goodly volume of 380 pages, entitled "Doctrine and Doubt." His latest work is entitled "Lily and Leander," being a graphic story of religious experience, portraying the various phases of Christian life, especially the Rest of Faith, Consecration, and Endue-ment with Power.

In his teaching Mr. MacNaughton has always given special prominence to holiness and the rest of faith, and the necessity for "power from on high." His ministry has been signally blessed, over 700 being added to the communion roll during his ministry in Preston. He takes a lively interest in Sunday-school work, and two years ago was President of the Preston and District Sunday-school Union. He regularly attends his own Sunday-school, and teaches the Men's Class in connection with it, thus helping to bridge over for young men the gulf between the Sunday-school and the church.

He is also a methodical and untiring visitor among his people. Although his congregation is scattered over a large town, his visits average over 100 per month. In most of his visits he is accompanied by his wife, who is most devoted to all forms of Christian work, teaching the Young Women's Class and addressing meetings of young Christians. For several years Mr. MacNaughton was secretary of the local auxiliary of the Religious Tract Society. He takes an active part on the committee and at the public meetings of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and is a member of the committee of the Preston Vigilance Association, which is at present carrying on a vigorous campaign against immorality and illegality in public-houses.

"THE MASTER'S QUESTIONS."

Have ye looked for sheep in the desert,
For those who have missed their way?
Have ye been in the wild waste places,
Where the lost and wandering stray?
Have ye trodden the lonely highway,
The foul and the darksome street?
It may be ye'd see in the gloaming
The print of my wounded feet.

Have ye folded home to your bosom
The trembling neglected lamb,
And taught to the little lost one
The sound of the Shepherd's name?
Have ye searched for the poor and needy,
With no clothing, no home, no bread?
The Son of Man was among them,—
He had nowhere to lay his head.

Have ye carried the living water
To the parched and thirsty soul?
Have ye said to the sick and wounded,
"Christ Jesus makes thee whole"?
Have ye told my fainting children
Of the strength of the Father's hand?
Have ye guided the tottering footsteps
To the shore of the "golden land"?

Have ye stood by the sad and weary,
To smooth the pillow of death,
To comfort the sorrow-stricken,
And strengthen the feeble faith?
And have ye felt, when the glory
Has streamed through the open door
And flitted across the shadows,
That I had been there before?

Have ye wept with the broken-hearted
In their agony of woe?
Ye might hear Me whispering beside you,
"'Tis the pathway I often go!"
My brethren, my friends, my disciples,
Can ye dare to follow Me?
Then, wherever the Master dwelleth,
There shall the servant be!

—Selected.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION employs nearly eighty colporteurs, with every token of blessing. These travel from village to village, visiting every accessible home for the sale of the Bible, seeking also to persuade people to buy and read wholesome literature in place of the widely circulated and harmful printed trash so prevalent. Many also give Gospel addresses in cottages and in the open-air, and visit the aged and afflicted. The work is partly self-supporting, but constantly requires voluntary contributions. These, we are informed, are urgently needed to maintain present operations. 579,605 families were visited last year, and 10,285 addresses given. Many thousand tracts were given away.

W. Corden Jones, Secretary.
Temple-street, Southwark, S.E.
[168]

The Evangelist.

LIGHT IN THE DARK AGES.*

More than six hundred years have passed away since the "still hour" in the convent of Hellfde, near Eisleben, when the Abbess Gertrude von Hackeborn wrote suddenly some words, still to be read, upon the tablet which hung by her side. For "a mighty drawing of the Holy Spirit" led her at that moment to begin to write "that which in secret and in silence the Beloved of her heart had spoken, when in still hours she was alone with Him." And thus she wrote:—

"The depth of the Uncreated Wisdom calleth to the depth of the Almighty Love, praising, O Lord, and magnifying the marvels of thy grace, thy mercy fathomless and overflowing. For Thou, O God of my life, Thou, the most sweet, Thou, the One only Beloved of my soul, hast poured forth the tide of thy mercy as a mighty stream, and it has flowed downwards and onwards through the waste and barren places, and has swept away the barriers I had piled up to hinder it, in the valley of my misery and my sin.

"For in the six and twentieth year of my age, on the day to me so blessed, the 24th of February" (about the year 1280), "in an hour for which my heart had longed, and when the twilight of the dawn was breaking, didst Thou, O Truth, O God, make thyself known to me.

"Thou, who art brighter than all light, and more mysterious than all secret things. Thou didst then tenderly and gently begin the work of my conversion. For Thou hadst purposed to enlighten my thick darkness, and to still the restless longing which a month before Thou didst awaken in my soul. . . . And it seemed to me on that day, February 24, that I was sitting in the choir, in the corner where I was wont to repeat my lukewarm prayers. And it was as if thine own voice spake to me and said, 'Thou hast been feeding with mine enemies on earth and ashes, and seeking for honey amongst the briers. Turn at long last to Me, and I will welcome thee, and I will make thee to drink of the river of my pleasures, and of the joy of God.'

"And when Thou spakest these words, my heart was melted within me, and with a mighty longing would I have drawn nigh to Thee. But, lo! between my soul and Thee, I saw as it were a fence long and high, so that neither to right nor left could I see the end thereof. And so thickly was the fence beset with thorns up to the topmost edge, that I saw no way whereby I might break through it to come to Thee, the one only consolation of my heart. And I knew that this was the fence of my sins and my transgressions which stood between my soul and Thee. And I stood there and I wept, for the longing I had after Thee, till there was no more spirit in me. Then, O Thou Father of the poor and the sorrowful, Thou, whose mercies are over all thy works, then didst Thou take me by my hand, and I found that I had passed beyond the fence, and was brought near, how near, to Thee.

"And when I beheld the hand that held me and brought me nigh, then did I know, O beloved Lord Jesus, how it was that the handwriting which stood against me, thine enemy, was blotted out, for I saw the blessed glory of thy wounds, and on that hand whence flowed of old the precious blood, was written the assurance of thine eternal love.

"Therefore, I praise Thee and adore Thee, and I thank from the innermost depths of my heart thy wise mercy and thy merciful wisdom. For Thou, my Creator and my Redeemer, hast in loving tenderness bent my stubborn neck beneath thine easy yoke, and hast caused me to walk in the way where the odours of thine ointments are sweet, and the light of a new day is fair and clear. So can I bear witness that the yoke which I deemed so hard, and the burden which seemed so heavy, are easy and are light to those who walk with Thee."

Nearly seven years passed away, and the Abbess Gertrude was still groping after the power to serve the Lord she loved, and still cast down because so little fruit was found where she had toiled so wearily.

"Then," she wrote, "it came to pass before Advent that I, moved by thy Spirit, besought a certain person to pray for me every day, and to say such words as these: 'For the sake of thy pierced heart, O beloved Lord, pierce her heart with the darts of thy love, so that she may no longer be holden down by earthly things, but may be held up by the power of thy Godhead.'

"And I believe that it was through the prayer of this person that Thou wert moved on the Sunday before Christmas to put a longing into my soul, whereby I was compelled to speak to Thee, saying, 'Lord, I confess that according to my deserts I am not worthy to receive the smallest crumb of thy gifts, but I join with the prayer from those other lips, and beseech Thee that Thou wilt pierce my heart with the arrows of thy love.' And then and there I knew it, that thy grace had flowed forth, and that the words I spake had been in a power that reached the heart of God.

"But my longing was not fully satisfied until the Wednesday following, when suddenly Thou wert there, and Thou spakest to me in words that entered into my innermost heart, saying, 'All the multitude of thy desires, all thy longing and thy hoping, all thy joy and thy sorrow and thy fear, and all that is in thee, bind them all together and cast them all into the depths where all is rest, into the depths of mine eternal love.'

"Then did I see, that in the place of all my shortcoming and my unworthiness, was the mighty Love, which abides in its fulness in Him who sitteth at thy right hand, and who had joined me to Himself. And through Him I cast down before Thee all my lamentations over my sin and unworthiness. And I saw, as a special sin, how I had overlooked and neglected thy gifts, looking to Thee for that which was already given.

"For truly, hadst Thou given to me, unworthy as I am, one poor thread to keep in remembrance of Thee, I should have held it in higher honour than the gifts that Thou hast given, and that I have so lightly esteemed, the gift of the Spirit of Christ.

"And my soul received at that time a certain inexpressible comprehension of those sweetest words, 'God shall be all in all,' for it was as if He spake to me, saying, 'Thou art called to be conformed to the image of my Son, receiving ever into thy soul, which is made partaker of the Divine nature, the stream of the eternal life that is in Him, as the air receives the streams of the sunlight, and is filled and glorified thereby.'

"O wondrous power of the right hand of the Most High, that an earthen vessel, a vessel of earth so coarse and common, should be made to hold a treasure so glorious and so precious!"

Thus were the eyes of the Abbess Gertrude anointed that she might see the marvellous gift already given, but given to one unconscious of having received it. She had been praying that He might enter the temple that He had cleansed, and she had been aware of the power of his presence, even after the answer given her seven years before, when she knelt at her bedside in her cell. She could see the unsightliness of the earthen vessel, but her eyes had been blind to the treasure within it.

For, as a matter of experience, Christ dwells in our hearts by faith. We believe the blessed words of God, that it is even as He has said; and we know in all our hearts and all our souls that "not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord our God spake concerning us; all are come to pass unto us, and not one thing hath failed thereof."

Did He not say, "I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever; I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you"?

* Extracted from Trees Planted by the River, by Frances A. Bevan. (J. Nisbet & Co.)

THE Y.P.S.C.E. AT CHESTER.

The Christian Endeavour movement has taken firm hold in the quaint old city of Chester. Very soon after the introduction of the movement into the United Kingdom a Society was formed at Grosvenor Park Baptist Church, and two other of the Chester Societies are registered in the first hundred in the British section. The second national convention was held at Chester in 1892—Crewe leading the way in 1891—and as the outcome of that memorable series of gatherings the first local union in Britain was formed, with the title "Chester and District Union." It now numbers nearly thirty Societies, the majority being connected with churches actually in the city of Chester. Two of the ministers of the city have seats on the Endeavour Council, Revs. Joseph B. Morgan and W. Bainbridge, though, ere long, Chester Endeavourers will lose the valuable services of the latter, the present president of the Union, who is leaving in the summer for the thriving eastern town of Hull.

There are many other enthusiastic supporters of Christian Endeavour in "Ye Olde Citye," among whom certainly not the least useful is the Rev. John Williams, pastor of City-road Presbyterian Church. Here the meeting in connection with the recent Endeavour Day celebration took place. For the benefit of those unacquainted with the history of the Y.P.S.C.E., it may be well to state that it was founded on February 2, 1881, and the "birthday" of the Society is usually observed by special united gatherings. It was decided, in addition to the customary offering for expenses, to make a collection this year on behalf of foreign missions; the latter realised about £16, which will be sent to the missionary societies connected with the represented churches. A much larger sum was hoped for, but it has to be borne in mind that nearly all the Societies have missionary committees through which they immediately and regularly work and subscribe to foreign missionary enterprise.

For local reasons Endeavour Day was celebrated in Chester on the 1st instead of the 2nd of February. The public gathering was presided over by the president of the Union, and the topic for the evening was "Systematic Christian Endeavour in Evangelistic Work," (1) in the city, (2) in the country, and (3) round the world. Mr. Bainbridge, speaking on work in the city, gave an admirable address. He reminded his hearers of Dr. Clark's words at the Montreal Convention, that Christian Endeavour does not profess to be anything new in principle, but the application of an old principle, a revival of the Covenant idea, its mission being to put spiritual life-blood into various existing organisations. Speaking of the speedy dawn of the twentieth century, Mr. Bainbridge asked, "How are the churches going to meet it?" He said, "The church that crosses that line in harmony with the Spirit of Christ will be missionary, evangelistic." After speaking of the command to the early Christians to begin at Jerusalem, "in the city," he said the work of a Christian Endeavour Union was systematically to evangelise the city; not only in a ten days' mission, but by parcelling it out into districts, and instituting regular house-to-house visitation.

Mr. E. Noel Humphreys, secretary of the local Sunday School Union, was the next speaker. His subject was "In the Country," and he gave a most earnest and eloquent address on the duty of Endeavourers to help in winning their beloved land for Christ. He had just been reading of a number of young men who rode out on their bicycles to villages near their homes, and either in open-air or rooms conducted Christian Endeavour evangelistic services. Little companies, so travelling together, might do work impossible for one or two, besides obtaining healthy exercise at the same time.

Rev. J. H. Atkinson, of Richmond Chapel, Liverpool, whose interest in foreign missions is widely known, dealt with "Around the World." He said God had given his Son to the world, and the world to his Son. Instancing some of the triumphs of modern missionary enterprise, he said the men to whom we carried the Gospel were worth saving, and Christian Endeavourers were called upon either themselves to go on this great errand, or at least to assist in sending others.

A consecration service and roll-call was afterwards conducted by Rev. Joseph B. Morgan. There were between twenty and thirty responses, and the various Endeavour committees present also responded with suitable words, expressing devotion to their own branches of service. In the course of a few remarks, Mr. Morgan said a consecration service meant something more than a bit of machinery connected with the Y.P.S.C.E. It meant, "I will endeavour to think nothing but what Christ would have me think, say nothing but what Christ would have me say, go nowhere but where Christ would have me go, do nothing but what Christ would have me do."

A BOLTON MISSION.

A visitor to this populous manufacturing Lancashire town sends us an interesting account of the opening of the new Queen Street Mission Hall. The history of the Mission shows what has been done by individual effort apart from any ecclesiastical system. Some years ago a godly layman, Mr. Barlow, collected some ragged children in the very worst part of the town on Sunday evenings. The room soon became crowded, and a small Mission Hall was built, where meetings were held for the poor. The founder has bequeathed the good work to his two sons, of whom Mr. William Barlow is secretary. They are now associated with several earnest gentlemen and ladies of various denominations.

The work carried on is so varied, and on such a scale, as to constitute this Mission a salvation army in all its best features. Six services of preaching, prayer meetings, and for children, are held every Sunday, with three open-air services. An open-air service is held every evening in the week throughout the entire year. The hall is in use every evening, including Gospel preaching, prayer meetings, class meetings, temperance, and a "Pleasant Saturday Evening," as a counter-attraction to the public-house. There are 350 children in the school, with twenty teachers, and a Ragged School, the children gradually ceasing to be ragged, and being drafted off to the other. There is a night refuge for the homeless; 25,000 free meals are provided for children during winter, 700 pairs of "clogs," and a sea-side home for the sick. There is a gymnasium for lads, and a labour department which employs men "out of work" in splitting wood, etc., and paying just enough for food and lodging while finding regular employment. There is a temporary refuge for girls, from which they are drafted to regular homes provided for this class. The old room has become quite inadequate for the growth of the Mission, but is still used for the Ragged School, and overflow and other meetings.

The new hall is very plain in appearance, but very convenient for its purposes. Its open benches seat above 1000 people. The entire cost, with site, is £4200, towards which above £3000 was subscribed before the opening, the Mayor giving £500 in token of his appreciation of the benefit to the town, in promoting temperance and diminishing pauperism and crime. The people of the Mission themselves contributed £650. The workers and givers are of all denominations, the object being simply evangelistic.

The new hall was opened for Sunday worship on February 4, when Dr. Newman Hall preached on "God so loved the world," and "Behold I stand at the door and knock." In the evening every available space, aisles, platform, door-way, etc., was occupied, and there was an overflow meeting in the smaller hall. A mission prayer meeting followed, at which ten or twelve men and women spontaneously prayed, and a number of persons went into the inquiry room, or held up a hand for prayer. Many of those present were of the very poorest class, men in ragged coats, and women with shawls over their heads.

There is no regular minister, but a working man missioner, admirably adapted for the work, supported by an earnest band of godly workers from the churches. This shows what may be done, and what is being done in many other places by personal and undenominational but combined effort.

IN DAY SCHOOLS, the knowledge that the child has home influence to touch the moral side of its character renders the teacher more neglectful of this training. On the other hand, the parents who only see the children for a few hours, when home lessons are to be got through, are often also forgetful of the main duty alike of school and home—the building up of the whole nature of the child into full development and perfect proportion

THE "DO-WITHOUT" SOCIETY.

In connection with the recent anniversary of the Doncaster "Do-Without" Missionary Society, Esther Abraham gave deeply interesting addresses on three consecutive nights to large audiences in the Guildhall, and the members decided to adopt two of the orphans under the care of Deacon Abraham, at Oroomiah, Persia.

It was announced that the number of members had increased from 516 in 1891, to 748 in 1892, and 903 in 1893, and the income from £210 the first year to £269 in the second, and (in spite of the coal strike and bad trade) to £310 in the third year.

The members of the Society maintain three proxy missionaries in China: Mr. Vardon (C.M.S.), working under Rev. J. Heywood Horsburgh at Chungking, and Messrs. Fryer and Pell, "Joyful News" evangelists, in the neighbourhood of Hankow. In India they support Miss Spackman, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission at Gorakpur, two women in the Converts' Home, Allahabad, and a native evangelist and a Biblewoman in the State of Bhopal; also two native evangelists (F.F.M.A.) in Madagascar and the "Doncaster Bed," in the Tangier Hospital. In addition, they contribute towards the support of Miss Janson (C.E.Z.M.S.), and have helped the North Africa Mission to send Miss Lambert out to Tunis, and also towards the expenses of Mr. J. Edwards, at Fez. They have sent donations to the C.M.S. and C.I.M., and for the work of the Y.M.C.A. at Cairo.

Each member is expected every week to do without something he really likes, and to give at least one penny a week to one of the twenty collectors, and every day to pray for every agent of the Society, and that "the Lord of the harvest will send forth labourers into his harvest."

A. Christy Wilson, M.D.,
President Doncaster Y.M.C.A.
39, Hall Gate, Doncaster.

SAD SCENES IN ALGERIA.

A correspondent writes from Tunis:—"I have just returned from Constantine, Algeria, where I spent a most pleasant fortnight with the two missionaries, who for nearly seven years have held the fort alone, amidst the depressing darkness of Mohammedanism. I heard much of the present extreme poverty prevailing through want of work, and saw for myself one and another Arab woman or child coming to the house with the plea: 'You are my only friends: do give me a piece of bread!'

"But so long as my visiting was confined to the upper classes of Arabs I did not realise the need. One afternoon, however, Miss Granger took me to a specimen house, and let me see things as they are. This habitation contained sixteen families, one in every room, and a poor old Arab woman showed us a hole, meant probably for coals, where she lives, eats, and sleeps with the door locked. How she escapes the fate of those who perished in the Black Hole of Calcutta I cannot imagine.

"As soon as we noticed some very sore eyes and gave advice, we were entreated to go to one and another lying ill, until we felt that the house was itself a parish in which one could set up a hospital! In one room lay a father and boy, both ill, both needing a doctor's care, which neither the mother, feeding a month-old baby, nor the four children, walking helplessly about, could supply. There were no signs of food, nor the prospect of getting any. We soon decided that the man had partial paralysis, and the boy had broken his leg. The question was, what to do to help this family, and other families in similar straits. 'We are often at our wit's end,' remarked my companion. 'They all need supporting.'

"The Arab lads who come weekly for a Bible lesson receive a piece of bread and a cup of coffee. One other means of feeding the hungry has occurred to our sisters, viz., free breakfasts, but they can only begin them in faith. Should the Lord by means of his servants send help, they will be able to continue to relieve distress and make known the Gospel at the same time. The address of Misses Colville and Granger is 21, Rue Fontanilhes, Constantine, Algeria, N. Africa."

THE NUMBER OF REFORMATORY SCHOOLS at present is fifty-two, viz., forty-three in England, and nine in Scotland—a decrease of ten schools in the last fifteen years.

FROM STAGGVILLE, MANITOBA.

Rev. Gilbert Cook, in far-away Staggville, Manitoba, was much cheered by receiving the magic-lantern and articles of clothing sent to him some months ago by friends in England. Writing on Sept. 18 to Mrs. Carpenter, of Compton Bishop, he says :—

"Words cannot express the gratitude I feel for the many useful gifts that have come to hand. You have, indeed, given practical proof of your sympathy with me in my distresses. I thank you all for your special remembrance of my motherless children. My eldest daughter has all the care of the house and family; she has little time for sewing, and anything in clothing for the children is doubly welcome.

"A sad accident happened here last Saturday. The only steamboat which runs north from Westbourne to Fairford (forty miles from here) caught fire just opposite here and about a mile from the shore, and in a hour or two was totally consumed. It was going to Westbourne with a load of timber and sawdust,—the latter they had on deck, and it is generally supposed it forced its way through the seams to the furnace, and thus caught fire. It is a bad loss for us; for she was to have brought out the shingles, timber, laths, doors, windows, etc., for our new mission-house, which I had hoped to have finished for winter occupation.

"The two small buildings we at present occupy are a wreck, and we are very cramped for room. This disaster entirely puts an end to my building for this year, as it is now too late in the season to send teams to bring the materials up, a distance of sixty miles. The building is a log one, put up entirely by the people, to the height of twelve or thirteen feet; and the Finance Committee have given me a grant of 150 dols. to finish it. It requires an extra 150 dols. to bring the materials above mentioned, and get the building ready for plastering. We shall have to content ourselves for another winter in these mud shanties, which are extremely cold. I am thankful to say that I have had strength and health to keep up the services of the sanctuary to fair congregations. Many of the people are away to earn a few dollars in the harvest fields. When winter sets in all will be back again to their houses from the rigours of the season. It is fearfully cold now, and stoves are again coming into use after being put aside for a few months."

Mrs. Carpenter informs us that she is now making up another parcel to send to Mr. Cook, partly for his family, and partly for the poor Indian people. Communications to her should be addressed, The Vicarage, Compton Bishop, Axbridge.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

I am desirous of interesting the readers of The Christian in the work of my friend, Rev. E. Clarke, whom I have known for the last twenty years, and who has been honoured by God to establish a Mission which has elicited from all friends of Italy the warmest expressions of approval.

In addition to the great local work which is being carried on at the Casa Alberto in Spezia itself, Mr. Clarke and his able band of native evangelists preach the Gospel in some twenty-five neighbouring stations, and the Bible day schools, which are distributed throughout the vicinity, contain as many as 700 scholars.

The full significance of this fact is not easily realised; indeed, I question if any Protestant work on the Continent of Europe can show a better result in proportion to its means. It must be remembered that every inch of ground gained, and even maintained, must be so in the face of the most dogged, persistent, and untiring opposition of the Papacy. It is a matter of great congratulation, therefore, that these hundreds of children, coming from homes where there is no religion, or else a false religion, are daily, for some hours, and with the consent of their parents, brought under the teaching of the Gospel and the power of pure religion. These children talk in their homes of what they hear in the Bible schools, and thus the knowledge of the Lord Jesus is swiftly penetrating many households otherwise unreached.

A large number of meetings are constantly in progress, at all of which there is a most gratifying attendance; indeed, many of the schools are overcrowded and children have to be refused admission. In addition to this a good work is being done in the visitation, with Bibles and religious literature, of the vessels of various nations, anchoring in the Gulf of Spezia, which is one of the finest harbours in the world; and in the widespread distribution of Scripture portions among the Italian military and civil populations.

At a pretty little village, a few miles from Spezia, is the Victoria Adelaide Orphanage, which is another undertaking started by my indefatigable friend Mr. Clarke for the blessing of Italy, and one which powerfully appeals to those whose homes have not been clouded with the dark sorrow of parental bereavement. Mr. Clarke is surrounded by a band of devoted workers, consisting of thirty-three native assistants and fifty-eight catechumens loyally devoted to him, and there seems no limit to the influence which may yet be exercised by them beneath his wise and experienced direction.

Altogether this work, justified by an existence of a quarter of a century, deserves the full confidence of the Lord's people such as was expressed at the recent meeting at Exeter Hall, when Sir H. M. Havelock-Allan, Dr. Culross, Dr. Angus, and Mr. F. A. Bevan bore the heartiest testimony to the value of the work and its strong claim on the liberality of English Christians.

It is intended to celebrate the first half jubilee of this great work by raising the sum of £4000, towards which a friend has contributed £185 on the condition of the remainder being speedily raised.

F. B. Meyer.

BARCELONA PROTESTANT HOSPITAL.

For fourteen years a good and important work has been carried on by the Barcelona Protestant Cottage Hospital. A few months ago the new building—well situated and possessing conveniences highly desirable in such an institution—was entered, and, it is hoped, a career of enlarged usefulness begun. The price of the house (£1260) and other expenses were paid from the accumulated Purchase Fund, although a small sum (£35) had to be borrowed from the Current Expenses Fund. A small ground-rent remains to be redeemed; the sum of £240 will effect this.

The latest report says:—"It was necessary to get a larger and better accommodation, for never was our house so much frequented as in 1893. We had forty-eight patients, with 1505 days of illness, that is to say, an average of more than four inmates daily; thirty-four of whom were Spaniards and fourteen foreigners (i.e., two French, five English, seven Germans). Two who entered in a hopeless state of consumption died, twenty-nine went out cured, seven more or less benefited, two relieved, one in the same state, and seven remained under treatment on Dec. 31.

"We are always receiving testimonies of gratitude from those who have left, both natives and foreigners, for the loving care bestowed on them. The usefulness of the institution may be understood by the fact that, in the past year, more than in any preceding, Protestant patients who, for one reason or another, had entered the General Hospital in Barcelona, begged to be taken from it in order not to be molested on account of their religious creed; and probably, moreover, some of them would have died had they not taken that step, for we can nurse them more carefully than is possible in wards that contain 200 people and more.

"We have no less cause for rejoicing from a spiritual than from a temporal point of view. Both the patients who died left us with the hope that they departed to be with Christ. Others are comforted and strengthened in their faith, while the rest, chiefly foreigners, go away warned, and feel drawn towards their faithful God, who, while giving renewed health to their bodies, offers them the health of their souls. The Lord will not allow this seed of eternal life to be lost."

Reports and information regarding the work will be gladly furnished by Miss Anna von Mielecka, Courteenhall, Northampton; or by the hon. treasurer and secretary, Mr. J. C. Wheatcroft-Brown, Calle Baños Nuevos, 16, Barcelona.

IT IS EASIEST TO HELP the children, for their whole nature is plastic and responsive to every influence that makes for good. It is cheapest to help the children, a small expenditure now will probably save them from a criminal career. It is most Christian to help the children, for to save "one of these little ones" from suffering present, and sin to come, is surely work lying near and dear to the heart of the Saviour of mankind.—*Dr. Barnardo.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK IN CHINA.

Two years ago the English mail brought to a North China Mission Station the news that the succeeding week was to be observed as self-denial week in England by the churches connected with the London Missionary Society.

The missionaries decided to keep it themselves, but were somewhat doubtful as to whether they ought to ask the Chinese Christians to unite with them. As in our Lord's time, the majority of the converts belong to the poorest of the people. At that time also they were in specially straitened circumstances, since a year of flood had destroyed their crops, and in many cases their homes. Nevertheless the news leaked out, and the idea was taken up by the Chinese Christians with enthusiasm.

On the Sunday succeeding self-denial week, the offerings were brought with glad faces. There was hardly a single person who did not bring something, many had taken hot water instead of tea throughout the week; some had dispensed with tobacco, which a Chinaman considers almost a necessary of life.

The little pig-tailed boys and the bright-eyed girls with great delight brought their small piles of copper "cash," of which it requires more than twenty to make a penny of English money. One young girl belonging to a poor family had been doing extra sewing after her weary day's work was over in order that she might bring fifty "cash."

One poor old widow, with tears in her eyes because it was not more, laid down a single "cash." Another Christian widow, who was often in need of daily bread, had been in great distress because she had nothing to give. She made it a matter of special prayer.

On the very day on which the special offerings were to be made, her son, from a long distance, came to visit her, and gave her a present of five hundred "cash." It was a very large sum in her eyes, but she brought it all wrapped up in a handkerchief, saying, "I am so glad to have it to offer to the Lord as my thanksgiving gift for all his goodness to me, so that others may hear of his love as well." Surely these offerings were accepted by the Lord, who sits as of old by the treasury. He looks not so much as to what we give as to what we have left when the offering has been made.

Once more the week of thanksgiving, special offering, and self-denial in connection with the London Missionary Society, has come round. Can we refuse special gifts out of our abundance when our brethren and sisters in far-off lands give thus out of their poverty? Will not this self-denial week prove a means of real blessing to us if, considering our Lord's last command of love, we lay upon his altar not only gifts of money, which the work sorely needs, but also things we hold dearer far—personal ambitions and strong affections, saying of them all, "Thy servant is ready to do whatsoever my Lord the King appoints"?

Tientsin. M. J. Bryson, L.M.S.

THE NEEDS OF NATAL.

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed to support your correspondent who, in a recent issue of The Christian, drew attention to the need that exists for evangelistic effort among Europeans in Durban? We have long endeavoured to strengthen this branch of the S.E. Africa Mission by inducing self-supporting evangelists to go out. Several have gone, and one is on his way. There is no reason why whole families should not go.

The open-air meetings to which reference is made were started on our arrival in Natal three years ago, and have been carried on by our workers and associates with blessing. We should be grateful for any assistance to our over-worked helpers, from those mentioned by your correspondent as being earnestly desirous to engage in Christian work. We also greatly need help in the night school and other work among the Zulus in Durban.

Mrs. Howe and myself will gladly give any information desired, regarding openings for missionaries. There are whole districts waiting to be evangelised, and we are praying for the men and women to enter these open doors, and for the means to send them.

Communications may be addressed, care of Mr. A. S. Day, Lancaster-road, Wimbledon.

Yours sincerely,

Geo. B. Howe, Hon. Superintendent,
Natal branch S.A.G.M.

REV. THOMAS COOK'S FAREWELL.

The Out-and-Out Band held, on Wednesday week, special meetings at Exeter Hall to bid farewell to Rev. Thomas Cook on the eve of his sailing for a mission tour in Australia and India.

Rev. Peter Thompson spoke of the meeting as one where all were bound together by a common link, their love for Christ. He rejoiced especially that the Out-and-Out Band, if it did not originate with him, at least commenced in his study; that there the rules were drawn up, and prayer for the future usefulness of the Band first offered. He thanked God that no less than 23,000 people had signified their approval of the objects aimed at by the Band.

The meeting was then thrown open, and those present were invited to relate their experiences as members of the Band, giving their testimony to its work and the new extensions which had taken place in consequence of the establishment of branches in their homes. Dr. Wood started with incidents of blessing arising from the Southport Convention. The Secretary of the Wimbledon Band spoke of sixty members gathered in three months. An "Out-and-Out" man from Tunbridge Wells told of 120 members, and a meeting with 600 present. Others followed from Luton, High Beech, Penarth, Dartford, Hull, and Haslingden. Miss Louie Harper sang, "Lord, speak to me," with great feeling and expression. A member from Bradford next rose. Speaking of the remarkable ministry of Mr. Cook, he said that he had known of very many conversions under him at Bradford. Other speakers from Haggerston, Hampstead, Woolwich, Green-lanes, Sheffield, the Farwig Mission, etc., gave their testimonies.

At the afternoon meeting Dr. Wood delivered a few earnest remarks on the duty of Christians in this world. Rev. Samuel Chadwick followed with a Bible reading, taking for his subject the text, "Called to be saints" (Rom. i. 7). His exposition, as also that of Rev. C. G. Moore, who followed him, was listened to with great attention.

A very largely-attended public meeting was held in the evening in Exeter Hall. Mr. F. W. Crossley, of Manchester, took the chair. Revs. F. B. Meyer, J. G. Mantle, and Peter Thompson delivered addresses, and Rev. Thos. Cook brought the meeting to a close with a speech in which he gave some account of his proposed tour.

BELFAST TOWN MISSION.

There is no better or more useful evangelistic agency in the north of Ireland than the Town Mission, which was established half a century ago under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church in Belfast, and whose jubilee was observed last Friday night in the Exhibition Hall of that city. After tea the chair was taken by the president of the Mission, Mr. Thos. Sinclair, who paid a high compliment to the memory of its founders, the late Mr. Charles Finlay, Professor McCosh, of Princeton, and others. It was important that the large centres of population should be evangelised and penetrated with the influences of the Gospel, and he considered that the Town Mission was one of their most important agencies for the purpose. The aim of this Mission is to reach all families coming into the city from the country, and get them brought under Christian influence.

There are eighteen missionaries, and Belfast is divided into a similar number of districts. Each missionary is expected to visit every family in his district, read and pray with them, conduct Bible classes, prayer meetings and Sunday-schools, and try and get those who go to no place of worship to begin to do so. How faithfully this has been accomplished during the past year is evident from the fact that in that period the agents of the Mission visited 52,728 families, paid 12,616 visits to the sick, held 4,124 meetings, and got 213 families to join churches.

These figures speak for themselves, yet the population of the city has been increasing so rapidly, and drunkenness abounds so much on every side, that only a fringe of the population has been touched. This Mission, however, is doing a splendid work, and deserves every encouragement.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE FOR INDIA.

Our work here continues to prosper. Last year I sent out twenty-one Christian teachers from our training institution. They are all working in the mission-field, in a quiet, humble way, but the Lord uses such agents very largely in the upbuilding of his cause and Kingdom among the heathen.

The publication part of our work goes on with vigour, and our little tracts and books in the different languages of India must do much good.

J. S. Haig.

Ahmednagar, Bombay, Jan. 25.

DOWN LODGE HALL.

The report of this good work, just to hand, says:—This Mission Hall was built by Dr. Herbert Watney, and was opened November 20, 1884—the anniversary of the Moody and Sankey Mission, of which it is a permanent memorial. The work of the Mission is entirely undenominational, and is now sufficiently well known to make it unnecessary to speak in detail of the Sunday services, of its Bible classes and children's meetings, all of which have been carried on with enthusiasm and success during the past year.

The adult school for working men, which meets on Sunday mornings throughout the year, has made encouraging progress. The members now on its books are unanimous in their hearty attachment to the school, which is undoubtedly doing a good work. To quote one testimony out of many similar ones, a member recently said, "It was in the adult school I first learnt to speak a few words for my Lord and Master." So great is the enthusiasm of the members that a continued increase in the attendances is, under God's blessing, confidently anticipated.

The night school is a very interesting department of our work. It was felt last winter that some effort should be made to furnish a pleasant evening once a week for the working man, and a suggestion was made by Miss Rainsford that the hall should be thrown open on Wednesday nights, warmed, well lighted, and provided with the daily papers and pleasant reading. This was done, and many availed themselves of the advantages offered.

For the first time this summer we have had a seaside convalescent home in connection with the Mission. One part of our work we have always felt was to administer comfort and rest to the weary bodies of the toiling poor for Jesus' sake. The pressure on Convalescent Homes is always so great during June, July, and August, that many of our applicants have had to wait several weeks before they could be admitted, and in the meantime have lost their opportunity: hence our desire to secure a Home of our own. We heard of a small house at Littlehampton, which appeared admirably suited for our purpose, containing two sitting-rooms and kitchen, six bedrooms, and a nice garden. On seeing the proprietor we found him most willing to treat with us, and he agreed to let it furnished for five months for the very moderate sum of £25.

It seemed to be so clearly an answer to prayer that we did not hesitate to close with the offer at once. The house was taken, and we have had the joy of giving to more than 80 weary mothers and hard-worked shop assistants a short season of complete bodily rest, with sea-air, good food, heartfelt sympathy, and, best of all, help in spiritual things—for, after all, that is the one thing we try to keep prominently before us. Our Biblewoman, Mrs. Holiver, was duly installed as matron of the establishment, and during the five months the Home was open 86 visitors were received within its walls.

The Sunday Services continue to be well attended, and we attribute this in no small measure to the excellent teaching of the men sent to us by the Evangelization Society. We know not what the coming year may bring with it, but we know Him who is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." We put our hands afresh into his, and say, "Lead Thou us on." One and another of those on whom we have loved to lean have been called away, "but Thou remainest."

Communications should be sent to Mr. Clement F. Davis, 4, Westover-road, Wandsworth Common, S.W.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

The first annual report of the Railway Mission Convalescent Home at Hastings is a very interesting record of good work accomplished for the physical and spiritual benefit of railway men. Over 180 railway employés were admitted as patients between the date of the opening of the Home in March, 1892, and December, 1893. These included men from sixteen lines of railway, and from almost every grade in the service. A large number had been the victims of accidents on the line, and ten had suffered amputation of one or more limbs. A number of the patients were led to trust the Saviour during their stay in the Home; interesting details of some of these cases of conversion are given in the report, as well as touching extracts from letters written by former patients.

The Home is maintained by voluntary contributions. The Hon. Lady Superintendent is Miss Dolby, the Railway Mission Convalescent Home, Portland-place, Hastings.

CHILDREN ARE TRAVELLERS newly arrived in a strange country; we should, therefore, make conscience not to mislead them.—Locke.

SHOREDITCH CHRISTIAN MISSION.

"God removes his workers, but carries on his work," is the heading of a modest little account of service in a very poor part of London near to where my late dear father, William Catlin, carried on his work for so many years.

It has been my privilege to be a worker in the Shoreditch Christian Mission for nearly six years, and it is with the prayer that new friends may be raised up for it that this little notice is sent out. It may be that some who have subscribed to the Cow Cross Mission in time past may, now that it is closed up, be willing to continue their subscriptions to this Mission. Such help would be thankfully received, as during the last few years many friends of our work have been called home.

We have four mothers' meetings weekly, besides evening classes for girls, Mission meetings, Sunday-school, etc. By visiting, and in every possible way, the Gospel of God's grace is presented to the people. All our meetings are held at the Mission house, the rent of a hall adding too much to the expense.

The hon. superintendent is Mrs. Marriage Allen. A report will be gladly sent to any applicant.

Annie S. Catlin, Secretary.

24, Charles-square, Hoxton, London, N.

[The friends of the late Mr. W. J. Catlin, remembering his many years of faithful work in Clerkenwell, will doubtless be glad to strengthen the hands of his daughter and the workers in the above Mission. —Ed.]

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

On Friday last, at the monthly meeting of workers, Mr. Glenny, of the North Africa Mission, told the story of his thirteenth voyage to North Africa and of much encouraging work, especially medical mission work in Morocco, Tangiers, and Fez. The opposition of the Roman Catholic priests is, he said, strong in Tangiers in the work among Spaniards, and this, together with the terrible difficulties besetting any converts who would come out boldly on the Lord's side, and the extreme distrust with which all, especially Mohammedans, received the workers of the Mission at first, made progress appear slow, but there are many who have received the word in their hearts, but fear yet to confess openly.

Mr. Seagram, the chairman, asked further prayer for the secretary of the Rest, Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, who is now so far restored in health that he is able to take a sea voyage. Prayer was also asked for Miss Clara Lowe, who is very ill. Mr. Grellier made an appeal for more bags for books, the stock being quite out.

Pastor Fuller Gooch gave a brief address on Luke xii. 50—Christ, "overmastered" by love, setting his face steadfastly to Jerusalem, and going to meet his baptism of suffering. Such an example should constrain us to be on fire with love ourselves; at the same time we are not to be occupied with our love to Him, but his love to us.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE AT UDDINGSTON.

Uddingston is a residential suburb about seven miles from Glasgow. On Sabbath, January 7, Mr. George Clarke began a mission there which continued for three weeks, and has been, in every respect, a most remarkable and memorable work. All the churches of the place were united in the movement, and cordially supported it; indeed, the whole surrounding district has been touched in a very wonderful way.

In the afternoon, Bible-readings were given by Mr. Clarke, at which large numbers assembled, while in the evenings the churches in which the meetings were held were crowded to the door. On the afternoons of the second and third Sabbaths a special service for men was held in the Free Church, which holds about 700, and on both occasions the building was filled with an audience of men evidently deeply interested and impressed. Apart from the interest at the time, it is felt that the spiritual results of these two services with men must be deep and lasting.

The after meetings held at the close of the evening services testified to the power of God in the mission, and to the reality of the work that has been done. Many waited to be spoken with, and professed to have received blessing. One of the most striking features of the mission has been the very deep interest among Christians, and the great quickening and uplifting which the Christian life of the community has received.

There is every reason to believe that a very deep and abiding work of grace has been done, which will tell, not alone upon the life and work of the churches, but on the whole tone and character of the district.

Frank Rae, Chairman of Committee.
James Law, Secretary.

Letters to the Editor.

THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST.

Dear Sir,—I have followed with intense interest, not unmingled with deep, prayerful anxiety, the progress of your "Expository Notes" and correspondence thus far, and observing that you are proceeding to a summary of remaining contributions, I venture, with much personal diffidence, to offer the following remarks.

The high sacredness of the theme restrained me for many years from meddling with it in any way (except devotionally and as from afar) until convictions from above forced upon me the urgency of the experimental necessity involved, in a way that I dare not disregard. Even now, as I think of the crisis in my own case, I realise that only the directly Spirit-taught will reach the desired goal in the matter; and I feel that there is great danger of an Uzzah-like interference on the part of any of us who may write upon such a subject to a public Christian journal without the motive of a Divine call, and consequent imperative duty in the interests of a truth of personal experience which, to those who know it, is dearer, far dearer, than life itself.

On what points are we already agreed? (1) That the baptism of the Spirit is the crowning blessing of this great Gospel dispensation. (2) That this blessing is the birthright privilege of all saved believers.

Can we go no further? Must our paths diverge here? Is there not a next possible step for us to take unitedly? Namely:—(3) That the Pentecostal teaching of Acts i., ii., &c., has both a dispensational aspect, and, at the same time, a continuous personal application from age to age.

Is it not true that the progressive teaching of both Old and New Testaments has still to-day a parallel and reproduction in individual experience? E.g., as regards the New Testament (and does not Acts xix. confirm this?), in like manner as John the Baptist preceded Christ, and as Christ was succeeded, so to speak, by the Spirit, so is it also in the personal development of grace in the soul.

(4) As to the receiving of the Spirit, all are agreed that a measure of the Spirit is received at conversion, if not before.

(5) All are agreed, again, that some Christians attain, and that some never seem to attain, to the fulness of the Spirit as an empowering for service.

(6) Why, then, dispute as to the mode of receiving? Why not agree that the "making room for more of the Spirit" is the very selfsame thing as the "waiting for the Spirit"? I will only say this—that if any Christian or body of Christians who are conscious of spiritual impotence will do as the first disciples did, ten days (less or more) will bring about such an emptying, such a cleansing, and such a filling as will mean to him or them such an inflowing and throughflowing of the Spirit as both themselves and others shall prove to be a repetition, in kind if not in degree, of what Pentecost was to the hundred and twenty.

I was very much helped, years ago, by an article which appeared in your columns, (November 23, 1888), entitled: "Can Pentecost be Regained?" The treatment of the subject then was so wise and satisfactory, and so pertinent to the present discussion, that I should like to be allowed to quote two important paragraphs in full. They are as follows:

"A measure of Pentecostal grace and power will be given to the individual disciple whose heart is fixed to obey the great command; who prays, 'Unite my heart to fear thy name,'" etc.

"A more than proportionate measure of the same power will be given to any number of believers who are 'of one accord, continuing steadfastly in prayer,'" etc.

And then the "conditions" of the regaining of Pentecost were thus given:—

(1) "Acceptance of the call to be the witnesses of Jesus Christ (Acts i. 8).

(2) "Obedience to the great commission (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20).

(3) "Implicit belief that without Him we can do nothing, and consequent waiting, in sevenfold rest of faith, upon the Risen Saviour.

(4) "Unanimity in this faith; in this obedience; in this waiting for the promised power."

Believing that the Spirit of Truth will certainly come to the help of all who rightly rely upon his guidance in the practical settlement of so precious a doctrine concerning Himself and his work in and through his people, I remain, very faithfully yours,

Lancelot Middleton.

Imperial Mission Hall, Hanley, Staffs.
February 2nd.

---

Other correspondents hold that the Holy Ghost "came upon" believers by impartation. One, "A Thirty Years' Reader of The Christian," writes:—"Mr. Hubert Brooke says, 'Whenever these two blessings of faith and reception of the Holy Ghost are not coincident, then the believer should be urged—to-day as under the Apostles—to press on and have the defect made good.' I would ask, if there are such persons to-day to whom are they to go, and who has Apostolic authority to impart what Paul undoubtedly did?"

Rev. W. Sandford, of Edleston, Ashbourne, Derbyshire, maintains that speaking with tongues and prophesying, as spoken of in the Acts, must be regarded as gifts and not grace. He associates the manifestation of the gifts with the laying on of the Apostle's hands. He says: "Spiritual life is manifested by the work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope. The grace which produces these is an inward working of the Holy Ghost, and an invisible one. Neither an Apostle's hands, nor a sacerdotalist's, could convey this, although the latter may fancy that his baptizing hands possess this power."

"G. H." distinguishes between the gift and gifts of the Spirit. From a survey of the Acts and Epistles, and a view of present experience, he infers that "Christians who have lived since the Apostolic age, have only been blessed with some of the gifts of the Spirit, but not the fulness of them; and that although the gift was given without measure at the first outpouring, yet since the elapse of that period, his manifestations have been limited, through the lack of the ministry of those who had the power given them to bestow the 'best gifts.' In Eph. iv. 10—13, it is shown that the gifts or ministrations were given 'until we all come in the unity of the faith unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.' It is to be deplored that we are getting further from this unity, divisions into sects and denominations increasing rather than decreasing."

---

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me space to point out one or two purely Scriptural considerations on this most important subject which are entirely overlooked by those who give it a prominent place in their teaching?

I notice that some Convention speakers, and others, who so strongly urge the necessity of seeking this "baptism," entirely pass over the laying on of hands as the means through which it is said to have been received in the two passages which are so freely quoted in support of it. In the case of the Samaritans (Acts viii. 15 to 17), and also in that of the Ephesian "disciples" (Acts xix. 5, 6), it is clearly stated that the reception of the Holy Spirit followed the laying on of hands. This fact is never, as far as I have seen, so much as even mentioned in addresses on the subject. Why not? People are taught to put aside the supposed hindrances, to "claim it" in faith, and that then it will come. But this is not the teaching of these passages.

And, further, this laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost seems to have been confined to certain accredited men, and not to have been practised by any one. Philip the Evangelist does not seem to have attempted it at Samaria. It did not happen at all till Peter and John, two of the original Apostles, came to Samaria. And in the case of the Ephesian "disciples," the act was performed by no other than the one so specially "called to be an Apostle," the great "Apostle of the Gentiles" himself. I have no desire to build up any theory upon this, but would simply call attention to the neglected fact. For explanation, I would ask from those who use these passages so pressingly in favour of their teaching, and yet pass over in profound silence one of the most striking features of the history, Does it not suggest that there must be something wrong somewhere?

Then another point seems to require explanation at their hands. The Apostle Paul found among the Corinthians a very low spiritual experience, possibly very much as it is with very many present-day Christians. Now the modern remedy for this is to seek a baptism of the Spirit, or a "fresh baptism," as it is often called. But the inspired Apostle taught differently. He did not set these Corinthians upon seeking anything fresh, but threw them back upon what they already had. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (1 Cor. iii. 16); "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God" (vi. 19). They had evidently forgotten this, and the remedy was to remember it, and to give the fact its due weight, and to follow out its requirements and consequences at all cost.

Notice the difference. We have teachers now who say, "Put away all the evil, and you will be baptized by the Spirit." The Apostle says, "You are in possession already of the Spirit; therefore lay aside what is inconsistent with his indwelling." And who shall tell us that we incur great responsibility, if we follow his method of dealing with a low level of spiritual life?

Personally I feel deeply that many of our Convention speakers and writers on holiness need to get back to the simple and direct teaching of the Scriptures. There is so much figurative and spiritualising exposition at the present time, a sort of exposition which can be made to teach almost anything, but which has not at its foundation a clear, "Thus saith the Lord." Teaching is drawn out of passages which were never meant to teach it, and really thoughtful minds are bewildered.

I am deeply thankful for the caution of "R. C. M.'s" original note against this sort of handling of the Word of God. It was a much-needed word of warning.

Ernest Boys.

---

PICTORIAL REPRESENTATION OF CHRIST.

Dear Sir,—There are very many who will feel the force of any statement by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, such as you copy in The Christian of February 8, page 19. He tells of a lantern service, in which, among other things, there was a representation of the crucifixion. He says:—

"Emotionalism may have its perils, as every other ism has for that matter, if pushed to an extreme. But if it is good to be hushed, and melted, and subdued, and thrilled by that infinite love of the Crucified, then I cannot conceive of any way in which that good could be more perfectly accomplished."

He then contrasts this fact that "in being spoken only, the truth comes in driblets, and needs half-a-dozen faculties to perceive it," with this other, that "in the picture it is flashed before the eye, complete at once." He describes how this is impressive at the moment, and how it afterwards remains, when mere words might not be remembered. And he concludes thus:—

"The Romish Church has known how to use with tremendous effect this power of the eye. But because Rome uses it must we needs cry out against it? Let us give up eating and drinking because many rogues and vagabonds have lived that way, and therefore it must be bad! We can use pictures without worshipping them, and are losing one of the mightiest powers to bless and help men in not trying more to get at the heart through the eye. The power of a picture is well known, and greatly used by the children of this world; who are, alas! wiser in their generation than the children of light.

"I can think of nothing that could be more blessed than to have that picture of the crucified Saviour flashed on a screen in the full gaze of our great thoroughfares, east and west, and underneath it the inscription: He loved me, and gave Himself for me. As many on that Sunday evening rose up and went into the inquiry-room to seek Him, I felt assured that it would be an easier thing to find Him, and trust Him, because He had been so lovingly and visibly set before us."

Besides the weight deservedly attached to his words, especially when expressed so touchingly, I am convinced that influences in the same direction are at work in many quarters, in connection with evangelistic efforts by many whom I esteem and love for their work's sake. None the less I have serious doubts whether the method he recommends is healthy. Some would put it much more strongly. They would question whether it was lawful.

I never read of this method being employed in the Acts of the Apostles. I never meet with an allusion to it in the Epistles. The first missionaries of the Cross, whether inspired or uninspired, trusted to the Word alone. Symbolism and images were avoided by them. Moreover, it is instructive to observe how our Lord let the whole sensuous part of the old worship fall aside. At least the two ordinances of the Lord's Supper and Baptism are all that we can be supposed to have of this sort; and both are by his direct authority. Also they are very limited in their range, and they are conspicuous by the absence of the element that attracts in such pictures as that of the crucifixion. Let it also be remembered that neither of the sacraments is a converting ordinance, they are for the use of believers exclusively. It is no answer to say that Paul and his companions had not the means of making such delightful and thrilling representations. Did they use such means as were within their reach? The Church did produce great impressions at a later time, when it was in a less pure condition, by using pictures and images. It was pled that for the ignorant multitudes who could not read, these were eminently useful. But are we of that opinion? I have lived in cities and villages with the crucifix at the corners of the streets, sometimes with touching inscriptions below, very much what is here proposed, and the effects I think are not good.

Nor is it to the point to ask whether we must equally reject picture slides which represent missionary scenes, or which give illustrations of Bible lands, etc. For the objection that we make is to representations of God, even though we do not worship the pictures. I cannot tell with what feelings I have shrunk from pictures, in which I might otherwise delight, because there is in them a figure of God the Father. Have I any more right to make a representation of God the Son?

Perhaps it will be said we do not represent God the Son; it is only the manhood of Christ which is represented. But is it not a vain and a wrong thing to represent that manhood without the Godhead, which is inseparably united with it? For it was the person, who is God and man, that was crucified.

I suggest the question whether we do not retain something of this evil so long as we make any representation of our Saviour, even as He performs one or other of his miracles. For it was the person who wrought these. And a picture of the one nature by itself would be a representation not merely defective, but also with an intentional and fatal defect. The old Greek painter who wished to represent the king giving up his daughter to be sacrificed, was supposed to show the perfection of his art when he turned away the face to which it was impossible to do justice in a picture. If we attempt to represent the Lord Jesus, abstracting his Godhead, are we not doing Him gross injustice?

Paul says: "Though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we Him no more." Is there not a serious risk of reversing this principle if we use pictures of Christ for the purpose of preaching Him?

I submit these matters, with deep respect for the eminent and beloved man whom I have named, but yet with a wish to have this subject carefully considered by Christian people.—I am, yours faithfully,

GEORGE C. M. DOUGLAS.

Glasgow.

[Rev. John Gritton, D.D., also writes in support of Principal Douglas's view.—ED.]

STUDENT VOLUNTEER MISSIONARY UNION.

THIS Union is now two years old, and consists of over 700 students who have expressed their purpose to become foreign missionaries. There are branches in all the Universities, with one exception, and in most of the colleges and medical schools of the United Kingdom. The affairs of the Union are managed by an executive of four, London, England and Wales, Scotland, and Ireland being represented. It has been found necessary to open a central office at 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C., and to appoint a general secretary to manage the business affairs.

Two travelling secretaries are now employed, whose while time is given to visiting old branches and forming new ones. At the present moment our lady travelling secretary, Miss Hodges, is working in Scotland, and Mr. Donald Frazer, in London. The executive hope to send the latter to represent the Student Volunteer Missionary Union at the Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, to be held at Detroit, U.S.A., in March. There are considerable expenses connected with this work which students are unable to meet unaided, and the executive appeal to Christian friends for generous support. Copies of all S.V.M.U. literature can be obtained from Rev. Louis Byrde, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

An excellent report of the first conference of the Union, held last July at Keswick, is now issued, price 6d.

ARMENIAN PRISONERS.

WE have received the following from the secretary of the Evangelical Alliance:—

The activity of the Armenian party in Great Britain and elsewhere is seriously imperilling the safety of the Protestants in Turkey. The Turkish Government naturally fails to distinguish between the different sections of the Armenian community, and there is the gravest danger that the law-abiding and really Christian portion of the Armenian people will be made to suffer punishments which should fall on others, who having secured the safety of their own lives, now take care to keep themselves outside the territory of the Sultan. The statement that there are "2000 Armenian Christians" suffering imprisonment is simply untrue, unless it be claimed that the whole Armenian population are "Christians" in the proper sense of that word. There are scores of Protestant Christians in Armenia who are suffering persecution, and the efforts which are being made on their behalf are greatly hindered by an agitation carried on for political purposes.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. — A district council meeting was held at Portsmouth on Friday last, when the secretary reported an increase of twenty-five branches since the last meeting three months ago. It was agreed to hold a conference of Christian officers and soldiers at Portsmouth in the latter end of March.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

THE mission work formerly done for the Protestant Reformation Society by Captain Williams is being taken up by Rev. C. J. Casher, curate of St. Aldate's, whose Protestant work and testimony is already well known in Oxford.

The fortnightly conference at Wycliffe Hall last week considered the question of "Fasting," which was opened by the Principal, Rev. F. J. Chavasse. These meetings are proving of admirable service by their very practical lines.

The new president of the Intercollegiate Christian Union is Mr. Jenner, of Oriel, and the secretary Mr. Matther, of Trinity, under whom the work is confidently expected to be maintained and furthered on the present admirable lines and with the present earnest spiritual tone.

The Bishop of Rochester preached in Oxford last Sunday, and, together with Rev. C. H. Grundy, held a meeting in aid of work in South London, where "Bishop's College" is being founded as a settlement similar to those in East London. Thus will another link be forged between the University and the practical needs of the Metropolis.

CAMBRIDGE.

Mr. A. T. Innes, of Edinburgh, delivered a lecture on Sunday evening, at St. Columba's Presbyterian Church, on "Presbyterianism in Scotland under the Stuarts."

The Bishop of Peterborough, Hulsean Lecturer, preached the University sermon in Great St. Mary's on Sunday. Bishop Barry has been elected Hulsean Lecturer for 1894-95.

On Wednesday evening a lecture was given in the Henry Martyn Hall by Mr. A. Barker (representative of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic) on "China and the Opium Traffic." A resolution condemning this iniquitous trade was unanimously carried.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule continued his excellent course of sermons in Holy Trinity Church on Sunday evenings, upon "The Holy Scriptures in their relation to the testimony of Jesus Christ." On Sunday evening Principal Moule dealt with many of the apparent difficulties in the Old Testament.

The annual meeting of the Cambridge branch of the Seamen's Mission was held in the Guildhall on Monday evening. Amongst the speakers were Bishop Selwyn and Rev. F. H. Webb-Peploe (Chaplain on the Tyne). Both gave most interesting personal reminiscences of the work. The amount of money sent in during 1893 from Cambridge to the Mission exceeded by £56 the amount sent in during the preceding year.

The Cambridge Intercollegiate Christian Union, were favoured with an address from Mr. E. J. Kennedy, on Sunday evening. The speaker's remarks were grouped around three main facts—conversion, confession, and consecration, each being indispensable before a man can walk humbly with his God. Mr. Kennedy's words were marked by great spiritual impressiveness, and seemed calculated to carry conviction to every listener's heart.

Every Sunday morning at 12.45 a.m. Rev. H. C. G. Moule gives half-an-hour's Bible reading to University men. On Sunday the subject was "Eternal Punishment." After having defended it in a very able manner, Principal Moule gave a striking account of the way in which he was led many years ago from an acceptance of Universalism to a belief in the old theory, now so much decried. These Bible readings are marked with great spiritual power, and are of unspeakable help to those who attend.

Rev. Mr. Denman was deputed by the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews to give an account of its work on Monday evening in the Henry Martyn Hall. Rev. H. C. G. Moule presided. Like the majority of missionaries, Mr. Denman emphasised the far-reaching possibilities of the work, showing that the Jews have been the historic instrument in God's hand for the evangelisation of countries previously unaffected by Gospel truth. An earnest appeal to University men to come out as volunteers for the work closed the address.

WHAT IS IT but a miserable self-love which causes a man to needlessly spend that which his family requires; and what hope is there that his sharp-eyed boys will grow up to a noble life when they see their father a slave to some low form of self-indulgence?

DR. HENRY LANSDELL, the well-known Siberian traveller, was welcomed at a reception given last week by the Council of the Society for the Study of Inebriety. Dr. Norman Kerr, the president of the society, spoke some warm words appreciative of the work done by the guest of the evening. In his reply, Dr. Lansdell urged the dietetic uselessness of intoxicants.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

REV. W. L. SWANSON, of the Free Church, Lochmaben (son of the late Dr. Swanson), has accepted the call to Melville Church, Aberdeen.

Bishop Tucker preached three times in Edinburgh last Sabbath, to large congregations, giving interesting details of the work of the C.M.S. in Uganda.

The Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has dealt, during the past year, with about 2000 cases, involving the welfare of 4370 children.

Dr. Pentecost, of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, London, is to occupy the pulpit of the Gorbals Tabernacle, Glasgow, next Sabbath, morning and evening.

Mr. Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes, has now purchased the farm adjoining the plot of ground on which his village is built, and intends to proceed immediately with the erection of two consumptive homes.

Paisley in the past has been much indebted to her sons; now she is to get a new infirmary and a new grammar school through the liberality of the late Mr. Wm. Barbour, M.P. for the borough, who was born in humble life.

There is to be a training home in Glasgow for women employed in home mission work, on the lines of the Deaconesses' Training Home in Edinburgh. The supply of deaconesses is unequal to the demand, hence this new departure.

It is said to be the desire of Rev. John Robertson, of the Gorbals Tabernacle, to begin work in the City Hall on the north side of the river, and in the very midst of the masses. His present membership at Gorbals is 1642, the largest in the city, Mr. Ross, in the Cowcaddens, coming next with about 1200 members. On Sunday last Mr. Robertson formally intimated his resignation of the Gorbals' pastorate.

A large and interesting meeting was held at Peterhead on Feb. 5, to take farewell of Mr. Wm. Souttar, who goes to Tibet in the Pioneer Missionary party. Mr. Souttar has been an active and devoted worker for many years in connection with Topping's Hall Mission. Mr. Neave, of Aberdeen, who is also going in the same party, took part in the meeting, which was a very hearty and enthusiastic one.

Rev. W. Ross, of Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, is asking to have a colleague in his growing work. The aggressive work, which has been carried on for 3750 nights without intermission, has now so grown that there are upwards of seventy services and meetings weekly in five different centres. The membership of the church is over 1100. The pastoral work alone would tax the energies of one of their strongest men. The evangelistic work is, however, necessary for the district, and indispensable to the existence of the congregation.

THE CHURCH ARMY.

WE have received the following from the Church Army:—

"The impression conveyed by your correspondent in describing our opening at Brunswick Chapel is quite erroneous. The organist was not a 'priest,' but one of our clerks at headquarters, who being a university graduate wore the hood indicating his degree. The creed was not 'intoned,' but monotoned, and you must be aware that to wear surplices and cassocks is not Ritualistic.

"Our Society is not extremely High Church; we could not be, and our staff would be out of sympathy with very advanced teaching. We preach conversion through the atoning work of our Lord Jesus Christ, wherever an open door is offered, whether the parish be 'high' or evangelical. But only such invitations are accepted as will permit of the fearless proclamation of the simple Gospel. Our men are working-men evangelists, not teachers; they are therefore unable to take up the many points of difference between 'high' and 'low' Churchmen; they preach the Word."

MR. REA IN ABERDEEN.

WRITING with respect to the services being held by this Irish brother, an Aberdeen correspondent says:—"The meetings are still going on, and the interest increasing both as to numbers and blessing. We had a testimony meeting on Thursday night, in St. Katharine's Hall, which was much over-crowded, when a number, mostly young men and women, gave touching accounts of how they were led to decision. One most pleasing feature of the work has been the coming together of so many Christians with one heart, seeking the salvation of souls. The mid-day prayer meeting has been a source of great strength and blessing."

Mr. Rea's Mission in Aberdeen was closed on Sunday last, when there were large and deeply interesting meetings.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The fine buildings of the Buffalo, N.Y., Association have been burned down.

The South London Y.M.C.A. Magazine states that the work of the Clapham Association is in a healthy condition, the Sunday afternoon conversational Bible class being specially encouraging.

The State committee of Kansas is calling earnest attention to the deplorably neglected condition of the 300,000 young men of the State, about 200,000 of whom never attend any Christian services whatever.

The religious work of the San Francisco Association has been lately of an encouraging character, especially the noonday and Sunday afternoon services. The attendance also at the Bible class keeps up remarkably well.

West Detroit, the parent Association of the railroad branches now widely spread over the United States, has celebrated its sixteenth anniversary, when much enthusiasm was displayed over the great things God has done among the railway men.

Dr. Cronin presided the other evening over a subdistrict conference of South London Associations, held at Clapham. There was an excellent representation, and the proceedings were of much interest. Mr. W. Hind Smith delivered an address.

The Camden-road Magazine says: It is our duty to report a steady increase, both in the number and spirit of those attending the Sunday morning prayer meeting, the Sunday afternoon Bible class, and the Thursday evening Gospel meeting; several very interesting cases of conversion have recently occurred.

As an evidence of the enthusiasm with which the interests of the Glasgow Association are prosecuted, it may be mentioned that the subjects discussed at a recent social meeting and conference of office-bearers of branches were, "An Ideal Visitor," "Benefit of an Association," "Morning at the Branches," and "Our Magazine and its relation to the branches."

Peoria, the largest city in Illinois with the exception of Chicago, is one which demands all the faith and energy which can be put into Christian work. As should be the case, the Peoria Young Men's Christian Association occupies a most prominent place in the religious life of the city, and has taken up about all the branches of work that come in the plans of any Association.

The forty-first anniversary of the Y.M.C.A.s of New York has just been celebrated. Mr. McBurney, the general secretary, reported a membership of 7584—400 larger than ever before. Seven branches have good gymnasiums; four have savings bank also open for young men; in the employment department 15,580 applications for employment were registered and 3960 men were provided with situations; 5218 religious services and Bible classes had been conducted, with an aggregate attendance of 212,893, and 3575 secular gatherings, with an attendance of 161,443.

The annual meeting of the Birkenhead Association was largely attended. The Mayor, who presided, spoke very highly of the value of the Y.M.C.A. Details were given of the various branches, educational, social, and spiritual, all of which were very encouraging. The membership is returned at 501. The Bible classes have largely increased; the Sunday morning prayer meetings have gone on well, and the evening Gospel services have been greatly blessed. As to the P.S.A., the secretaries report a membership of between 400 and 500, with an average attendance of over 350. A warm interest is displayed by the members, most of whom appear to value the plain Gospel services. The Holy Spirit has been at work, and many are the results.

The Association News, speaking of the various operations at Aldersgate-street, expresses special thankfulness for the P.S.A. and the Wednesday Bible class, and adds: "The meeting held on Saturday afternoon from three to four o'clock, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, is far from being least in importance. Three hundred young men, and sometimes more, have gathered in, week by week, to listen to the earnest, bright, loving words of this faithful servant of our Lord Jesus Christ. The topics chosen are those of the International Series of the Sunday School Union (afternoon subjects) for the following day. To those who have not yet visited this meeting we heartily commend the opportunity. It is certainly one of the most unique sights of London. Above all, it is an occasion of deep spiritual profit."

That the Y.M.C.A. has secured a firm hold over the young men of Sheffield was shown by the large attendance and enthusiasm displayed at the annual meeting. Rev. Thomas Allen, the chief speaker at the mass meeting, said he had watched the working of the Y.M.C.A. for twenty-five years in several of the great centres of the country, and found it an institution which had come in between the family and the Church, helping both. Its evangelistic services had secured the conversion of a large number of young men, and the need for such an Association was never greater than at the present time. The Y.M.C.A. as an institution was thoroughly distinctive. It was not a home, though it served some of the purposes of home; not a club, though possibly party politics might be taught in its rooms occasionally; not a recreative society, though by means of the gymnasium it promoted physical development; not a literary society, though by means of the library, evening classes, and reading-room it was contributing to intellectual cultivation; not a church, though evangelistic and devotional services were held within its walls. It was all those institutions rolled into one. Prebendary Webb-Peploe made an eloquent appeal for decision in Christian life.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Exeter branch, in the nineteenth year of its existence, has enrolled fifty-three new members, the total being now nearly 200.

The London Y.W.C.A. have arranged special meetings next week at the various branches; being the Week of Prayer for young women. It is hoped the effort will be taken up thoroughly throughout the country. Programmes may be had of the secretary, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

The Park Mission branch of the Y.W.C.A. held its annual tea in January at the Duke-street Hall, Manchester-square. Over 200 members and friends were present. After tea some very good music, vocal and instrumental, was given by kind friends. This was followed by a very practical address from Rev. Evan Hopkins, on the power of God to keep his people in daily life. He seemed thoroughly to enter into the difficulties and needs of those to whom he was speaking, and there is reason to believe his address was found very helpful by many.

The Belfast Y.W.C.A. Institute recently held its annual meeting of members and quarterly social evening of missionary workers combined. A series of dissolving views, illustrative of life in India, was displayed by Mr. Nicholl and Mr. McCreery; and a missionary statement was made, the present position of affairs being, four members in the foreign field, in China, India, and Africa, four engaged in home mission work, five in training, and one in treaty; two years ago only two of these had been definitely accepted, though two others had such a life's work in view. Over £215 was raised last year by the members (fifty-eight of whom hold self-denial boxes); this was sent direct for the support of our own missionaries and candidates, and for that of three orphans in a Christian school in China.

A STRONG FEELING is rising in Scotland against the system whereby a man by travelling three miles from his place of residence can get drink at an hotel. The Greenock Free Presbytery has agreed to petition the Government to pass a Sunday-closing Act which would put an end to this Sunday drinking.

CRUISES TO NORWAY.—The committee of the Regent-street Polytechnic have decided to renew, during the coming summer, their Norwegian yachting cruises, which have been so very successful during the past three years. The cruise, covering over 3000 miles, only costs £8 5s., with 10s. extra for non-members. The first cruise starts on June 16, and the last on August 25. Persons desirous of securing a berth should write for particulars to the Secretary of the Polytechnic, Regent-street, W.

PAPAL POLICY AND MADAGASCAR.—The Madagascar News of December 23 has a long article on "Papal Policy and Madagascar's Future." After showing that the Papacy hopes to reap advantage from the advance of French influence, the writer says:—"The guiding principles of the Church of Rome make it necessary to inquire if she views with favour French aggression on Madagascar; and how far, if France becomes supreme in this country, the Jesuit Mission would abide by the toleration clause in the Anglo-French Convention concerning Madagascar. The actual refusal of the Society of Jesus to recognise State legislation in Germany makes it necessary for the question to be put: Will the Church of Rome recognise the agreement of the French and British Governments as to the tolerance of Protestant teachings in Madagascar?" In reply to this, the writer quotes an interview with Père Caussèque, the Paris representative of the Madagascar Mission of the Society of Jesus, published in Le Temps in May last. Among other things the Père said:—"Our success would be much greater if Protestantism were not the State religion. The aristocracy are compelled to profess the same faith as the Queen. The bulk of the people, however, incline to Catholicism; they prefer our worship to that of the Protestants, and without doubt they would come to us en masse if they were entirely free." These facts and sentiments fully justify our contemporary in sounding an alarm against the political intrigues of the Papacy.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The C.E. Society in Pietermaritzburg has taken good hold, and is doing very useful work.

A C.E. Society with twenty-six members has been formed at South Parade Church, Leeds (Rev. C. B. Sawday).

A pleasant evening was lately spent at the social of the Manor Park Tabernacle Society. Addresses were given by the pastor, John J. Nelson, and delegates from Upton Park, Commercial-road, Upton Cross, Greenhill-grove.

At the annual circuit tea-meeting and conversazione of the Brighton-road Methodist Church, Dublin, the president of the C.E.S. reported 35 active and eleven associate members, and progressive work done by prayer-meeting, look-out, social, and music committees, the hospital-visiting department, etc.

The Y.P.S.C.E. connected with the Moravian Church at Wellhouse, Mirfield, lately undertook to raise £25 towards the total debt on the church. This has been successfully accomplished, partly by weekly offerings, and partly by a sale of work organised by the young people under the guidance of Mrs. Hassé. Endeavour Day was kept on Sunday, Feb. 4, by a consecration service, when about 100 were present.

The four Endeavour Societies of Langholm, Dumfriesshire, celebrated "Endeavour Day" by holding a united gathering. The meetings were enthusiastic and helpful. A general committee was formed representing all the Societies for united open-air and evangelistic work. Langholm has the honour to be the first town in Scotland in which a Society has been formed in connection with the Established Church.

The Endeavourers at Upper Clapton Congregational Church held on 5th inst. their fourth social annual meeting. About 130 young people met, including seventy active members and friends and strangers whom they sought to gather into the Society. Sacred music and solos formed the prelude to a short and bright service of prayer and praise, Mr. Bird addressing the meeting on "The Attitude of Christians." There is much life and service in this Society.

According to figures given by Rev. E. Abbott, of Birmingham, the C.E. movement is making rapid progress in the churches. In thirteen years the number of Societies has gone up to 28,000, with a membership of one and three-quarter million of young people. In four years no less than 43,000 have been transferred from these Societies throughout the world to the fully accredited membership of various Evangelical churches. In Great Britain the year 1893 closed with 1,004 Societies, and since the opening of the new year Societies in this country have been registered at the rate of three a day.

Rev. W. Knight Chaplin writes:—"It is sometimes asked, 'Do Christian Endeavour Conventions pay?' I think they do. I have recently heard of one which cost nearly £100. Some of the results were: three volunteers for missionary service; at least six young Christians, who were in the habit of dancing and theatre-going, voluntarily took their stand against these things; the Sunday-school committee in one of the local churches was so awakened that the following Sunday morning in that church there were nearly fifty new scholars; much interest was awakened about soul-winning, and about personal consecration. These are among the known results. Eternity will reveal many more."

The monthly meeting of the Glasgow and West of Scotland Christian Endeavour Union was held in the Christian Institute on Friday, February 9. Five new Societies were admitted to the Union. A paper was read by Rev. John Pollock, Shamrock-street U.P. Church, embodying the following suggestions for the extension of the movement, viz., the securing the influence of the Press, approaching the supreme courts of the churches, sending deputies to congregations, bringing the movement before the young, celebrating Christian Endeavour Day, holding combined gatherings, wearing of the Christian Endeavour badge, and the forming of a Scottish National Council.

WEST LONDON MISSION.—On Sunday, the Conference in St. James's Hall was devoted to woman's work, that day being the "Sisters' Sunday" of the West London Mission, when special appeals were made and collections taken on behalf of the sisterhood. Mr. Mark Guy Pearse preached in the morning. At each of the services—morning, noon, and night—one or more sisters addressed large audiences on the various phases of their work.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY IN ISLINGTON are greatly concerned over the proposed appointment of a paid Romish priest for their Workhouse and Infirmary. A ratepayers' demonstration on the 7th instant was broken up by the Roman Catholic element present, who refused to allow the Protestant ratepayers to be heard, and on a given sign stormed the platform and ended the proceedings in a free fight. The following day a deputation waited on the Board of Guardians to protest against the appointment.

OBITUARY.

MRS. E. STROUD SMITH.

IN October last, accompanied by her daughter, this devoted lady started for a six months' missionary tour in Africa. After visiting Monrovia they went on to Liberia, where Mrs. Stroud Smith was seized with the African fever, and passed away on December 2. Her son has issued a touching little memorial of her service and last hours.

COMTESSE BLANCHE DE HAMEL DE MANIN.

We regret to hear of the death of the Comtesse Blanche de Hamel de Manin, which took place on Monday, 29th ult., at her brother's residence, 88, Cornwall-gardens, South Kensington. She bore her long and painful illness with Christian resignation, and her friends were much impressed by her tranquil state of mind, thoughtfulness for others, and sympathetic disposition. Whatever lay in her power she would do to help others. She passed away most peacefully. Her body was interred in the family vault at Kensal Green.

SIR HARRY VERNEY.

At the ripe age of ninety-three this friend of many true workers has been called to his rest, passing away at his residence, Claydon House, Bucks, on Monday morning. During his long and active career he had taken part in many events of a historical character; but he himself was a humble-minded follower of Christ, who, while belonging to the Evangelical party in the Church of England, had sympathy for, and friends in, all the denominations. He was among the earliest supporters of the Bible Society, and enjoyed the close friendship of the great Earl of Shaftesbury. We may note that Sir Harry's second wife was a sister of Miss Florence Nightingale.

MRS. MARRIAGE WALLIS.

We deeply regret to hear of the death of Mrs. Marriage Wallis, whose husband is so well known in connection with Christian work in Brighton, especially the Y.M.C.A. Although of late years Mrs. Wallis has not been able to aid in Y.M.C.A. work, yet those best acquainted with her know the great interest she continued to take in everything that made for its success. It is contrary to the spirit that animated Mrs. Wallis that reference should be made to her loving and charitable deeds—she ever "did good by stealth"—and we refrain from speaking of them; but this may be said, the Association has lost in her a good and generous friend, and the poor and distressed a ready and loving helper. The hearts of all Y.M.C.A. men go out in sympathy to Mr. Wallis in this time of his bereavement.

MRS. GINEVER.

This life-long friend of poor and orphan children passed to her rest early on Friday morning last. Though not entirely laid aside, she had for years been an invalid, and patiently endured a good deal of suffering. Until the last, however, she was able to take the warmest interest in the direction of her much-loved work in connection with the Orphanage at Holloway, which she founded and carried on for so many years. The 170 or more little children who are now in the institution sadly feel the loss of such a friend as she was to them, and will remember her as one who truly sought their welfare with all her heart for the sake of Jesus Christ, and lovingly and diligently endeavoured to win them for Him. Mrs. Ginever, who was in her sixty-fourth year, had made all arrangements for the work of the Orphanage to be continued on the same basis as during her life, leaving the children in the hands of the Father of the fatherless, in faith that his stewards would still continue to minister to their needs.

MRS. THOMAS HARVEY.

We regret to hear of the death of Mrs. Harvey, aged eighty-one, widow of Mr. Thomas Harvey, of Headingley, Leeds, which took place on January 31, at Heathfield, Ilkley. Like her husband, she took an active interest in Christian work. She was one of the promoters of the Bible Women's Mission (Leeds), of which she was the superintendent, and then the secretary for many years. The Women's Christian Temperance Union largely owed its existence to her efforts. Mrs. Harvey was also president, until last year, of the Y.W.C.A. Of all these institutions she was a generous supporter. Her sweet, loving influence was felt by all with whom she came in contact, and she will be sorely missed. She was a much-valued minister of the Society of Friends. A seizure in 1892 confined her to bed for the rest of her life; but she was still able by correspondence and in other ways to carry on the work she so much loved. Her body was interred in the Friends' Burial Ground at Adel, Leeds.

MADAME DE SCHOULEPNIKOW.

Many witnesses and workers for God, residing or sojourning on the Continent within the last twenty years, will feel that by the removal of Madame Catherine de Schoulepnikow, they have lost a most sympathetic friend. Madame Schoulepnikow was not much known on the outward and wide field of Christian effort, yet one feels how abundant were her labours—and how rich in results the Day will declare. Her gracious mind and manner, her rare talent of speaking and interpreting various languages, her ever-open drawing-room to speak or learn in, added to her graceful and facile pen, threw open for her a wide field of rare interest. This tender and fragile plant was removed to thrive and flourish in its native clime on January 22, at Veytaux, Switzerland. Her remains were buried on the following Thursday in the beautiful and peaceful cemetery of Clarens. Her daughter writes that at the last the glory of God shone around and through her precious mother. The loss to the surviving husband, two daughters, and one son, is what no stranger can enter into.

MR. R. M. BALLANTYNE.

Many will mourn the death of this able writer, who passed away on Tuesday at Rome, where he had gone for his health. There be few youths who know not Mr. Ballantyne's books of adventure—thoroughly wholesome, yet full of vivid interest for boys. As a contemporary says:—A feature of Ballantyne's writings was the combination of interesting adventure with a high moral tone, and an attempt, generally successful, to present boy-life in its noblest aspects. Along with that he possessed in a rare degree the power of writing vivid and interesting scenic descriptions. Mr. Ballantyne reached in a very remarkable manner the hearts and not merely the heads of boy-readers. The healthy and invigorating tone of his books has often been remarked upon by eminent contemporaries of the late gifted writer. With all this Mr. Ballantyne was a devout and earnest Christian. He took a keen interest in the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, had been frequently at the fleets, speaking clearly and faithfully the Gospel, and was a member of the council of the M.D.S.F.

SICKNESS IN SAMOA.

REV. S. J. WHITMEE writes to The Independent from Samoa, giving an encouraging account of his work. There has been a serious outbreak of measles among the natives, but owing to the precautions and warnings of the missionaries, the fatal effects have been comparatively small. At Manua, Mr. Whitmee had had 1328 patients under his care, only one of whom, a little child, had died. Notwithstanding the general sickness, he always has a daily service for those who are able to attend, and he has never held a service without some cases of what appears to him genuine conversion. After three services in two villages, he had twenty-five inquirers; he had seventy-eight inquirers in one week from three villages. Mr. Whitmee thinks that the people have been moved by the Spirit of God using the prevailing sickness to open their hearts to receive the Word.

BARCELONA.

MISS E. LAWRENCE writes from Barcelona, Spain:—With the Lord's help, my sisters and I hope to continue the Gospel work in this town. Our dear father had won many hearts, and many loving hands helped us to minister to him during his short illness. About a thousand persons attended the funeral, which was made an opportunity for preaching the Gospel and distributing Scriptures and tracts.

We are daily more encouraged to persevere in the work of leading souls to a knowledge of the one and only Saviour. It is evident that God is working in the hearts of the people, and that He will raise up from among them helpers for the work. We have been requested by some of the friends to begin a little evangelistic work in some of the surrounding villages.

We are changing our residence. Our address in future will be Calle Mayor 42, Caldas de Montbery, Barcelona. We shall value the prayers and sympathy of the Lord's people.

COUNT CAMPELLO, referring to a visit he has paid to Perugia, says: "I was deeply moved by the reception I met with, feeling sure that, had we the means, we might open a station there with every probability of success. Never before was the prospect so bright. We want good ministers. To stand still on the dawn of such a future would be sinful. We must go forward. Public opinion is all for us, and great things are expected from us." Rev. A. Robertson, of Venice, agrees, and writes: "Italy is ripe for a great reform. No effort should be spared to sustain and extend the work." The Quarterly Report of the Italian Church Reform Association gives particulars of work in progress. Copies may be had from Miss Mayor, 20, Manor-place, Paddington Green.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

TEMPERANCE societies have been recently established at Woodbridge and Ashford, in connection with the Friends' Mission in those places, and have been affiliated with the Friends' Temperance Union.

The Folkestone branch of the Friends' Temperance Union, in their second annual report, state an increase of membership during the year of twenty-two, and that they continue to make steady progress.

As an outcome of a conference of temperance workers held at Reading near the end of 1892, a Women's Help-One-Another Society was formed. It has just presented its first annual report, from which it appears to be filling a very useful place amongst the temperance organisations of that town.

At a recent meeting in Belfast, Rev. Jas. Cregan strongly condemned the gambling spirit of the present day, and said they should do something to quicken the magistrates of the city in order that the betting curse, which was ruining hundreds of young men, might be abolished. Britain's greatest need was a revival of pure and undefiled religion.

Herr Adolf Hedin, the leader of the Liberal party in the Swedish House of Commons, is expected soon to introduce a Bill for the regulation of the drink-traffic on the lines laid down by Local Option measures in America and the Local Veto proposed for this country. It is stated that the friends of Temperance are not in love with the Gothenburg system.

Says The Irish Temperance League Journal:—"Philanthropists, and humane persons of all shades of thought and spheres of work, are becoming painfully aware that the system of fines is utterly inadequate to the case. A fine of 'five shillings and costs,' or of 'fifty shillings and costs,' only means less food and clothing and more suffering and wretchedness to the children."

On the 11th ult. nearly 100 Board School teachers responded to an invitation from the Birmingham Women Friends' Temperance Association to a social tea at the Temperance Institute. An excellent address was given by the chairman, William Littleboy, on the duties and responsibilities of teachers. F. Dymond followed with some remarks on temperance teaching.

Mrs. Amanda Smith has concluded a most successful three days' Gospel temperance mission in Dowlais, under the auspices of the local branch of the B.W.T.A. The services were held in some of the largest chapels in the town connected with various denominations, and were all well attended. God's presence was much felt. Mrs. Smith's visit cannot fail to stir up the churches wherever she goes.

On Friday, February 2, the Women's Temperance Total Abstinence Union was indebted to Mrs. T. P. Whittaker for an influential drawing-room meeting held at her residence, 9, Taviton-street, W.C. A crowded company assembled, under the presidency of Mrs. W. S. Caine, who addressed the meeting in her usual winning manner. An admirable address from Dr. Annie McCale on the medical aspects of Temperance was listened to with great interest.

Mr. E. G. Falconer, in his report of the work of the Church of England Protestant Temperance Alliance in Yarmouth, Stowmarket, Lowestoft, etc., says:—The feature of the Protestant Temperance Alliance is, that it seeks to rescue the intemperate by spiritual means—preaching boldly the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ at every Temperance meeting. This method has always proved successful, and I have had the joy of seeing many lost ones reclaimed.

The chief celebration in London of General Neal Dow's ninetieth birthday, on March 20, will take the form of a popular demonstration in Exeter Hall. Lady Henry Somerset will preside, and the speakers, among whom will be Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Miss Willard, Mr. J. H. Raper, and Mrs Ormiston Chant, have all personally known Neal Dow, and all, or nearly all, have seen for themselves the work of prohibition in Maine and elsewhere. All the arrangements for the Exeter Hall meeting are in the hands, as joint secretaries, of Mr. H. J. Osborn and Mr. F. Cowley, and all particulars may be obtained of them at 112, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

A very vigorous crusade against our drinking customs has just been concluded in the Temperance Institute, Birmingham. The various Temperance organisations have put their shoulder to the wheel, and night by night full meetings have been held—Jan. 28—Feb. 6. On the closing night of the mission a united social gathering was held, the various secretaries being present. It was felt that the ten days' mission had been an unqualified success, 100 pledges having been taken, and a large amount of interest and curiosity having been awakened on all sides. It therefore seemed in the judgment of the secretaries that the mission's work should not fall to the ground, they therefore proposed to the crowded social meeting that a regular Sunday evening service should be held in the Institute. This proposition was hailed with pleasure, and it is probable the series will start on Sunday evening, February 18, after church hours.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Isaac Skidmore is to conduct a six days' mission, from 18th inst., at Rowland's Castle, Hants. Prayer is earnestly desired.

Mr. D. Newell, who has been highly recommended to us by many friends, with whom he has been taking missions, is open to evangelistic engagements. His address is, 3, Merton-street, Banbury, Oxon.

Messrs. Munhall and Birch lately closed an evangelistic visit to Bay City, Michigan, that appears to have been very fruitful of interest and of result in personal decisions. Their next field of service was to be Melton, Pa.

Mr. G. W. Clegg, of Camborne, has been labouring in the Mawgan Wesleyan Church during the past four weeks with remarkable success. Many have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, and the work is still going on.

Gospel Services have been held in Castleblayney Methodist Church, by Rev. Jno. Sanderson; in Athy Methodist Church, by Rev. W. R. Budd; and in Clough Presbyterian Church, by Mr. B. Jackson, one of the General Assembly's evangelists.

Pensilva, Cornwall.—A five weeks' mission has been held in the Bible Christian Chapel by Mr. J. Simmonds, of the Evangelisation Society. The Gospel was with much power, and a number came out for Christ. In addition to the evangelistic services, Mr. Simmonds held two Bible-readings weekly, which awakened interest.

Mr. Henry Varley's mission in Taunton has aroused great interest, and the Castle Hall, where the meetings have been held, has been crowded to the doors. The Bible readings in the Temperance Hall have also attracted large audiences. There are indications that God has given much blessing. Mr. Varley has now left for Glasgow.

Natal.—A special united mission was recently held in Ladysmith by Rev. Wm. Douglas, of Durban. The blessing of God was manifestly shown, and not a few young people were led to decision and came out openly on the side of Christ. Not only so, but it proved a time of quickening for the people of God, and the work has received a fresh impetus.

Mr. John Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a most blessed fifteen days' mission at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Chorley Wood, Herts. Many who came from a distance were unable to get in. There has been a great awakening there, and in some of the villages around.
W. Thorpe.

Roscommon, Ireland.—During the last fortnight a Gospel mission has been held in Roscommon, and also in the village of Mount Talbot, by Mr. Herbert Hurditch. Great interest has been awakened, and numbers of people have attended the meetings, showing that there is an increasing desire to hear the truth in the West of Ireland; but "how shall they hear without a preacher?" K. S. T. C.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has concluded a fourteen days' mission in Clackmannan, N.B., where his labours have been attended with Divine blessing. Over 1000 persons were present at the concluding meeting, a circumstance unprecedented in the history of Gospel mission work in the district. As the immediate result of the mission several have been born again, while others are manifesting a desire to know the way to acknowledging the futility of life without Him.
G. F.

Mr. T. W. Canning has concluded a fortnight's mission in Cupar, Fife, N.B., under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A. All the meetings were largely attended, and a manifest interest was shown. During the mission Mr. Canning's addresses were characterised by spirituality, power, and freshness, and were pointed and practical in their application. The Lord has blessed the special effort, in the ingathering of souls, and in the quickening and reviving of believers. W. L. T.

South Africa.—During the recent Convention at Wellington Mr. W. Hill was asked to visit the Paarl Seminary for young ladies and the Boys' School at Blauw Vlei. The Spirit of God worked mightily at both places; sinners were converted, believers led into a deeper experience of God's grace, many young hearts surrendering to their Saviour and offering themselves gladly for work amongst the heathen, by enrolling themselves as members of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union.

Mr. Francis Holmes has concluded a three weeks' mission at Methil, Fife, preaching the Gospel in a plain, practical, and pointed way, that much impressed his hearers. Despite the inclement weather, the audiences were good, and not only were the Lord's people strengthened and stimulated, but many of the godless were led to surrender themselves into the hands of the Lord. Mention must be made of the evangelist's singing, and of his work in visiting, which was done vigorously. The church was crowded to hear his farewell address.

Richard Weaver.—This aged veteran of the Cross continues "to hold the fort" and to "capture forts" in his campaign at Malden Hall. Night by night the large hall is full of the right class of people, and many have professed decision for Christ after each service. On Sunday evenings an overflow meeting has been held to accommodate the numbers which have gathered to hear the Gospel from the evangelist's lips. Will readers of The Christian pray that we may yet witness a deeper work, and experience yet greater things done in the name of God's Holy Servant Jesus? G. H.

The Brooklyn Revival.—The conversion of many, and the uprising of many hundreds for prayer, are not the only good results of the revival. Some of the weak churches are being built up, and churches which have been sluggish and languid are being roused to spiritual fervour by the influence of the converts who have been united to their fellowship. The evangelists and pastors cannot keep up with the needs and calls made upon them. Pastor H. M. Wharton, of Baltimore, who has laboured so faithfully and successfully, has had to return home, but he is to return soon, and, with Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, will begin services at the Calvary Baptist Church in New York.

Rev. James Oatey, of Upper Norwood, commenced on Sunday week a special mission in the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Shepherd's Bush, W. The week-evening meetings were encouraging in point of numbers and interest; while the gatherings on Sunday proved seasons of great power. In the evening the place was crowded, and many seemed cut to the heart, as the evangelist set forth the need of salvation, the power of Christ to save, and the danger of delay. His rich store of Yorkshire and Cornish incidents supplies a flow of fresh and telling illustrations. The children's services have been remarkably interesting. This mission is being continued until Sunday evening, and prayer is especially asked for the closing services.

St. Philip's, Manchester.—A most successful fortnight's mission has been concluded in this parish. It was conducted by Mr. Henry Lakin, of Burton-on-Trent. The meetings were very well attended, the hall being filled nearly every evening with the very people for whom the mission was intended. Over 200 were dealt with in the inquiry room, a large number of whom we believe to have been truly converted. Husbands brought their wives, wives their husbands, parents their children, and children their parents, with most blessed results. In some cases whole families were turned to God. Our regular classes and meetings have been materially increased, and an enrolled society for total abstainers has been started with a roll of 256. We believe that these splendid results are in answer to the widespread prayers of God's people offered in our behalf, and we praise God for this rich harvesting of much patient seed-sowing. Hubert G. Kingdon, Rector.

Overton, Hants.—Mrs. Sydney Watson conducted a mission in the Congregational Chapel, January 28 to February 4, holding also children's meetings, which were well attended, and giving Bible readings which were much appreciated. On each Sunday afternoon the Wesleyan school and teachers united in the mission. In connection with the services a few friends gave a tea to over eighty men and women. Mrs. Watson was listened to with attention, and much blessing has been the result. This has led to an arrangement to hold a united Sunday afternoon service alternately in the Wesleyan and Congregational Chapels, also to united week-evening services. A Christian Endeavour Society is also being formed. Mrs. Watson's labours have led to the formation of a mission band, thirty in number, for future work. Already we know of a goodly number who have found peace in believing. Such was the earnestness to hear the Gospel, that on Sunday evening many could not get an entrance, gallery and aisles being crowded. J. R.

FRA PAOLO SARPI.

Fra Paolo Sarpi is known chiefly as the historian of the Council of Trent, but he was also a great scientist and philosopher, a great theologian, and above all a great Christian reformer. He is perhaps the only one we know of who carried out his reforms inside the pale of the Roman Catholic Church, and was too strong a man for Pope or Curia to crush. Whilst living, he had the distinction of being the man best loved by the Republic of Venice, and best hated by the Papacy. Strange as it may seem, that love and that hate have come down the centuries, and divide Italy to-day. The monument which his admirers (virtually the Italian nation) erected to his memory in Venice in Sept., 1892, had to be guarded night and day against Papal mischief.

The Life of Fra Paolo Sarpi will be published shortly by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, and Co., the author being Rev. Alexander Robertson, of Venice, who has called his hero, "The Greatest of the Venetians."

PERSONALIA.

Rev. David Baron is recovering from the effects of a severe cold.

Rev. J. F. Kitto, who has been compelled to rest awhile, is now said to be regaining strength slowly.

Dr. Gunn, of Futuna, in the New Hebrides, is expected soon to arrive in Britain for a brief furlough.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn has resigned the pastorate of the English Reformed Church, Hamburg, and purposes closing his ministry there in April next.

Rev. E. H. Titchmarsh, of Erith, has been appointed to assist the Home Secretary of the London Missionary Society in view of the forthcoming centenary.

Rev. William Arthur attends every Friday the drawing-room meeting held at Mr. Cheyne Brady's, Chalet de Syrphes, Cannes, for the study of the Word of God. His experience is highly valued.

Mr. J. F. Spiro, of the London Jews Society, has, with his wife and family, gone to Algiers, having been appointed by the committee as missionary to the Jews there, in succession to Mr. Goldenburg, who died last year.

Lord Radstock, who is at present in India, says in a recent letter from Aurungabad: "Much deeply interesting work is going on here, though in a Mohammedan State. Mohammedans listen so earnestly. I have seen in one week four Mohammedans and two Brahmans all really inquiring for more light."

Mr. J. Herbert Tritton desires to thank the many friends who have been praying for him in consequence of the notice of his illness which appeared in The Christian, and asks for their thanksgiving on his behalf that recovery seems to have fairly set in. Their prayers have greatly sustained him.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, has of late been addressing meetings in New Zealand, on behalf of the New Hebrides Mission. He will leave for the islands in March. In a recent letter he says:—"I am yearning to be back with my people on Tongoa, but must wait patiently until the Lord's time for going there has come."

Lord Bennet has, says The Record, returned home from Canada, and is throwing himself into evangelistic work with great energy. His style of preaching is very unconventional and of a conversational type, but he never fails to impress his audience with his deep earnestness. Men are especially attracted by him.

INDUSTRIAL WORK IN BULGARIA.

There is, in connection with the American Collegiate and Theological Institute in Samokov, Bulgaria, an industrial department, the object of which is to give work to indigent but worthy young men, by means of which they can support themselves in the only Christian school, with one exception, in Bulgaria. Scores of young men are anxious thus to work their own way, but materials for carrying on the work are wanting.

This industrial department is in sore need of a cylinder printing machine, which will cost on the ground £800. Rev. Fred. L. Kingsbury, M.D., is at present in England, for the purpose of securing this sum, and an equal sum for the purpose of purchasing a water-power mill adjoining, greatly needed for the development of the work. Not less than fifteen young men, now in connection with this Institute, are anxiously awaiting the success of this effort, for failure would, in a large number of these cases, necessitate leaving the school, and with it losing the benefit of Christian influences. Dr. Kingsbury is highly commended by Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, and others, to the sympathies of British Christians.

"A LEGAL NUISANCE."

The Supreme Court of Indiana has rendered a decision which is of interest to all temperance people. The finding of the Court is, in brief, that the liquor business is not licensed because of its beneficial character, but because it is essentially immoral, and as a means of restricting and regulating it. A licence to a saloon-keeper to sell does not give him the right so to conduct his business as to injure the property of others. The law cannot sanction the doing of anything which causes an injury to others, unless its general effect is one of benevolence. In other words, where a saloon lessens the value of property and does injury to the rights of another, it is a nuisance. The opinion of the Court is all the more emphatic because it had previously decided the other way, and the present decision was rendered as the result of a rehearing.

The saloon has been recognised as a moral nuisance. If the Court shall come to treat it generally as a legal nuisance, we shall begin by-and-by to get more efficient control over it.—New York Independent

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

THE Bishop of Worcester has gone for a holiday trip to Palestine.

Bishop Tucker has had grand meetings in Durham and Newcastle.

A new mission church is to be erected in the Milkstone district of Rochdale.

Dr. Harford-Battersby has been admitted by the Bishop of London as a diocesan reader.

Bishop Ormsby, of Honduras, and a party of missioners sailed yesterday from Liverpool for Belize.

Rev. G. H. Rhodes, who succeeds Rev. T. Graham at St. Bride's, Liverpool, is an able preacher and a diligent pastor.

The Venerable Canon Evans, who for twenty years has done good work at Solihull, feels himself compelled by advancing years to retire.

Rev. G. Everard, St. Andrew's, Southport, has not been in good health for some time, and his medical advisers have suggested a six months' holiday.

Rev. Horace Meyer, who went to the Riviera some few months ago, has felt compelled, from ill-health, to resign the living of Christ Church, Clifton.

The C.M.S. is arranging for two meetings early in March at Exeter Hall, when it is hoped that Bishop Tucker and the newly-consecrated Bishops for West Africa and Japan will be the chief speakers.

According to the annual report of the Liverpool Diocesan S.S. Institute, there are now held every Sunday in connection with that institute 114 "children's services" in various parts of the diocese.

An eight days' mission has been concluded at St. Paul's, Kingston-hill. Services were held every day, and four on Sundays. A useful Bible-reading was given in the afternoon. It is believed that much blessing has attended these services.

Dr. H. Montague Butler, Archdeacon Farrar, Canon Fleming, Revs. Hon. J. G. Adderley, Hon. J. S. Northcote, and A. Gerald Bowman are to deliver the addresses to men of business at St. Margaret's, Westminster, every Wednesday during the present season of Lent.

Rev. W. A. Thompson, Rector of St. Saviour's, Southwark, having heard that one of his Sunday-school teachers contemplated enlistment in the Protestant Defence Brigade, called the young man into the vestry and told him that if he joined the P.D.B. he must resign his position as teacher in the Sunday-school. Notwithstanding this threat the young man was elected a member of the Brigade.

In connection with the Parish Church at Portsea, to which the late Mr. W. H. Smith gave the sum of £28,000, are several mission halls, at one of which Rev. C. H. Gould has been curate in charge at his own cost. Now that he is leaving he has promised to provide for the stipend of his successor, and has handed to the churchwardens the title deeds of the ground on which the church stands.

At the usual fortnightly meeting of the executive committee of the Waifs and Strays Society, it was reported that the receipts during the past fortnight had amounted to £2392. Notices had been received of a legacy of £500 from the Dowager Lady Gull, and another for £100 from Rev. S. Kettlewell, D.D. The quarterly statement of children under the care of the society showed that there were 1959 children in the various homes and boarded out.

During Lent, special addresses for business men are being given at St. Edmund the King, Lombard-street. The services commence at ten minutes past one, and among the preachers will be the Dean of Winchester on "Social Warnings from History"; Principal Gent on "Commercial Morality"; Rev. V. S. S. Coles on "Luxury"; Professor Cunningham on "Wages"; Canon Barnett on "The Unemployed"; and Archdeacon Farrar on "Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

The Liverpool Church Mission has been a great success. Reports from all the churches are most encouraging. The work has gone on quietly but thoroughly, and a great impetus has been given to the spiritual work of the Church throughout the whole city. The Bishop at a Conference of the clergy and missioners expressed his gratitude for the mission, and urged the clergy to follow it up with earnest work, teaching the young converts out of the Word of God and instructing them in sound doctrine.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. Hubbard, of Ipswich, is still very seriously ill.

Rev. E. Darlen has held a special mission at Scunthorpe, Doncaster.

The work of the Canning Town Church is reported as flourishing and increasing.

Tower-street Church, West Hartlepool, reports 203 members. A site has been presented for a new church and school.

The Congregational Union of Madagascar has decided to send ten additional missionaries to the heathen in different parts of the island.

Prince's-street Church, Norwich, reports 802 members. The various mission agencies of the church are in full vigour and activity.

Rev. J. H. W. Stuckenberg, D.D., has resigned the pastorate of the American Church in Berlin, where he has ministered for thirteen years.

Rev. J. K. Nuttall, of Great George-street, Liverpool, has been cordially welcomed by his congregation on his return from a few weeks' rest, demanded by the state of his health.

The negotiations for the fusion of the Evangelical Union of Scotland and the Congregational Union are proceeding favourably, and it is expected that the amalgamation will in a little while be effected.

Four new self-supporting pastorates have been formed in the Pareychaley district, viz., Rev. S. Matthias, for Martandam; Rev. N. Joseph, for Irenepuram; Rev. A. Samuel, for Kristukovil; and Rev. S. D. Sylum, for Pareychaley.

The London Missionary Society has accepted offers of service from Mr. D. Lewis Thomas, of Brecon Memorial College; Mr. Henry Robertson and Mr. John May, of Cheshunt College; Miss C. E. Williams, of Rhyl; and Miss E. A. Wylie, of Concord, Burwood, New South Wales.

At the annual meeting of Kensington Chapel Mr. Edward Spicer reported on the general work of the church. The total raised during the year amounted to very nearly £6000. This included a legacy of £600 for the Missionary Society, and the special centenary fund for restoring the chapel and establishing a mission at Notting-dale. The new mission premises, consisting of a hall and coffee-house, were now in constant use, and the work was rapidly growing. The guilds were reported as flourishing, the Young Women's Guild containing about two hundred members.

Rev. M. Whittley, late of Claremont Chapel, Pentonville, was recognised on Wednesday week as pastor of the church at Cricklewood. A special sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. W. H. Harwood. At the later public meeting, the chair was taken by Dr. Horton, and the speakers included Revs. H. Storer Toms, W. H. Harwood, R. Wardlaw Thompson, Mr. E. J. Physick, and others. Great hopefulness characterised the meeting throughout, and Mr. Harwood gave it as his opinion that there was not anywhere in London a more promising opening for work than at Cricklewood.

Calls.—Rev. Dr. Jefferis, of Torquay, to North Adelaide, South Australia; Rev. W. Bedman, of Southport, to Woolton, Liverpool; Rev. D. B. Thomas, of Rhiwderin, to Rock-lane, Frome; Rev. T. E. Jones, of Carmarthen, to Barnstaple; Rev. John Davies, of Brecon, to Ebenezer, Cardiganshire; Rev. W. A. Roberts, of Bangor, to the Tabernacle, Bettws-y-Coed.

Resignations.—Rev. R. B. Lander, Adelphi Chapel, Hackney-road; Rev. S. Wilkinson, North-street, Taunton; Rev. W. J. Cuthberson, Stonehouse, Plymouth.

BAPTIST.

Mrs. Atkin, one of the oldest members of Highgate Park Church, Birmingham, has given £1000 for new schools.

Rev. Alfred Hall, now of St. Leonards, visited, last week, his old people at Hampton Court, and held an interesting service.

The annual church meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle is to be held on Wed., 21st inst. Admission by communion ticket only.

In connection with a special mission lately held at Wood Green a free supper was given by one of the members of the church to 250 poor men.

A gracious work has been going on for several weeks at Torrington. Quiet and powerful meetings have been conducted by the pastor, Rev. G. Frankling Owen, and about thirty souls have been blessed, many of them senior scholars of the school.

At the annual meeting of the church at Dalston Junction the secretary said the church membership was 638, the additions during the year having been sixty-six. The chairman thanked the members for the splendid way in which they had held together and supported the work.

De Christen (Holland) publishes an account of Mr. De Haan's journeys, as itinerant evangelist, through the provinces of Groningen and Friesland. It is full of sad experiences of the prevailing spiritual destitution among the people, and the great need of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Pastor James Stephens, of Highgate-road, N.W., gave two powerful addresses in the Town Hall, St. Albans, on Feb. 6. The meetings were well attended and excited deep interest. Amongst those present were Church of England and Nonconformist ministers and members of the various congregations in the town.

The opening services in connection with Archway-road, Highgate, took place on Tuesday week, making the twenty-seventh of the series built under the direction and control of the London Baptist Association since 1866. The chapel affords accommodation for 900 adults, and the present sitting accommodation, including the end gallery, is for 702 adults.

At John-street, Theobald-road, W.C., the seventh anniversary of Rev. J. E. Shepherd's pastorate was held last week. The membership is now 278. The special mission effort undertaken by the church has been greatly blessed, particularly the open-air and tract work, and the lodging-house mission. The new Sunday-school buildings, opened last year, have been of great advantage to the work. Addresses were delivered at the anniversary meeting by Revs. W. W. Haines, J. E. Wakerley, and G. W. Pope.

On Thursday week the annual meeting of the Byrom Hall Church and congregation, Liverpool, was held. The pastor, Rev. F. G. West, reported encouraging progress. The hall is situated in the worst part of Liverpool, and in one of the most thickly-populated parts of England, largely Roman Catholic. But with a good band of workers and varied agencies, solid work had been done by the workers in the common lodging-houses and the open-air ragged school. During last winter 3000 of the poorest children were washed, fed, and taught the way of life. Inspiriting and helpful addresses were given by Revs. E. B. Barratt, Eli E. Walter, and Alex. Gordon.

The seventeenth anniversary of Highgate-road Baptist Chapel was held on Feb. 7. The report showed that the present number of members was 683—fifty-eight having been added during the past year, and 408 during the past five years. The Sunday-school contained 644 scholars and fifty-nine teachers. The total contributions for the year (excluding those for the support of the pastor) amounted to £1,144, of which £518 had been given to various foreign missions. The various institutions of the church had been well maintained. The Y.W.C.A. has 222 members. The event of the year had been the absence of the pastor, James Stephens, M.A., for four months' much-needed rest.

Calls.—Rev. F. G. French, of Chatteris, to Lee, Kent; Mr. W. Fitch, of Pastors' College, to Thetford; Rev. J. Cottam, of Earlestown, to George-street, Wakefield.

Resignations.—Rev. F. Tuck, Windmill-street, Greenwich; Rev. G. Eales, Leicester; Rev. G. W. Ball, Okehampton; Rev. J. J. Wright, Longcross-street, Cardiff.

METHODIST.

A Methodist New Connexion chapel has been opened at Thorpe, near Doncaster.

The Primitives at Pudsey have purchased a plot of land for the erection of a chapel.

The Rye Mission Band have opened a new mission-room in Cinque Forts-street, Rye.

Mr. W. Nowell has held a five weeks' mission at Fritwell, Buckingham, and many professed conversion.

Rev. Thos. Cook had, it is stated, 210 persons in the inquiry room during a recent mission at Wellington (Salop).

At Pendlebury a week's Evangelistic services have resulted in a number of converts being received into church fellowship.

Rev. J. W. Heywood, China, gives in the Missionary Echo an account of a persecution that has broken out at T'sing Die, a walled city some 120 li above Wenchow.

Twenty-eight deaconesses in association with Dr. Stephenson's Wesley Institute are now engaged in mission work. Ten have recently been appointed to Cambridge, Ipswich, Edinburgh, Newton Abbot, and various parts of London.

A new departure has been made at the Manchester Mission. After the evening service in the Free Trade Hall, Rev. S. F. Collier gave the first of a series of lantern services; 2500 persons were present. The subject was Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and incidents in Christ's life.

The Wesleyan Book Committee had under consideration at their meeting last week the desirability of issuing a new work on the polity of Methodism, the laws and regulations being brought up to date; also the need of a volume on the history and polity of the Church for the youth of Methodism.

In this month's Missionary Echo there appears a letter from Rev. R. M. Omerod, of Golbanti, East Africa, giving an account of an exploration he has made in the Lower Tana District. Having visited all the Galla towns within four or five days' journey round Golbanti, he reports the population as scanty, not exceeding in all a thousand.

The first Christian baptism in the city of Chao-Tong China, was held lately in the presence of a large congregation, two men making a noble confession of their faith. "It was a trying and yet a blessed time." At the close an enthusiastic Chinaman prayed, saying, "There are two this time; O Lord, let there be two hundred next!"

Rev. G. W. Olver presided at a meeting of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Missionary Society on Tuesday, but the attendance was small. Rev. F. W. Macdonald gave a special address, in which he showed the apathy of Wesleyan members in contributing, on the average, less than a penny a week to the work. They had now nearly 400 ministers in the foreign field, half of whom were natives. The most striking progress of the work in recent years was the growth of the women's department in foreign missions.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John Lewis, who a few weeks ago went out as a missionary to the Welsh in Patagonia, has reached his field of labour.

Rev. David M'Queen, late of Pleasance United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, has entered on the pastorate of of the East India-road Church, London.

A week of preaching, conducted by the Bala students in the Bala and Corwen districts, has resulted in a large addition of members to the various churches.

Rev. Ronald Dingwall, of Poolewe, Ross-shire, was the preacher at the bi-monthly Gaelic service on Sunday afternoon in Crown-court Church, Covent-garden.

Rev. W. Dickins Lewis, D.D., has started on a Continental tour on behalf of the Bible Society, and purposes visiting the various agencies in Switzerland and Italy.

The late Rev. Owen Edwards, of Melbourne, bequeathed all his Hebrew, German, and French books to Bala College library, and the works, several hundreds of volumes, have just been brought over from Australia and handed over to the college.

At the Sunday-school Conference, to be held on March 8 in St. John's Wood Church, the subject for discussion will be "Christian Endeavour Work." The speakers, it is expected, will include Revs. R. E. Welsh, E. J. Gilchrist, and C. A. Scott.

Rev. Alexander Connell writes in his "Monthly Notes," "How to reach the working men around the Church, and leaven them with Christian influences, was one of my problems in coming to Regent-square, and is one of my ideals now. I admit the problem remains practically unsolved, but we are bound to face it."

The Belfast Witness states that there are at present in Ireland sixty Presbyterian congregations more than are necessary, and that the Presbyterian Church would be all the stronger with sixty fewer separate charges than it has, inasmuch as there are in many towns and villages two or more churches where one would be amply sufficient for the wants of the population.

The Journal of the Marylebone Presbyterian Church says:—"The inauguration of a prayer meeting in connection with the pastor's mid-week lecture has so far been a great and inspiring success. Except on the first night of the New Year, when it was excessively stormy, the lecture-room has been well filled with eager and happy worshippers. The prayers have been inspiring, and evidently moved by the Holy Spirit, whose blessed presence has been felt by all. The number of testimonies have been not a few, and we feel confident that the meeting will develop the spiritual talent of the young men."

Calls—Rev. T. P. Milne, Abbey Church, Paisley, to Laigh Kirk, Kilmarnock; Rev. D. W. Forrest, of Moffat (as colleague and successor), to Wellington Church, Glasgow; Rev. T. P. Rankin, of Edinburgh, to Waterbeck, Dumfries; Rev. Moses Forsyth, of Penruddock, to Crookham.

Resignation.—Rev. Dr. Raitt, of New-road, Woolwich.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Some 3000 members of the Society of Friends have issued to their fellow-members throughout the country a very earnest appeal on the question of the justifiability of the torture of dumb animals for scientific purposes.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth is this week visiting Nottingham, Hanley, and Birmingham.

In four weeks the "Lighthouse" Shelter in Montreal supplied 1,796 beds and 4,711 meals.

The good work at Mrs. Bramwell Booth's Home for Inebriates in Berkshire has already commenced.

The Congress Hall, Clapton, was crowded on the occasion of the General's all night of prayer on the 1st inst. Large numbers came out for blessing and pardon.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth has accepted an invitation to speak at a conference called by the leading Nonconformist ministers, J.P.'s, and others of Bristol, with a view to establishing a Rescue Home in that city. On the following Tuesday she will address a meeting in the Tyndale Lecture Hall. Mark Whitwell, Esq., J.P., will preside, and the Revs. Urijah J. Thomas, Wm. Clarkson, and Col. Barker will take part.

The power of song was pathetically illustrated last week at a little slum post in Bristol. While one of the lasses inside was singing "My Jesus, I Love Thee," to the tune of "Home, Sweet Home," a poor distressed looking man, who had been leaning by the door, rushed in, saying, "I have been listening, and I can stand it no longer." The officers interested themselves in his case, and he left the meeting rejoicing in a new-found salvation.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Copmanthorpe, Yorks, Mr. ELIAS HODSON, greatly beloved and honoured in the district for many years' active and useful service.—At Sheffield, on 5th inst., Mr. A. RIDGE, aged seventy-two, a leader in Wesleyan work in the locality.—At Huddersfield, Mr. J. W. HAIGH, for thirty years a local preacher, class leader, and S.S. worker.—At Caerlaverock, on 4th inst., Rev. J. C. LORRAINE, aged eighty-four, a minister since 1843.—At Culross, on 3rd inst., Rev. A. S. ALLAN, the minister of the second charge.—At Brixton, on 4th inst., Miss SARAH HEWSON, aged twenty-six, a bright useful Christian, daughter of Rev. J. M. Hewson, of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association.—At Folkestone, on the 4th inst., Mr. JOHN CLARK, aged 73, well-known for Christian work: one of his sons is a missionary on the Congo.—At Hayton, Mr. DAVID TOOBY, aged forty-two, private secretary to Mr. W. Pilkington, and a leading Christian worker, carrying on a large mission at Horn's Smithy.—At Melton Mowbray, Miss ANNIE FETCH, a devoted young worker and teacher.—At Lancaster Gate, W., Mr. JOHN CUNLIFFE, well known in connection with Trinity Chapel, John-street, Edgware-road.—At Kidderminster, Mr. J. P. HARVEY, aged seventy-two, a large and willing giver to the Lord's cause.—At St. Albans, Alderman E. S. WILES, aged eighty-two, who has been three times mayor of the town, and was well known as a hearty helper of Christian work.—At Cork, Rev. JNO. D. PENROSE, formerly incumbent of Magourney, aged eighty-nine years.—On Feb. 3, at the early age of 36, Mr. CHRISTIAN BATEMAN, for several years a preacher for the Evangelisation Society.

PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.

It is no new thing, though it is perhaps more striking in the form it takes, for the world in France to give credit to Protestant morals for being on a far higher platform than others. Years ago, "honest as a Protestant" was a proverbial saying in many parts, while Protestant and Puritan were synonymous in the mouths of the light-minded scorners. In the present day of more open and outspoken vice the outcry is louder, and its natural effect is to attract towards Protestantism many men of superior worth, education and mind, to make common cause against the desperate invasion of open immorality. Many families of Roman Catholic origin bring their children, on this account, under Protestant influence; and an action in common is tacitly entered upon, irrespective of creed or no creed, by thinking men of the upper strata of Parisian society, to further and promote Sunday rest from work, to resist the inroads of vile literature and of alcoholism, and to extend a helping hand to prisoners on their liberation.

The Lutheran paper in its godly conservatism gives a word of caution, however, concerning this tendency; if our Protestant churches are willing to exercise the influence which the country expects from them, and thus to be the salt of the earth in France, let them take heed lest they lose their savour. Their savour is their faith, their fidelity to the evangelical doctrine rediscovered and brought to light by our reformers. Let no one say doctrinal questions are not timely; the opposite is true; for morals rest upon doctrine (works are the fruits of faith). Bereft of a foundation, morals soon crumble and disappear. And this is even now evident—the "fool hath said in his heart, There is no God," and the sequence comes apace, "corrupt are they!"—Evangelical Christendom.

DRUSE SCHOOL, MOUNT LEBANON.

Miss L. Procter writes from Schwifat, Beyrout, Syria:—"The Lord is blessing our work, and enabling us to extend it to the neighbouring villages. There are schools now in three of them, and they are regularly visited, and meetings are held for the young men. Our home work goes on steadily: schools (boarding and day), dispensary, mothers' meetings, and visiting. All this takes so much time and energy that there is but little time left for correspondence. So, some of our subscriptions lapse. However, our trust is in the Lord, who has helped us hitherto, and will never fail."

It is unquestionably a good work with which Miss Proctor's name has been so long associated, and we regret that anxiety should be experienced in carrying it on. In the report for last year we read: "The value of the school is being more and more felt. There was a new Druse Governor appointed for this neighbourhood in the spring; he visited our school, and after examining everything most minutely expressed himself much pleased; he spoke so nicely to the children, dwelling on the importance of female education as the best means of raising the country, and impressed upon them the duty of making the most of the advantages placed within their reach.

"We were not able to purchase the house for the boys, as the sum raised was only £200, and £300 was required. The owners disagreed among themselves; the property was divided into two lots and sold. This is a great disappointment, but we feel that the Lord must have some wise purpose in permitting this hindrance, and we are waiting now to see what He will have us do. There is great need for a school for those little boys, their case is laid heavily on our minds; if the rest of the money was raised we would try and build suitable accommodation for them."

Mr. Daniel Oliver, of the Southern Morocco Mission, who renders some help in the work, writes:—"The school is full of bright, happy boys and girls, many of whom are on the Lord's side. Miss Proctor and her staff are well, and toiling on steadily. I write as an outsider, but also as an eye witness."

"IS THIS THE WAY TO HEAVEN?" asked a poor little girl who one day strayed into a Sabbath School. The teacher said the question came to him like the voice of God.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission at Holy Trinity, Tewkesbury, by Rev. Dr. Morris, Feb. 10 to 26.—For a special mission to men in Battersea Chapel, York-road, by Rev. F. C. Spurr, March 3 to 18.—For a son in Ceylon, that he may soon choose the God of his grandmother and mother.—For blessing on a week's mission at Coate, Devizes, from Feb. 18th to 25th.—For a mission at Tolleshunt, Essex, from Feb. 18th to March 4th, by J. Neech. PRAISE.—For blessing given in answer to prayer, during the Rev. C. J. Morris's visit to Ipswich, Feb. 10th and 11th.—For blessing on mission at Flushdyke, by J. Neech.

GATHERED GOLD.

I wonder, many times, that ever a child of God should have a sad heart, considering what his Lord is preparing for him.—Rutherford.

All we want in Christ we shall find in Christ. If we want little, we shall find little; if we want much, we shall find much; and if in utter helplessness we cast our all on Christ, He will be to us the whole treasury of God.—Anon.

"THE LORD REIGNETH."

God's ways are behind the scenes, but he moves all the scenes He is behind. We have to learn to let Him work, and not think too much of man's busy movements; they will but accomplish God's.—J. N. D.

THE PURPOSE OF ADVERSITY.

A smooth sea never made a skilful mariner; neither do uninterrupted prosperity and success qualify for usefulness and happiness. The storms of adversity, like the storms of the ocean, arouse the faculties and excite the invention, prudence, skill, and fortitude of the voyager.

RELIGION'S SECRET.

Religion can sometimes do little more than hint at its own secret. We can measure the altar, but not the prayer. We can tell all about the Roman gallows, but language is hushed and awed before the Christian cross. The crucifixion is Roman; the Atonement is Divine.—Dr. Parker.

SPIRITUAL COMPARISONS.

The greater your wants, the greater God's goodness in supplying them. The greater your enemies, the greater the display of God's power in subduing them. The greater your unworthiness, the greater his grace in saving you. The greater your trials, the greater the comforts of his Spirit, and the greater the joy in which they shall end.

A DIVINE STANDARD.

"Every man according to his ability." Not every man according to his mood and fancy, but every man according to his ability. Not every man according to other people's giving, or other people's ability, but every man according to his ability. How well cared for the poor brethren would be, if this were the recognised standard of giving in the church to-day!—H. C. Trumbull.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

For to every infant stranger,
Born into our earth to-day,
Streams a blessing from the manger
Where the world's Redeemer lay.
—Jane Budge.

Home is the Temple of Religious Training.

Respect the secrets of your children; do not worry them to tell them; have patience and all will be well.

It is better to train a child than to teach it. Teaching gives ideas, training reduces ideas to practice.

With a true teacher the children make the joyful discovery that lessons and tears have no necessary connection with each other.

Make your home always home. It should be the centre of attraction to your children. Let them feel drawn to it when you are there like the needle to the Pole.

The father who piles up money, to leave to his children, but takes no thought for their education, is like a man taking care of his shoe and neglecting his foot.—Plutarch.

We must take every means to impress upon the minds of the children the fact that they have been sent into God's world to do a work for God which nobody else can do.—Parents' Review.

Concealment from a mother, whose whole heart is set upon the happiness and best interests of her child, is at the beginning of one half the errors of childhood and youth.—The Children's Messenger.

A boy who always does what those about him do is like a vessel with a broken rudder, that drifts with the winds and the currents, and has no course of his own any more than the drifting seaweed.—C. C. Everett.

But far short of actual drunkenness, I firmly believe that for a nursing mother to be frequently imbibing stout and other stimulants cannot be without its evil influence upon the future of the child.—Dr. Norman Kerr.

You may try it, but you cannot deceive your children. They can read your character more accurately than any with whom you come into contact. All pretences, all hypocrisies, are utterly useless in their presence.

Since we have so forgotten our own childish days, we need not be surprised that we often fail to understand the children growing up about our knees, the children we try to influence, and attempt to discipline and teach.—L. S. Redshawe

DONATIONS

RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1894.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Church of England Zenana Missionary Society—Missionary Pence Association | 2 | 4 | 6 |
| Zenana Bible and Medical Mission—Missionary Pence Association, £2 13s. 6d.: E. A. D., 10s. | 3 | 3 | 6 |
| Missionary Bureau—Missionary Pence Association | 3 | 14 | 10 |
| J. G. Paton Missionary Fund—Missionary Pence Association | 9 | 8 | 7 |
| Free Church of Scotland Livingstonia Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 5 | 5 |
| South African General Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 18 | 2 |
| Kurku and Central Indian Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 16 | 0 |
| Rev. O. Michelsen's Work, New Hebrides—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 6 | 6 |
| South London Missionary Training Home—Missionary Pence Association | 4 | 12 | 6 |
| Deaconesses' Home, Kingstown, Jamaica—Missionary Pence Association | 1 | 5 | 0 |
| Telegu Mission (Dr. Clough)—E. A. D. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Poor Jewesses, Jerusalem—E. A. D. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Société Evangélique de France—B. G., £5; M. J. W., £5; E. H., £14; A. A. H., £2; M. C., £2; Various Gifts, £10 | 38 | 0 | 0 |
| Work Among French Priests—Miss W. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| China Inland Mission—F. C. B., £1; G. A., 1s. 2d., C. D. P., 1s.; E. H., £1; Missionary Pence Association, £2 8s. 1d.; G. S., 5s.; E. A. D., 10s. | 5 | 5 | 3 |
| Zambesi Industrial Mission—C. F. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Tibetan Mission (Miss Taylor)—Mrs. C., £1; Mr. E. S. R., £1; Miss A. E. R., £1; Bible Classes, £2; Lanark J.M.A., £1; Missionary Pence Association, 8s. | 6 | 8 | 0 |
| Society Relief Persecuted Jews—Mrs. C. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Si-gnan Medical Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mission to Lepers of India and the East—Mrs. C., £1; Mrs. H., £1; E. H., 5s.; (Japan) M. S. B., £2 | 4 | 5 | 0 |
| Congo-Balolo Mission—Self-denial, 5s.; H. W. K., 10s.; Missionary Pence Association, £2 9s. 5d. | 3 | 4 | 5 |
| Society for Suppression of Opium Trade, E. H. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Anti-Opium Urgency Committee—Self-Denial, 5s.; E. W. F., 2s. 6d.; (Anti-Opium League, Special Appeal) E. T., £1 | 1 | 7 | 6 |
| Persecuted Stundists—E. W. F., 2s. 6d.; E. A. D., 10s. | 0 | 12 | 6 |
| McAll Mission, Paris—M. S. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Paris City Mission—M. S. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Miss De Broen's Work, Paris—M. S. B., £2; E. H., 10s. | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| Brussels City Mission—M. S. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society—(Evangelistic Fund), M. S. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| British Syrian Schools—M. S. B., £2; (Mission) E. H., 10s. | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission—M. S. B. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Colonial and Continental Church Society—M. S. B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Lewis's Homes, Paris—M. S. B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Home of Industry, Venice (Miss Hammond)—M. S. B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Christian Literature Society for India—M. S. B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Church Missionary Society—Missionary Pence Association, £2 13s. 3d.; (Central Africa) C. D. P., 1s. | 2 | 14 | 3 |
| United Christian Mission—S. S. W. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque (Miss Mackenzie)—Etta | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Aintab Orphanage—J. McK., £10; H. M. M., £5; R. C., £3; T. A., £1; P. M., £10 | 29 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Rabinowitz's Work—E. H. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| British and Foreign Bible Society—E. H., 5s.; Missionary Pence Association, 19s. 1d. | 1 | 4 | 1 |
| Baptist Missionary Society—J. H., £1; Missionary Pence Association, £1 9s. 5d. | 2 | 9 | 5 |
| London Missionary Society—J. H. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Turkish Missions Aid Society—A. R. C. M. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| North Africa Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 19 | 2 |
| Qua Iboe Mission—Missionary Pence Association | 0 | 4 | 4 |
| Christian Blind Relief Society—S. M. L., 5s.; K. W. C., £2 | 2 | 5 | 0 |
| Mildmay Mission to Jews—A. S., 2s. 6d.; M. S. B., £2; Gran Canaria, £2; E. H., 10s.; E. A. D., 10s. | 5 | 2 | 6 |
| Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission—Hughie, 4s.; K. W. C., £2; R. E. H., 1s.; 2 Cor. ix. 7, £5; E. W. F., 2s. 6d.; C. E. M., 5s. | 7 | 12 | 6 |
| Field-lane Institutions—K. W. C., £2; A. P. E. P., 10s.; 2 Cor. ix. 7, £5; M. S. B., £1 | 8 | 10 | 0 |
| Dr. Barnardo's Homes—K. W. C., £10; F. G., £1; M. S. B., £2; L. D. and M. C. O., £10; D. W. F., £1; Gran Canaria, £5; T. O., £5; M. A. J., 3s. 6d.; E. A. D., 10s.; Gr. G., 3s. | 34 | 16 | 6 |
| St. Giles' Christian Mission—K. W. C., £2 10s.; E. T., 10s.; R. E. H., 2s.; E. W. F., 5s.; M. S. B., £1; E. H., £1; J. W. K., 10s.; (Prison) Mr. C. W., £1 1s.; L. D. and M. C. O., £5 | 11 | 18 | 0 |
| Salvation Army—E. H., 5s.; (Shelter, Rescue Work, Breakfasts, &c.) K. W. C., £10 | 10 | 5 | 0 |
| Evangelistic Mission—K. W. C., £2 10s.; 2 Cor. ix. 7, £5 | 7 | 10 | 0 |
| Railway Mission—K. W. C., £2 10s.; M. S. B., £1 | 3 | 10 | 0 |
| Rev. J. W. Atkinson's Relief Work—K. W. C. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Fegan's Homes.—K. W. C., £2 10s.; B. L., 13s.; Hester, 10s.; E. H., £1; T. O., £5 | 9 | 13 | 0 |
| Tower Hamlets Mission—K. W. C., £2; R. H., 5s.; M., £10; (Poor) 2 Cor. ix. 7, £10; (Children's Hall), A Friend, £25 | 47 | 5 | 0 |
| Friendless and Fallen—K. W. C., £2; R. E. H., 1s.; E. W. F., 5s.; M. C., 5s.; M. S. B., £1; Gran Canaria, £1; E. A. D., 10s. | 5 | 1 | 0 |
| Poor Jews East London (Mr. Oppenheim)—K. W. C., £2; One of the Nation, 1s. 3d.; A., 5s. | 2 | 6 | 3 |
| Rev. A. S. Herring's Work Among the Poor—K. W. C. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Poor, Victoria Docks, Rev. S. Smythe—K. W. C. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Hilton's Crèche—K. W. C., £2; E. H., 5s. | 2 | 5 | 0 |
| Robin Dinners—A. P. E. P. | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Miss Perram's Poor Fund—A. I. L., 10s.; R. C. S., £5 | 5 | 10 | 0 |

(Continued on page 30.)

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

WARNING TO ADVERTISERS.—The greatest care should be taken in writing the address at the end of Advertisements. We also beg to call the special attention of Advertisers to the following Notice which appears in The Postal Guide:—"Letters addressed to initials or to fictitious names at any Post Office are not taken in, but are at once sent back to the writers."

LETTERS ADDRESSED TO THE OFFICE.—Advertisers who require their letters to be addressed to the office of this Journal will be charged an additional Sixpence for each Advertisement, and another Sixpence extra if letters are to be forwarded to their private address.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For Great Britain and Ireland .. | 6s. 7d. | per annum |
| For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. .. .. .. | 8s. 10d. | „ „ |
| For United States and Canada .. | 2½ dols. | „ „ |
| Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY .. .. | 2½ dols. | „ „ |

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 4 Copies monthly .. .. .. .. .. | 2s. | per annum. |
| 8 „ „ .. .. .. .. .. | 4s. | „ „ |
| 12 „ „ .. .. .. .. .. | 6s. | „ „ |
| 24 „ „ .. .. .. .. .. | 12s. | „ „ |

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

WE purpose next week to give a portrait and sketch of Rev. H. HOVHANNESSIAN, the founder and director of the Orphanage at Aintab, Asia Minor.

A book of remarkable interest has just been issued by Dr. Bullinger, entitled "The Witness of the Stars" (7, St. Paul's Churchyard, 7s.) The Signs of the Zodiac and the Constellations are believed to be as ancient as the earliest ages of the world. The purpose of the present work is to show that they contain a Divine revelation of God's great purpose of redemption with a particularity of detail which will appear very wonderful to those who have not acquainted themselves with the subject. We believe that important parts of Scripture can only be understood by a deeper knowledge of the witness of the stars. A further notice of Dr. Bullinger's interesting book will appear in our next.

The sermons on our prevailing sins which are being preached in London during Lent, raise questions which go far deeper than any mere expression of shame for the scandalous frauds that have been committed, and the black lies by which persons have been deceived. We are face to face with the ways in which money is made; can we justify them? For example, can a man who is an abstainer, and who would not think of letting a house for a public-house, be consistent if he is a shareholder in a railway company which has dozens of licensed houses—called "refreshment rooms"—on its line? The complications of our modern life are so many, and so subtle, that it seems as if Christian men would more and more have to separate themselves from great mixed concerns, and betake themselves to simple ways.

Dr. Dorner, in his "History of Protestant Theology," has a few sentences with regard to the connection between Luther's faith as set forth in his earliest works and Luther's own state of mind, which appear to us to be full of suggestion:—

It is in particular instructive and refreshing to notice the quiet collectedness of soul, the deep rest and clearness, which Luther maintained in the most threatening struggle, and in the near prospect of the Bull of excommunication. This untroubled mirror of a child-like heart, in which the grace of heaven is reflected, stands in wonderful contrast to the storms which gathered around him, and is a proof that the confessor of the righteousness of faith had what he confessed, and was what he taught.

The same unspoken and yet powerful testimony ought to go with every sermon of the preacher and every lesson of the teacher, and every private word of the Christian.

The practice of making a thorough investigation into the church and chapel-going habits of our population is extending itself from town to town, and brings to light facts which cannot but have a guiding influence on the methods of the churches for spreading the Gospel. If it reveals the sins of the people, it also discovers the sins of the churches. The Nonconformist Ministers' Association of Leeds has been inquiring into religious attendance in that city, and has found that out of 50,000 families 10,000 go nowhere. They assign the following reasons:—

(1) "Thinks he wants fresh air, and gets it on Sundays." (2) "Too tired to go out on Sundays." (3) "Those who go are no better than they ought to be." (4) "What particular church are you connected with?"—"Co-operative stores." (5) "Has no desire to send his children to Sunday-school; that institution is for the lower classes, and not for the middle classes." (6) "Too much occupied with the dog to talk." (7) "Would you welcome a visit from the minister?"—"Oh, yes; any who wish to call. I could, perhaps, enlighten them a bit."

Some of these replies may be intended only for "chaff," but underneath that there may be solid meaning and truth. We fear, e.g., that the "Co-operative Stores," in one form or another, is the "particular church" with which too many have their only fellowship. Further, if one-fifth of the "families" visited go nowhere, how many persons in families which would be called church-going go nowhere? Mother and children go, but not the father, or the parents and the daughters go, but not the sons. Let the visitation proceed; it must do good.

Rev. G. M. Royce expresses, in The Forum, his conviction that the American pulpit has declined in power. He is of opinion, on the other hand, that "the spiritual power of the English Church has seldom been stronger than at the present time. . . The English pulpit cannot be drawn by the scientific fly." We wish we were quite as sure on this point as Mr. Royce. However, his explanation of things in America well deserves attention, if only as a warning. "(1) The crude endeavour of the pulpit to deal with every new fashion of criticism as it arises; (2) The prevalent notion among the clergy that their chief business is to entertain and amuse; (3) A feeling abroad that preachers are impostors, teaching what they do not believe; (4) Preaching on 'the topics of the hour'; (5) Deepest root of all—the lack of spiritual vision." Then ministers must go into the desert, like Moses, Elijah, the Baptist, and Paul. We are in doubt as to how far Mr. Royce takes one church as representative of all churches in America. But be the decay in the pulpit ever so partial in degree and extent, the causes he gives for it contain an obvious lesson.

We are glad to see that there is an agitation in the news trade against Sunday newspapers. The Newsagent is of opinion that the feeling of the bulk of the news trade is in favour of one day's rest a week, and is very severe on Archdeacon Sinclair for saying in the Lower House of Convocation that "Sunday closing in London is not within the region of practical politics," and that the working classes would not stand such an interference with their liberties. One newsagent said that the clergy were great purchasers of Sunday newspapers, and that one High Church clergyman in his district was a regular subscriber to The Referee. A good deal of light shines here. Sunday closing in London, always looked upon as the unmanageable place, may not be so difficult as some suppose. To buy a Sunday paper, even to see for once only what it gives to its readers, may lay one open to a damaging criticism, "Walk in wisdom towards them that are without."

Mr. Jacob Voorsanger, a Jew, who writes in The Overland Monthly, giving his "View of Jesus of Nazareth," says that "Jesus was a son of his people, his heart aflame with great intents, his ambition wholly to restore the Law, his dream that of the Prophets, to bring the Kingdom of Heaven to the children of earth; He preached a millennium to men engaged in quarrels and contentions." This writer asks, along with Sir Moses Montefiore, why we cannot remove the title-page between the Old and the New Testaments. "That time," he says, "has not yet come." But for whom does he speak? Christians do not make a break between the two Testaments, but say that the Old is the seed of the New, and out of the New comes the flower of the Old. The phrase occurs with marked frequency in the New Testament; "That the Scripture might be fulfilled." It has been the Jew who has found a dividing line in the title-page of the New Testament: we only wish he would take our whole Bible, and read right through.

In The Jewish Quarterly Review also Jesus has a place. One of the editors thinks that one notable, and, as he is disposed to say, one original, feature in the teaching of Jesus, is that with regard to sin, "the sinner and the outcast, age after age, have owed a debt of gratitude to Jesus." He believes that Jesus thought Himself to be the Messiah. "Certainly the claim of Jesus to be Messiah did not seem to exercise any corrosive or warping influence upon his character. He was not puffed up by vanity or self-assertion or conceit." The writer asks, "May a purified Christianity and a purified Judaism, each in friendly rivalry, lay claim to Jesus and his religion?" To which we reply—Anyone may lay claim to Jesus and his religion, who will accept Him as Prophet, Priest, and King. "In Him neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature." But how refreshing is all this inquiring after Christ! His own people are saying, "We would see Jesus."

"Habitans in Italia," writing in The Church Times about the "Italian Mission," as he calls the Roman Catholic Mission now going on in London, suggests that the priests and friars of Italy should have a mission to their own countrymen, and that they should preach on such subjects as the following:—

1. The elements of morality, including simple lessons in (a) common honesty in public, official, and private life, (b) truth, and (c) purity. 2. The elements of decency, including simple lessons in the way (a) to treat churches; (b) to behave in the public streets; together with a little advice on (c) cleanliness in general. 3. Humanity (a) towards human beings, who should not be so taxed as to prevent body and soul being kept together; and (b) towards dumb animals, who should not be beaten unmercifully, or allowed to work with bodies covered with sores.

We suggest that all these things would follow, if the priests set to work to preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified as the revelation of God and the way to God.

In a recently-published book of much insight and research, "Rise of Modern Democracy," by Charles Borgeaud, of Geneva, there is a tribute to the Reformation which men of many schools would do well to ponder. Some who boast of the power of the people, and know not from whence it comes, would do well to become informed; and some who dally with Romanism, and think it a very innocuous system, religiously picturesque and politically neutral, would do well to observe whether Romanism or the Reformation made our powerful Anglo-Saxon kingdoms and colonies. Civil liberty has always followed in the wake of religious liberty.

All friends who are interested in the indigent people of our great cities—and what Christian is not?—would do well to read a paper in The Fortnightly Review on "A London House of Shelter," by Mr. Harold Boulton. This House was opened seven years ago, and Mr. Boulton gives the results of the experience of himself and friends. He admits that there is a class of persons, composed of married people who are just breaking up their homes through sheer poverty, and of single people who no longer possess fourpence to pay their doss-money, for whom such a Shelter should be provided. Still, he is firm in insisting that the public should know the fact that, whatever the assertions to the contrary made by kindly-intentioned but ill-informed people, there is now absolutely no reason why anyone should sleep out of doors in London in the winter. "Those who do remain out must either be very obstinate or very stupid."

"On first presenting himself at the Shelter every applicant for admission is subjected to a rigorous cross-examination as to his antecedents, and is asked to furnish references if possible, or at least to give the address of those who will speak on his behalf. Common humanity compels us to give shelter to poor waifs on some occasions for one night only, pending their dismissal to the casual ward, or other undiscriminating refuge, but no further assistance is given to those who are unable to supply us either with testimonials or addresses to which we may post our printed forms containing a few questions as to former history." Mr. Boulton complains of overlapping, and of carelessness and want of discrimination on the part of similar institutions. Could not this be avoided? If it can, it should. We have heard a worker in this field say that she believed a number of lazy, vicious persons, girls and women at least, go from one night refuge to another and are counted two or three times over in the estimates of needy London. Truth and justice demand a fearless dealing with the subject.

Recent correspondence in our columns has clearly shown that there is no authorised definition of Socialism. It would also seem that those who speak of Christian Socialism use the adjective in a qualified sense. By way of closing the discussion we give a brief extract from a suggestive letter by Mr. Owen Phibbs:—

According to Scripture, Socialism and Evangelical Christianity have nothing in common. Socialism is an effort to ameliorate man as he is. Evangelism—that is, the Gospel—says "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God." Grace, in the person of Christ, takes people up out of the world, and makes them new creatures, giving them by the Holy Spirit new hopes and desires, and teaching them to live in a heavenly way on earth in the midst of the existing state of things.

Another correspondent, Mr. Ebenezer Davis, points to the assurance that the inequalities which Socialists aim at reducing or removing will all be righted "when the King comes." This is, in truth, "the blessed hope," for the realisation of which the entire creation groans.

At the same time, the natural and necessary effect of Christianity is to ameliorate the condition of society as nothing else ever did or will. In our belief, the most direct, the most effective, the most thorough device for the "betterment" of social and all other conditions is the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, which is, in other words, the Good Tidings of the Reign of God; now in the individual soul, until, at the return of our Lord, the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

A PRESENT SAVIOUR.

(John xx. 16; Rev. i. 18.)

E'er the first faint kiss of dawning
Flushed the Eastern sky with red,
Mary Magdalene, pale with mourning,
Sought her Lord among the dead.

Vain her search, for He had risen,
Bursting wide the gates of doom,
Empty now the rocky prison
That was once the Saviour's tomb.

Oh! the anguish of her weeping!
With what wild despair and pain
Watches she, lone vigil keeping,
Where the Christ of God had lain.

Still beside that cave's dark portal,
Thrilled with sorrow, doth she bow,
While bright visitants immortal
Softly ask, "Why weepest thou?"

For, like Hagar, wrapt in sadness,
Veiled her eyes with tears and dim;
By her side Life's well of gladness,
But she knows not, sees not, Him.

"Mary!" Oh! what transformation
In that sweet word's golden spell,
'Twas her Lord; in adoration
At his piercèd feet she fell.

Oh ye sad ones, faint and weary,
Ye who seek the Christ with tears,
'Midst sepulchral gravestones dreary,
Of dead creeds and vanished years;

He who life and death commandeth,
Ruleth earth and heaven above,
By your side in pity standeth,
Seeks to be your dearest Love.

Harriet Julia Evans.

CENTRAL SOUDAN MISSION.

Mr. H. W. Pells (a companion of Mr. Her mann Harris) writes from Djara, Gabes, Tunis: "We are the first missionaries to be stationed here, and are hard at work among the Arabs and negroes. With the latter we have been having good magic-lantern meetings. On Sunday, Jan 28, we asked the negroes to send their wives to see the pictures on the following Tuesday. On the evening of the latter day, we had a grand meeting, twenty-one women, sixteen men, and two children being present. We were honoured by the presence of the king and queen of the black folk of this part.

Our hearts are full of praise to the Lord for what He is enabling us to do. We trust Him to water the seed, and bring forth the increase. We have many visitors at our house, and are able to have heart-searching conversations with them. We are doing a little medical work. A camera with accessories would be very useful to us, enabling us to make slides for our magic lantern, etc. I am also in need of a medicine chest and small set of instruments. Mr. Robert Caldwell, Secretary, Central Soudan Mission, St. Martin's House, 1, Gresham-street, E.C., will answer inquiries, and forward the gifts of friends.

A BABY: a thing of heaven and eternity, nourished on smiles, ever turning round the bright orbit of its mother's face.—G. Gilfillan.

GOD'S COMMANDMENTS.

By REV. R. BALGARNIE, D.D.

Has it ever struck you that there is a way in God's commandments? They are so ordered that they indicate a path, and that path leads to a gate, and that gate is the entrance to our Father's house. You have often seen an avenue of trees forming the "approach" to some stately mansion, or a royal castle. As you travel homewards at night you can see from the top of the omnibus before you descend the long double row of city lamps that mark the street where your home lies. So there are "lights that shine upon the road that leads you to the Lamb."

The words of the Decalogue were not thrown off at random. If you set yourself to keep them with all your heart and soul and strength and mind, you will find yourself not very far from the Kingdom of Heaven. Obedience to them will not secure your salvation—that was not their object—but it will secure your arrival at the gate that "leadeth unto life." It will impel you on the one hand to study the problem of perfect Godhood, and what that demands, and on the other the problem of perfect manhood, and what that is capable of accomplishing; and where the lines of inquiry meet is Christ, "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." "If thou wilt enter into life keep the commandments."

The Manse, Bishop Auckland.

STREET PREACHING IN CORK.

A Correspondent in Ireland, writes to us as follows:—

"The street preaching in Cork has entered on a new phase. A special meeting of the committee of the Y.M.C.A., held last week, requested their secretary, Mr. T. A. Bailey, not to take any further part in the movement; and at a largely-attended public meeting convened by the Ministers' Union, a deputation was appointed to ask Mr. Williams to desist from preaching on the streets, and to confine himself to the Marina, a public promenade, on which the Mayor had promised him protection. Mr. Williams, however, has not been able to see his way to comply with this request, although it was the unanimous opinion of the meeting referred to, that to continue the present efforts was unwise.

"It is not perhaps generally known that in the middle of the last century, in no place did John and Charles Wesley encounter such bitter opposition as in Cork, and in no place did they more signally triumph. For a period of three months the mob, led on by a ballad-singer named Butler, kept the city in excitement by a series of riots against the Methodists; Wesley was hung in effigy, and the houses of his adherents, some of whom were killed, were wrecked and pulled down. Yet afterwards he preached to 10,000 persons at once in one of the streets of Cork, and was entertained by the Mayor at the Mansion House, his presence being regarded as an honour to the City. Thus history proves that the right when pushed with prudence and perseverance is sure in the end to win. Is there then no danger of the Ministers' Union being somewhat too timorous in this matter?"

The members of the Irish Open-Air Mission resumed preaching in the streets last Sunday (says The Times correspondent), when a further change of hour had the effect of enabling the preachers to avoid much of the rough usage to which they had been subjected on previous Sundays. The police authorities were not made aware of the arrangements, and the missioners conducted their service for some ten or fifteen minutes before they were interfered with. When moved on they continued preaching through the streets, and the police dispersed them. Owing to the uncertainty regarding the time and the place of meeting, there were only a few hundred people present, chiefly of a respectable class, and very little hostility was shown to the missioners.

The Grandeur of the Missionary Enterprise.

It is difficult to find a word adequately descriptive of the foreign missionary enterprise. It is vast, great, arduous, important, and beneficent. It is these in their highest and divinest forms. But it is more than these. It expresses the love and pity of God toward all who are ignorant of his name, and the will of the Redeemer that all should have his Gospel offered to them, and the sympathy of the Christian Church with these Divine purposes, more adequately than does any other design of our most active and enterprising age; so that this word grandeur, which can be but rarely used with accuracy, because it carries with it not only conceptions of physical greatness and sublimity, but of moral and spiritual aims in their highest forms, is the one word which best defines the enterprise from its human side, as the expression Christ-like does from the Divine side.

This feature characterised the inception of the missionary enterprise. It was after the Saviour had been rejected and crucified; when the powers of this world were triumphing at his supposed overthrow; when his disciples were few, poor, and disappointed, that He said to them, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation." So stupendous a task was never set under such adverse circumstances to any body of men less likely to succeed, as the world judges.

And it is conclusive evidence of the wonderful influence the Saviour had gained over them, that their future lives were so largely spent in obeying his command. "They went forth and preached everywhere." Was it fanaticism, or audacity, or "foolishness," or self-interest, or sublime faith and love, which impelled these men? Their enemies everywhere said it was the former. Evidence, fact, and the glorious result that the Gospel lived and triumphed, attest that it was the latter.

The same faith and love have originated and sustain, modern missions. It would be well if those who are indifferent or hostile to them would carefully inquire into the causes of their existence and vitality.

They contrast in a marked degree with the motives usually impelling persons to act separately or in combination. Courage, fidelity, a love of justice, and a detestation of wrong, have often impelled to noble deeds, but yet more frequently the greatest of human enterprises have had their origin in pride, ambition, cruelty, revenge, or other selfish incentives. How many of the celebrated enterprises of antiquity are thus tainted, and how many of the greatest efforts of modern times spring from ambition or the hope of gain? The missionary enterprise has its motive power in far loftier, purer motives. Its friends and supporters are almost all belonging to the middle classes. They are intelligent and thrifty. They are more considerate than any other classes in the use of money. They cannot gain either reputation or material pleasure, or the least percentage for what they give; nevertheless there are tens of thousands of such belonging to every Protestant church and denomination in Christendom, the great majority of whose names are never made public, who contribute an aggregate sum of two and a-half millions of pounds annually to foreign missions. None boast of this, nor should they, but it is a great fact that our utilitarian and money-loving age should try to understand.

There are adequate motives for this persistent propagandism, sustained by the sympathy and gifts of such multitudes. Their primary design is to make known to all non-Christian people the one true God, and Jesus Christ the only Saviour. No design can compare with this in grandeur and importance.

And it carries with it far-reaching and vital aims. It means attempts to overthrow the most widely-spread and deeply-rooted superstitions the world has ever seen, and heathenism in all its forms, and priestcraft and superstition, and the licentious, cruel, and senseless customs which are everywhere indentified with heathenism, and the ignorance, crime, vice, falsehood, and wrong it breeds and fosters. In place of all this it seeks to introduce the pure morality and glorious principles and hopes of the New Testament. Can any design equal this in importance and grandeur?

These qualities are seen in the wide extent of the missionary enterprise. Efforts of a social and benevolent character, apart from the impelling power of Christianity, have been fewer in the world's history than is supposed, and have almost always had their limitations of country, race, or class. But here is an enterprise which puts aside all the distinctions of colour, race, language, and government, and asks only, Are the people ignorant of God, and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent? Impelled by this one consideration, the Church of Christ regards the whole Pagan world as its sphere. And how vast and varied it is! It means all Asia and Africa. It means great empires, many kingdoms, yet more tribes, and hundreds of millions of human beings, so different from ourselves that when Christian love and pity do not prevail our sentiments towards them strongly incline to dislike and contempt. There is surely grandeur in a comparatively small number of Christian people combining for a purpose so world-wide, and calmly pressing it on in spite of the world's indifference and scorn, and the stupendous obstacles everywhere confronting them.

The history of Missions offers ample evidence of their grandeur. This is seen in the motives impelling men and women to leave their native land, that they may live and labour in unhealthy climates, where the dangers often are great and the people vicious, degraded, and unfriendly—in the heroism, endurance, and self-denial exhibited in the history of missions to the North-American Indians, Greenland, Madagascar, Bengal, Burmah, Fiji, and the Sandwich Islands—in the wonderful change that has come over the minds and lives of thousands of people in Africa, Polynesia, India, and elsewhere, who, once ignorant, demoralised, and heathenish, have become "new creatures in Christ Jesus"—in the manner in which Christianity unfailingly makes war wherever it goes, not only on the sins of individuals, but the vices, crimes, evil customs of communities and nations. And it is seen in the manner in which these cease or become less frequent, so that the glowing language of prophecy is being repeatedly verified, and the hopes of the people of God realised.

The issue of this enterprise will be inconceivably grand. Much is hidden from our view, but this is certain—and it should stimulate to constant watchfulness and fidelity—the Church of God is bound by her relations to Christ to preach his Gospel to the whole creation, and to witness that the Lord is God, wherever He is unknown or His authority defied. This is her sublime vocation toward the world. Equally is it certain that her fidelity will not be in vain.

The wide diffusion of the sacred Scriptures; the witnessing for God in almost all lands; the light and truth now spread so widely abroad; the converts gathered more or less from almost every land and race, an aggregate of more than three millions; the cruelty and evil and vice abated in many lands, though leaving much to be desired, constitute the grandest and divinest series of events passing on this busy earth. And equally certain is it that the final issues in the glory of God, the manifestation of His righteousness and love, the full accomplishment of all the purposes for which the Saviour lived and died, and in the eternal blesssedness of that great multitude which no man can number, gathered out of every nation, and of all tribes, and peoples, and tongues, will transcend in importance and grandeur every other series of events in the world's history.

Revelation lifts a corner of the veil which hides heaven from earth, and proclaims the inconceivable grandeur of these issues produced by many agencies, of which Foreign Missions are not the least. (Rev. v.)

There are important reasons why this feature of them should be kept in view. It is the true one, and accuracy demands a superlative word. Looked at from every side, the human or the Divine, the material, the moral, or the spiritual, the extent and variety of their spheres, the evils they strive to overthrow, the good they seek to establish, and the motives by which they are sustained, they demand and justify a word of the highest import.

This word may well be used by way of challenge and vindication. A tone of contempt and depreciation is observable in what the world thinks and says of Missions, and a large proportion of professing Christians think little better of them. Even the religious Press gives but small attention to their affairs. This depreciatory tone is infectious, and is often weakly acquiesced in. It should be challenged and denied. The world can name nothing it owns or has originated comparable to this enterprise, for nobleness, breadth, beneficence, results; and strict truthfulness demands that its estimate of them should not be accepted but proved to be false. If this conception were realised in any adequate degree, the effect would be immense and powerful as an inspiration from God. Difficulties and impediments would disappear before the intenser earnestness and enthusiasm. Far more would give, and give according to a nobler scale. There would be no lack of offer of service from men of undoubted qualifications.

The consciousness of the Christ-like nature of their enterprise would elevate and dignify all engaged in it—subscribers, committees, secretaries, missionaries, and native helpers; for all minor personal considerations would sink into insignificance before the inspiring thought, that it is a supreme honour to take any part, however small, in a work so vitally affecting the world's destinies, the ultimate issues of Redemption, and the glory of God.

Brighton. Edward Storrow.

---

OUR RAILWAY MEN.—Miss Jackson, 28, Topstone-road, Kensington, writes:—Many men of our Underground Railway are still unsupplied with monthly packets of Gospel papers, several of our most valued helpers having been called into the King's Presence. We earnestly ask helpers to come forward, and distribute a few packets monthly. God has greatly blessed the silent messengers which go forth. Several meetings are held weekly for the men and their wives at the Mission Hall, Neasden. I shall be glad to forward reports and answer inquiries

Baptism in the Spirit.

The correspondence on this subject has manifested those differences of view and of opinion which to some extent must exist on every subject, because no two persons are exactly alike in mind, or in the point of view from which they look at the same thing. But while there is this difference of opinion there has been practical unanimity as to the need of power from on high, and as to God's sufficiency to meet that need. For oneness of mind to this extent we cannot be too thankful. It is in following after, that we may apprehend that for which we are apprehended of God in Christ Jesus, in pressing along the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, that we are exhorted to be of one mind; and whereto we have already attained to walk by the same rule, and mind the same thing, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let us, therefore, be willing to give and to receive help from one another, in order that we may glorify God in our body and our spirit, which are his.

We are not straitened in God, but in ourselves. It has always been God's way to provide abundantly for the wants, temporal and spiritual, of his creatures, and if we are straitened, the cause is in us and not in Him.

For example, the names of all Israel were upon the shoulders of the High Priest, according to their birth, in the natural order, from the eldest to the youngest. But on the breastplate their names appeared in the order of the tribes. The order had been changed, because by their conduct some had lost the place which belonged to them by birth. The cause was not in God but in themselves.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," "who gave Himself a ransom for all." All do not accept God's unspeakable Gift. The cause is not in God but in themselves.

The Holy Spirit is God's gift to the Church, as his Son was his gift to the world. He was outpoured when and because Jesus was glorified; and as soon as we repent and obey the Gospel we are not only justified by faith in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, but we receive the gift of the Holy Ghost (John vii. 39, Acts ii. 38).

By that Spirit we were all baptized into one body, and were all made to drink into one Spirit; and we are filled with the Spirit just in proportion as we drink into that one Spirit. Here also, if we are straitened it is not in God but in ourselves.

The death and resurrection of Christ were historical facts in fulfilment of prophecy and promise, and can never be repeated: "Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more: death hath no more dominion over Him: for the death that He died, He died unto sin once for all; but the life that He liveth He liveth unto God."

In like manner and equally, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit was an historical fact in fulfilment of prophecy and promise, consequent upon the glorifying of Jesus, and can never be repeated. He was outpoured once for all and flows for ever, because sin, which had hindered the outflow of God's Spirit, Christ had put away by the sacrifice of Himself. God had shown that his righteousness was vindicated, by raising Jesus from the dead, and setting Him on the right hand of the Majesty on high. And believing men, the infant Church, had glorified Him, by being of one accord in one place, realising with one heart and one soul the sevenfold sabbath—the perfect rest of faith in the crucified and risen Jesus the Son of God.

If individually or collectively we now wait on God for power, it is not that any fresh outpouring of the once-for-ever outpoured Spirit will take place from God; but that we, individually and collectively, may be brought into a receptive condition—emptied of self that we may be filled with the Spirit.

The Spirit is that river of water of life which flows from the throne of God and of the Lamb; and of which whosoever will is invited and commanded to drink freely. For all Royal invitations are commands.

The gifts and calling of God are without repentance. God has outpoured his Spirit once for all, as surely as Christ once for all has died. And as God has not withdrawn the gift of his only begotten Son from the world, though He is "now rejected and by the world disowned," so He has not recalled the gift of his Spirit from the Church which is his body, though so often grieved by our worldliness and quenched by our unbelief.

Another important consideration is that the Book of Acts, being the narrative of a formative period, we must not base upon the events recorded there our theory of the continuous character of the dispensation. Every new era has been and must have been inaugurated by signs, which were the essential credentials of God's ambassadors, whether Moses, or Christ, or the Apostles: "God also Himself bearing witness, with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will" (Heb. ii. 4). The impartation of the gift of tongues and other gifts in the Apostolic age, by the laying on of the Apostles' hands, was, I think, of this character. So also was the sound of the rushing mighty wind, and the shaking of the house where they were gathered together.

Such signs are not to be looked for under ordinary circumstances now. Signs and dreams, visions and voices, were necessary in that initiative and formative period; but the Apostle showed the Corinthians that grace was more than gift, and declared that he would rather speak five words to the edifying of the hearers than ten thousand words in a tongue. God is educating his people not in sight but in faith. When there came a voice from heaven to Jesus, and some said that it thundered, and others that an angel spake to Him, Jesus answered, "This voice came not because of Me, but for your sakes." In the thick darkness of the cross, when there was no sight nor sound, nor apparently any that regarded, "He called Himself upon Jehovah," and said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." He needed no visible or audible tokens: "I know that Thou hearest Me always," was enough for Him who lived by the Father.

The doctrine concerning the gift of the Spirit is not to be learned from the Acts, but from the Epistles—of which more next week.

R. C. M.

LUSHAI AND MANIPUR MISSIONS.—News has been received this month of the arrival of the first parties of missionaries to these tribes. Messrs. Lorrain and Savidge have pitched their tents in a Lushai village near Fort Aijal, where the people have received them gladly—two chiefs and their wives coming to welcome them. Mr. Pettigrew has also reached Imphal, the capital of the Manipur State. These brethren were sent out from two to three years ago by the Missionary Bureau, and have been maintained by the liberality of one of the Lord's stewards. There are still many tribes on the borders of Assam entirely unevangelised, and I shall be glad whilst at home on furlough this year to meet any interested in such work. H. G. E. de St. Dalmas.

Care of Missionary Bureau,
119, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

HOW TO DEAL WITH INQUIRERS.

II.

In moving about in mission work we are constantly coming into contact with persons calling themselves backsliders, who would not be in that condition if they had been properly dealt with when they were seeking peace with God. There is a superficial and compromising way of dealing with inquirers which certainly does not find favour with God, and ruins rather than reclaims the soul. As stewards, who must give an account, it behoves us to steer clear of such unutterably guilty work, and seek to lay a firm foundation by deepening conviction in the soul. We must make a skilful use of the sword of the Spirit, which cuts the conscience to the quick. And as the Holy Spirit always reproves sin before He reveals the Saviour (John xvi. 8, 9; 1 Cor. xii. 13), we must point to the Ten Commandments, unmask sin, describe its wages, and show that we are all alike sinners, though not all sinners alike. The Lord Jesus is a surgeon as well as a physician, and He never puts his patients under chloroform while using the knife. There is reason to fear that many workers neglect to point out the importance of repentance. Jesus preached it. Repentance was his subject, both when He commenced his evangelistic campaign, and when He closed his earthly career (Matt. iv. 17; Luke xxiv. 47).

The worker must urge the absolute necessity of immediate decision. God does not promise salvation, He offers it. Now is the time to accept the gift (2 Cor. vi. 12). Delay is dangerous. The Lord says, "Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." (See also James iv. 13-17; Heb. ii. 3, iii. 17.) Warn how Satan cometh immediately to take away the Word sown in the heart (Mark iv. 15).

We must describe the purpose of Christ's death. By his cross He has purchased and procured complete deliverance for every believer from the penalty, power, and practice of sin. Faith in Christ is the connecting link. But be careful not to make too much of faith itself. Exalt the Object of faith. Tell how Christ came to do the will of God; died to put away sins by the sacrifice of Himself; once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, to bring us to God; and on the third day was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father; received up in glory, and lives at the right hand of God to give repentance, to pardon, justify, and save (Acts v. 31; Rom. iv. 25; Heb. vii. 25). And He is the only Saviour (Acts iv. 12). Trust, look, receive (Isa. liii. 6; John iii. 16; Acts xvi. 31; John v. 24; Acts xiii. 38, 39).

Persuade the penitent to submit to the righteousness of God (Rom. x. 3). There must be no hiding of sin, no holding back; nothing short of complete surrender will satisfy the heart of our pitiful God (Rom. vi. 13). Since Christ claims our all, let it be ours to commit all to Him (2 Tim. i. 12; 1 Pet. iv. 19). In dealing with backsliders use Jer. ii. 19; Jer. iii. 12-14; Hosea xiv. 4; and Luke xv. 11-24.

Press the inquirer to thank God for the gift of Jesus. "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." God has opened "the gates of righteousness," therefore "go into them and praise the Lord" (Psa. cxviii. 19). "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving" (Psa. c. 4). Whenever possible have a word of prayer with new-born souls before leaving them. Get them to pray if they will, and to give God thanks. This will bring light and liberty. Never forget to read Romans x. 9, 10. Hundreds of souls are in bondage because they have never confessed with the mouth Christ as Lord (see R.V.).

And lastly, do not fail to make plain the great truth that Christ is the keeper of the saved sinner (1 Peter i. 5; Jude i. 24, 25); and never neglect to take the inquirer's name and address.

"They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever" (Dan. xii. 3). W. Monro Collings.

Gosport.

THE POWER OF LITTLES.—Dear Sir,—I think that persons of small incomes are often deterred from contributing to the various missions afloat because their leaders ask for such large sums that few are able to afford. Are we sufficiently aware of the "power of littles," and what even one shilling can procure in groceries, etc.?—Yours sincerely,

(Mrs.) V. M. Cattermole.

Bleigh Water, Chard, Somerset.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF UGANDA.

INTERVIEW WITH BISHOP TUCKER.

The Bishop of East Equatorial Africa, who recently visited Edinburgh on behalf of the Church Missionary Society, gave a very courteous interview to a Scottish Leader Commissioner. Bishop Tucker, whose pleasant and powerful face bears the marks of much thought and hard work in African climates, showed his visitor a number of admirable sketches of scenes in Uganda and the neighbouring countries. The journalist was led to remark upon the excellent artistic quality of these sketches.

"Oh," said the Bishop modestly, "I was an artist by profession for fifteen years before I went to Oxford, so I ought to be able to draw. That I can do so is one of my chief sources of recreation out in Africa. . . . ."

"What countries does your diocese include, Bishop?"

"It is, roughly, co-extensive with the British sphere of influence in South Africa. Mombasa is my headquarters on the coast, and we have also important stations at Freretown, among the liberated slaves, and Rubai. Uganda is one of the most important parts of the diocese, but it stretches away into the interior, and takes in generally the whole of Equatorial Africa. The work is a large one, as you may guess when I tell you that it takes me twelve months to go round all the stations. I have about thirty ordained clergymen, natives and Europeans, under my charge, besides a number of lay helpers, chiefly ladies, who work at tuition and evangelising along the coast."

"I suppose the most interesting part of your work is that which relates to Uganda, Bishop?"

"Well, most interest certainly attaches to that just now. I may say at once that I think the outlook for the future is very promising. Now that order has been restored, I see no reason why religion and civilisation should not steadily progress in that interesting country."

"You think we must stay in Uganda, then?"

"I do not see how anything else can happen. Of course, it is for the politicians to decide what form the British influence in Uganda must take. It is not now a question of hoisting the Union Jack, but of keeping it flying. If the British force were to retire now, the whole country would again be in the condition in which I found it in 1890, like a powder magazine in which the smallest spark would precipitate an explosion ruinous to its young civilisation."

"You refer to the civil wars between the different religious factions?"

"Yes. I prefer to use the terms of Captain Lugard's book, and to speak of the Wa-Franza and the Wa-Inglesa. It 1890 these two factions were ready to be at each other's throats. Time and again I have been wakened by the war-drums, and found the forces of each party drawn out ready to fight, when it seemed only by a miracle that peace was restored. Talking of Captain Lugard, by the way, I must say that I think he deserves the very greatest praise for his work in Uganda. Once or twice he was out of touch with the Mission, but all the same I believe that very few living men could have done the work he did in restoring order to the country. It needed a strong man, and this is just what Captain Lugard was."

"You must have found the existence of two rival forms of Christianity a great hindrance to your work?"

"That is so. I must say, I think Cardinal Lavigerie and his followers might have found some other field than Uganda among the countless millions who have no missionaries. You must remember that we were first in the field; we began our work in Uganda in 1877, while the French missionaries only appeared in 1879. When they began to preach to the people that the Protestants were all wrong, and that they alone had the true Gospel, as you may imagine, the people were dreadfully perplexed whom to believe. But now things are comparatively settled. Districts have been allotted to each body, and there is not nearly so much friction."

"What are the relative proportions of the two bodies in Uganda?"

"I reckon that about four-sevenths of the whole country now belongs to us, the Wa-Ingleza. The Wa-Franza have about half that, or two-sevenths. The remaining seventh is Mohammedan. That is a survival from the work of the Arabs, who finally left the country about six years ago. But as the Mohammedan natives have no priests, and are on the whole very ignorant, they are steadily coming over to us, and in a few years I expect that section will quite have dwindled away."

"And what about the Roman Catholics? Do you think they or the Protestants will ultimately triumph?"

"Well, I think the future looks very hopeful for us, because of one great weapon that we possess. That is the printing-press. We have two presses now at work in Uganda. They are continually disseminating all kinds of literature in the language of the Waganda. Of course, when we went to Uganda there was no written language, so we had to reduce the spoken language to a system of phonetics. We print everything in the Roman type, and are teaching the people to read as fast as we can. They learn rapidly, and show great avidity for books. You know, the Waganda are not a very industrious race. They can get all the necessities of life with an hour or two's labour in a day, and so they have much leisure, which they are delighted to spend in reading. They learn to write, too; look at these." And the Bishop produced some papers in Kiganda, as well as a well-written, but pathetically ungrammatical letter in English from one of his people. "We have typewriters at work, too; here are some specimens. You would be surprised to know how how many Waganda now can write and read writing. Not long ago the British Consul-General came down the Nile from Egypt. When he reached Uganda, he was met by a crowd of natives, who gathered round to watch him writing at his desk. He wrote down 'Uganda,' and showed it to one of the nearest, expecting him to look on it as something magical. Imagine his disgust when the man calmly read it aloud, and told him it was spelt wrong—being in the country he should have written Buganda!"

"Then you believe in the power of the press?"

"Yes, it is the great civiliser. The Roman Catholics have a mediæval fear of it, and won't teach their people to read. But some of them are bound to learn, and then our literature will have the field to itself. So I look hopefully to the future. We have the Bible, too, from the British and Foreign Bible Society. Here, by the way, is an interesting relic." The Bishop took up a small Bible, wrapped up in blue cloth. When he removed the wrapper, one could see that the Bible was pierced more than half-way through by an irregular hole. "That is a bullet hole," he said. "One of our men had that Bible in his cloth in a fight with the Mohammedans in the old days. A bullet struck it, and the Bible probably saved his life. You can guess how thankful he was. I gave him my own Bible for this, and keep it as a curiosity."

"What do you think of the work that has been done in Uganda so far, Bishop? Has it been successful?

"Oh, there can be no doubt of that! I find evidence of it on every hand. The general tone of the people is infinitely raised. For instance, quite lately a chief was accused of a certain crime, of a sort as common as possible twenty years ago, and then thought nothing of. When he was charged, he said, 'How could I do such a thing! It would be my death!' by which he meant it would be his social death, and I believe it would. Now public opinion is in so healthy a state in Uganda that a chief would be ostracised for an immoral act that no one would have noticed a few years ago. Again, there is a spirit of interest in religion afloat. If you walk through Mengo now, any night after sundown, you hear sounds of prayer and praise coming from enclosures in every part of the town—I remember pointing that out to a member of Sir Gerald Portal's staff, who was immensely struck with it, though he knew nothing about the work of the mission. You know, a kind of patriarchial system exists in Uganda, and the chiefs make it their business to lead their followers' devotions night and morning, and take a living interest in mission work. It is often through the chiefs that we act."

"Then what do you think of the future of Uganda?"

"I think it is an immensely hopeful one. The Waganda are a fine race, ever so far above the comparatively low tribes that surround them. They are superior in all the arts of life, and it becomes an interesting question as to what their origin was. I think, myself, they have more in common with the Abyssinians than with any other African race. They are intelligent, active, and enterprising, and intensely loyal. A British Resident in Uganda would not need a large force at his back, for we could always rely on the unflinching support of all the Wa-Inglesa. Indeed, it was they who stamped out the revolt of the Soudanese troops last June. They are not absolutely truthful or honest, but no more are any African race, and these virtues can be learnt, just as I expect they will learn industry when the desire for the luxuries and comforts of the coast gives them an inducement to labour."

---

In the course of an address given at a crowded meeting in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, Bishop Tucker said: Few people here realised what the possession of Uganda meant in the regeneration of Africa. He believed that if Uganda were a possession of Great Britain the base of Christian operations would be moved up to the northern shores of the Great Lake, and then the centre would be attacked from that base by the various Christianising forces of civilisation. Further, he believed that the Soudan would be reopened from Uganda, and by the opening up of the Soudan the whole problem of Christianity and civilising Africa would be solved. They wanted European missionaries to superintend the work of the native deacons and train the teachers, and he trusted many would offer themselves for the great and glorious work. There was no work more blessed or that could possibly satisfy the best and highest ambitions of man more than this work of assisting in the regeneration of a great continent. He was there to stir them up to greater interest in the evangelisation, not of Uganda alone, but of the great heathen world at large. What were they doing for the extension of Christ's cause in heathen lands? He saw men living the lives of beasts and dying the deaths of beasts. Would nothing rouse the people here? Should he say it was their duty to go? No, he would say it was rather their high and great privilege. They must not say they had heathen enough at home, that was an old plea; the imperfections of this country afforded no excuse for refusing aid to the heathen, while they had the plain definite command of the Saviour to go.

DR. JOHNSTON AND MR. ARNOT.

In The Record for Feb. 9, reference was made to Dr. Johnston's allegations in depreciation of the Garanganze Mission, and it was hinted that Mr. F. S. Arnot should answer the accusations. In last week's Record Mr. Arnot writes: "In reference to Dr. Johnston's quoting from the letters of our two brethren, S—— and F——, who were the only labourers in the Garanganze for the three years previous to Dr. Johnston's visit to Bihé, let me ask, With what degree of fairness can anyone frame an indictment against missionaries from their own humble estimate of their own labours? So far at least were they from being occupied with 'personally conducting the transit of supplies from Kwanjululu,' that during that long time they only received two or three communications of any sort whatever from the outside world. Mr. S—— alone, besides the building and gardening Dr. Johnston speaks of, prepared during that time—in the Luba language, which he had not before learned—a vocabulary, grammar, notes, and part of John's Gospel, as well as several hymns and other portions, and carried on broadcast sowing of the Gospel seed. Mr. F——'s share in the work was the care, at first, of an African orphan home of some eight little children. A serious illness, however, laid him aside for the greater part of two years.

"Seeing Dr. Johnston owed his very presence in Central Africa to the 'huge farce' he has since sought to expose, as I carried him and his men to Bihé, bag and baggage, by sending our own porters from Bihé to meet him, it has seemed altogether too absurd that the Christian public should expect replies in detail to the gross and personal charges brought against me in his book."

---

THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES.—Mr. William Forbes invited about 100 of the women engaged in Constantinople at Olympia, Kensington, to tea on Friday afternoon at the Iron Room, Edith-road, West Kensington. After tea, hymns and solos were sung, and brief Gospel addresses were given. Mr. Forbes earnestly requests financial aid to enable him to meet the pressing demands which this work entails. His address is 71, Tollington-road, Holloway, N.

THE EAST-END AT THE WEST-END.

A SILVER WEDDING.

On Wednesday, St. Valentine's Day, was celebrated Miss Macpherson's silver wedding to East-end poverty. Twenty-five years ago, after a brief warm courtship, the happy pair commenced housekeeping in the Home of Industry, and the event was fitly commemorated by a large meeting, chiefly of West-end ladies, at the Kensington Town Hall. Two sister-workers, Miss Child, of the Welcome Home, and Miss Steer, of the Bridge of Hope, to whose work Miss Macpherson had been a foster-mother, gave their testimony as to the sailors and the women among whom their life is beneficently spent.

At the historic gathering of Christian workers convened in Sussex Hall, Leadenhall-street, on January 21, 1861, by Reginald Radcliffe and Baptist Noel, Mr. Radcliffe said the Gospel must be affectionately preached, and if men could not do it he prayed that God would raise up women. God has largely granted that cry

> For the touch of a [woman's] hand,
> And the sound of a voice that is still.

Not still with the stillness of death, but like the still small voice which succeeded the tempest, and the earthquake, and the fire. There ought to be a great thanksgiving meeting for the men and women raised up, and the wonderful answers given to those prayers in 1861.

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

Rev. Evan Hopkins, who presided, introduced in a few happy sentences the lady workers who had come West to plead the cause of the East End. They would, he said, speak for themselves, but he wished to commend their work to the warm sympathy, earnest prayer, and liberal support of the West End.

Miss Macpherson told how her heart was first drawn towards poor children, when as a mere child she was carried in her father's arms to a ragged school he had opened for colliers' children in his parish in Scotland. The sympathy thus awakened never died out, although for a time she worked in other directions. About 1865 her attention was called to the condition of the children of poor match-box makers in East London, and a work was begun in Wellclose-square. Then came the scourge of cholera, followed by years of low fever and wide-spread suffering. Eventually, in 1869, after much prayer, the Home of Industry was opened in Commercial-street, between two of the worst streets in the East End, known as thieves' dens.

Looking back on these days we realise that God's protection and care has been with us all the way. We have learned that the beginning is the most difficult, that the leading is of God, and that "happy is he that trusteth in the Lord." There is much responsibility, but we have learned how to cast it upon God. I did not at first feel this was my work, but by-and-by came the assurance, "This is the work you have been preparing for all the time." Four houses were soon filled with orphan and destitute children, but it was hard to find workers ready to undertake anything, however menial, for Him. In due time God sent those who speedily learned the joy of service. Some are with us still, some are serving God in other lands, for if there be one thing more than another which has been made clear, it is that the Lord has wonderfully used the Home of Industry as a training school for young workers. I do feel that you need a Home of Industry in the West End to train young Christians how to work for God.

Well, in these days there was no Board School, no reformatories. I remember when Sir Robert Carden had a poor little fellow brought before him—found sleeping one snowy night in one of the parks—he said: "This little fellow is dying; send him to Miss Macpherson." He did not die, care and love saved him, and he was among the first to go out to the land God had opened to us beyond the sea. We soon had 120 children under our care, and were thankful when funds came in to send them to Canada. The first hundred was an experiment; but the Canadian farmers proved them, and, finding them the right sort, have ever since been ready to welcome our parties. Many are now prospering in Canada, others we rejoice to know are ministers, missionaries to the heathen, and useful servants of Christ in many ways.

We have now a staff of about twenty workers—mostly voluntary—besides many teachers, speakers, and others who give a portion of their time. These are constantly visiting and nursing the poor, working among the factory girls (we have sixteen factories open to us), conducting the men's night-school, the widows' sewing-class, the Sunday-schools, the Bible-classes, meetings for mothers, policemen, &c., flower missions, work in hospitals and infirmaries, lodging-house visitation, a Bible barrow, and open-air testimony in Bird Fair. We seek to follow Him who came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister," and we know that He has been with us. We pray that hundreds of young men and women may be called forth to serve Him where He will, among the poor at home or among the heathen abroad.

Mr. R. C. Morgan mentioned five features of the work at the Home of Industry. The first is love. At the opening of the Home Miss Macpherson prayed that the "air might be filled with love," an echo of Mr. Radcliffe's prayer referred to above. The second is, that the Gospel is set forth, not mere humanitarianism: it is Christ first, and all the work of which we have heard is done for his glory. Then notice its thoroughness; there is personal contact and careful following up. For example, the thousands who have gone to Canada are to a large extent known even now. Observe, too, its comprehensiveness, it touches men, women, and children. Lastly, there is the element of permanence. Some works threaten to die out when the founder is removed, but Miss Macpherson has trained many workers who will carry it on after her.

THE WELCOME HOME.

Miss Child came next with the story of her work in Ratcliff Highway. I had been working along the south coast of England, when I seemed to hear a voice sending me back to London. I had been working in public-houses and among sailors, and I wished to get into the great gin palaces. I was invited by Miss Macpherson to come and stay in the Home of Industry. I came and went out among sailors. I had never even heard of Ratcliff Highway then, but I went there because sailors were there. I became worn out with work, and Miss Macpherson took me to Hackney for a long night's rest. I did not have the rest, for we began talking of what was in my heart, and we talked and prayed far into the night.

The result was that Mr. Radcliffe, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Mr. Morgan, and others came to help, and by-and-by a Rest or Home was opened, and I went to live among the sailors. It is quite an altered place now. Then fights and drunken brawls were of nightly occurrence, now they are only occasional. Then dancing saloons and low music-halls abounded, now they are all closed.

As to the work we are doing; it is first of all winning souls to Christ, and He has blessed us greatly. Then we want them to give up the drink; many have done so, and the result is changed lives and changed homes. We opened the Welcome Home, for many are far from home and exposed to great temptations. We have, besides British seamen, had representatives of every country of Europe, of America, the Colonies, also Asiatics, Africans, and East Indians. We thank God that many converted in the Fo'c'sle (where we hold Gospel meetings every night all the year round) are now witnessing for God in other lands, carrying the light with them wherever they go. At home we have our Christian Lifeboat Crew, every member pledged to do all he can to bring souls to Christ. Of course we have our trials and disappointments, but God sustains us in all things. We have our coffee bar, where men may treat their friends without danger. We supply bags of books for reading at sea; and we keep up correspondence with seamen in all parts of the world. We need your prayers and help; also bags for books, woollen cuffs, comforters and helmets, and other things useful and helpful to sailors.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.

Miss Steer followed, recalling how in the year 1873 Miss Macpherson was challenged by a poor girl: "Why don't you do something for us girls?" This led to a number of ladies going down to the Highway to seek these fallen ones. Thus was Miss Steer introduced to her future work.

By and by God showed me that my duty was to go and live there. We got a house and soon got to know the women about. Ratcliff Highway is bad now, but it was unutterably worse then. Soon we felt we must do something for the children, and opened a class for such—all from bad houses. Happily, few of these are to be found now, as the law authorises their removal from such places. The house we had taken in Prince's-square looked out at the rear on Betts-street, a vile row of evil houses, where hideous scenes were enacted. We prayed much in this matter, and at length the public-house was closed, and in 1884 we secured the public-house and dancing saloon, and two of the bad houses; later on we got eight more of these houses. God sent the means, and we built the Bridge of Hope, a witness to Him on the very spot where had stood Satan's stronghold. This was opened in 1888. The work has gone on patiently and quietly, till now we have 220 to 230 women and children in our care. I wish friends would come and see what is going on. It is a hive of industry, with the laundry, which earned £575 last year; the knitting and work rooms, which earned £150. God has been with us, many have been truly converted. It is not a prison, there are no locked doors, but rarely have any left without due notice.

That is rescue work; turning now to the preventive work. We have several small homes, besides Inverness House, for receiving young mothers and babies. There are seven cottage homes. The reason we have so many small homes is that the little girls have all been taken out of evil surroundings, some, indeed, having been sadly degraded. Hence we must have separate homes in which they can be divided as felt necessary, in order that others may not be contaminated.

Then there is the night shelter; a part of the work which has been exercising us greatly of late. I am sure there is need for such shelters, but the utmost care has to be taken to prevent them becoming mere havens for those going on in sin. We never refuse those who really need shelter, and who may possibly be saved, but we do sometimes refuse those whom we know to be merely unfortunates for the night, but fully intent on going out next morning to their evil life. Often, on the other hand, girls and women are discharged from the infirmary, and find themselves absolutely without a place to go to; such as these find from us a ready welcome. I may close with one case. A mother, with her child, stood at our door in perfect despair. She had nowhere to go. We took her in, she stayed with us some time, going out to work and bringing us her earnings to keep for her. We put Minnie, her child, in one of our cottage homes. By and by the mother set up a little home of her own. Then, as she got on well, she longed for her Minnie. Of course we let her have her child. Some one, finding she had a gift that way, taught her music; and not long ago she came one evening and gave our women a musical entertainment. Our heart was full as we looked on her and remembered when she first came to us. Will you pray for us and help us, and come and see us?

Mr. J. E. Mathieson recalled the prayer-meeting (mentioned by Mr. Morgan), and traced the origin of home mission work, as now carried on, to the revivals of 1859-60. These ladies, he continued, had gone down into the deep mine of sin and sorrow, and it is ours to hold the rope by prayer and generous sympathy. One blessed aspect of this work is the way in which it has been used by God to train workers.

Mr. W. H. Seagram said his duty was to touch on Miss Child's work, but he felt she had exhausted the subject. He knew it well, and loved it. Miss Child had said nothing of her difficulties, but these had not been few. Enemies around, her own health, and weakened eyesight—all these she had to contend with; but she held on, and great had been her reward in changed and renewed lives. He trusted the outcome of the meeting would be that fresh givers would be stirred to help, and that many ladies would be led to come forward and see if God had no work for them. There is work for all. The highest aim possible for anyone is to witness for Jesus amongst those who know Him not.

---

EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.—With a view of bringing the aims and methods of this Society more fully before the Christian public, and thus securing a larger measure of sympathy and practical help, Rev. George H. Giddins is delivering a series of lectures in various parts of the country. Meetings have been held in Woodford, Buckhurst Hill, Forest Gate, Victoria Dock, Barking, Deal, Westgate-on-Sea, Herne Bay, and Canterbury, and others are to follow. Invitations to hold such meetings will be thankfully received at the office of the Society, 18, Bloomfield-street, London, E.C.

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.

On Friday evening last a meeting was held in Exeter Hall, which will long be remembered by those who were privileged to be present. It was the "farewell" of the party—thirteen in number—about to accompany Miss Annie R. Taylor in the pioneer mission to Tibet. The intrepid traveller was enabled once again to relate the story of her penetration of Tibet, and those who hope to share with her the joy of preaching the Gospel to its benighted millions told how the Lord had led them hitherto, and called them to service in the foreign mission field.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who occupied the chair, read portions of Scripture setting forth the oneness of the Church of Christ and the "other-worldliness" of its members. He viewed the occasion as a setting apart for special work brothers and sisters whom God has called thereunto. Those who send—incur responsibility as regards those who are sent: the duty and privilege of sympathising with them and praying for them. Referring to the land which it is hoped the party will do something to evangelise, the speaker said that as its elevation is some twelve thousand feet above the level of the sea, it has been called "the roof of the world." The people number about six million; and although nominally a part of the Chinese Empire, it is really ruled by the Grand Lama, the chief priest of Buddhism, who lives at Lhassa. The religion is one of blank despair; the votaries expect a series of existences in different forms, and look forward to the attainment of nirvana, which has been thought to be personal extinction, or something very much like it. The country sadly needs the joyful news of salvation and the blessed hope of the Gospel. In conclusion, Mr. Mathieson expressed a hope that all obstructions will soon be removed, and that Miss Taylor and her party will be able to evangelise the millions of Tibet.

Mr. W. Sharp, hon. treasurer, gave some information as to how the Mission had come into corporate existence. When Miss Taylor came home, some six or seven months ago, her heart was set upon getting twelve men to accompany her. After prayer and consultation with friends, the desire was made known, and some forty or fifty volunteered to go forth without any church or committee at their backs. Tibet is ten times as large as England, and half as large as China, and, so far as is known, there is no missionary within its borders. One of the thirteen candidates accepted will be accompanied by his wife and child. The enterprise has been variously viewed, and it is known that the Indian Government will not encourage large parties to make entry into Tibet, which has been closely guarded, though not so much by itself as by China. Five days ago, however, the newspapers published a telegram, stating that a convention had been concluded, under which foreign traders might reside within the borders. This comes into operation on May 1, and the mission party hope to be there in good time. In some further remarks Mr. Sharp said that the Mission had started on the same lines as the China Inland Mission, with which Miss Taylor was formerly, and is still to some extent, associated. The workers will venture out trusting to God to supply their needs. In order to place them on the borders of Tibet, from £600 to £700 was required, but over £1000 has already come in. In conclusion, the speaker asked for the prayers of all that God will cause harmony to dwell in the midst of the workers, and crown their efforts with his blessing.

Miss Taylor followed with her story, thrilling in character, and simple in narration. It is over nine years since she first went to China, and six years since she proceeded to the borders of Tibet. There she saw Buddhism in its full development, and realised the horrors of devil worship. Determining to penetrate the country, she braved the risks and endured the hardships which have already been described in The Christian, and are set out in her booklet, "The Origin of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission" (6d. Morgan & Scott). During residence at a village on the Indian frontier she was poisoned by the wife of a chief, whose order to go back to Darjeeling she had refused to obey. The Lord brought her through this, and afterwards delivered her from many other dangers. At Sikkim she secured the services of a youth from Lhassa, whose heart the Lord opened to receive the Gospel. Accompanied by this faithful servant, by name Pontso, she afterwards left for China, resolving to enter the dark land from that side. She engaged a guide who proved treacherous, and had all her possessions taken by brigands. Her life was spared because she was a woman, it being the commendable custom of the Tibetans to shield "the weaker sex." She had, at times, to sleep in "holes and caves of the earth," with ice beneath and all around her. Even from the heathen, however, she often received signal kindness, and every favour she traced to the hand of Him who delivered her from all foes and brought her home to England to tell the tale of the needs of Tibet. In conclusion, Miss Taylor thanked God for raising up friends to forward her undertaking.

MISS ANNIE R. TAYLOR.

From Photo by Messrs. Elliot & Fry, 55, Baker-st., London, W.

Brief addresses were then delivered by members of the mission party. Mr. Soutter, of Peterhead, said that he had known the salvation of God for twelve years, and for the greater part of the period had been convinced that he would be thrust forth into some distant field. Mr. T. Sorensen, a Norwegian, spoke some warm words, being followed by Mr. Henry Martyn Stumbles, of Lewisham, and Mr. Evan Mackenzie, of Dingwall, the latter being accompanied by his wife and infant child. Mr. Tom Craig, of London, said that three years ago he would not listen to the suggestion of preaching the Gospel in the foreign field; now he had an insatiable desire to do so.

Some words were then spoken by Pontso, the Tibetan lad, and interpreted by Miss Taylor. He said: I left my mother and sisters and brothers in Lhassa, and went to Sikkim, where God found me and gave me a new heart. Miss Taylor told me about Jesus; I learned to love Him, and repented of my sins, and Jesus saved me. When Miss Taylor went to China, I thought I could not go with her, but God who had given me a new heart made me go. When we went into Tibet, God cared for us and brought us away from the robbers, and then to England. Now God has given us twelve men to go to Tibet. Will you pray that all may soon be able to speak Tibetan and tell the people about Jesus? Will you pray that many in Lhassa may believe in Jesus? I am sure they would love Him if they knew about Him. Do not send soldiers to Tibet, but pray to God, and then the way will be opened, and my mother and sisters and brothers will soon learn to love Jesus.

Mr. R. C. Morgan followed with some words of encouragement and counsel to the outgoing missionaries. He gave them 1 Sam. xiv. 1-23. God had put it into Miss Taylor's heart to go over unto the other side; and she had not taken counsel with flesh and blood. Her confidence had been that "there is no restraint with the Lord, to save by many or by few." When we yield ourselves to do his will He always provides the needed help, and these thirteen brethren have said, like Jonathan's armour-bearer, "Do all that is in thy heart; we are with thee according to thy heart." There would be difficulties in the way, like the sharp rocks on either side, not in a dignified manner, perhaps, like soldiers marching in their ranks, but bowing down and climbing on their hands and feet, God would give them victory. There should be a trembling of God among the uncircumcised. It takes more of Almighty power to make a heart-quake than an earthquake; but He who made the earth to quake in Palestine will make hearts quake in Tibet; and as then they went on beating down one another, so again the Lord's battle will be won. The sinners of yesterday are the saints of to-day; the enemies of the Lord become his friends—effective soldiers of the cross, and Jesus, Jesus only, shall have all the glory.

Mr. W. Sharp intimated that anybody wishing to follow the fortunes of the party might have information sent to them if they communicated with him—"Rosswyn," Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, S.E.

The mission party leaves Fenchurch-street Railway Station (G.E.R.), on Saturday morning next at 11.13.

[180]

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 25.—SONG OF SOLOMON VI.

The Soul Interrogated.—(1) The more we speak of the beauty of Christ, the more we incite others to seek Him with us. There is no better way of making men seek Christ than that his own should speak well of Him.

The Soul's Reply (2, 3).—The Lord Jesus went down to the lowest that He might bring us to share his throne. He is constantly coming into the gardens of his Church to gather souls, made lily-white through his blood. These are they arrayed in white garments who follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, and are without spot before the throne of God. (3) At last the soul finds its Beloved. Twice in this book similar language is employed (ii. 16, vii. 10, and here). The first dwells primarily on what He is to the soul; here the soul dwells upon his ownership; and the final reference seems to point on to the resurrection and heaven.

The Lord (4-9).—Nowhere does the Lord's grace appear so conspicuous as in speaking thus of the soul who, a little before, had cost Him such sorrow. Tirzah means pleasant, and was the name of one of the old cities of Canaan. (5) Love and need overcome Christ, and have their way with Him. (6) He repeats the language of iv. 1, showing that her failure had made no change in his love or its expression. (7, see R.V. 8, 9). The Saviour loves each soul as if it were the only one. Being infinite He can give to each all his love. Well may the Church stand out alone amid the hosts of heaven, marked by the distinguishing honour of the love of its Lord!

The Admiration of the Sons of Light (10).—The moon shines with reflected rays; the sun is pure in its burning glory; an army is terrible with its serried ranks; and these three emblems together set forth the nature of the Church.

The Soul's Soliloquy (11, 12).—The first garden (ii. 11) was that of spring; the second garden (v. 2), of autumn; this, of winter verging on spring. "Amminadib" is translated in R.V. "my princely or willing people." The idea is probably some sudden rush of holy rapture and joy lifting the soul into a new region, that of the ascension.

The Call of her Companions (13, 14).—"Shulamite" is the feminine of Solomon. She is the daughter of peace. Our friends cannot understand us as we follow Christ in the hidden life. They bid us return, but they call in vain.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 26.—SONG OF SOLOMON VII.

The Beauty of the Loving Soul (1-9).—We should so live that those who see us should be compelled to acknowledge the loveliness of our character. Our feet beautiful in errands of mercy; our hands cunning in deeds of self-denial; our every movement full of grace and truth. (6) The king enters, and joins in the words of loving admiration. It is difficult indeed to understand how we can give pleasure to Him, or that He should find in us that delight that the husband takes in his loving wife. We can only ask that He would hasten the day when his work in our spirit shall be complete, and reflecting his likeness we shall be changed into it.

Satisfied (10).—The heart rests in the sense of belonging to Christ, and being loved by Him. Then there arises an appeal that He would bear her company. On the day of espousals the King summoned his love to go with Him; now she calls Him to accompany her. But it is questionable if this were best. Is it not a mistake for the Bride to ask her Beloved to turn again to visit scenes from which He once withdrew her? Is it well to go back to the villages of the plain when we are invited to the hills (Col. iii. 1-4).

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27.—SONG OF SOLOMON VIII

The Soul (1-3).—It would seem as though the Bride were not satisfied, but desired to be united with her Love by the bond of nature as well as by that of marriage. Is there a counterpart of this in the longing to have been born in the home of Nazareth, or at least to have belonged to the Jewish race of which He was a member? But we have all this if we do the will of his Father; each obedient and believing soul is brother, sister, mother.

The Adjuration of the Lord (4).—There are blessed parentheses in life when Christ rests in his love, and forbids it to be broken in upon. It was thus that He threw his protection around Mary, saying, "Trouble her not."

The Attitude and Converse of the Believer (5).—He leans upon his Beloved, and comes up out of the wilderness of the world to the heights of Canaan. He was born in that wilderness, but awakened by the Spirit of God, and now he leaves the things that are behind, and presses forward and upward.

The Request of the Lord (6, 7).—We need the sealing of the Holy Spirit, impressing us with the likeness of Christ, indicating that we are his, and preserving us to the day of redemption. Nothing less than this will satisfy the intensity of the Saviour's love. He desires to be carried on our heart, and on our activities. His love is stronger than death. He suffers cruelly when there is any danger of the transference of our love to another. The strong waters of death could not quench it; it is without money and without price.

The Little Sister (8-12).—This is generally referred to the Gentile Church, which in the day of Israel's glory seemed outside the marriage bond with Jehovah, but in the fulness of time was included in it. And in the individual experience the reference may stand to the interest we take in some young life growing up within the circle of our knowledge, and whom we desire to win for the love of God. (12) If we keep Christ's vineyard as Sunday-school teachers or ministers, we may claim some of the fruit for our refreshment, though He has the prior right.

Closing Words (13, 14).—Christ speaking to the Church asks to hear her voice. Too often we speak more to men than to Him, and the Church speaking to Him, asks that He should come quickly, and put away the mountains of separation for ever.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28.—ISAIAH I.

Isaiah means "salvation." His portraiture of our Lord is so vivid that he has been known as the Evangelic Prophet. Besides dwelling on the future, he was one of the great statesmen of his time, and took a leading part in the great crisis of his nation's history.

The divisions of the book are determined by the reigns of the kings. Uzziah i.-v., Jotham vi., Ahaz vii.-xiv. 27, the first half of Hezekiah's reign xiv. 28-xxxv., the second half xxxvi.-lxvi.

An Indictment of Sin (2-9).—Evil was rampant throughout the State. (2, 3) We talk of man falling to the level of the beast, but he touches lower depths. We are quick to notice ingratitude to ourselves. There is no sin to which we are more liable towards God. (4) Sin is a load. Note three steps, "forsaken," "despised," "estranged." (5-7) The whole body was so covered with weals that there was no sound part. He who wounds will always heal. (8) A hut in a vineyard, a caretaker's lodge in a garden, so Zion reared itself amidst a desolated land, on every part of which were traces of invasion and disaster.

Ritual will not Save (10-15).—In days of calamity men crowd their temples. It is easier to persuade them to part with their sacrifices than their sins. When the heart is withheld God is nauseated by the mere performance of a pompous ceremonial. There must be an amendment of heart and life, or our prayers will be an abomination.

Invitations and Promises (18-20).—Scarlet and crimson are the fast colours, and speak of the permanency of sin which no outward rite can remove, but the blood of Jesus Christ can cleanse.

The Divine Complaint (21-23).—The prophets constantly compare the soul's rebellion to a wife's unfaithfulness. Let us beware of the diluting effect of worldliness. The scene on Olivet of Christ's tears over the city is here anticipated.

The Prediction of Better Times (24-31).—God will put away those that are persistently rebellious, but He will turn his hand upon his people, purging away their dross. These words shall be fulfilled one day of the chosen city, and they are receiving fulfilment day by day in the experience of the saints.

THURSDAY, MARCH 1.—ISAIAH II.

A Quotation (1-4).—Years before, Micah had given this prediction of the prevalence of true religion which Isaiah confirms. What the Babel builders failed to do shall be accomplished in the latter days, when Jerusalem shall be the spiritual metropolis of the world. 4.—These words must have sounded strange in Uzziah's days, remarkable for weapons of war (2 Chron. xxvi. 11-15).

A Photograph (5-9).—Spiritualism, luxury, extravagance, richly caparisoned horses, idols, idolatry throughout all classes, caused the downfall of the people.

A Prediction (10-22).—The prophet, anticipating the storm, bids men shelter themselves from its fury (12). In the enumeration that follows we see the pride of Israel, compared now to the cedar of Lebanon, and again to the oak of Bashan. But city and tower, wall and ship, would alike be overthrown before the terrible invasion of Babylon, which the prophet descried from afar. Neither commerce, nor art, nor mighty fortifications, nor those other refuges in which men shelter themselves, avail to protect them from the searching judgment and punishment of the Almighty. What a sublime picture is given of the flight of the idolater, flinging aside idols of priceless value, to find refuge in the rocks! (18). The Hebrew is very graphic, "shall flit away like the phantom of a dream." 19. What a contrast to the Rock (10). 21. But a yet more terrible day is coming (Rev. vi. 16). Let us cease from trust in men or ourselves, and make our home in the cleft Rock of Ages.

FRIDAY, MARCH 2.—ISAIAH III.

The people of Judah and Jerusalem felt so secure in their circumstances that they ridiculed the idea of the coming invasion which Isaiah predicted. So now the prophet proceeds with more minuteness to declare the approaching fate of the various classes of the people.

The Sins and Judgments of the Rulers (1-15).—The rulers of a land are its stay and staff. 2, 3. The various grades of rule. 4, 5. When the proper leaders of the people are cut off, anarchy prevails throughout the state. 6, 7. Such would be the destruction of the rulers, that men would shrink from assuming the responsibility. 8, 9. What a remarkable expression, "the eyes of his glory"; and how terrible the sin that defies them. 10. Eternally well! Even amid the overthrow of Sodom the one righteous man shall be preserved. 12. Women perverted even Solomon. It was bad, indeed, when the intrigues of the harem affected the policy of the State. 14. God has ever constituted Himself the guardian of the rights of the poor. When oppression riots unavenged by man, He holds an inquest, and awards justice. Many a State has toppled, because by injustice the lower orders have been alienated.

The Judgments of the Gay and Beautiful (16-26).—These words rebuke the pride of the high-born ladies of Jerusalem, but they may have a secondary reference to the nation itself, whose pride and wantonness are thus allegorically described. This description should be carefully studied in R.V. Inordinate care of dress, and dress of a certain ostentatious kind, reveal pride and even darker passions, hence the vehemence with which such things are denounced in the Word of God. The more these evil inclinations are gratified, the more they grow. What a contrast is suggested by 1 Peter iii. 3-10. (26) On the final fall of Jerusalem, a medal was struck, in which she was represented as a woman sitting on the ground in the attitude of despair. This paragraph is concluded in the first verse of the next chapter, where a graphic description is given of the dearth of men, through the invasion which was imminent.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3.—ISAIAH IV.

The prophet anticipates the dawn of a better day when the calamity of the age had passed.

There would be a Remnant (2).—The shoot or sprout from the fallen tree of Israel would be beautiful and glorious, and the land majestic and comely (R.V.). This may refer in part to the return under Ezra, but much more to the future.

Characterised by Holiness (3).—The stern discipline of God could not fail of its aim and end. Israel has never again gone back to the idolatry to which she was so prone. Into the new Jerusalem shall enter nothing that is unholy and unclean. It is a solemn question whether we are written among the living.

Washing and Burning (4).—Not by water only, but by blood. Not by water and blood only, but by fire.

Family Religion (5).—Every dwelling-place should become the shrine of God, in which the shechinah should shine as formerly in the most holy place. Every family derives its fashion from God, and should be conformed to his ideal.

The Divine Protection (6)—The whole city included within the folds of the Divine Presence as a tent, acting as a screen against the heat, and a covert from the tempest. Compare Rev. xxi. 3. Here and hereafter let us abide in the secret place of the Tabernacles of the Most High!

---

CANADIAN MISSION COLLEGE, INDORE, C.I.—Mr. J. Wilkie writes:—"At Indore just now we are in the midst of a cheering work amongst our low caste people. Over 300 of one caste have renounced Hinduism, and over eighty have been baptized in the last year, and two other castes are also moving, of whom two have been received by us. What may be the outcome of it all we cannot say, but our hearts are cheered at the signs of the Master's favour and power. Strange to say this movement amongst the lowest classes is influencing the highest in a marked way. Our College never was so flourishing, nor our College Bible classes so interesting.

For the Young.

GRANFER'S GIFT.

By M. Butler Gerds.

It was summer—gracious, golden-lapped, balmy summer; and if you realised it anywhere, you did so at Old Telford—a rich, large, lazy village, whose broad, tranquil meadows stretched themselves southward to the beautiful, sleepy old town of Oakhurst.

Visitors to Old Telford always said that Nature had done her generous best for the place, and that for once man had been wise enough not to meddle with her. Old Telford was noted for its roses, its honey, its butter, and its bill of health.

At Old Telford it was quite the proper thing to live till you could count your great-grandchildren, and stay some years to keep them in lollipops. Old Telford took care of its grandfathers.

"Why, father, you're never settin' out there by them bees, with nary coat or hat on! You'll be sun-struck, and then what'll little Molly do? Come, father, put on your hat."

"Let me be, Bess; I'm well enough—don't want no hat. This young 'un 'ud soon have it off," and he laughed.

He was a healthy-looking old man, rosy-cheeked and quite active, and was filled with a childish delight in playing with his great-grandchild, a sturdy mite of two years. His daughter, Bessie Matson, was quite a young-looking woman, and you stared when the child called her "ganny."

"Come, you two children," said she, "dinner's 'most ready, and you can just come and cool yourselves in the porch for five minutes before you come in to eat it. Come, Molly."

The little one hung dancing to her hand; the old man followed them, watching, with an almost silly expression of happiness on his wrinkled face, the gambols of the child.

"She do beat all, for two year old!" he cried, cackling with pleasure. "I ain't never seen quite her likes afore for fun and perkiness. There, children do be wonderful things!"

The little party, representing four generations, walked through the winding pathways of a lovely cottage garden, leaving the drowsy hum of the bees behind them, and entering the cool of a bower of roses and honeysuckle trained in profusion over a rustic porch before the door. It was a beautiful picture, but it was a living one, and so could not last. The woman entered a large, comfortable kitchen, leaving "the children," as she had called them, on a broad seat in the porch. The sun was very high, and both found the cool of the doorway a treat.

"What's for dinner, Bess?" called in the old man, sniffing the air.

"Oh, you'll know, soon as I set it before you," said his daughter. "I declare," she continued to her daughter, "he might live to a hundred, he's that keen on his vittles. Come in, father dear," she called out, and the old man rose quickly, carrying Molly in a "bear's hug," while she slapped his happy old face.

"You'll spoil that gal, father, that you will, lettin' her do as she likes with you," said Mrs. Matson, proudly and fondly,

"Yes, grandfather, she a'n't to tire you—you're quite foolish a-lovin' her so," said his granddaughter. But she loved him for it.

"I don't mind you two," said the happy old man. "scold away, granfer's used to it. What, Bessie! a honey puddin'?"

"Ah-h!" said his daughter, "a'n't it well to be you, granfer!"

The old man bent his head, the three others did the same, while he asked a blessing on the simple but abundant meal.

"Seems," said he, his eyes filling with grateful tears, "as my cup runneth over; I'm just wrapped up in blessin's, I am."

"It's real good to hear you say so, father. You've been nearly eighty year earnin' 'em," said his daughter.

"No, no; don't say that," cried the old man, a note of fear in his quavering voice. "If blessin's was earned they'd be wages. They'd have to be giv' to ye, free; then they're blessin's."

"All right, father," said his grand-daughter (she often called him "father"), in a pacifying tone; "you shall have your way, dear."

"It's not my way, Nannie," he said, leaving his pudding untouched; "it's God's way. He says, 'The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life.' Wages is sin's earnin's; but blessin's is just the free gift of God."

"Why, father dear, your puddin's cold! Don't let your blessin's get cold, dear; eat it while it's hot," said his daughter. She was showing Molly how to hold her spoon.

The old man began to eat his pudding with a relish; then he looked up at the little one. He seemed to be following out a train of thought. At last he said, between eating, "Yes, I dunno what I wouldn't do for that bit of a thing! Seems as if she'd got right hold o' me some'rs in the best place; seems as if I was just wrapped up in her like."

The tears stole into the eyes of both women, as they lovingly regarded the old man. His daughter thought he began to look frail. She had not noticed it before, but love sharpens the eyes, and she told herself he must rest indoors after dinner.

"Granfer," she said, "you've no call to do anything but rest this afternoon. The sun'll be too much for you outside."

"Oh, what's little Molly goin' to do, eh? She goin' to rest, too? I might as well take care of her while you two read up a bit; she ain't no trouble," said the old man. His devotion to this little child was absolute; he clung to her with a passionate tenderness which was pathetic to behold, and yet he had never been a demonstrative father to Bessie.

"You'll make us quite jealous, father," she said; "you can't never let her out o' your sight. She'd ought to be a good gal."

"So she is; so she is," defended the old man, "an' she's teachin' me a heap. Seems I can understand God's love so much better'n I could afore she come. I think I know how He must 'a felt a-givin' up his Only-begotten! Eh, dearie?" His granddaughter got up and kissed him; she said, "Bless your heart! I hope you'll live to see her as old as I am." The old man got up, and went out into the porch. The child soon followed him. She knew his weak spot for her.

"Father," said the women, later on, "as you're so set on the child you wouldn't mind a-tendin' of her while we go down to the farm for them honey-pots, would you? It's a 'most too hot to drag her down there with us."

After they had gone the old man, seeing that little Molly rubbed her eyes, and appeared to be tired, spread his handkerchief on the grass under a mulberry tree, and said to the little one, "Granfer's pet like to lie down for a little while?" "'Et. Molly go peepy-by, and ganfer go peepy-by, too." Presently the old child and the young one had drowsed off to sleep in the still, hot summer afternoon—the grandfather in the porch, the little one before him under the mulberry-tree.

. . . . . .

"He'll hold on a bit yet," said the doctor. He was looking at granfer, lying so still and white on his bed, while the two women stood watching eagerly for a sign of returning consciousness. "Do you know how it happened?" asked the doctor.

"We'd a been down to the farm, and as we were comin' up the Oakhurst road we heard a moanin' noise, and there was poor father a settin' under the hedge, not knowin' anybody, and no hat on, nor nothin', and all he kep' a-sayin' of was, "She's gone—I can't find her, an' I'd give my life to find her."

"Well, he's pretty nearly done it," said the doctor. "And where did you find the child after all?"

"She must have strayed away," replied her mother, "for we found granfer's handkerchief and Molly's bonnet under the mulberry tree, but the child was asleep round at the back, where she must have gone to get into the cool."

"Won't he never know us again?" asked his daughter.

"He may, and he may not," sagely replied the doctor. "He's old, you see; but it's a mild sunstroke, and he may rally."

Towards night it was as the doctor thought. Granfer spoke. "Is that you, Bessie?" he asked. "I shan't never live to see the little 'un grow up. She's taught me a heap o' things. I see it all now. why God was set on savin' me, and the world. Oh, how he loved it, Bessie!—don't you make no mistake about that—He loved it. Where's my little Molly?"

"She's a here, father—don't you talk father, she's a most killed you. I shan't never forgive her, nor myself, either," sobbed his daughter. "Did you think she was lost. father?"

"Yes," replied the old man, gathering his thoughts together. "Yes, she wa'n't under the tree where I left her. I dozed off, and when I woke I missed her. I dunno how 'twas, I felt stupid like, and couldn't find her; but she were that twisted round my heart, as I couldn't rest till I'd found her—I loved her so. She's taught me a heap o' things I didn't know, bless her! I'm just wrapped up in blessin's. Wages is sin's earnin's; but blessin's is a free gift—'eternal life,' that's a free gift, Bessie."

"Yes, father, dear, but you keep quiet all you can. We want you to get well, dearie. What will Molly do without you?"

"She's no call to do without me. Love don't die, Bessie. She's taught me a heap; she taught me that. You tell her when I'm gone. This pain in my head makes me stupid like, I can't remember nothin', but I'm just wrapped up in blessin's. 'God so loved the world, that He gave his only-begotten.' Seems as if I could just die for little Molly."

And he did. Three nights after he passed quietly away, full of praise and thanksgiving, conscious up to the last, in intervals. His last connected words were: "She's taught me a heap. When I see she wasn't under the tree I first made out to find her wherever she was. You can't tell what love'll do, I was bound to go after her, there! Bess, so long's she's safe I can go easy. Seems I can understand *some*thin' of why 'God so loved': Granfer's just wrapped-up in blessin's."

He was: and as "the memory of the just is blessed," his simple little story, his childlike love for a little child, told by those who loved him, gained, in less favoured places than Old Telford, gentle treatment, respectful regard, loving kindness to be shown to those who are often in the way in the younger homes—the aged parents; while his pious love made some see with a little clearer vision why "God so loved the world" as to send into it "his Only-begotten," who loved and gave Himself!

---

THE CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Alban's, Liverpool, Feb. 25 to March 4; Flint, March 5; Ashton-under-Lyne, March 6; Hooley Hill, March 7; Great Clacton, March 11 to 13; Chiswick, March 14; Friezland, near Greenfield, Yorks, March 29; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Nottingham and neighbourhood, Feb. 24 to March 21; Clifton, Bristol, and neighbourhood, March 30 to April 18; Mr. S. J. Hewlett and Mr. J. H. Cutting, Y.M.C.A. Hall, Ipswich (for Juniors), Feb. 24 to 27; Parkestone Schools, Harwich, March 3 to 14; Mr. G. Goodman, St. Matthew's, Chelsea, Feb. 25 to March 2; Leyton Congregational Church, March 11 to 19; Mr. E. Hughes, Home of Industry, Bethnal Green, Feb. 26 to March 2; Brunswick Hall, New Southgate, March 5 to 9; Mr. Josiah Spiers, Llandrindod Wells.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., Feb. 25, Mark vii. 1-13; Mon., 26, vii. 14-23; Tues., 27, vii. 24-37; Wed., 28, viii. 1-13; Thurs., March 1, viii. 14-26; Fri., 2, viii. 27-38; Sat., 3, ix. 1-13.

THE COMING SPRING.

'Tis coming, 'tis coming—the Springtime is coming,
I smell it abroad, in the wild scented air,
And a shimmer of green down the long lane is creeping,
Where the prune-colour'd hedges stood gloomy and bare.

See the soft, dainty ruche that is tipping the branches,
The fair lacey leaflets unfolding again;
Now soon, as of yore, we shall gather them fondly,
And marvel and joy at each delicate vein.

And Springtime steps onward from glory to glory,
For Summer, bright Summer, will follow it soon;
When the full damask roses breathe on through the midnight,
And the nightingales warble sweet hymns to the moon.

And oh, there is coming for all who love Jesus
The Springtime of rest, and the Summer of heaven,
And grace to step onward from glory to glory
And strength unto strength to each one shall be given

The shadows and clouds which have darken'd their pathway
Though slowly, yet surely, shall vanish ere long,
And the glories of Paradise gently unfolding
Dawn fairer than roses, or nightingale's song.

Then haste, loving Springtime, foretelling so plainly
The sure Resurrection, and new life beyond;
At each waking sound of thy steps through the woodlands
Our hearts leap for joy, and our voices respond.

Caroline Tickner.

---

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—The monthly prayer meeting was held on the 15th inst., at 20, Berners-street. Rev. W. R. Mowll, M.A., gave the address, which was most helpful and stimulating, the subject being the Christian's position and walk

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 4.

Selling the Birthright.—Gen. xxv. 27-34.
Golden Text.—Luke xii. 23.

Abraham lived about fifty years after the sacrifice upon Mount Moriah. Only two events of importance are narrated as taking place during that period. First, the death of Sarah, and the purchase of the field of Machpelah for a place of burial (xxiii.); and next the marriage of Isaac and Rebekah (xxiv.), which took place some three years after Sarah's death. Isaac was forty years old at the time of his marriage (xxv. 20); and as he was born when Abraham was a hundred years old (xxi. 5), and Abraham died at the age of a hundred and seventy-five (xxv. 7), it will be seen that for thirty-five years of Isaac's married life Abraham was associated with him.

This fact is important, for it teaches us that Abraham was again called to the exercise of faith and patience in connection with God's promise. For twenty years after his marriage Isaac had no child through whom the promise could be fulfilled. Jacob and Esau were born in answer to prayer, when Isaac was sixty years old (xxv. 21, 26).

There was a marked difference between the two brothers. Esau's name means hairy, rough (25), and was suggested by the red hair with which he was covered at his birth. The name Jacob means heel-catcher, supplanter, and perpetuated the fact that he was born with his hand upon his brother's heel (26). There was difference in their dispositions. The word "plain" (27) describes Jacob's mild, peaceable disposition, so entirely opposite to that of Esau. They were equally different in their pursuits. The wild life of Esau gave him no opportunity for reflection. As the first-born he was heir to unspeakably precious promises, which he never gave himself time to think upon. The privilege appeared of much greater value to Jacob, who had both time and inclination to appreciate and desire them.

This incident brings out, on the one hand, the faith and yet the craft of Jacob; and, on the other, the profanity of Esau (Heb. xii. 16). Tell the story. The pottage (29) was a kind of soup made with lentils. Its colour was referred to by Esau when he said, "Feed me, the red man, with that red pottage" (30, margin).

I. The Faith, and yet the Craft of Jacob (31—33).—It is a pity that faith and craft should be found together. And still more that his faith should in some sense be the reason for his craft. If he had been without faith in the promises of God to Abraham, he would not have placed so much value upon the birthright. And if he had not heard and believed the prophecy given before his birth to Rebekah (23), and passed on without doubt to him, he would never have used any such means to obtain the birthright for himself. Perhaps he argued that inasmuch as God's promise had made it sure to him, he was justified in making use of any means by which Esau could be induced to bring about what God had foretold. So far as faith prompted his action, we must give him credit. Imitate him in believing God, and in valuing the things God's covenant ensures to those who believe.

But his faith was not intelligent and strong. If he had known God more perfectly he would never have sought to help God's purposes by such a despicable scheme. His fault was, not that he believed, but that he did not believe enough. The best end does not justify the use of doubtful means. "God is light," and does not require our dark and crafty designs. The conduct of Esau, in its openness and candour, puts that of Jacob to shame.

II.—The Profanity of Esau.—The birthright was a costly thing to give away for such a price. It carried with it in ordinary circumstances—the official authority of the father; a double portion of the father's property, and possibly the exercise of domestic priesthood. In this case greater privileges were involved—all those things for which Abraham had forsaken everything—future possession of Canaan; giving birth to a numerous posterity; and giving to the world a Saviour, through whom all nations should be blessed. Scripture is not too severe in denouncing as "profane" a man who despised such blessings as these. Remember that blessings as great are brought within our reach, and we may be guilty of the same profanity.

The manner in which he did it makes his guilt and folly appear greater. (1) He was influenced by the present entirely. He was faint and weary. What he wanted just now was satisfaction for his hunger, The blessings of the birthright were future. He would keep the bird in the hand, and let the two in the bush go. Every man who, for a present indulgence, barters away the blessing of the future, is repeating Esau's sin. (2) He confirmed it by an oath. This made the matter final. He called God to witness his abandonment of all the privileges to which he was born.

He had made his bargain.—Did he ever regret it? (xxvii. 34-46; Heb. xii. 17). It was the act of a few minutes, but it is matter for eternal regret. Which are you valuing most—the present or the future?

THE NORTHFIELD AUDITORIUM.

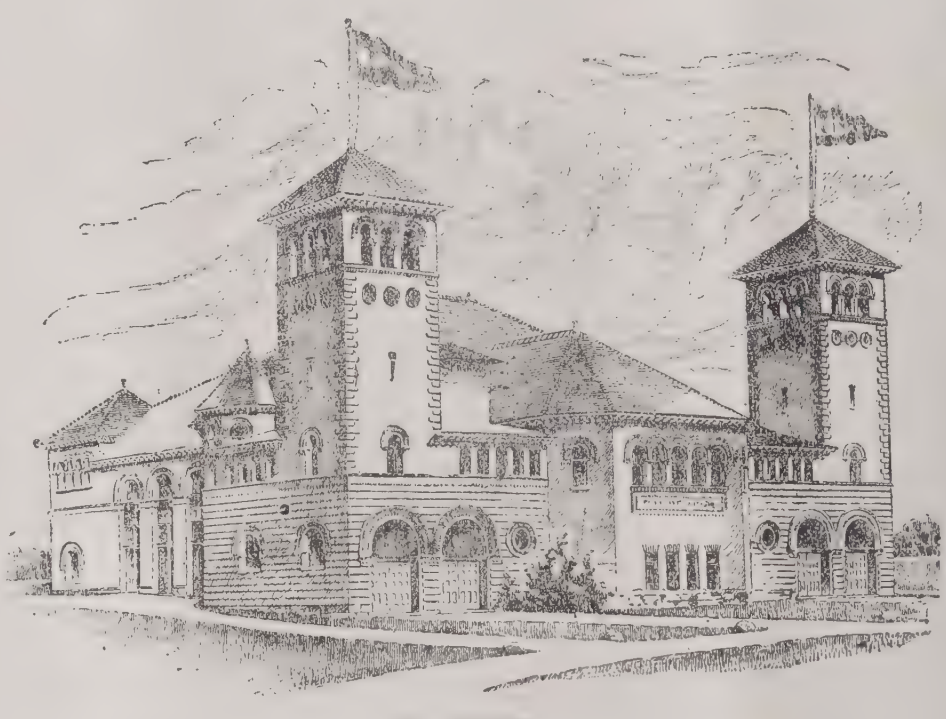
As stated in our report of Mr. Moody's Northfield Conventions last summer, the need, long felt, was expressed of a more commodious meeting place than the scholastic "recitation hall" in which the gatherings had hitherto been annually held.



THE AUDITORIUM.

At the close of the last meeting in August, an impromptu gathering was held, when a site was selected and money pledged. The site selected is on a commanding position, near to the Betsy Moody Cottage and Weston Hall, and convenient to the new hotel and other seminary buildings. Taking advantage of this prominent location the architects have treated the exterior of the new auditorium hall in a bold and effective manner. A massive tower rises from each front corner, dominating the entire structure, which is arranged in pleasing and varied forms characteristic of the Venetian style. There are eleven exits, so that a very large audience can leave the building in a few minutes.

The auditorium is nearly square, with 1400 seats on the main floor, while the galleries seat 1200, making a total seating capacity of 2600, or more than double that of the old hall or the new church. While the building is to be used principally for the conventions and other large gatherings, by an arrangement of rolling partitions under the galleries the centre portion may be separately inclosed for smaller gatherings, and boilers are to be placed in the cellar to provide heat, so that the building can be used in cold weather when necessary.

It is proposed to push the construction of this building so that it will be ready for occupancy by June 15 of the present year.

THE BROOKLYN REVIVAL.

"The fourth week of the Brooklyn revival services (says the New York Independent) showed no diminution of interest, and the fifth week opened with even more of earnestness on the part of the workers, if that is possible. The Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Dr. Gregg pastor, the Hanson Place Baptist, Rev. A. C. Dixon pastor, and Association Hall have continued to be the most prominent centres for the meetings; but other churches have joined heartily in the work, and the labours of the attendant pastors and evangelists have been lightened by the presence and assistance of others from outside Brooklyn, especially at York-street and Hanson-place Methodist churches. Some of the most interesting incidents have been connected with the reading of requests for prayers, many of which were answered during the meetings in a most forcible manner. Among the different topics dwelt upon by the speakers, intemperance had a very prominent place. Some very earnest and pungent pleas were made for the putting away of all possible temptations to the use of alcohol, that those who were liable to yield to the temptation might not be overcome through apparently innocent means. It is as yet impossible to judge accurately of the results, but each pastor tells of additions to his own flock. On every hand there is rejoicing at the good work begun and so successfully being carried on."

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were present at Lafayette Avenue Church on the afternoon of February 6, to give a passing help to the movement. There was an enormous throng of people to welcome the evangelists, and an overflow had to be held. Mr. Moody spoke and Mr. Sankey sang with all their accustomed power and impressiveness.

UNITED PRAYER IN CHINA.

Dear Sir,—We have just completed our week of prayer, and feel deeply thankful for many things. The excellent plan of the Evangelical Alliance has been highly approved, being truly comprehensive and well arranged, and containing admirable lists of Scripture passages.

There has been a strong call for freedom in prayer, under the conscious presence of our Father, and without being fettered by conventional ideas. Ladies have taken part in the meetings to no small advantage. Thought has been expanded, so that, by the leaders, our minds have been led to the most vast and important movements of the Church of Christ in all the countries of the world, and to the limitless possibilities of the kingdom of God everywhere.

Emphasis has been laid on the blessedness of this prayer union. Plans of usefulness are being evolved, doubtless in answer to supplication, and we definitely expect great things.

The larger outlook of God's service is inspiring. There are facts of true progress of all kinds around us. We see minds and hearts developing, and men and women preparing to stand up for the Master; but it is refreshing to join hands and hearts with the Holy Church throughout all the world, and to feel the powers of the world to come; and note the grandest marches of God's army. For some time past we have been thinking over the question of seeking the help of some well-known evangelist.—Yours, J. Sadler.

Amoy, China.

The Late MR. THOMAS SHULDHAM HENRY,

EVANGELIST.

"ANOTHER link with the 1860 revival broken," was doubtless the exclamation of many who read the announcement of Mr. Thomas Shuldham Henry's death, which appeared in The Christian of January 11. It was in that favoured year, the birth-time of so many, that his Christian life began.

The son of Rev. Shuldham Henry, D.D., President of Queen's College, Belfast, he graduated in Arts at the Queen's University in 1857, and afterwards took the further degree of LL.B. His next few years were chiefly spent in London and Dublin, "eating his terms" for the Irish Bar. Of that period of his life but little is remembered now, save from his own frequent references to it as a time of reckless gaiety and godlessness. Thoroughness marked his character from first to last, and there can be no doubt that he served the devil as loyally then, as he afterwards served his God. It was at the grave of a brother-in-law that the crisis of his life occurred. An overwhelming sense of sin brought him to the very verge of despair. So terrible was his anguish that he even contemplated suicide as an escape from his misery; and he used to tell how he was actually on his way to the pier of Kingstown Harbour to destroy himself, when the postman on his morning round placed in his hand a letter from a Christian friend, which recalled him to better thoughts.

Kingstown was favoured at this time by the ministry of the late Mr. Denham Smith, who was then one of the chief agents in a notable work of God in the conversion of souls. From his lips it was that Shuldham Henry received the glad message of the Gospel. Almost at a bound he passed from the depths of his spiritual distress to the peace and joy which are the portion of the believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and at once he threw himself with full-hearted devotion into the work of leading others to the Saviour.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, of Liverpool, was then preaching the Gospel with great acceptance and power. One of his favourite maxims was that, as in early days, disciples should go forth two and two in evangelistic work. In the providence of God, Shuldham Henry crossed his path, and was accepted by him as a helper. At first he did little more than lead the singing at the services, and deal with the anxious in the after-meetings. Indeed, those who witnessed his early attempts at preaching were led to conclude that, whatever might be his vocation, a preacher he would never be. But his complete indifference to what others thought of him—his utter forgetfulness of self, convinced men of his earnestness and sincerity, and lent power to his words. Ere long he attained a clearness of diction, and a fluency of utterance, which many far more naturally gifted than he was might envy.

Just twelve months ago, in our memoir of the late Richard Mahony, of Dromore Castle, co. Kerry, we noticed the revival of 1861, in that district of Ireland, which followed his own conversion, and in which he himself was the most prominent figure. There it was that Shuldham Henry received his first clear credentials as a minister of Christ. At Dromore itself, in the southern extremity of the county, at Ardfert Abbey, the seat of Mr. Talbot-Crosbie, and in the county town of Tralee, his Gospel preaching was signally owned of God, and hundreds of souls were given him as the seal of his ministry.

Mr. Bland of Deniquin, a friend and neighbour of Mr. Mahony's, and one of the first fruits of the Dromore revival, left home the following year for a temporary residence in Plymouth; and, on his invitation, Shuldham Henry visited that town for Gospel work. The same success which had crowned his preaching in Kerry marked his labours here in a still more striking measure. The Mechanics' Institute, which was rented for the purpose, was packed to overflowing with eager listeners, and the anxious so thronged the after-meetings that Christians could not be found in sufficient numbers to speak to them. To this day many will be found there who date their conversion from Mr. Henry's visit. And not only was it to the unsaved that his ministry was blessed. In Plymouth, as elsewhere throughout his career as a preacher, he was signally owned of God in bringing Christians into liberty and the full assurance of salvation.

In that same year (1862) Shuldham Henry was ordained by that saintly and devoted servant of God, the then Bishop of Cashel, and entered on the charge of a parish in co. Tipperary. But a country parish was far too narrow a groove for the ministry of such a man; and partly on this account, and partly through the pressure of conscience troubles relating to his office—he returned, three years later, to the more congenial sphere of evangelistic work. Space forbids our following him through all the busy years since then of his ever active life. A well-known and ever-welcome occupant of the platform in numberless centres of Gospel effort in the United Kingdom and abroad, his zeal never flagged, and he was unceasingly used of God in building up his people and winning the unsaved to Himself. The Young Men's Christian Association will miss his kindly presence and his stirring words, which fell with a directness that appealed specially to the sympathies of young men. To preach the Gospel was his life-work, and nothing availed to turn him aside to other pursuits or aims. And those who heard him thirty years ago, and again during his closing years, can testify that the same freshness and simplicity marked his testimony from first to last. The only change they found in him was the result of deepened experience, and growing love to God and to his people. He had a big heart, but it was hidden deep down in him, and it was his native ruggedness which used to strike men most, and sometimes to offend them. In some respects, indeed, he was a man of the same type as the late Brownlow North. But grace mellowed the natural asperity of his character; and though at times the old brusqueness declared itself, "the meekness and gentleness of Christ" prevailed in him.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker-street, London, W.)

The memoirs which appear week by week in our columns are written, not to eulogise the dead, but to help the living, and none will take umbrage at such words as these. As the writer looks back on that life of blameless work and devoted service, he recalls an incident, never told before, to the praise of that grace which has so abounded to him that is gone from us. One night, three-and-thirty years ago, at the corner of a Dublin square, where their ways parted, they wished each other "good night" and separated. Scarcely a minute had elapsed before Shuldham Henry ran back after him, seized him by the arm, and with a subdued voice and manner, exclaimed, "Will you come part of the way home with me?" Some sudden temptation had led him to retrace his steps. When the writer left him later on, he turned homewards with the words upon his lips, "I wonder will he stand; I hope he will, but—." Again and again in after years, when the memory of those fears and doubts came back to mind, they found their answer in the truer and worthier words, "He shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand." Many there were who, in those never-to-be-forgotten days, rallied to the standard of Gospel work, from whom more might well have been expected than from Shuldham Henry. But of these, some have turned aside, some have openly deserted to the enemy; while in his case, not a shadow of suspicion has ever marred the testimony of his even course of righteousness and godliness. He had his faults, and, in keeping with the genuineness of his character, they were upon the surface, for he made no effort to conceal them. But he set his face as a flint to serve God, and now he is reckoned among the number of those who have overcome.

Born in 1835, he entered into rest last New Year's Day, after a brief and sudden illness. Conscious to the last, he spoke words of calm confidence about his approaching end, and the hopes which lay beyond. He died as he had lived, in the faith of Christ. Death had no terrors for him. His only care was about her who had been a true help-meet to him during so many years of happy married life, and about an invalid daughter now left to the widow's charge. Their only other child, a married daughter, arrived too late to see him before he passed away.

BRIGHTON GIRLS' SHELTER.

The annual meeting of the Brighton Girls' Shelter was held in the Pavilion on Friday last, when there was a very large attendance. This institution was opened in 1886 to meet a special need, and has proved itself a valuable factor in local preventive work. It is a temporary home with open doors day and night, to receive young girls in difficulties of various kinds or who may be friendless and in pecuniary difficulties from no fault of their own. Last year it had a record of 138 admissions. The report says, "we claim to be doing a grand and Christ-like work in seeking to lead these younger girls to the feet of the Saviour."

The meeting on Friday was addressed by Mrs. Spong, Preb. Webb-Peploe, and others. One of the leading thoughts of Mr. Webb-Peploe's address was the need of greater cohesion among Christian workers, realising the true meaning of the word "yoke-fellow" as being one placed for the purpose of the Master's business under a yoke of which Christ bears the heavier end. The speaker reminded his hearers of the power which one restive ox has to hinder work. So many Christians were willing to work in their own way, but not to work together. Christians are called to work in fellowship with other Christians. They were fellow-citizens under one government and one King; fellow servants in one household, and a cantankerous servant had the power to render the others miserable; fellow members of one body in which even "the fibre of the foot" is needed; and fellow heirs to the same heritage.

THE RELIGION OF SOME PERSONS is constrained; they are like those who use the cold bath, not for pleasure but necessity and their health; they go in with reluctance, and are glad when they get out; but religion to a true believer is like water to a fish: it is his element, seemingly his native element; he lives in it, and he could not live out of it.—Anon.

The Evangelist.

SOUGHT AND SAVED.

I was asked one evening to visit the home of a young woman to see if in some way she could be reached and brought back from her life of sin and degradation. I was told that her mother could do nothing with her because her temper was so violent and her way of living generally reckless. A friend and I went to her home—she, to talk to the mother, I, in some way to try and make friends with the girl.

After wending our way to the end of a very dark and lonely street, we found the house and asked for Mrs. B., the girl's mother. I was told that she was not at home, and when I asked if we might see Miss B., the same reply was given. We then asked if we might go inside and wait. Reluctant consent was given. I shall never forget the picture of those two rooms. Such confusion and such dirt! Presently we were rewarded by seeing the face of a young woman peering through the doorway. It was a face that would have been pretty had it not looked so careworn. I rose and shook hands with her, telling her we had expected to find her mother at home, and were sorry she was out. She did not sit down, but stood nervously looking at us.

My heart went out to her as I looked at her with her pretty blue eyes and light hair, and thought if the peace of God were only in her heart, how it would take that haggard, troubled look from her face. There was a vacant chair by me, and I asked her if she wouldn't sit down. We commenced talking in a general sort of way. How I did long to put my arms around her and tell her of the Saviour, who died for my sins and hers. I sent a quick prayer to the Heavenly Father's ready, listening ear, asking Him to open some way for me to speak with her about her soul. To a quick prayer comes a quick answer. My friend said, "I have another call to make, and as Mrs. —— is not at home I think I will go." I said, "I'll stay awhile and see if her mother comes, as I haven't anything else to do." As soon as my friend had gone, a younger sister of Miss ——, who was sitting there with us, said, "I'm tired and am going to bed." And so the Lord opened the way for us to be alone to talk. Yet not alone, for were not the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit with us?

It was not long before I had my arm around her, telling her what the Saviour had done for me, and that He would do the same for her. She said, "Oh, well, it's no use to try. Everybody says I'm bad, and it's all because nobody understands me, and the times that I care the most about the way I live, that's the time I live the most reckless and bad; just go dashing into everything and don't care what I do." I said, "Yes, dear, I know all about it; it used to be the same with me; when my heart was aching hardest, that's the time I lived the wildest. Yet I wasn't satisfied. There was something wanting. Isn't that the way with you?" "Yes," she said, "I am anything but satisfied." Then I told her very softly how a dear friend had told me of the only One who could and would satisfy. He was the One she needed. She replied, "I need something." I asked if we could kneel in prayer and ask the Saviour to show her how much she needed Him. She consented, and after a brief, earnest prayer, while still kneeling, I opened my Bible and commenced reading some of the sweet promises that had become so precious to me.

It was not long before she commenced to sob, and at last said, "Yes, I know I'm sinful, and I'm sick of this kind of life; I do wish I could be forgiven." 1 John i. 9 and Isa. i. 18 cleared those doubts away. I asked her to just tell the Lord all about it, and ask Him to forgive her, for that was all there was to do. "I cannot," she replied, "I don't know how to pray." I told her it was only a few months ago that I had said the same thing; but the Lord knew that we would feel that way, so said for us to come "as little children" to their earthly parent.

She waited a few moments. And then how my heart did rejoice as, between her sobs, she asked the Saviour to forgive her and cleanse her, promising with his strength to forsake her life of sin and live henceforth for Him. I am sure the angels in heaven must have shouted for very joy over that soul.

I have visited her several times since then. It is a pleasure to see her, and the rooms too! for now they are as clean as can be. On my visit to her after her conversion, in a sweet little way she spoke of the change in the rooms, saying, "You know everything is so different now; seems as though I couldn't bear the dirt, and before I didn't mind it."

She is now a member of —— Sunday-school, and has truly been "born again." C.

THE MEMORIAL TO SIR S. A. BLACKWOOD.

Sir,—While the memory of Sir Arthur's bright example is still fresh amongst us, may I, through your columns, draw attention to the fact, which may perhaps have escaped the notice of many of your readers, that the Mildmay Memorial Fund for endowing two beds to be called by his name, one in the Mildmay Memorial Cottage Hospital, the other in the Mildmay Mission Hospital, Bethnal Green, is still open to receive contributions?

It is well known how thoroughly identified Sir Arthur was with Mildmay in his life, and how his body rested there in death on its way to interment. The memorial, therefore, is appropriate in every way. It has to do with medical mission work, which was sanctioned by the example of our blessed Lord. Those taken apart for a while from the rush of active life by illness or accident will, as they lie on those beds of sickness, listen to the same Gospel story that Sir Arthur so loved to proclaim; and thus many may have a special opportunity granted to them of being rescued from death to eternal life.

It is felt that there must be very many scattered here and there over the country, who would like to have a share, even though a small one, in thus perpetuating his memory, if only the matter could be brought to their notice in some way.

